This combination of the Greek and Roman kingdoms has a strong political connotation. The centrality of this interpretation appears clearly in the passage of Aphrahat's work in which he engages with the vision in Daniel 8:3–8. The vision describes the victorious attack of a one-horned he-goat on a two-horned ram. The biblical text reveals the allegory behind the vision: the he-goat represents the king of Greece, and the ram represents the king of Media and Persia (Dan 8:20–21). Following a widely accepted reading, Aphrahat identifies the ram with Darius III and the he-goat with Alexander. He explains the he-goat's striking the ram as an allegorical image of the defeat of the Achaemenids by the Macedonians.[8] At the same time, departing from mainstream hermeneutic, Aphrahat develops an original interpretation of the passage. He connects the vision in Daniel 8:3–8 to the vision in Daniel 7 and creates a meta-historical (or better, trans-scriptural) reality in which, after being defeated by the he-goat, the ram of Daniel 8 will be defeated again by the fourth beast of Daniel 7:

> Thus, the horns of the ram were broken. However, though his horns have been broken, he raises himself up and exalts himself against the fourth beast, who is strong and powerful, with teeth of iron and hooves of bronze. [This beast] devours and breaks [things] into pieces, and whatever is left over he tramples with his feet. O ram, whose horns have been broken, draw back from the beast and do not irritate it, or it may devour you and grind you into pieces! The ram was not able to stand before the young goat; how will it stand before the terrible beast, whose mouth utters mighty words and who crouches over whatever it finds like a lion over its prey?[9]

Aphrahat uses this complex hermeneutic to address the contemporary political situation. In his eyes, the ram represents Shapur II, who now confronts the Christianized Roman Empire: the fourth beast of Daniel's vision. The rhetorical question posed by Aphrahat ("the ram could not stand before the he-goat; how shall it stand before that terrible beast?") has strong political and ideological implications. Craig Morrison notes: “This question is not posed in the book of Daniel—the ram and fourth beast never meet. But the issue is central to Aphrahat’s application of this biblical text to his historical moment: how can the ram—now, no longer Darius, but Shapur II—stand against the fourth beast—Rome!”[10]

The parallel drawn by Aphrahat between the past conflict between Alexander and Darius and the present confrontation between Constantine and Shapur II is key to his interpretation of sacred history.[11] The Persian kingdom, routed by Alexander in the past, is destined to be defeated once again in the present, this time by the Romans. The ideological continuity between Alexander’s kingdom and the Roman Empire finds its practical expression in their common destiny to confront and prevail over the Persian enemy. Thus does Constantine become a new Alexander who will annihilate Shapur in the same way that the Macedonian had annihilated Darius III. To an extent, Aphrahat follows previous generations of intellectuals in treating Alexander as a model for Roman emperors who engaged in military campaigns against the Persians. At the same time, he never explicitly develops the classical model of the imitatio Alexandri and he expresses the parallel between past and present circumstances only by means of biblical interpretation. This is the most innovative aspect of Aphrahat’s exegesis, in which the Macedonian conqueror comes to be associated with a pro-Roman and anti-Sasanian reading of the Danielic visions.

Thus, Constantine’s conversion to Christianity and Shapur’s persecution of Christians in the Sasanian Empire created the conditions for a revival of the Alexander figure. The powerful combination of Classical knowledge and scriptural authority was put to use as a propaganda instrument against the Persian enemy. Aphrahat appears to have been the first author—or at least the first extant author—to have used this new Danielic-Alexandrian paradigm to pursue an anti-Sasanian agenda. He would not be the last.

Two centuries later, John Malalas made a similar—though less well articulated—use of the figure of Alexander in conjunction with the prophecies in Daniel, specifically in Daniel 7. At the beginning of Book VIII of his Chronographia, Malalas writes:

> In the fourth year of the reign of Dareios the Mede, son of Assalam, God raised up Alexander, toparch of the emperor of Macedonia, the son of Philip, against the Assyrians, Persians, Parthians, and Medes [. . .]. Alexander immediately set out like a leopard and captured many lands with his generals. He defeated Dareios, emperor of the Persians, the son of Assalam, and captured him, all his empire, all the land of the Assyrians, Medes, Parthians, Babylonians and Persians and all the empires on earth [. . .]. Alexander freed the cities and territories and all the land of the Romans, Hellenes and Egyptians from subjection and slavery to Assyrians, Persians, Parthians and Medes; he restored to the Romans all that they had lost.[12]

Malalas's description is strongly influenced by the Danielic schema of the four kingdoms and its vision of history based on the idea of the succession of world empires. The opening of Book VIII of the Chronographia refers to the transition from the Persian to the Macedonian empire. As mentioned, depending on how one interprets the Danielic schema, the Persian/Macedonian translatio imperii may represent the passage from either the third to the fourth empire or the second to the third empire. The earliest interpreters of the Danielic schema identified the Macedonian Empire as the last world kingdom, whose ascent would follow the decline of Persians, who had occupied the third slot in the schema. However, a later interpretive model—also embraced by Aphrahat—identified the Romans as the last world kingdom, with the consequential downgrading of the Macedonians and Persians to the third and second slots in the schema. Malalas, who follows the later interpretation, identifies Alexander's kingdom with the third empire. This clearly appears in the identification of Alexander with the leopard—the animal that in Daniel 7 represents the third world kingdom. Malalas adopts the same interpretive line as Aphrahat, who also identifies Alexander as the Danielic leopard.

The opening statement of the passage by Malalas ("God raised up Alexander [. . .] against the Assyrians, Persians, Parthians, and Medes") has strong ideological implications. Malalas places Alexander's campaigns within the framework of God's plan for sacred history, with the rise of Alexander occurring in accordance with a divine plan. In addition to reflecting an understanding of human history as a process that is directed by divine intervention, Malalas proposes that the fall of Darius's empire at the hands of the Macedonians is a consequence of divine will. At this point, one wonders whether Malalas adopted the same strategy as Aphrahat in creating a meta-historical pattern in which the events of the past are destined to be repeated in the present, with the Byzantines and Sasanians now playing the roles of the Macedonians and Persians. The answer seems to be affirmative, as appears from the final statement of the quoted passage.

The reference to the Romans as a people freed by Alexander, together with Hellens and Egyptians, is odd, as is the statement that Alexander “restored to the Romans all that they had lost.” No historical events can be associated with Malalas’s words: Alexander never freed the Romans from any oppressor, nor had the Romans, at the time when Malalas was writing, reacquired any possession that had been seized by the Persians. While it is possible that Malalas was relying on inaccurate historical knowledge, his claims are in open contradiction to information he reports elsewhere in the Chronographia. At the end of the previous chapter (i.e., Book VII), Malalas states that at the time of Darius the Mede, “the Romans became dominant and extended the boundaries of their territory.”[13] This information contradicts the claim that when Alexander defeated Darius, he restored the territories that the Romans had lost. Malalas’s reference to the Romans in his description of Alexander’s campaigns is not historically accurate. Rather, the author is constructing a meta-historical reality in which present and past are superimposed, and contemporary concepts and ideas are projected backwards to the time of Alexander.

Malalas had a specific reason for crediting Alexander with restoring Roman sovereignty over lands that had never belonged to the Romans. The Romans that he mentions in this passage are not the inhabitants of Rome at the time of Alexander, but rather the Byzantines, whom he considers the heirs of Alexander. Implicitly, the author assigns to Byzantium the legacy of Alexander and the right to rule over the “Asian” territories that once belonged to the Macedonians. Behind his statement lies the same concept of ideological continuity between Macedonians and Romans/Byzantines constructed by Aphrahat. Like Aphrahat, Malalas locates the Macedonian hero in the framework of an anti-Sasanian propaganda. The idealized connection between the reign of Alexander and the reign of the Romans, related to one another by their common opposition to the Persian kingdom, also appears in another curious claim made by Malalas, according to which the Romans supplied Alexander with an army to fight against Darius.[14] Here, Malalas attributes to the Roman Empire an active role in the defeat of Achaemenid Persia. His description of the rise of Alexander against Darius reflects an aggressive expansionistic agenda regarding contemporary events. It looks forward to the eventual restoration of Roman control over the Eastern territories of Alexander's empire, which were then under Sasanian occupation.

Back to the Neṣḥānā

The Neṣḥānā shares several elements with Aphrahat and Malalas concerning the political use of Alexander in relation to the Danielic visions. The author of the Neṣḥānā describes the same kind of ideological cohesion between Alexander's empire and the Roman Empire that we have observed above. In the Syriac work, it is Alexander himself who expresses this cohesion, which repeatedly occurs in his prophecy about the events expected to happen after the collapse of his gate. In the prophecy, Alexander gradually replaces the mention of the kingdom of the Greeks with that of the kingdom of the Romans, until he explicitly affirms: "The kingdom of the Greeks which is the kingdom of the Romans."[15] Subsequently, Alexander describes the kingdom of the Romans as "my kingdom, which is called the kingdom of the house of Alexander the son of Philip."[16] This conflation of the Roman Empire and Alexander's kingdom brings to mind Aphrahat's hermeneutic of Daniel 7 and his claim that the third and the fourth beasts—which he identifies with the kingdom of the Greeks and the kingdom of the Romans, respectively—are the same.

The unity between the empire of the Greeks and that of the Romans is fundamental to the agenda of the author of the Neṣḥānā and to the vision of sacred history that he wants to promulgate. The scenario that he describes is close, in both its images and goals, to the one observed in Aphrahat's Demonstration V. Like Aphrahat, our author wants to send a clear message that addresses fears about the future of Byzantium caused by the aggressiveness of its Persian neighbor: the kingdom of Alexander, which is now the powerful Roman Empire, cannot be defeated. In Aphrahat's treatise, Rome's destiny to be unvanquished ("to this day it continues, and will continue forever")[17] is based on the interpretation of the Danielic prophecies, according to which Roman rule will endure until Jesus's Second Coming and the establishment of the eternal kingdom of the "Son of Man." At this moment, the "ancient of Days" will sit on the throne.[18] The Neṣḥānā adheres to this pattern and manifests much the same vision of sacred history. The author assigns to Alexander the role of predicting the future fortunes of the empire. At the beginning of the Syriac work, in a prayer addressed to the Lord, the hero mentions that his kingdom will be handed to the Messiah, who will sit on a silver throne, the throne that he—Alexander—established in Jerusalem. Then, in the prophecy which he declares after erecting the gate against the Huns, Alexander asserts that the kingdom of the Romans will prevail over the other worldly kingdoms and conquer the earth.[19] In the background of Alexander's prayer and prophecy lies the same concept of sacred history found in Aphrahat's Demonstrations—a concept that is based on a similar reading of Daniel and on the idea that the Greco-Roman Empire is the final kingdom, destined to endure until Jesus's Second Coming.

There is much in common between the views expressed by the author of the Neṣḥānā and those expressed by Aphrahat and—to a lesser extent—Malalas. These common elements help us achieve a better understanding of the development of the figure of Alexander in the Neṣḥānā—especially its intersection with biblical prophecies. The evolution of the figure of the Macedonian king can be better appreciated when one compares the Neṣḥānā to the older tradition of Alexander's visit to Jerusalem. This tradition is recorded in Jewish sources, that is, Josephus's Antiquities, the Megillat Ta'anit, and Babylonian Talmud (Yoma 69a), but is also included in a later recension (ε) of the Pseudo-Callisthenes,[20] and was known to a number of early Christian writers.[21] Josephus reports that during his campaign against Darius, the Macedonian king paid a visit to Jerusalem. Disappointing his Phoenician and Chaldean allies, who thought they would be allowed to plunder the city, Alexander greets the procession of priests and citizens that came to meet him at the entrance of Jerusalem. The king even salutes the Jewish high priest before receiving his greetings (a break with royal protocol) and magnifies the name of God engraved on a plate. To the dismay of one of his generals, Parmenion, who asks him why he was admiring the Jewish high priest, Alexander answers that he is not praising the man, but the god that he represents. Alexander explains that when he was still in Macedonia, he had a dream in which that priest exhorted him to invade "Asia," promising him dominion over those territories. Upon his arrival in the city, Alexander goes to the Temple and offers sacrifices to the Jewish god, in accordance with the high priest's directions. He is then shown the passage in the Book of Daniel which predicts that a man from the land of the Greeks will destroy the empire of the Persians—a clear allusion to the vision of the he-goat and the ram in Daniel 8:3–12. Alexander embraces the prediction with joy.[22]

The situation described by Josephus lacks any historical basis. The most obvious indication of its fictional character is the fact that the vision of the ram and the he-goat was composed almost two centuries after Alexander’s death. The prophecy is based on a vaticinium ex eventu and represents a description a posteriori of Alexander’s victory over Darius. At the same time, the account of Alexander’s visit to Jerusalem represents an early testimony to a motif that we also find in the Neṣḥānā, that is, the hero’s awareness of biblical prophecies predicting the success of his empire. The Syriac work, however, differs on at least three points. These differences point to the peculiar features that the literary figure of Alexander absorbed during its development in the cultural context of the late antique Near East.

First, in the Neṣḥānā, Alexander is not shown any scriptural prediction about the glorious future of his kingdom. It is he himself who predicts that his kingdom is destined to rule over the other kingdoms. The hero of the Syriac work is a prophet whose words are consistent with those of the prophetic biblical tradition. Second, in contrast to Josephus’s account of Alexander’s visit to Jerusalem, the Alexander of the Neṣḥānā is aware not only of his immediate success in the war against Persia, but also of the glorious destiny of his kingdom. In his prophecy, the empire of which he is the founder is the kingdom destined to endure until Jesus’s Second Coming. Third, in the Neṣḥānā, Alexander’s familiarity with biblical prophecies has strong anti-Sasanian connotations. The vision that he has engraved over the eschatological gate emphasizes that the Persian power will be uprooted by the Greco-Roman Empire as the latter marches toward world hegemony. Alexander’s awareness of Rome’s role as the last and lasting world power is used to communicate the fact that the Romans will repeat his success in subjugating Persia.

In the Neṣḥānā, the Alexander figure functions very differently from the same figure in the time of Josephus. In contrast to Josephus, in the Syriac work the Macedonian hero is an openly monotheistic (Christian) sovereign with prophetic skills and a mission in accordance with God’s plans for human history. It is difficult to say to what extent these developments are original elaborations of the author of the Neṣḥānā or whether they reflect wider imagery about Alexander among his contemporaries. Certainly, the Syriac apocalypse is the first recorded document in which the Alexander figure possesses the features of a Christian prophet-king. However, this characterization was the culmination of a long and continuous process in which many elements and cultural tendencies came to be associated with the figure of the Macedonian king. The Christianization of the Roman political apparatus was a decisive step in this process. It is from this moment onward that the use of the imitatio Alexandri as an instrument of anti-Persian propaganda was combined with biblical prophecies commonly associated with Alexander. Roman citizens could now hope that the empire would prevail over Persian dynasties not only by repeating the glorious deeds of Alexander, but also by accomplishing the prophecies described by the prophet Daniel.

This “biblicization” of the anti-Persian, and specifically anti-Sasanian, use of the Alexander figure was apparently inaugurated by Aphrahat in the fourth century. Similar references to this type of propaganda occur in the work of Malalas, who was probably of Syriac origins, but not in the works of other historians writing in Greek. This suggests that the process of exchange between the imitatio Alexandri and the anti-Sasanian readings of the Danielic prophecies was current mostly (if not exclusively) among Syriac speakers. It is no coincidence that it is in a Syriac text, and not in a Greek one, that this process found its culmination. The figure of Alexander in the Neṣḥānā is a combination of these earlier developments with concepts about the idealization of the royal figure that also appear to have been peculiar to the Syriac cultural environment. The prophetic turn in the characterization of Alexander and his Christianization points to the influence of the typology of the sovereign-prophet that also characterizes the Jovian figure in the Julian Romance. At the same time, the process that resulted in the representation of Alexander as a Christian, apocalyptic character is fundamental to a better understanding of the genesis of, and ideology behind, the central narrative episode in the Neṣḥānā, that is, the story of the gate against the Huns of Gog and Magog. We are now in a better position to return to this narrative element and try to address some unsolved questions about it.

The Gate against Gog and Magog

As mentioned in Chapter 1, the story of the gate that Alexander erects against the Huns of Gog and Magog combines two previously independent elements: (1) the idea that Alexander erected iron gates in the Caucasus to prevent the attacks of nomads from Central Asia; (2) the identification of these people with the biblical Gog and Magog. To these two elements, one may add a third one, that is, the idea—witnessed from the Book of Revelation onward—that toward the end of time the Antichrist will rally the people of Gog and Magog to participate in an eschatological battle against "the camp of the saints and the beloved city" (Rev 20:7–10). The Neṣḥānā is the first extant document in which these elements are combined. It states that the Huns are governed by fifteen kings, the first two of whom are Gog and Magog. Alexander builds a gate to contain their incursions until God's decree. The idea that the Huns will be rallied by the Antichrist is not mentioned by the Syriac author. Also not mentioned is the motif of their final battle against Christianity. In the Neṣḥānā, the Huns of Gog and Magog are an instrument of divine providence who engage in the "global" conflict that will precede the rise of the Roman kingdom. In fact, our author appears to have modified the canonical unfolding of the eschatological drama in the Book of Revelation to make room for the idea that the Roman kingdom will establish a cosmocratic dominion to prepare the world for Jesus's Second Coming. References to other biblical passages and exegetical concepts external to Revelation are inserted in the text. The Hunnic invasion is explained by the prophecy of Jeremiah in Jeremiah 1:14 ("out of the north disaster shall break out on all the inhabitants of the land"), a prophecy to which Alexander explicitly refers in his own prediction engraved on the gate. The global conflict involving twenty-four kingdoms evokes the final eschatological war of nation against nation and kingdom against kingdom prophesied by Jesus in Matthew 24:6–7. The idea that only one of these kingdoms will endure until the End of Time is inspired by the Christian receptions of the Book of Daniel—although the Neṣḥānā does not refer to the translatio imperii, since several world kingdoms appear to coexist until the final accomplishment of sacred history.

Tropes in two passages of the episode of Alexander's gate refer directly to the imagery of the Book of Daniel. In the prophecy that the Macedonian king engraves over the gate, the kingdom of the Greeks is described as carrying in its hands two hammers—one made of iron, the other of bronze—and striking one against the other. The meaning of this image is explained in the text: "And the kingdom of Greece shall smite the hammers one upon the other, and as iron which is melted by fire, and as bronze which bolts in the flame, so shall the power of the kingdoms melt away before the might of the kingdom of the Greeks which is that of the Romans."[23] The smiting of the two hammers and the melting of the two metals represent the capacity of the Greco-Roman Empire to destroy the other kingdoms of the world—which the text identifies as the Persians, the Huns, and the Arabs. The choice of iron and bronze as the two metals of which the hammers are made is not coincidental. It refers to two elements of the Danielic eschatological imagery: (1) the representation of the last two world kingdoms as bronze and iron, respectively, in the metaphoric description of the four kingdoms as a statue composed of four different metals in Daniel 2:32–33; and (2) the representation of the fourth beast as an entity with iron teeth and bronze claws in Daniel 7:24.[24]

Like Aphrahat and most Christian exegetes, the author of the Neṣḥānā likely identified the third and the fourth kingdoms of Daniel 2 with the empires of the Macedonians and the Romans, respectively, and the fourth beast of Daniel 7 with Rome. If so, the two hammers made of bronze and iron held by the kingdom of the Greeks would appear as an intentional representation of: (1) the continuity and unity of the last two world kingdoms according to the pattern already described by Aphrahat and embraced by the author of the Neṣḥānā (it is hardly a coincidence that the allegorical image of the two hammers is immediately followed by the author's announcement to the readers that the kingdom of the Greeks is that of the Romans); (2) the destiny of the kingdom of the Romans to fulfill the Danielic prophecy of the mighty fourth beast, and to prevail over the other world kingdoms until the arrival of the Son of Man and the establishment of God's heavenly dominion. The picture that emerges from the use of these tropes brings to mind the hermeneutic of Daniel developed two centuries earlier by Aphrahat, who had promulgated the ideological identity of the third and the fourth kingdoms and identified this unified kingdom (founded by Alexander) with the mighty fourth beast.

The author of the Neṣḥānā adopts the Danielic metaphor of the two metals also in the description of Alexander's gate, which is said to have been crafted from a combination of bronze and iron components. Earlier references to the mythical gates erected by Alexander refer only to iron gates. The introduction of bronze as an additional component is an innovation that apparently was dictated by the author's desire to strengthen the ideological cohesion between the third and fourth empires of the Danielic schema, and to recall once again the identification of the kingdom founded by Alexander with the mighty fourth beast.[25] From this reference to the Danielic imagery, Alexander's gate emerges as another symbol of the unity of the Greek and Roman empires, and of its status as the final human kingdom of world history before the coming of the Messiah. The allegorical fusion of the two metals into the barrier erected by Alexander, mythical founder of the two kingdoms, also signals the crucial role that the Greco-Roman Empire is destined to play in God's plan for human salvation, namely to contain the eschatological invasion from the other side of the rampart until God's final decree.

Thus, the gate is a symbol of the empire's commitment to the role that God assigned it. This is a crucial point to our understanding of another scriptural reference made by the Syriac author. The reference is to the katéchon, the withholding power which, according to 2 Thessalonians 2:6–7, prevents the coming of the Antichrist until God's decree. Beginning at least with Tertullian (d. ca. 220 CE), Christian exegetes identified this katéchon with the Roman Empire and attributed to it the role of delaying Satan's arrival.[26] A further refinement of this reading, in conjunction with the exegetical line that identifies the Roman Empire as the fourth beast of the Danielic vision, is the idea that toward the end of human history the katéchon would be removed and the Antichrist would arrive in concomitance with the fall of the last world kingdom.[27] From the perspective of Christian eschatology, the removal of the katéchon also entailed the coming of those fierce nations of Gog and Magog which, according to Revelation, the Antichrist would gather and send to battle after his release.

This complex of ideas is very much at play in the story of Alexander's gate. In restraining the Huns of Gog and Magog until the moment of their final sorties, the gate serves the same function as the katéchon in the Roman Empire. The collapse of Alexander's gate coincides, both thematically and ideologically, with the removal of the katéchon. The Syriac author's allusion to 2 Thessalonians 2:6–7 is perfectly integrated in the eschatological scenario that he is describing. The gate erected by Alexander is not merely a barrier to stop the incursions of nomadic people thought to be involved in an eschatological invasion. By means of the gate, the Roman Empire will fulfill its task as the withholding force designated by God to prevent those dramatic events from happening until a divine decree. God's removal of the gate initiates the cycle of conflicts from which Rome will emerge victorious and confirmed in its status as the last world kingdom, the fourth beast destined to remit its power to Jesus—as promised by Alexander in his prayer.

The goal of the apocalyptic vision about Alexander's gate is to magnify the role of Rome in sacred history.[28] This message is communicated through explicit claims put in the mouth of Alexander in the form of vaticinia. In addition, however, the very idea of a barrier erected to postpone the starting of the Apocalypse—which is at the core of the Alexander story—evokes the concept of katéchon and exegetical speculations about the role of the Roman Empire in performing that same task. The allusion to these specific ideas raises another set of questions: Was the original intent of the story of Alexander's eschatological gate[29] to emphasize Rome's divine mission? Or was that motif only added at a later date? What was the role of the author of the Neṣḥānā in this development? Did he report or build upon an earlier tradition according to which Alexander constructed a gate to delay the apocalyptic invasions of Gog and Magog? Or did he invent the story out of whole cloth? And when did the story originate?

As briefly mentioned in Chapter 1, some scholars have posited that the story of Alexander's eschatological gate existed before the time of the Neṣḥānā. At what exact time these supposedly early versions of the episode started circulating, however, is a matter of debate. Friedrich Pfister suggested that the story originated among first-century Alexandrian Jews.[30] His argument is based largely on the information provided by Josephus in two different works: (1) the report that the Alans, identified by Josephus as a Scythian people, broke through the iron gates erected by Alexander;[31] (2) the fact that Josephus indicates the Scythians as the progeny of Magog.[32] Pfister concluded that the legend of Alexander's gate was already part of Jewish culture at the time of Josephus. This view, however, was rejected already by Anderson, in his classical studies on Alexander's gate, and is now considered obsolete.[33] In fact, Josephus does not attach any eschatological significance to either the mention of Alexander's iron gates or the identification of the Scythians as the descendants of Magog, a claim largely motivated by ethno-historical speculations inspired by the genealogy list in Genesis 10:2.[34]

According to Anderson, the story originated in the late fourth century, in the aftermath of the great Hunnic invasion of 395.[35] Theoretically, it is possible that the disastrous incursions of those fierce nomadic people through the Caucasian mountain passes—traditionally identified as the location of Alexander's iron gates—may have inspired the legend of the eschatological gate. However, no documentary evidence suggests that those events were associated with the apocalyptic motif of Gog and Magog.[36] No mention of Gog and Magog occurs in the writings of the Syriac poet Cyrillona, a contemporary of the Hunnic raids, who dedicated a poem to those events, whereas Jerome, who identified the invaders with the people confined behind Alexander's gates, does not attribute any apocalyptic significance to the invasion. As Christian Djurslev has argued, the only two references to Alexander's gates in the late fourth century, namely by Jerome and by the anonymous Latin writer known as Ps.-Hegesippus, suggest that the story had not yet acquired the character of a legend about the End. As Djurslev observes, these earlier accounts "were rather used as a topic of ethnographical, geographical, and social discourse."[37]

This leaves us with the cursory reference in the Tiburtine Sibyl to the release of the unclean people of Gog and Magog from the North, where they had been confined by Alexander. However, as noted, the dating of the text to the late fourth century is disputed, and most scholars still think that the passage in the Sibyl is derived from either the Neṣḥānā[38] or from the Apocalypse of Ps.-Methodius.[39] This last possibility is suggested by a small detail in the Sibyl, that is, the odd description of Alexander as rex Indus, "Indian king," in the earliest version of the work.[40] The phrase rex Indus can hardly be taken as a reference to Alexander's Indian campaign. Rather, it should be interpreted as an indication of the king's alleged ethno-geographical origins. But why describe Alexander as an Indian king? I think that the reason is to be found in the Ps.-Methodius, which presents the Macedonian hero as the son of an Ethiopian princess. The description of Alexander in the Sibyl reflects this bizarre genealogy, with the transformation of the hero's Ethiopian descent into an Indian origin, as a consequence of the common confusion between India and Ethiopia attested in several late antique sources.[41]

In sum, there are serious doubts about the possibility that the story of Alexander's eschatological gate was already in circulation in the late fourth century and, indeed, before the date of its first recorded version dates (i.e., the mid-sixth century). Let us now return to our main question: What role did the author of the Neṣḥānā play in shaping the narrative of this episode? Besides the absence of earlier versions, two elements suggest that the Syriac author not only was the first one to record the story, but also was its inventor. As noted in Chapter 4, the story originated to fulfill a specific function, that is, to address the political context of Roman-Persian disputes over the Caspian Gates. The episode of the eschatological gate, with its references to the role that Rome would play in the divine plan for human salvation, is fully consistent with that political goal. Of course, one may object that the legend may have already existed as a general prediction of events of the End and that our author adapted it to his agenda. An important indicator points in the opposite direction.

The story of Alexander's eschatological gate emerges from a specific literary practice: the adoption of a motif from the Classical tradition and in its re-reading through the lens of biblical exegesis. This practice gave rise to the belief that the nomadic peoples enclosed by Alexander behind iron gates are the very people whose arrival is prophesied in the books of Ezekiel and Jeremiah, and in Revelation. This is not an isolated case in the Neṣḥānā. The same practice is at the core of the author's re-reading of the Classical motif of Alexander's horns, which, as we will see, is interpreted through a variety of biblical passages, and which, like the motif of the iron gates, is transformed into an element of anti-Sasanian polemic.[42] A similar case is that of the story of the blacksmiths from Egypt, which, as we have seen, is also borrowed from the Classical tradition, specifically from the story of Pharaoh Sesostris, which was adapted in a way to address the political context of Roman-Persian disputes over the king of Lazica. The similarity in the literary practice behind these three passages in the Neṣḥānā suggests that the story of Alexander's gate did not originate as an independent episode, but rather was a product of the very same pen that conceived the adaptation of the other two motifs drawn from the Classical tradition. The simplest explanation is that it was the Syriac author himself who adapted these ancient motifs to a new and different purpose.

8

Apocalyptic Ideology

The conventional wisdom holds that the apocalyptic atmosphere permeating the Neṣḥānā reflects the reaction of the inhabitants of the Roman Near East to the historical events of the early seventh century. According to this reading, the vivid descriptions of the destructions caused by the Huns and of their horrific customs and practices echo the traumatizing experiences endured by the inhabitants of the lands raided by Heraclius's Turkic allies in 626–629.[1] Accordingly, apocalyptic anxieties current among Roman subjects during and after the Byzantine-Sasanian conflict are identified as one of the main factors that prompted the writing of the Neṣḥānā. A wave of pessimistic feeling about the future of the Roman Empire, which many believed was destined to collapse with the coming of the End, prompted the Syriac author to develop a reassuring story about the glorious role that the empire was still to play in the development of the eschatological drama.[2] The author was engaging with pious believers who had to be persuaded that God's eschatological promise would not be fulfilled anytime soon, and that its fulfillment would be preceded by a period of prosperity, which Heraclius's victory had inaugurated but which was still to come to its full fruition. The proponents of this view maintain that the targets of our author's efforts were not only the skeptics and God-fearing monks resigned to the unavoidable fall of established human societies. Our author had an even more practical goal. The (probably fictitious) episode of the diplomatic incident that occurred in Edessa in 628, when purportedly Heraclius was denied communion by the Miaphysite metropolitan Isaiah, demonstrates—according to this view—that pro-imperial propaganda was badly needed to restore the emperor's glory and prestige in a hostile milieu ripped apart by sectarian religious quarrels. The author of the Neṣḥānā would also have written his work to perform this task.[3] According to Reinink and the scholars who follow him, the goal of the author's literary initiative should be sought in his pro-Heracleian agenda. By celebrating the emperor's military achievements, the author sought to reduce doubts about what the future held for his reign and simultaneously to call reluctant clergymen to embrace the policies of religious union that Heraclius was promoting at that time. In the background lay the concept of Byzantine imperial eschatology, that is, the idea that toward the end of human history the Byzantine Empire would prevail over the other world kingdoms. Partisans of the Heracleian contextualization of the Neṣḥānā relate the apocalyptic vision about the glorious kingdom founded by Alexander to this imperial ideology. The prophecies in the Syriac text that predict the advent of a Christian cosmocratic kingdom reflect the eschatological policies (allegedly) pursued by Heraclius in the years immediately following the end of the conflict.

In my view, the conventional wisdom is untenable. The Neṣḥānā was composed several decades earlier than the events that served as a background to the text according to the advocates of the Heracleian hypothesis. As noted, key elements in the text address the political scenario of the mid-sixth century. Conversely, most elements adduced in favor of a seventh-century redaction have been shown to make as much sense, and frequently better sense, when transposed into the context of the sixth century. The strong eschatological inclinations of the text and its focus on the final events can easily be related to the circumstances of the reign of Justinian.

Apocalypticism was not invented ex nihilo during the time of Heraclius. A century earlier, strong waves of apocalyptic anxieties shook the minds of many people in Byzantine society. In the late fifth century, an anonymous author, probably a native of Bythinia, wrote an apocalyptic text known as The Seventh Vision of Daniel, in which he portrays a sorrowful scenario for the empire. Here, the (fictionalized) murder of the emperor Zeno (r. 474–491) is followed by a period of violence and chaos that precedes the coming of the Antichrist and the Final Judgment.[4] Fears about the imminence of the End spiked during the reign of Justinian. In a passage of his Histories, Agathias reports that an earthquake that devastated Constantinople in 557 generated apocalyptic responses.[5] Wars, plagues, and natural disasters during Justinian's reign raised the expectation that scriptural predictions of the End were being confirmed in the present. Political speculation and propaganda may also have contributed to eschatological fears and chiliastic anxieties. The subject has been discussed recently by Shoemaker and does not need to be addressed here.[6] It is sufficient to say that an apocalyptic atmosphere permeated the reign of Justinian. Although I am not fully convinced that eschatological piety played a substantial role in the formulation of imperial policies,[7] expectations of the End were surely common among the emperor’s subjects and possibly also among Christian communities in the Sasanian Empire. This is a perfect scenario in which to situate the emergence of a text like the Neṣḥānā.

Similarly, imperial eschatology was not invented ex nihilo during the time of Heraclius. Beginning with Constantine’s conversion to Christianity, the sacralization of politics and the politicization of the sacred became a cornerstone of the ideology of the new Byzantine Christian empire. Christian literates began to regard Roman emperors as protectors of the true faith and increasingly engaged in efforts to link the destiny of the empire to God’s plan for human salvation. The extent to which these ideas formed a coherent ideological system is debatable. We also do not know the extent to which these ideas had an actual impact on imperial politics or represented an idealized framework through which Christian literates tried to conceptualize the role of the newly converted empire in sacred history. Be that as it may, ideas concerning Rome’s positive eschatological role were current in Roman society. And if it is true that these ideas had achieved unprecedented popularity in the seventh century, it is also true that this only happened in the last years of Heraclius’s reign, in the aftermath of the early Arab conquest, as a reaction to this new threat.

With regard to eschatology and apocalypticism, the question is where to situate the Neṣḥānā in the transmission and development of the idea of Roman Christian cosmocracy, from its earliest written witnesses in the fourth century to its most popular examples (e.g., the Apocalypse of Ps.-Methodius) in the late seventh century. How does the Neṣḥānā relate to the ideas expressed by authors like Aphrahat? In which environments did those ideas primarily circulate? How did the author encounter them? In which context? To what kinds of readers and religious communities did the author address these ideas? And to what end? How does his formulation of these ideas compare to contemporary understandings of sacred history? And to what extent did the Neṣḥānā influence those in later times who dealt with the same problems and questions? In what follows I will try to provide some answers.

The Background of the Author's Apocalyptic Ideology

In the late second century, writing in Carthage, in the Roman province of Africa, Tertullian stated that Christians should pray for the stability of the Roman Empire in order to delay the arrival of the Antichrist.[8] Referring to Rome's alleged role as katéchon, Tertullian concluded that a strong empire would be able to fulfill its eschatological mission. At the same time, it was probably not eschatological concerns that motivated Tertullian to take this position. Rather, his statement should be understood within the literary framework of a work like the Apologeticus, which is mostly addressed to Roman provincial authorities as a plea for religious tolerance for the Christian community. Despite their obvious underlying utilitarian reasons—above all the need to prove the loyalty of Christian subjects—Tertullian's words are one of the earliest manifestations of a pro-imperial attitude based on the attribution to the empire of a positive eschatological function. Of course, we are still very far from the kind of speculation that would lead to conceptualizing the empire as a fundamental actor in sacred history that was invested with a divine mandate. We begin to see, however, how the entanglement of Christian eschatology and political considerations might result in the expression of sympathetic feelings toward a political authority that previously had been regarded as a hostile entity. After all, the identification of Rome as the Pauline katéchon secured, if nothing else, the survival of the empire until the final moments of sacred history, as did its identification with the fourth and last kingdom of the Danielic schema. And if it is true that its identification as the last power before the End signaled its unavoidable downfall and thus fueled pessimistic or even anti-imperial feelings,[9] it is also true that the role of last kingdom in sacred history opened the door to more positive interpretations. This is exactly what happened at the time of the Constantinian dynasty.

Aphrahat's Fifth Demonstration on War contains one of the earliest exegeses of the Danielic prophecies that seeks to establish the empire's divine mission. This divinely sanctioned mission was to institute a kingdom that would prevail over the other rival kingdoms and that, enduring until the beginning of the eschatological drama, would deliver its power to Jesus at the moment of his Second Coming. As we have seen, behind Aphrahat's pro-Roman reading of the Danielic prophecies lies the delicate situation of his religious community in the Persian Empire. Facing a wave of persecution by the Sasanian authority, the Syriac writer put his hopes in the newly converted Roman emperor, Constantine, and describes an idealized scenario in which, due to its divine mission, Rome will soon defeat Persia and guarantee protection to the Eastern Christians persecuted by Shapur.

Aphrahat was not the only author in the 320s/330s to attribute to Constantine a special role in God's plan for human salvation. Some of his contemporaries on the other side of the Roman-Sasanian border engaged with similar theological speculations. To different extents, and in different ways, Eusebius, Lactantius, and Ephrem sought to present the sovereigns of the Constantinian dynasty as God's mandated representatives on earth and as enforcers of divine will.[10] However, none of these authors articulated a vision of the empire's eschatological role like in the one articulated by Aphrahat. In fact, none of Aphrahat's contemporaries attempted to portray Roman victory over Persia as an unavoidable step in the accomplishment of Rome's divinely sanctioned mission. If, in the case of Eusebius and Lactantius, the lack of interest in this theme was motivated by the fact that they were not directly exposed to the Sasanian threat, the same cannot be said in the case of Ephrem, who was an inhabitant of Nisibis at the time of Shapur's three sieges of the city (in 338, 346, and 350). And yet, Ephrem never expresses a vision of sacred history like Aphrahat's and never suggests that the empire will destroy the Persian kingdom on its way to cosmological supremacy. At least two centuries would pass before we would find such a view expressed again, and in even stronger terms, by the author of the Neṣḥānā.

As observed in the previous chapter, the eschatological visions articulated by Aphrahat and the author of the Neṣḥānā have much in common. Let us recap here the most striking points of comparison. Both authors posit a conceptual unity between the empires of the Greeks and that of the Romans and present Alexander as the founder of this Greco-Roman kingdom—although Aphrahat specifically mentions the last two powers of the Danielic schema, whereas the author of the Neṣḥānā does not. Both authors believe that this kingdom is destined to last until Jesus's Second Coming. Finally, both authors agree on the fact that the Roman Empire will repeat the deeds of its mythical founder Alexander and defeat Persia once again. However, whereas Aphrahat seeks to reassure his audience that Shapur's army cannot defeat the Romans, the author of the Neṣḥānā describes a scenario in which Rome's eschatological destiny means that it will annihilate Persia and annex its territory. Even more than in Aphrahat's Demonstration, in the Neṣḥānā the focus is on the Roman-Persian conflict. Our author's insistence on the idea of Roman eschatological cosmocracy is indissolubly connected to his interest in proving that at some point in the future, Alexander's kingdom will subjugate Persia once again, and this time for good.

Now, two centuries elapsed between the moment when Aphrahat produced his anti-Sasanian hermeneutic of Daniel and the time when our author was writing. In the intervening period, Aphrahat's work did not receive much attention: it was rarely mentioned by later authors, sporadically translated to other languages, and appears to have been mostly unknown to subsequent generations.[11] Interestingly, however, his Demonstrations were translated in the late fifth century into Armenian.[12] The closeness between Aphrahat's ideological system and that of the author of the Neṣḥānā may be explained by the fact that the work of the former circulated in the geographical area in which the latter probably lived. Nevertheless, it is still unclear to what extent Aphrahat's Demonstrations had an actual impact on writers in the Armenian region.[13] It is not necessary to posit that the author of the Neṣḥānā based most of his eschatological views on Aphrahat to explain the commonalities between the two texts. It is certainly possible that our author independently formulated similar ideas based on a shared heritage of Christian theological and eschatological ideas. Be that as it may, neither alternative explains the fact that no other author in the period between Aphrahat and the Neṣḥānā formulated a scenario like Aphrahat's, in which the status of the Roman Empire as divinely favored eschatological agent functions as an expression of anti-Sasanian feelings. The question arises: How was this understanding of the role of the Roman Empire in sacred history transmitted from the fourth to the sixth century?

Early fourth-century readings of Rome's glorious eschatological mission seem not to have outlived the dynasty that had inspired them, that is, the Constantinids. Church fathers writing in the late fourth and early fifth centuries show little interest in pro-imperial ideology. Authors like Cyril of Jerusalem (d. 386), John Chrysostom (d. 407), Jerome (d. 420), and Theodoret of Cyrrhus (d. 457), who identify Rome as the fourth Danielic kingdom and the katéchon, do not have much to say about the empire's divine mandate.[14] As we move forward in time, the number of elements glorifying Rome's eschatological role decreases. In his Commentary on Daniel, Jerome emphasizes that the empire is destined to fall.[15] When analyzing the vision of the fourth kingdom in Daniel 2, represented by the iron and clay feet of the statue seen by Nebuchadnezzar in a dream, Jerome observes: "But its feet and toes are partly of iron and partly of earthenware, a fact most clearly demonstrated at the present time. For just as there was at first nothing stronger or hardier than the Roman realm, so also in these last days there is nothing more feeble, since we require the assistance of barbarian tribes both in our civil wars and against foreign nations."[16]

Similarly, Theodoret explains the iron-clay blend as a trope for the initial strength and later weakness of the empire: "The soles of the feet are also of iron, but mixed with clay. Now, in this he [i.e., Daniel] is not referring to another kingdom but to the same one, that would be weaker than itself and mixed with the weakness of clay."[17] Theodoret mentions the decadence of the empire several times in his commentary on Daniel 2, and he describes a scenario in which Jesus himself will provoke its unavoidable collapse: "At his second coming he will strike the image of its clay feet—that is, he will appear at the very end of the iron kingdom, already rendered weak. He will destroy all governing powers, consign them to a kind of oblivion, and provide his eternal kingdom for the worthy."[18] There is very little glory in the role that Rome plays in the eschatological vision of these authors. We are far from the glorifying tones used less than a century earlier by Eusebius and Lactantius.

The difference in the approach to Roman invincibility or vulnerability is evident when we compare Jerome's and Theodoret's hermeneutic to Aphrahat's. In his Fifth Demonstration, Aphrahat struggles to explain the presence of an apparently weak component—clay—in the representation of what he otherwise believed to be a kingdom made invulnerable by the divine favor bestowed upon it. His solution is as shaky as the statue with fragile feet whose image he analyzes, but it clearly betrays his intention to prevent any interpretation of the passage that would shed an iota of weakness on the empire.[19] It is exactly the opposite procedure from the one implemented by Jerome and Theodoret, who interpret the clay as a sign of the troubled circumstances experienced by the Roman state during their lifetimes. In general, the available textual evidence suggests that after a first wave of enthusiasm created by Constantine's conversion to Christianity, the reading of the empire as the favored eschatological player faded. It is difficult to discern whether or to what extent ideas like those formulated in the wake of Constantine's conversion continued to circulate. If they did, they left few traces in written documents, which otherwise attest to ignorance of, or a systematic choice to disregard, pro-imperial interpretations. This tendency probably emerged in conjunction with the increasing difficulties faced by Roman emperors in the second half of the fourth century.

The political scenario between the late fourth and the early sixth centuries accounts for the lack of recorded attempts to predict Roman subjugation of Persia by means of scriptural interpretation. After Julian's disastrous Persian campaigns, and the tough terms that Shapur II imposed on Jovian in the treaty of 363, the two empires managed to maintain a status of almost permanent peace which, with the exception of sporadic disruptions (in 421 and in 440), endured until the Anastasian war of 502–506. This period of peace witnessed the emergence of the complex ideological systems summarized in the metaphor of the Two Eyes of the Earth, invoked by Roman and Persian courts to conceptualize their mutual existence and mutual recognition.[20] It is not surprising that in this atmosphere, aggressive and militaristic interpretations of sacred history did not proliferate. For sure, apocalyptic tendencies continued to emerge, especially in the context of large-scale events, like the great Hunnic invasions of 395, or in preparation for the turning of the century in 500 CE, which many believed to coincide with the world's sixth and final millennium.[21] Nevertheless, people were more concerned with finding in biblical prophecies explanations for the events that would precede the fall of the Roman Empire, rather than corroborations of any fantasy of glorious eschatological war against Persia. The above-mentioned Seventh Vision of Daniel is a witness to this tendency.

In the meantime, much had changed in the religious community that had produced the only recorded precursor of the Neṣḥānā. Since the time of Aphrahat, the conditions of Christians in the Persian kingdom had improved steadily.[22] Over the fifth and sixth centuries, Christian elites came to occupy prominent positions in the Sasanian society, and Persian Christianity increasingly articulated its Iranian identity. The conspicuous number of converts from Zoroastrianism enhanced the Persian character of Christianity in the Sasanian Empire.[23] Although converts were often the target of persecutions by Zoroastrian clergy—the catholicos Mar Abā (d. 552) is a notorious case—many were loyal to the Sasanian authorities. The most striking example is that of a certain Grigor, who, during the reign of Kavadh I (r. 488–531), served as a Sasanian general in the war against the Romans.[24] At the same time, Christian ecclesiastical authorities provided theological support for their loyalty to the Sasanian crown, as exemplified by Mar Abā's glorification of Khosrow through means of biblical imagery.[25] The evidence to be discussed below demonstrates that East Christian clergymen began producing interpretations of Daniel that reflect these tendencies and that attribute to the Sasanian state a more positive role in sacred history.

In sum, in the two centuries that followed Aphrahat's composition of his militant anti-Sasanian Demonstration on War, several factors worked as deterrents to the circulation of ideas similar to those expressed in that work. If so, how can we explain their re-emergence in the Neṣḥānā, a work that in all likelihood was composed in the mid-sixth century? Indeed, in the Neṣḥānā the anti-Sasanian component is even more prominent than in Aphrahat, with Roman subjugation of Persia appearing as the most prominent element of our author's eschatology. Our author dedicates two distinct prophecies to the prediction of the collapse of the Persian kingdom. One suspects that other crucial events in the narrative, like the final Hunnic invasion that will weaken Persian military capacity, and the idea that Rome is destined to establish a cosmocracy to endure until Jesus's return, serve to corroborate the idea that Persia will fall and suffer Roman predominance. How else can we explain the author's invocation and intensification of ideas that enjoyed a limited circulation at the time of their first formulation and that had passed out of circulation?

First, the two empires had returned to a state of permanent belligerency. As discussed in Chapters 5 and 6, the author of the Neṣḥānā reacted to the situation by constructing an idealized reading of the past that serves as both a critique of the Romans' poor achievements in the current conflict and as an expression of hope for greater success in the future. The conviction that at some point Byzantium would annihilate Persia, as proclaimed in Alexander's and Tūbarlaq's prophecies, suggests that the author probably lived in precarious conditions, similar to the ones experienced by Aphrahat during his lifetime. Indeed, he was probably living in an area exposed to or directly affected by military activities. However, unlike Aphrahat, he could not address his hopes to a Roman emperor like Justinian who had failed to effectively protect the Christians in the eastern regions of the empire and beyond. He thus created the image of a past sovereign who predicted that Rome would emerge once again as a hegemonic power. Our author drew the image of a glorious future still to come as a reaction to the bitterness of his current circumstances. Whether he took inspiration from Aphrahat's work in describing the irresistible eschatological march of the Roman armies is impossible to ascertain—although I find this possibility likely. What is certain is that the historical circumstances of his lifetime made possible the re-emergence of similar ideas.

The radical character of the Neṣḥānā in matters of Persian affairs can be explained by the reignition of Roman-Persian conflicts over the course of the sixth century and by the fact that our author in all likelihood lived in an area that was directly affected by these military operations. But this is only a partial explanation. Many other authors wrote under the threat of Sasanian armies without manifesting the level of aggression displayed by the author of the Neṣḥānā. Indeed, I am not aware of another literary work from Late Antiquity that so unequivocally calls for the eradication of the Persian dynasty from the surface of the earth and for the annexation of the Persian kingdom to the Roman Empire. What prompted our author to elaborate such extreme predictions (i.e., expressions of wishes for the future) that are so focused on the defeat of the rival kingdom? As I will suggest below, he felt the need to answer and rebut the increasingly pro-Sasanian inclinations of the Church of the East. To understand this point, we must focus on the only other sixth-century author who left us an interpretation of the developments of sacred history in which the role of the two empires is clearly formulated. This author is the extraordinary character known to us under the name of Cosmas Indicopleustes.

Cosmas's Interpretation of Daniel

Cosmas was an Alexandrian merchant who claimed to have traveled to India (hence his appellative, Ἰνδικοπλεύστης, lit. "the one who sailed to India"). At some point in his life, Cosmas abandoned his business in trade and took monastic vows. Circa 540s–550s, he composed a descriptio orbis, the so-called Christian Topography, in which he sought to prove the truth of biblical cosmology against the spread of Aristotelian cosmological models. A particularly interesting aspect of this work are Cosmas's extensive references to the Danielic visions, in which he provides a detailed interpretation of those scriptural passages, focusing on the role of the Persian and Roman empires in sacred history. In many ways, Cosmas's interpretation of the Danielic idea of the translatio imperii does not differ much from Aphrahat's. Like Aphrahat, Cosmas assigns the most prominent position in the succession of world kingdoms to the Roman Empire. Like Aphrahat, Cosmas presents the Roman Empire as the last and lasting power of human history, predestined to play a pivotal function in God's plan for human salvation. In Cosmas's interpretation, however, the Roman Empire acquires an even higher status than in Aphrahat's.[26] Unlike Aphrahat, Cosmas understands the kingdom of the Romans to be neither a continuation of that of the Macedonians, nor the entity that will transmit its power to the Son of Man on his return. According to Cosmas, the Roman Empire is not the fourth kingdom in the Danielic schema, the one that precedes the establishment of God's fifth and eternal kingdom. For Cosmas, the Roman Empire is the fifth kingdom.

"The empire of the Romans thus participates in the dignity of the Kingdom of the Lord Christ," Cosmas tells us, "seeing that it transcends, as far as can be in this state of existence, every other power, and will remain unconquered until the final consummation, for he says that it shall not be destroyed for ever."[27] Cosmas has no doubt about the empire's privileged condition and its destiny to endure, overcoming even the toughest threats to its existence.[28] It is a widely held scholarly conviction that Cosmas's interpretation of the Danielic visions relates to pro-imperial hermeneutics elaborated by Roman propagandists. Paul Magdalino argues that the broad outlines of Cosmas's reading of Daniel follow Justinian's official propaganda.[29] However, a closer examination of the relevant passage in the Christian Topography casts doubt on this argument. Indeed, most scholars have focused only on what Cosmas tells us about the extraordinary identification of Rome as the fifth blessed kingdom, but have ignored what he has to say about the Persians. The fact that Cosmas, while expressing a flattering depiction of Roman emperors, depicts Sasanian kings in almost as favorable terms has passed largely unnoticed. Let us take a look at his position toward the other major power of the sixth-century great power system.

Cosmas addresses the role of the Persian kingdom in sacred history immediately after his discussion of the Romans. He starts by informing us that the royal family ruling over Persia is not of Persian lineage and does not descend from the ancient rulers of Persia (i.e., the Achaemenians, whose kingdom was destroyed by Alexander). Rather, the Sasanians emerged from another power, that of the Magi.[30] At first glimpse, the identification of the Sasanian crown with the empire of the Magi and the simultaneous negation of its Persian lineage bring to mind some elements of Roman propaganda. Indeed, in the fourth century, the Roman emperor Julian and his protégé Ammianus Marcellinus rebutted the Achaemenid lineage (allegedly) claimed by Sasanian sovereigns, and, conversely, attributed to the latter a Parthian (i.e., Arsacid) descent.[31] Thus, Cosmas may be following pre-established patterns of Roman anti-Persian propaganda. This, however, does not seem to be the case. Cosmas's remarks on the dynasties that ruled over Persia do not bear any polemical connotation, as becomes clear from the rest of his passage on the Persians.

Unlike Roman propagandists, Cosmas's description of the Sasanian kingdom as a new entity, with no connection to Persia's Achaemenid past, has no derogatory intentions.[32] According to him, the kingdom of the Magi occupies a place of honor in sacred history, second only to the kingdom of the Romans, because the Magi traveled westward to pay homage to Jesus at his birth.[33] By connecting the Sasanian dynasty to the Magi, Cosmas seeks to exalt, rather than discredit, the Iranian rulers. By developing this fictitious image of the Sasanians' ancestors, Cosmas emphasizes the high moral stature of the Sasanian Empire, which he attributes to the Magi's adoration of Jesus. This puts him at odds with Roman propagandists. It is difficult to believe that this expression of sympathy toward the Sasanian kingdom originated in the environment of Roman propaganda, especially when we consider that Byzantine-Sasanian relations had newly deteriorated at the time when the Christian Topography was composed. Against the background of these renewed, large-scale hostilities, it is surprising that Cosmas's attitude toward Byzantium's rival is so meek and lacking in militaristic tones. Had his interpretation of the Danielic visions been inspired by the axioms of Roman imperial propaganda, one would expect the passages of his work dealing with the Sasanian dynasty to be characterized by a completely different kind of rhetoric, far more polemical and aggressive than what we find in the Topography. Cosmas's respect for the Sasanian state can hardly reflect the official position of Justinian's government. These doubts are reinforced by his reference to the story of the Magi and the nativity of Jesus.

In the Byzantine world, the legend of the Magi's adoration of Jesus served a specific political message. Consider the sixth-century Justinian mosaics in the churches of Sant'Apollinare Nuovo and San Vitale in Ravenna. In Sant'Apollinare, the three Magi—wearing trousers and Phrygian hats, symbols of their Persian origins—offer their gifts to Jesus (enthroned with the Virgin Mary). At first glimpse, the image does not appear to have particular political connotation. Upon closer examination, however, one notices an attempt to model the iconography of the adoration of the Magi on "the convention of the Sasanian envoys rendering proskynēsis in front of the earthly emperor to express this subordination."[34] Similarly, in San Vitale, the adoring Magi appear on the brim of Empress Theodora's chlamys. According to Matthew Canepa, this curious representation of the adoration was meant to suggest the "subjection of the Iranian religion and sovereign to the Roman religion—Christianity—and Christ's earthly representative, the Roman emperor."[35]

However, a different reading of the Magi narrative circulated among Persian Christians, who added Iranian features to the story.[36] The version of the story in the Cave of Treasures has recently been analyzed by Sergey Minov, who highlights the significance of the Magi narrative in the context of Christian communities in the Sasanian world. According to Minov, the attribution of Iranian origins to the Magi mentioned in Matthew 2:1–12 (where the Magi narrative is first attested) prompted a "local [i.e., Persian] patriotism," which he characterizes as "a marked propensity for putting additional emphasis on and treating positively those themes or figures that are related in one way or another to the regional context of the author or of his intended audience."[37] This observation is not new.[38] What is new in Minov's analysis is his insistence on the political implications of the Magi for Christians living under Sasanian sovereignty.

The names of the Magi in the Cave of Treasures, Hormizd, Yazdgird, and Pērōz, correspond to those of three Sasanian sovereigns: Yazdgird I (r.

399–420), Hormizd IV (r. 579–590), and Pērōz I (r. 438–457). These three sovereigns adopted—or at least were said to have adopted, as in the case of Pērōz—policies of religious tolerance toward Persian Christians.[39] Minov connects the obvious anachronism in the Syriac text (the Sasanian dynasty rose to power only two centuries after the birth of Jesus) to a tendency common in Persian Christianity and well attested in sources from the sixth and early seventh centuries: the representation of Sasanian monarchs as figures benevolent toward local Christian communities and, in some cases, even guided by divine inspiration. In other words, these sources Christianize the Persian rulers.[40] Minov concludes that the Magi narrative in the Cave of Treasures reflects the efforts of Persian Christians to create a paradigmatic image of a Christian-friendly Iranian dynasty.

Thus, during the sixth century, the legend of the Magi was adopted in various forms in Byzantine and Sasanian contexts to convey different political messages. On the one hand, Byzantine artists portrayed the motif of the Adoration as an example of the subjugation of an Eastern kingdom to Rome's moral and political superiority. On the other hand, Persian Christians invoked the Magi narrative to signal their increasing loyalty to the Sasanian Empire, in an effort to endear themselves to its leaders. Minov is certainly right in relating the different political uses of the story in the Roman and Persian kingdoms to the different sociopolitical conditions of Christian communities in the two empires.

Which one of these positions is reflected in Cosmas's reference to the legend of the Adoration? Note, first, that some elements in Cosmas's work are consistent with contemporary Syriac exegesis on the story of the adoration, for example, the reference to the royal status of the Magi in the Topography. In Late Antiquity, Greek-speaking Christians did not attribute royal dignity to the Magi. By contrast, beginning around the second half of the fifth century, representations of the Magi as a political authority became prominent in certain circles of Syriac Christianity.[41] Thus, Cosmas adopted an imagery that was alien to the Greek culture of the time and that, by contrast, was acquiring increasing prominence among contemporary Eastern Christians. In addition, the attribution of royal status to the Magi had implications in the specific context of Persian Christianity, where the story of the Magi was used to Christianize the ruling dynasty. This tendency is easily identified in Cosmas's words. The connection that he draws between the Sasanian dynasty and the Magi who adored Jesus replicates the same anachronism that in the Cave of Treasures leads the Magi to acquire the names of Sasanian dynasts. Put in different terms, both Cosmas and the author of the Cave of Treasures identify the Magi of the nativity of Jesus as members of the Sasanian dynasty. The political implications of this choice by the two authors are likely the same and coincide with the tendency described above.

This picture is at odds with the scholarly hypothesis that Cosmas's work reflects the propaganda of Justinian's regime. The reason for this inconsistency, in my view, is that this hypothesis is incorrect. Remarkably, unlike the case of the Magi iconographies in Byzantine mosaics, one finds no representation of the Sasanian dynasty as subject to Rome in Cosmas's words. Quite the opposite, indeed. Through the Adoration of the Magi, Cosmas exalts the Sasanian Empire as an entity with a status almost equal to that of the Roman Empire. Also remarkable is the literary context in which Cosmas inserts his reference to the story of the Magi, that is, his interpretive reading of the Danielic schema of the succession of world kingdoms. His Sasanian-friendly approach to the Magi narrative goes hand in hand with his similarly conciliatory interpretation of the Danielic visions, exemplified, as noted, by its contrast with Aphrahat's militant, pro-Roman, and ultimately anti-Sasanian hermeneutic of Daniel. In my view, these arguments speak against the hypothesis that Justinian's propagandists influenced Cosmas's ideological intellectual system. His source of inspiration must be sought elsewhere. But where?

At the beginning of book II of his Topography, Cosmas claims that what he is about to discuss is based on the teachings of a man from the land of the Chaldeans, named Patrikios. At the time he was writing—Cosmas informs us—this Patrikios was appointed catholicos of the Christians living in Persia.[42] Scholars agree that the Patrikios met by Cosmas is the person whom we have briefly encountered on the previous pages and whom we will meet again in the following chapter: Mar Abā.[43] After his conversion to Christianity and before his appointment as catholicos, Abā traveled widely in the Byzantine world. He visited Constantinople and Alexandria, and studied in Edessa and Antioch, both major centers of Christian culture. Between 525 and 530, Abā met Cosmas in Alexandria. The latter soon became one of his pupils. The importance of Cosmas's tutelage under Patrikios/Abā for the formulation of his interpretation of the Danielic schema has been discussed by Christopher Bonura.[44] Based on the similarity between Cosmas's and Aphrahat's understanding of the Daniel prophecies, and on their common affiliation with the Church of the East, Bonura concludes that the ideas expressed in the Christian Topography most likely derive from a Persian, rather than Greek, environment.[45]

I find this hypothesis compelling. As Vittorio Berti has shown, it is possible to recover passages of Abā's lost writings from the Christian Topography.[46] In the present case, Cosmas likely derived his understanding of the succession of the kingdoms from Abā's teachings. However, the line of continuity traced by Bonura between Aphrahat's and Cosmas's/Abā's interpretations of Daniel is less convincing, because it leaves aside a very important aspect that emerges from a comparative analysis, namely, the substantial differences between the rationales behind the interpretations of the two (/three) authors. In fact, Cosmas's attitude toward the Sasanian dynasty is at odds with Aphrahat's trenchant and unambiguous condemnation of Shapur's regime. His understanding of the role of the Sasanian Empire in sacred history lacks the aggressive rhetoric deployed by Aphrahat. More importantly, Cosmas's reading of the Danielic prophecies undermines Aphrahat's militaristic hermeneutic. Thus, if one sees a line of continuity between Cosmas's and Aphrahat's attribution of a noble status to the Roman Empire, the same is not true when it comes to the kingdom of the Persians.

This difference calls for an explanation. Cosmas's benevolent attitude toward the "empire of the Magi" reflects the better conditions and deeper integration of Christians in the Sasanian Empire. His attempt to promote an idealized Iranian political entity, almost a peer of the Roman Empire, and occupying a prominent position in sacred history, reflects the local patriotism that lays behind the adoption of the legend of the Magi by Persian Christians. His hermeneutic of Daniel is consistent with the tendency highlighted by Minov to represent Sasanian sovereigns as benevolent rulers toward local Christian communities. Lying behind Cosmas's approach to the Danielic schema, we can see the teaching of his mentor Mar Abā. Abā's intellectual background makes him an obvious candidate for the elaboration, or at least the transmission, of the ideas reported by Cosmas. Abā was a Zoroastrian who converted to Christianity; he was born to a family of Persian origins near Radan, in the province of Bēt Arāmāyē. He was an educated and learned man who, prior to his conversion, worked as a government functionary in his native province—where he was the secretary of the local marzpān. As a Christian of Persian origins, Abā would have shared the view that conferred on the Persian Empire considerable dignity and prominent status in God's plan for human salvation. Like many Zoroastrians who converted to Christianity, he would have taken pride in those figures of his ancestral religion—the Magi—who first acknowledged and adored Jesus. Abā's understanding of sacred history likely reflected what must have been the attitude of many Christians in the Sasanian Empire, situated between patriotic feelings toward their ancestral land and, at the same time, the unavoidable charm of a fully Christianized Empire.

Cosmas's effort to present the Sasanian crown as a Christian-friendly entity anticipates the policies that Abā would later pursue as catholicos, when, however, he probably had to recalibrate his views. Emphasizing their lineage with the Magi of Jesus's adoration might captivate the imagination of his Christian fellows, but it could hardly impress Khosrow, the sovereign whose benevolence he was trying to secure. As we will see in the next chapter, it was rather to the memory of the Achaemenians that the catholicos eventually resorted to celebrate his sovereign. Moreover, if at the time of his tenure as catholicos Abā still held sympathetic feelings toward the Roman Empire, he would have been reluctant to disclose them, especially since his critics among the Zoroastrian clergy would not miss the opportunity to accuse him of siding with the enemy. Thus, it is doubtful that at the peak of his career Abā would have openly declared the same views of sacred history as those reported by Cosmas.

Back to the Neṣḥānā

It is hard to say how widespread were interpretations of Persia's virtuous role in sacred history, as described by Cosmas. What is likely is that in the mid-sixth century many Persian Christians, especially converts and intellectuals, would have related more to the theories taught by Mar Abā than to those taught by Aphrahat two centuries earlier. The safest assumption is to consider the ideas circulated by the catholicos as reflections of a community that was trying to make sense of its role within the larger framework of Sasanian society. That is not to say that every individual in that community was ready to embrace a rosy picture of Sasanian-Christian relations. Not everyone would have been satisfied with the representation of the Sasanian dynasty as an early acknowledger of Jesus, supposedly attested by the story of the Magi's adoration, nor would they have been enthusiastic about Abā's complaisant (if not complicit) praise of Khosrow as a sovereign inspired by the Messiah. Several Persian Christians, like those who participated in Anōshazād's revolt in Gundeshapur in 550, surely aligned themselves on the opposite side of the ideological spectrum. We have no evidence suggesting that any of the rebels had access to Aphrahat's Fifth Demonstration on War and to the anti-Sasanian interpretations of Daniel contained therein. If they did, they no doubt would have found Aphrahat's ideas far more convincing (or convenient) than Abā's.

At the same time, not many people on the other side of the border, in the Roman Empire, would have been as keen as Cosmas about an interpretation of sacred history that conferred honors on the rival kingdom that were greater than what even the most fervent partisan of the coexistence of the two empires would have been willing to concede. The author of the Neṣḥ̣ānā was arguably such a person. Animated by strong anti-Sasanian sentiments, our writer would have felt outrage at the friendly attitude displayed by authorities of the Church of the East toward the Sasanian dynasty—a dangerous inclination that was spreading from Persia to Roman territory. Persuaded that this situation required a strong reaction, our author formulated a concept of sacred history whose anti-Sasanian traits are even more accentuated than the already militant eschatological vision elaborated by Aphrahat. A main element accounting for this radicalization is to be sought in our author's willingness to rebut conciliatory visions of sacred history spread in Sasanian, and even in Byzantine, society by influential clergymen such as Abā. If so, his work would have been addressed not only to the Christians of Roman Armenia and northern Mesopotamia, hostile to the centralizing power of Constantinople. Nor would his main aim have been to conciliate the recalcitrant Miaphysites with the Chalcedonian policies—and indeed the author's lack of any interest in Christological matters argues against this reading. Important addressees of the Neṣḥ̣ānā are—I believe—Christians in the Persian Empire, who are encouraged not to be loyal to their current rulers who, at some point in the future, will be defeated by the Christian Roman Empire, according to divine will. As we will see in the following two chapters, the author's desire to react to the exceedingly Sasanian-friendly attitude of the Church of the East emerges from other elements in the narration. These include several of his literary choices, such as the attribution to Alexander of elements of royalty commonly associated with Persian sovereigns and the simultaneous derogatory characterization of Tūbarlaq as an inept king.

9

Alexander's Horns

The prayer that Alexander addresses to God at the beginning of the Neṣḥānā may be viewed as the ideological manifesto of the author. The prayer starts with Alexander declaring an awareness of his divine mission. The horns that grow out of his head manifest the power that God gave him to subjugate the other world kingdoms, and it is to God that the king turns to request support before starting his glorious march of conquest. His goal is not personal glory or political power, but the glorification of the Lord's name and securing the legacy of His memory. It is a truly religious and global campaign, a program to establish an empire that is the representation of God's will on Earth. Alexander's prayer reaches its climax when the hero promises to relinquish his power to the Messiah upon his arrival, symbolized by the pledged offer of Alexander's throne and crown. This promise binds not only Alexander, but all future Greco-Roman emperors. Alexander understands that the arrival of the Messiah may not materialize during his lifetime, so he swears that his throne will be brought to Jerusalem after his death and that his crown will be raised upon that throne. These acts set a precedent for all future Roman kings and emperors, who are obligated to send their crowns to Jerusalem after their deaths to be raised over the throne that Alexander appointed for the Messiah.

In this chapter I will analyze the first part of the prayer and its reference to Alexander's horns.

Alexander's Horns

> King Alexander bowed, and worshipping said: "Oh God, master of kings and judges, you who raise up kings and dismiss their power, I perceive with my mind that you made me great among all kings, and that you caused horns to grow on my head, so that I may gore with them the kingdoms of the world. Give me the power from the heavens of your sanctity so that I may receive strength greater than the kingdoms of the world, and I will humiliate them and glorify your name forever, oh Lord![1]

The reference to horns on Alexander's head occurs twice in the Neṣḥānā. Toward the end of the Syriac work, in the section that describes Alexander's prophetic dream of Tūbarlaq's imminent attack, we find words similar to those uttered by Alexander in his prayer. Here, however, it is God who speaks these words to Alexander: "I made you great among all kings, and I caused horns of iron to grow on your head, so that you may gore with them the kingdoms of the world."

The two sentences about Alexander's horns are almost identical. There are two main differences, however. The first difference is that Alexander and God switch the roles of speaker and listener. The second difference is a detail that is reported only in the passage at the end of the Neṣḥānā, that is, the material from which Alexander's horns are made, namely, iron—a detail that is missing from Alexander's prayer. This detail and its absence at the beginning of the Syriac work are important elements for our analysis.[2]

Horn symbolism appears in ancient iconographic representations of Alexander as the son of the Egyptian god, Ammon. In these representations, Alexander is crowned with ram horns, as is typical in Ammon effigies. The association between Alexander and the Egyptian god probably occurred after Alexander's conquest of Egypt. The sources report that Alexander visited Ammon's oracle at the oasis of Siwah, where he was "adopted" as the son of that god. What motivated Alexander to visit Ammon's sanctuary in the Egyptian desert is not clear. Was it to acquire legitimacy to rule over the country? Or was it for other reasons? The debate is open.[3] What seems certain is that Alexander's acquisition of the title of Ammon's son is connected to his elevation to the status of pharaoh. It is with the iconographic traits typical of pharaonic regalia that Alexander is represented in the temple reliefs at Luxor.

Representations of the horned Alexander may have served propagandistic and political purposes. As Fulińska observes: "it might seem a logical step to 'translate' this exaltation and its political impact into Greek terms by employing the long-established syncretic image of the horned Zeus-Ammon."[4] However, there is no compelling evidence that during his lifetime Alexander himself adopted or endorsed the symbolism of Ammon's horns—although this is possible. The only mention of Alexander wearing Ammon's horns occurs in the words of Alexander's contemporary, Ephippus of Olynthus, which are quoted by the Greek grammarian Athenaeus (third century CE). According to Ephippus, Alexander used to appear at symposia disguised as Ammon, wearing ram horns and other emblems of the god.[5] Nevertheless, scholars are skeptical about the value of Ephippus's testimony because of his notorious hostility toward Alexander and his resentment of the latter's wearing exotic garments.[6]

The most ancient material evidence for the image of the horned king are coins minted by Alexander's successors, the Diadochi, and, especially, in Lysimachus's Thrace (r. 301–281 BCE) and Ptolemy's Egypt (r. 305–282 BCE). These coins circulated from 297 BCE. Their dissemination was so conspicuous as to provoke the minting of imitations by rulers in the Arabian Peninsula.[7] The numismatic typology featured on the Diadochi's coins was not as enduring. Representations of the horned Alexander were not promulgated by later Hellenistic rulers, while representations of the horned Ammon also appear to have been rare. The horn symbolism still appears on octadrachms minted by Ptolemy's daughter, Arsinoe Philadelphos, who ruled Egypt from 275 to 268 BCE.[8] However, over the following two centuries no verified numismatic example of this kind has been found. It is only during the reign of Mithridates VI Eupator of Pontus (r. 120–63 BCE) that Ammon's horns reappear on coins produced in a Hellenistic royal mint[9]—a revival that probably should be attributed to Mithridates's notorious imitatio Alexandri. This is the last time that this numismatic model appears to have been adopted by a ruler. Thus, it was probably not through coins that the iconic image of the horned Alexander was transmitted to the late antique world, but rather by means of artistic and literary expression. The historical records attest to the persistence of this imagery as a common cultural model in the Roman world.

Several artworks from Late Antiquity display the iconography of the Alexander Magnus corniger. Among these are a gold pendant preserved at the Walters Art Museum in Baltimore[10] and an onyx cameo preserved at the British Museum in London.[11] It is, however, sculptural portraiture that provides us with the best examples of this iconographic phenomenon. One example is a life-size marble head representing Alexander with Ammon's ram horns, preserved at the Nationalmuseet in Copenhagen. The head is possibly a Roman copy of a Greek original, produced around the second half of the second century CE.[12] Another example is the already mentioned bust of a horned man—in all likelihood Alexander—found at Katalymata ton Plakoton in Cyprus.[13] Although it is not clear whether this marble bust was produced at the same time as the building in the archaeological complex—which probably dates to the seventh century—or if it was later added as a decorative element,[14] it demonstrates that the image of the horned Alexander was still relevant in Late Antiquity. Statues of this kind may have been more common than the extant material evidence suggests.

Clemens of Alexandria (d. ca. 215 CE) attests to the popularity of the horned Alexander sculptures when he affirms: “Alexander wished to be thought the son of Ammon and to be modeled with horns (κερασφόρος) by sculptors, so eager was he to outrage the beautiful face of a man by a horn.”[15] The hostility displayed by Clemens of Alexandria toward this iconography was not an isolated case, but is representative of common Christian antipathy toward such pagan symbolism. It is in light of the tensions that accompanied the transmission of elements from the Classical heritage to an increasingly Christianized world that we should understand the efforts made by the sculptor of the Katalymata ton Plakoton to emphasize the anthropomorphic features of the statue. As Stewart convincingly argues, the sculptor’s departure from previous models of naturalistic iconographies of Alexander’s horns, and his decision to represent them as some kind of horned diadem, were intended to emphasize Alexander’s humanity and thereby discredit pagan tendencies to venerate the Macedonian as a god. By representing Alexander as a man wearing a horned diadem, the sculptor was able to de-paganize, so to speak, the pagan symbol—Ammon’s horns—and to remove any element relating to the deification of Alexander.[16]

Sculpture is not the only medium in which Ammon’s horns continued to be connected to the person of Alexander in Late Antiquity. Literature also played a major role. The horn symbolism appears as an important feature of the rec. α of the Alexander Romance. Here ram horns are worn by the Egyptian high priest Nechtanebus, who, in the Romance, is described as Alexander’s biological father. It is by wearing these and other regalia associated with Ammon that Nechtanebus appears to Alexander’s mother, Olympias, in the guise of the god and has intercourse with her.[17] For the author of the rec. α, Alexander’s alleged descent from the Egyptian god was a consequence of the stratagem through which Nechtanebus convinced Olympias that she had intercourse with Ammon and that she bore the god’s child.

In the Romance, most references to Ammon's horns are about Nechtanebus, not Alexander. There is only one passage in the text that explicitly associates Alexander with the horns. This occurs toward the end of the Romance when, after Alexander's death, Macedonians and Persians quarrel over the place of the king's burial: whereas the Macedonians wish to bring Alexander back to Macedonia, the Persians want to carry his body to Persia and to venerate him as a god together with Mithra. It is at this point that Alexander's general, Ptolemy, consults the oracle of the Babylonian god (as Mithra is described in the Romance) about the appropriate burial place for Alexander. The oracle instructs Ptolemy to carry Alexander's body to Alexandria and the king is here identified as "the horned king" (βασιλέα κερασφόρον).[18]

The passage describing Alexander as a horned king is preserved in the Armenian version of the Alexander Romance,[19] which is based on the rec. α, but not in the Syriac version, which is a translation of that same recension. Even if we cannot establish whether the Syriac translation of the Romance was produced before or after the time when the author of the Neṣḥānā was writing, the absence of the passage describing Alexander as a horned king may indicate hostility in the Syriac-speaking world toward the image of Alexander bearing the horns of the Egyptian god Ammon. Like the sculptor of Alexander's bust at Katalymata ton Plakoton, our author may have lived in a community that did not look kindly on representations of the horned Alexander. If so, it comes as no surprise that the author of the Neṣḥānā had to find a way to adjust the ancient pagan symbolism of Ammon's ram horns in his portrayal of Alexander. The strategy he followed differed from the one adopted by the sculptor of the Cypriote bust, however. Instead of representing Alexander's horns as a human feature, our author stresses their divine origins while advancing a conceptual re-elaboration of the motif.

As apparent from the analysis of other components of the text, the Syriac author is very skilled at using previous traditions and in conferring new meanings on them. In this case, our writer Christianizes the horn symbolism and removes any element that may connect it to the topos of Alexander's descent from Ammon. The author reworks the image of the horned Alexander so that the horns symbolize the authority, conferred upon him by a Christian God, to conquer other worldly kingdoms. The horn symbolism is reconceptualized as the source of regal authority that flows from the true Christian God. The Syriac author’s attitude toward the horn symbolism may be compared with that displayed three centuries earlier by Clemens of Alexander. In contrast to Clemens’s haughty remarks about what he considered deplorable representations of Alexander, the author of the Neṣḥānā embraces the pagan symbolism of Ammon’s horns and turns it into a symbol of God’s power. According to him, Alexander’s horned crown does not indicate that he was the progeny of a pagan god, but rather that he was appointed by the real God. In connection with Alexander’s horns, our author makes several references to scripture. In fact, the literary work performed by the author in connection with the motif of Alexander’s horns was complex, involving some subtle, intertextual connections to the biblical tradition.

1 Kings 22:11/2 Chronicles 18:10

Two parallel passages in the Hebrew Bible, in 1 Kings 22 and 2 Chronicles 18, describe how, following the advice of his ally King Jehoshaphat of Judah, Ahab, the king of Israel, summons a council of 400 prophets and consults with them about the expedition that he is preparing against the Aramaean city of Ramoth Gilead. The prophets give the king a favorable verdict and encourage him to proceed with the attack. The leader of the council, Zedekiah son of Kenaanah, endorses the suggestion through a curious mise-en-scène:

> Zedekiah son of Chenaanah made for himself horns of iron, and he said, “Thus says the Lord: With these you shall gore the Arameans until they are destroyed.” (1 Kings 22:11/2 Chronicles 18:10)

Zedekiah’s announcement contains two elements that are features of the passages in the Neṣḥānā under investigation: (1) the iron horns; and (2) God’s incitement to use those horns as weapons against an enemy. A brief look at the language of the two biblical passages in the Peshitta makes the correspondence between the Syriac text and the story of Zedekiah even more intriguing.

The expression “horns of iron” (qrntʾ d-przlʾ) is identical in the two texts. Almost identical are the words “you will gore with them” in the Neṣḥānā (tdqr b-hyn)[20] and “you will gore with these” in the Peshitta (b-hlyn tdqr). The linguistic connections between this passage and the Neṣḥānā are evident. The Syriac author clearly meant to evoke the scriptural passages.

But why did the author chose to transfer elements from these specific biblical passages into the story of his hero's crowning by God? The episode of Zedekiah's masquerade has a very negative connotation. Zedekiah's vision of Ahab's success turns out to be wrong, and the king of Israel dies in battle against the Aramaeans. The Alexander of the Neṣḥānā appears as a sort of nemesis to Zedekiah. Unlike the iron horns worn by Zedekiah, those worn by Alexander are not a human artifact; they have grown on Alexander's head by God's decree. Alexander's horns have a divine origin. The different origins of Zedekiah's and Alexander's horns typify another point of contrast between the two characters, that is, their falsely inspired (Zedekiah's) and divinely inspired (Alexander's) prophecies. In fact, contrary to the ill-fated campaign of Ahab, wrongly advised by the false prophet Zedekiah, Alexander is destined to achieve victory in battle because he is divinely inspired and is provided by God with the necessary means to defeat his enemies.

But why did the author contrast the case of Alexander with that of a marginal character in the Bible? An obvious answer is that the Syriac author was trying to make sense of the ancient motif of Alexander's horns through a biblical text that also features horns worn by a human. The author of the Neṣḥānā reverses the situation described in the biblical episode and turns a negative element in the narrative—Zedekiah's artificial horns—into a positive feature of the story of Alexander. But there might be more, if we accept the (plausible) hypothesis that our author had knowledge of the Alexander Romance, or at least of related traditions. In this case, as a connoisseur of biblical stories, our author certainly would not have overlooked the narrative similarity between the mise-en-scène of Zedekiah in the Bible and that of Nechtanebus in the Alexander Romance. The story of Nechtanebus's seduction of Alexander's mother, Olympias, through the ruse of wearing Ammon's regalia—including ram horns—to disguise himself as the god, is similar to the episode of the false prophet Zedekiah. By reversing the situation described in 1 Kings 22:11/2 Chronicles 18:10, the author of the Neṣḥānā produced a virtuous version of the story to contrast that of the Egyptian priest described in the Romance.

Unlike the author of the Alexander Romance, who explains Alexander's claims to be the son of Ammon through the story of Nechtanebus's fraud, the author of the Neṣḥānā brings the question of the hero's alleged divinity —already controversial among early Christians[21]—into a Christian context, replacing the theme of Alexander's divine lineage with that of his divine appointment. This paradigmatic shift is reflected in the different nature of the horn symbolism in the Romance and in the Neṣḥānā, which replicates the dichotomy that the Syriac created between his work and the biblical story of Zedekiah. Unlike the horns worn by Nechtanebus in the Romance (and by Zedekiah in the Bible), Alexander's iron horns in the Syriac work are not a carnivalesque accessory. The horns that the hero bears on his head are the symbol of the power that God gave him and of his destiny to conquer the world. According to the Syriac author, Alexander understood the meaning of the horns that God made grow on his head ("I perceive with my mind that you caused horns to grow on my head").

Micah 4:13

Another biblical reference behind the description of Alexander's iron horns in the Neṣḥānā are the final verses of Micah 4 (vv. 11–13). These verses are framed as a conclusive remark on God's promise to rescue the Jewish people and to restore them to their land (vv. 6–10):

> v. 11: Now many nations are assembled against you saying, "Let her be profaned, and let our eyes gaze upon Zion."
>
> v. 12: But they do not know the thoughts of the Lord; they do not understand his plan, that he has gathered them as sheaves to the threshing floor.
>
> v. 13: Arise and thresh, O daughter Zion, for I will make your horn iron and your hoofs bronze; you shall beat in pieces many peoples, and shall devote their gain to the Lord, their wealth to the Lord of the whole earth.

The militaristic bravado in v. 13 finds clear resonances in the Neṣḥānā, specifically in the words that God addresses to Alexander before the battle with Tūbarlaq. The parallel is further emphasized when we compare the Neṣḥānā passage with the Peshitta's rendition of the relevant words, "for I will make your horn iron and your hoofs bronze; you shall beat in pieces many peoples." The Peshitta's words: "I will make your horns[22] of iron" (qrntky ʾ ʿd d-przlʾ) bring to mind the Neṣḥānā's words: "and I caused horns to grow on your head" (qrntʾ d-przlʾ ʾwʿyt b-ršk),[23] while the Peshitta's: "and you will pound many people" in the Peshitta (w-tdqyn ʿmmʾ *sgy*ʾʾ) resembles the Neṣḥānā's: "so that you may gore with them the kingdoms of the earth" in the Neṣḥānā (d-tdqr b-hyn mlkwtʾ d-ʾrʿʾ).[24] The language used by the author of the Neṣḥānā clearly signals that of the Peshitta, especially "horns of iron" (qrntʾ d-przlʾ) in the Neṣḥānā, and "your horns . . . of iron" in the Peshitta (qrntky . . . d-przlʾ), and "you will gore" (tdqr) in the Neṣḥānā, and "you will pound" in the Peshitta (tdqyn).

In addition to linguistic affinities, the passages in Micah 4 and in the Neṣḥānā display close thematic affinities. In both cases, God encourages his protégés not to fear their enemies, and he reassures them that he will provide the means to achieve victory on the battlefield. In both cases, the divinely sponsored weapons are horns made of the same material, that is, iron. By referring to Micah 4, the Syriac author draws a parallel between Israel and Alexander's kingdom in the Neṣḥānā as two divinely favored political entities, both benefiting from God's military assistance in battle. This is not the only occasion on which the author characterizes Alexander's kingdom in a manner that is ultimately based on biblical representations of the exclusive relationship between Israel and God. A similar transfer to Alexander's kingdom occurs in the scene of the battle against Tūbarlaq, which immediately follows the dialogue between God and Alexander. As noted in Chapter 5, the Syriac author draws another parallel between the aid that Alexander receives in the combat against his enemy and that received by the Israelites from God in their battle with the Philistines, as described in 1 Samuel 7:10.

In two consecutive scenes, our author refers to scriptural passages that describe divine favor for the people of Israel engaged in battle. The author adopts this topos of divine military aid to Israel and transfers it to his hero, Alexander. These cursory references to the Scripture hint at the status of Alexander's Greco-Roman Empire (i.e., Byzantium) as the New Israel—apparently anticipating a topos that would become commonplace in later Byzantine imperial discourse.[25] Through the words in Micah 4:13, and the image of Zion's iron horns in particular, the author of the Neṣḥānā reconceptualizes ancient, pagan representations of the horned Alexander, and turns Alexander's horns into a symbol of the alliance between him and the Christian God. The ram horns of Amon's effigies become the emblem of Byzantium's special relationship with God.

Daniel 8:3–7

To this point, we have focused on the second mention of Alexander's horns in the Neṣḥānā, which occurs in the words that God addresses to Alexander before the latter goes to battle against Tūbarlaq. Let us now turn to the first mention of Alexander's horns in the prayer that the hero addresses to God before undertaking his journey to the edges of the Earth. Compared to the second passage, Alexander's prayer lacks an important element, that is, the information that the horns that God makes grow on Alexander's head are made of iron. The absence of this information is very relevant. Indeed, because of the location of Alexander's prayer at the beginning of the narrative, the reader learns that Alexander's horns are made of iron only several pages later, toward the end of the text. As the previous analysis has demonstrated, the specification of the material of which Alexander's horns are made is a signal to the reader of the biblical passages that the Syriac author wants to evoke. As seen, the words "horns of iron" function as a cursory reference to Micah 4:13 and to 1 Kings 22:11/2 Chronicles 18:10. Without reference to iron, the hint to these scriptural passages is lost. This is exactly what happens in Alexander's prayer at the beginning of the Neṣḥānā.

But what does the reader understand, then, when reading Alexander's claim to have been crowned with horns by God, if the specification of "iron horns" is missing in the passage? It is unlikely that the author forgot to include this important detail, while nothing suggests that anything was lost in the transmission of the text.[26] Is it possible, then, that the author inserted cursory references to Micah 4:13 and to 1 Kings 22:11/2 Chronicles 18:10 at the end of the text, because with his first mention of the motif of Alexander's horns he wanted to direct the reader's attention to other biblical passages? The answer to this question—I think—is affirmative, and the author's scriptural allusion fits perfectly with other important aspects of his agenda.

As a starting point of our analysis, let us briefly observe how earlier scholars have analyzed the passage in Alexander's prayer where the hero confirms having received horns from God. Both Reinink and Bohas connect the first mention of Alexander's horns in the Neṣḥānā to the Danielic prophecies in Daniel 7 and 8.[27] Bohas does not specify the exact section of the two biblical passages supposedly recalled by the Syriac text. By contrast, Reinink links the horns of the Syriac Alexander to either the fourth beast of Daniel 7 (vv. 7–8) or to the he-goat in Daniel 8 (vv. 5–8, 21). As Reinink rightly observes, biblical exegetes often identified in Alexander those two specific "characters" of the Danielic prophecies—the fourth beast and the he-goat.[28] Reinink does not specify which specific element in the Syriac text is reminiscent of the biblical passages. I assume, however, that the intertextual link is the horn symbolism, which may indeed relate the horned Alexander in the Neṣḥānā to the fourth beast in Daniel 7, or to the he-goat in Daniel 8—both biblical beasts are characterized by the horn(s) on their heads. Upon closer examination, however, the connection may be only apparent.

The distinguishing feature of the fourth beast in Daniel 7 are the ten horns that crown its head, and the eleventh horn that suddenly grows, causing three of the ten other horns to fall. This imagery alludes to the fragmentation of Alexander's empire into the Diadochi kingdoms—represented by the ten horns—and to the rise of Antiochus Epiphanes—the eleventh horn—as clearly appears from the explanation of the prophecy found in the subsequent lines of the Danielic text itself (vv. 24–25). Now, besides the fact that the Alexander of the Neṣḥānā also has horns, nothing of the complex symbolism associated with the fourth beast in Daniel 7 can be found in the Syriac text. As seen in Daniel 7, the fluctuating number of the beast's horns (10 + 1–3) is a trope for the political scenario that followed the death of Alexander. The Peshitta reports that the fourth beast has ten horns and refers to the eleventh horn as "one horn" (qrnʾ ḥdʾ). No connection to this biblical passage can be detected in the Neṣḥānā, where the plural form "horns" (qrntʾ) represents a pair (i.e., "two horns").

Another crucial difference between the two texts is that there is no indication in Daniel 7 that the horns of the fourth beast function as weapons against the beast's enemies, or that the beast will use them to destroy other kingdoms. In this regard, a closer parallel to the Neṣḥānā may be found in Daniel 8, specifically, in the description of the he-goat attacking the ram—presumably with the single horn between his eyes. As noted, in Daniel 8 the he-goat and the ram represent two rival kingdoms that biblical exegetes usually (and correctly) identify as the Persian and Macedonian empires. From this perspective, it is attractive to find in the Neṣḥānā an allusion to the he-goat that will defeat the Persian ram in Daniel 8. However, this reading does not stand up to the scrutiny of textual analysis. In describing the he-goat, the Danielic prophecy clearly refers to a single horn.[29] Had the Syriac author wished to associate his horned Alexander to the he-goat of the prophecy, why did he not describe his hero as crowned with one horn, instead of two? Consider that, as much as the single horn motif characterizes the he-goat in Daniel 8, the two horns motif characterizes the ram at v. 3 of the same passage.[30] Surprisingly, the Alexander of the Neṣḥānā finds a closer parallel in the ram of the Danielic prophecy than in the he-goat. Like the ram, Alexander has two horns—with the term ܩܪܢܬܐ (*qrnt*ʾ, "two horns") appearing in both the Peshitta on Daniel 8:3 and in the Neṣḥānā. This is not the only element that connects Alexander and the ram.

The mission to which Alexander commits in his prayer, that is, uprooting all world kingdoms and subjugating their territories, brings to mind Daniel 8:4, where the ram attacks westward, northward, and southward to submit the other beasts. An element unnoticed by previous scholars further exposes the analogy between Alexander's world campaigns and the ram's furious attacks. In Daniel, the ram charges (מְנַגֵּחַ/mənaggêaḥ) against the other beasts. In the Peshitta, mənaggêaḥ is rendered as ܡܕܩܪ (mdqr), that is, "goring." This peculiar rendition of the biblical text in Syriac is important. Indeed, the author of the Neṣḥānā uses the same verb ܕܩܪ (dqr), "to gore," that occurs in the Peshitta.[31] The image in the Neṣḥānā of Alexander using his two horns to gore the other world kingdoms thus reflects an understanding of Daniel 8:4 common in Syriac circles, where the ram was imagined as using its two horns as weapons against its enemies. Thus, it appears that with his first mention of the motif of Alexander's horns, the Syriac author was alluding to Daniel 8. Contrary to previous scholarship, however, the allusion refers to the ram, not to the he-goat of the prophecy.

An Innovative but Not Unthinkable Association

The association made by the author of the Neṣḥānā between Alexander and the ram of the prophecy has no antecedents in earlier literature. As seen in the previous chapter, Alexander was an important figure in the exegeses of the Danielic prophecies. While exegetes did not unanimously agree about the role of the Macedonian within the prophetic visions in Daniel 2 and 7—Alexander was associated with either the third or the fourth empires in Daniel 2, and with either the third or fourth beasts in Daniel 7—there was no uncertainty surrounding the vision of the ram and the he-goat in Daniel 8. In the latter case, Alexander's role appears to have been well defined, and his identification with the he-goat seems to have been unequivocal among biblical exegetes. To the best of my knowledge, no exegete identifies the he-goat with any historical person other than Alexander. This identification is attested since at least Hippolytus of Rome (d. ca. 235 CE) and is repeated by later theologians, including Origen (d. ca. 253 CE), John Chrysostom (d. 407 CE), and Jerome (d. 420 CE).[32] In the Syriac tradition, this interpretation was indisputable, since the Peshitta on Daniel 8:5 contains a gloss that identifies Alexander as the he-goat of the vision.[33] This clarification within the scripture itself surely exercised decisive influence on those Syriac authors who wrote about the vision in Daniel 8. We have already seen that Aphrahat had no doubts about identifying the he-goat with Alexander; and the same may be said about a commentary on Daniel ascribed to Ephrem.[34]

More doubts seem to have surrounded the identity of the ram. Aphrahat, like most Christian exegetes, identifies the ram as Darius.[35] This identification, however, raises several problems. It is well known that three different Persian sovereigns bore the name Darius: Darius I, also known as Darius the Great (r. 522–486 BCE); Darius II (r. 423–404/5 BCE); and the last Achaemenian king, Darius III (r. 336–330 BCE). Although numerous exegetes identify Darius as the ram,[36] virtually none of them clarifies whom among those three sovereigns they intend. For sure, exegetical requirements often prevailed over historical accuracy. For instance, Hippolytus infers that "the ram is Darius, the king of the Persians, who prevailed over all nations [. . .] Alexander after he had engaged with Darius in war, overpowered him and prevailed over all his army."[37] Hippolytus appears to conflate the identities of Darius I and Darius III—the former was known for his "global" military campaigns, the latter for having been overthrown by Alexander.

To complicate matters, exegetes had to take into account a fourth Darius: the mysterious Darius the Mede, whom we have already met in Chapter 5. Jerome identifies Darius the Mede as the uncle of Cyrus and, following Josephus,[38] describes him as the son of Astyages.[39] Jerome also reports that the Greeks call this Darius Cyaxeres,[40] which is how Darius the Mede is identified by Theodoret of Cyr (d. ca. 458). Both authors demonstrate awareness of the confusion surrounding the name Darius and try to dissipate doubts. Theodoret explicitly broaches the question: “We must distinguish between the reign of Darius son of Ahasuerus and that of Darius the Persian.” Jerome goes even further: “We are not to think of that other Darius in the second year of whose reign the temple was built [. . .]; nor are we to think of the Darius who was vanquished by Alexander, the king of the Macedonians.”[41]

Despite these efforts to clarify the matter, confusion persisted. Probably because of the several mentions in the Book of Daniel, the figure of Darius the Mede entered exegetical explanations of the vision in Daniel 8. Jerome identifies the ram exclusively with Darius, the uncle of Cyrus, that is, Darius the Mede. However, the most blatant case of confusion occurs in the Peshitta. As in the case of the he-goat of the prophecy, the Peshitta adds a gloss to shed light on the historical figure behind the obscure character of the ram. In the gloss (which is repeated twice, at vv. 3 and 7) the ram is identified as Darius the Mede. The Peshitta’s identification of Darius the Mede attests to possible confusion between the biblical figure and the Persian king Darius defeated by Alexander. The inclusion of the second gloss in the text of v. 7 seems to confirm this confusion. The inserted words “the ram is Darius the Mede” immediately follow the he-goat’s defeat of the ram. What is certain is that the very presence of a gloss identifying the ram as Darius the Mede endorsed the conflation between the latter and Darius III. This is evident in a passage of Malalas’s Chronicle, quoted in the previous chapter, in which we read: “In the fourth year of the reign of Dareios the Mede, son of Assalam, God raised up Alexander [. . .]. He defeated Dareios, emperor of the Persians, the son of Assalam, and captured him, all his empire. . . .”[42] Here Malalas mistakenly identifies the Darius defeated by Alexander as the biblical figure of Darius the Mede.

Some exegetes further complicated the question of the ram’s identity. After identifying the ram as Darius the Mede, Jerome identifies Cyrus as the person represented by one of the two ram’s horns, especially the highest horn.[43]According to Theodoret, the two horns refer to the double nationality, Mede and Persian, of the ram:

> He perceived two horns on the ram because Cyrus was the first to reign over it and transmitted the empire only to his sons; when his son Cambyses died, soothsayers held power for a few months, but shortly afterwards Darius son of Hystaspes, who passed the empire on to his offspring and theirs up to the last Darius, whose empire Alexander the Macedonian took over after slaying him.[44]

In sum, attempts by exegetes to identify the historical person behind the figure of the ram in Daniel 8 have produced contradictory conclusions. Although several commentators identified the ram with some king from the past, of either Median or Persian origins, the exact identity of this king remained open to debate. Much confusion seems to have surrounded figures named Darius. At the same time, some exegetes—Jerome and Theodoret are the only ones recorded, but the list may have been longer—also included a second figure, Cyrus, in their attempts to explore the historical reality behind the ram. As is often the case, uncertainty opens the door to flexibility and sometimes creates room for new, and even surprising, innovations. For instance, when in the mid-seventh century an anonymous Syriac author, now commonly identified as Ps.-Ephrem, wrote his homily On the End, he affirmed that the arrival of the sons of Ishmael was occurring "in the name of the ram." In other words, Ps.-Ephrem read the recent Arab territorial expansion into Byzantine provinces through the Danielic vision and made a connection between the Ishmaelites—as he defined them—and the ram.

Although unprecedented—or at least previously unrecorded—Ps.-Ephrem's interpretation of the Danielic prophecy continues the process of reinterpretation of the Daniel texts that had begun in previous centuries. As the reader may recall, the scheme of the four world kingdoms had come to be interpreted in two different ways, with the Persian and the Roman empires alternating in the role of the last world kingdom. Both interpretations circulated side by side, thus further endorsing the uncertainty surrounding the Danielic prophecies. This uncertainty forced the exegetes to speculate over the verses in question. To bring another example from the seventh century, the anonymous author known to scholars as Ps.-Sabeos advanced a new interpretation of the Danielic scheme in which the third slot is allocated to the Huns of Gog and Magog, and the fourth slot is reserved for the kingdom of Ishmael.[45] In a nutshell, few biblical texts were as open to exegetical interpretations as the Danielic texts were. In these circumstances, the connection established by the author of the Neṣḥānā between Alexander and the ram of the Danielic vision would not have surprised his contemporaries. For sure, it was an innovation, but an innovation set in the framework of a blurry, and hence fluid, exegetical framework.

At the same time, the association of Alexander with a literary figure who had been identified with ancient Persian rulers would hardly have seemed odd in the cultural context of Late Antiquity. Since Antiquity, Alexander had been associated with a prominent figure of the Persian, Achaemenid heritage: Cyrus the Great. As noted, Procopius presents Alexander and Cyrus as a pair of exemplar monarchs against Justinian's detractors. However, the association between the two figures goes further back in time. Parallels between them were already extant during Alexander's lifetime and were probably encouraged by Alexander himself.[46] Alexander's esteem for Cyrus left a trace in later representations of the Macedonian conqueror, who earned the appellation of φιλόκυρος, coined by Strabo in his Geography.[47] At the same time, the association with Cyrus played an important role in the dynastic claims of Hellenistic and post-Hellenistic rulers. It is well known that Mithridates Eupator claimed a double line of descent from Cyrus and Darius I, on his father's side, and from Alexander, on his mother's side. Less known are the assertions made by Mithridates's contemporary, Antiochus I of Commagene (r. 70–38 BCE), who claimed that his paternal and maternal lineages could be traced back to Darius the Great and Alexander, respectively.[48] These examples from the first century BCE give credibility to the information reported by Tacitus (d. 120 CE), according to which the Arsacid King Artabanus II (r. 12–38/40 CE) sought legitimization for his territorial claims by asserting the twofold heritage of both the Achaemenian and the Macedonian empires.[49]

The connection between Cyrus and Alexander appears to have been a common feature of the Roman rhetoric since at least the late Republican period. In a funeral lamentation on the death of Publius Crassus, who died along with his father, the triumvir Marcus Licinius Crassus, in the disastrous battle fought against the Parthians at Carrhae in 53 BCE, Cicero (d. 43 BCE) laments Publius's desire to follow the example of Cyrus and Alexander.[50] This duo of great sovereigns from the past appears to have been a cliché among late antique authors who wished to celebrate current rulers through their comparison with earlier models. For example, in the eulogy to Constantine, Eusebius of Caesarea (d. 339 CE) exalts the prominence of the Roman emperor by comparing him to Cyrus and Alexander—together with a series of arguments to prove how Constantine not only epitomized great leadership, but also prevailed over the two illustrious kings of the past.[51]

However, it is again Christian exegesis that provides us with the most significant elements. For these exegetes, the figure of Alexander explained the obscure prophecy of the four chariots in the sixth book of Zechariah (Zec 6:1–8). Influential Christian hermeneutists like Jerome and Cyril identified Alexander with the third chariot of the prophecy. According to this reading, Alexander's rise immediately follows that of Cyrus the Great, who is represented by the second chariot. According to Cyril's interpretation, Alexander performs the same task performed by Cyrus, that is, to attack and to subjugate the Babylonians in order to punish them for the suffering they brought on the people of Judea. Cyril's interpretation gives us an idea of the kind of speculations that late antique authors could develop around the figures of Cyrus and Alexander, starting from the notion that both sovereigns fulfilled biblical prophecies.

An Association Full of Political Implications

The author of the Neṣḥānā lived in a cultural environment that included the complex ideas that shaped Cyril's representation of Cyrus and Alexander as a pair of divinely guided sovereigns. In such a context, the association that he makes between the Macedonian hero and a biblical "character" traditionally understood to represent the power of ancient Persian sovereigns (i.e., the ram) would have been unusual but not absurd. Still unusual, and one wonders why he decided to depart from a more conventional exegesis of the Danielic passage and formulated that unusual association instead. Of course, in his eyes the ram in Daniel 8 must have appeared as an appealing figure through which to read and then reconceptualize the pagan symbols of Zeus-Ammon's ram horns in light of scriptural knowledge. However, this observation alone does not explain why our author draws other parallels with the Persian sovereigns elsewhere in his work. In fact, over the course of the text, our author strengthens this association.

As we will see in the following chapter, in the section of Alexander's prayer that immediately follows the king's statement about the horns he received from God, the author attributes to Alexander the possession of two other precious items—the crown and the throne of the kosmokrator— traditionally associated by Syriac Christians with Cyrus and other Persian sovereigns of the Bible. The connection to these Persian kings is reflected by the way our author adapts to Alexander the motif of the charge of the ram in the Book of Daniel. In the Neṣḥānā, Alexander marches in a westward direction (unlike the historical Alexander, who attacked Darius's empire from the west). The image of Alexander marching from the east and goring the rival kingdoms with his horns brings to mind the charge of the ram from the east in the Book of Daniel. The hero of the Neṣḥānā accomplishes the same deeds that biblical exegetes had traditionally attributed to Darius/Darius the Mede, or to Cyrus. Our author draws an implicit connection between Alexander and these glorious Persian sovereigns when he tells the reader that after defeating Tūbarlaq, the Macedonian became the master of Babylon and Assyria. Alexander's subjugation of Babylon recalls Cyrus's glorious conquest, which, in the Book of Daniel, is incidentally attributed to Darius the Mede, that is, the ram of the Peshitta.[52]

In sum, it appears that the parallel that the author draws between Alexander and the rulers of ancient Persia is not limited to the curious identification of the former with the ram of the Danielic prophecy. At the same time, one should observe that the attribution to Alexander of symbols and deeds otherwise attributed to the kings of ancient Persia correlates with the already observed attempts to dissociate Alexander's archenemy, Tūbarlaq, from those very same rulers. Indeed, the construction of the fictitious character of Tūbarlaq of the house of ʾḥšwrḥ, whose patronymic, as noted, is a distortion of the name Ahasuerus (ʾḥšyrš), has the effect of denying any connection between the kingdom of Alexander's rival and the ancient Persian rulers of the biblical tradition.

The overall picture described by the Syriac author may at first seem surprising. In anti-Persian polemical discourse, early writers almost never missed the opportunity to depict an ideological scenario in which they juxtaposed the positive comparatio Alexandri, applied to Roman emperors, with a negative comparatio Achaemenidorum.[53] Each Alexander redivivus who appeared on the Roman political scene was regularly provided with an Achaemenid counterpart in Ctesiphon. "Achaemenid programs," that is, the intention to rebuild the Achaemenid Empire, were commonly attributed to Persian sovereigns. Writing about the reigns of Ardashir I (r. 224–242 CE) and Shapur II, Roman historians Herodian (d. 240 CE),[54] Cassius Dio (d.

235 CE),[55] and Ammianus Marcellinus (d. ca. 397 CE)[56] reported that these sovereigns sought to restore the territorial integrity of the empire of their alleged ancestors (i.e., the Achaemenians). The scholarly doubts about the accuracy of these reports are not relevant here.[57] What interests us is how these claims, which were attributed to Sasanian kings, functioned in Roman political discourse. The representation of Persian rulers as pursuers of an Achaemenid revival were indeed functional in the idealized reproduction of the ancestral fight between Alexander and Darius. Roman propaganda spread the idea that the clash between the two rivals was being repeated in a new political context—with the implication that Persia would be defeated once again.

Such an ideological paradigm can be identified in Aphrahat's anti-Sasanian exegesis of the Danielic prophecies. As seen, Aphrahat presents Shapur as a reincarnation of the ram in the prophecy. The rationale behind this association is the creation of a meta-historical reality in which the ram represents both past and present Persian dynasties. Aphrahat's aim was to spread the message that just as the ram was once defeated by the he-goat, Alexander, it will be vanquished again by the fourth beast, Rome. The triptych association of "ram/Darius–ram/Shapur–Darius/Shapur" contributes to Aphrahat's elaboration of a complex scenario in which the ram stands for a meta-historical entity engaged in a perpetual struggle with the political powers from the west, the he-goat, Alexander, and the mighty fourth beast, Rome. Through his peculiar reading of the prophecy, Aphrahat expresses his hope that in the near future Shapur will be defeated by a Roman emperor, just as Darius was defeated by Alexander in the past.

Why does the author of Neṣḥānā dissociate Tūbarlaq from the ram of the Danielic prophecy, thus missing the opportunity to produce a powerful hermeneutic like the one elaborated by Aphrahat? And why does he attribute the emblem of the ram horns—together with other symbols of royalty commonly associated with Persians kings (see next chapter)—to Alexander instead? The explanation, I believe, is found once more in the contemporaneous political context.

It is reported that in December 543 (or January 544) the catholicos Mār Abā summoned a synod in Ctesiphon. In his opening blessing dedicated to Khosrow, Abā hailed Khosrow as a second Cyrus and portrayed him as a blessed sovereign inspired by the Messiah—something that brings to mind the representation of Cyrus as anointed king in the Bible (Isa 45:1).[58] Abā probably was not simply trying to obtain royal benevolence. The reign of Khosrow Anōshirvān witnessed the increasing influence of Christians at the Sasanian court and a growing intimacy between the catholicoi and the shah. Abā was particularly close to Khosrow, with whom he reportedly collaborated, to the point of providing his assistance to suppress the revolt of Christians in Gundeshapur, led by Khosrow's Christian son Anōshazād.[59] One wonders whether the words with which Abā opened the synod are related to Sasanian court propaganda.

The question is difficult to answer. We know very little about the Sasanians' level of awareness of ancient Persian history, and Cyrus is nowhere mentioned in Middle Persian sources.[60] Surely, however, Khosrow did not lack opportunities to acquire information from his Jewish and Christian subjects about the memory of a king like Cyrus who plays such a prominent role in the biblical tradition. And one imagines that even if he had only a vague understanding of the implications of the comparison made by Abā, Khosrow would have welcomed the catholicos' attempt to revive the memory of Cyrus to address the specific environment of Persian Christians. This kind of exercise may have been futile among Zoroastrian subjects, who most likely ignored the figure of Cyrus, but would have been extremely useful to secure the loyalty of Christian subjects. Exalting Khosrow as a second Cyrus might also dispel the currency among Eastern Christians of negative comparisons with the Achaemenians, of the kind elaborated two centuries earlier by Aphrahat. It is possible that in Abā's days, Christian dissidents in the Sasanian Empire—like those who participated in the Gundeshapur revolt—understood the downfall of the ram described in Daniel 8 as an encouraging precedent for a collapse of a Persian dynasty. By making a comparison between the current ruler and a more positive figure from the Achaemenid past, also present in the scripture, Abā may have wanted to imply that Khosrow would repeat the glorious deeds of Cyrus—the righteous Persian king of the Bible—not the catastrophic fall of Darius III—the ram.

Be that as it may, the powerful image of Khosrow as a second Cyrus elaborated by Abā crossed the borders of the Sasanian kingdom. Rumors about Abā's pro-Sasanian propaganda likely reached the ears of the Byzantine emperor, who launched a campaign of counterpropaganda. Indeed, during Justinian's reign we witness unprecedented attempts by imperial publicists to associate the figure of the Roman emperor with that of the glorious Achaemenid king—something that appears as a personal competition with the Sasanian sovereign. As seen, in his Histories Procopius makes a direct comparison between Justinian and Cyrus (and Alexander). The Byzantine historian repeats the comparison in The Buildings, where, however, he diminishes the achievements of Cyrus to exalt those of Justinian: "If one should examine his reign [i.e., that of Justinian] with care, he will regard the rule of Cyrus as a sort of child's play."[61]

Procopius was not the only one in Byzantine society to make parallels between Justinian and the founder of the Achaemenid dynasty. Another witness to this propaganda is found in the afore-mentioned Anthology of Planudes and, in particular, in one of the two epigrams originally engraved on the equestrian statue of Justinian erected in the hippodrome of Constantinople—probably to celebrate the victorious battle of Dara of 530. The second epigram, which refers to the "bronze from the Assyrian spoils" and the "Babylon destroyed," merits our attention. The image signals a great victory over the Sasanians. Of course, Justinian's armies never penetrated Sasanian territory far enough to reach Babylon. The phrase "Babylon destroyed" in the epigram evokes in the mind of the reader another glorious historical event, i.e., Cyrus's eradication of the Babylonian Empire.[62] Justinian thereby emerges as a Cyrus redivivus, legitimate successor of the forefather of the Achaemenid dynasty that was inherited by the Sasanians, according to Roman political discourse.[63] Referring to the epigram in the Anthology of Planudes, Canepa observes: "there is a subtle irony in the portrayal of Justinian as a 'New-Cyrus' in his destruction of Babylon, given the Nestorian hierarchy's acclamation of Kosrow I with this title."[64] But it was more than ironic; it was political. This kind of propaganda was most likely aimed at Christians living under Sasanian rule and had as its ultimate goal to claim the fidelity of the Church of the East to the Christian emperor.[65] By representing the Roman emperor as Cyrus redivivus, propagandists implied that Justinian would free Eastern Christians from the Sasanian yoke, just as the Achaemenid king had rescued the Jews from Babylonian captivity.

After Justinian's death, Roman intellectuals continued to rebut encomiastic parallels between Khosrow and the dynasts of ancient Persia. Agathias, for instance, compares Khosrow to Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, claiming, surprisingly, that the former's military achievements were greater than the latter.[66] The praise, however, immediately reveals its real intent. Despite his glory, Agathias observes, Khosrow suffered an ignominious end through a mortal disease that followed his unsuccessful war against Maurice in the last years of his reign.[67] Here, Agathias suggests that a man's success should be evaluated only after his death, a possible allusion to Croesus, the king of Lydia, who was thought to be the happiest and most successful of men until he was defeated by none other than Cyrus.[68] In Agathias's eyes, then, more than Cyrus-like, Khosrow was a Croesus-like character. Moreover, the attentive observer will note that Agathias places special emphasis on the parallels with Xerxes, who—unlike Cyrus and Darius, both identified only by their patronymic—is described as the one "who opened up the seas to cavalry and the mountains to shipping."[69] In this case, the comparison with Khosrow has the malicious and not so hidden agenda of evoking in the mind of the reader the memory of Xerxes's defeat in the war against the Greek poleis.

Together with the attribution to Alexander of deeds and symbols commonly associated with the Persian kings of the Bible, these propagandistic skirmishes provide us with a better understanding of the curious identification of Alexander with the ram of the Danielic prophecy made by the author of the Neṣḥānā. The appropriation of the legacy of eminent Persian biblical figures is not unlike what Roman propagandists were doing when drawing comparisons between Justinian and Cyrus.[70] Like Justinian's propagandists, the author produces the image of a king who can compete with Khosrow in appealing to Eastern Christians. He opposes the image of Alexander as an anointed king to that of Khosrow, as portrayed by the authorities of the Church of the East. Alexander emerges as the only legitimate, divinely inspired king to whom Christians in Persian territory should pay their allegiance. By contrast, the author portrays Khosrow, through the parodistic figure of Tūbarlaq, as an ignominious king who has no share in the glory of the Persian kings celebrated by the biblical tradition. This glory—our author suggests—belongs to Alexander, the subjugator of Babylon, the bearer of the ram horns of the Danielic prophecy,[71] and, as we will soon discover, the one king who sits on the throne of the kosmokrator that once belonged to Cyrus, and the one king who wears a crown that once belonged to Nimrod, putative ancestor of the Sasanian dynasty.

10

The Crown, the Throne, and the Last Roman Emperor

In the final part of his prayer, Alexander addresses the following words to God:

> Your remembrance will stay forever and ever. I will write your name, oh God, on the papers of my kingdom so that there may be always a memorial for you. And if the Messiah, who is the son of God, comes during my days, I will bow in front of him, me and my troops. And if he does not come during my days, once I will have gone and defeated kings and seized their lands, I will bring and set in Jerusalem this throne that is a chair of silver on which I sit. And when the Messiah comes from heaven he will sit on my throne, because his kingdom will stand forever. And seven hundred pounds of gold will be the gift put before the Messiah at his arrival. And whether I die in one of the regions of the world or here in Alexandria, the crown of my kingdom will be taken and lifted upon the throne, which I offer to the Messiah.[1]

The final part of Alexander's prayer in the Neṣḥānā clearly shares thematic features with the story of the Last Roman Emperor, whose earliest recorded versions are to be found in the Tiburtine Sibyl and in the Apocalypse of Ps.-Methodius.[2] In the Sibyl we read that when the Antichrist arises and the people of Gog and Magog who had been restrained by Alexander are released, a Roman king will gather an army and wage a successful war on the impious nation. Then "he will come to Jerusalem and deposit there the diadem from his head and all royal garments; He will surrender the kingdom of the Christians to God the Father and to his Son Jesus Christ."[3] The scene is more elaborate in the Ps.-Methodius. Here, at the moment of the release of the people confined in the North and at the appearance of the Antichrist, the Roman emperor will perform a complex ritual and hand over his kingdom to the Messiah:

> The king of the Greeks shall go up and stand on Golgotha and the holy cross shall be placed on that spot where it had been fixed when it bore Christ. The king of the Greeks shall place his crown on the top of the holy cross, stretch out his two hands towards heaven, and hand over the kingdom to God the Father. And the holy cross upon which Christ was crucified will be raised up to heaven, together with the royal crown [. . .]. And the moment the holy cross is raised up to heaven, and the king of the Greeks yields up his soul to his Creator, then all rule, sovereignty and power will be rendered void.[4]

Note the clear similarities between the story of the Last Emperor and Alexander's grandiose proclamations in the Neṣḥānā. In both traditions we read that the king will depose the symbol of his royal power—a crown or a diadem. And in both traditions a Roman king hands over his kingdom to God and his Messiah. In the Neṣḥānā, we discern only the outline of the Last Emperor theme, but it is clear that at some point a Roman king will welcome Jesus and let him sit on Alexander's royal throne. Note also that all three texts, the Tiburtine Sibyl, Ps.-Methodius, and the Neṣḥānā, feature traditions about both the confined nations and the Last Emperor. Already in their earliest recorded versions, the two traditions were related to one another.

Establishing the relationship between Alexander's prayer in the Neṣḥānā and the story of the Last Emperor in the Sibyl and the Ps.-Methodius is not an easy task. The task is complicated by the animated scholarly debate over which of the two sources antedates and thus influenced the other. There are three principal positions. According to the first position, the primitive episode of the Last Emperor is the one found in the Tiburtine Sibyl, which was composed in the late fourth century and, in the second half of the seventh century, was picked up by Ps.-Methodius.[5] The second position maintains that the Tiburtine Sibyl inspired the Ps.-Methodius but contends that the story of the Last Emperor was composed shortly after Heraclius's victories over the Sasanians, during the reign of his grandson Constans II (r. 641–668).[6] The third position reverses the relationship between the Sibyl and Ps.-Methodius, suggesting that the former depends on the latter.[7]

This debate bears on our understanding of the position of the Neṣḥānā vis-à-vis the development of the Last Emperor motif. While scholars seem to agree that the Neṣḥānā influenced—directly or indirectly—Ps-Methodius,[8] there is less agreement about the dating of the Sibyl and its relationship to the Neṣḥānā. Whereas Podestà regards the Last Emperor episode in the Sibyl as directly inspired by the Neṣḥānā,[9] Shoemaker argues that Alexander's prayer in the Neṣḥānā echoes the Last Emperor story in the Sibyl.[10] The whole matter is further complicated by disagreements about the relationship between the Last Emperor story and Heraclius's restitution of the True Cross. Did the story inspire the emperor's actions or the other way around? The episode about Alexander's throne in the Neṣḥānā has little in common with Heraclius's restoration of the holy relic.[11] However, one may turn the question on its head and ask whether the Neṣḥānā is an early witness to a story that inspired Heraclius's ceremonial return of the Cross. All these questions merit a detailed study, perhaps even an entire monograph. In the present context, I will stay as far as possible from the debate over the development of the Last Emperor legend. By focusing on the motif of Alexander's crown in the Neṣḥānā, I will try to explain its ideological significance in the context of sixth-century Roman-Persian antagonism.

The Crown

Crowns hanging in holy places was an important ritual practice in late antique culture. Shoemaker draws attention to two meaningful sixth-century examples of this custom. The first concerns the Axumite king Kaleb who, in the first half of the sixth century, reportedly sent his royal crown to be hung in the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem as part of the ceremony of his abdication from the throne of Ethiopia. The second example is that of an anonymous pilgrim of Piacenza who, in the late sixth century, visited Jerusalem, where he saw several royal crowns hung in the Holy Sepulcher (one wonders if Kaleb's crown was one of them).[12] The practice of hanging royal crowns in sacred areas, especially in Jerusalem, surely represents one of the elements that lay behind the scene described in Alexander's prayer. At the same time, the wider literary context provides us with additional elements.

The motif of the crown over the throne brings to mind the crown hung upon the cross in the Ps.-Methodius.[13] In both texts, the surrender of the crown and its symbolic hanging is the act that sanctions the delivery of power to God and his Messiah. Scholars have related the scene of the deposition of the crown in the Ps.-Methodius to a passage in the Julian Romance.[14] At the moment of his coronation, Jovian initially refuses the crown previously worn by the pagan Julian. He then performs a ritual purification. He instructs his soldiers to put the crown on the top of the cross that accompanied the Roman army.[15] He prostrates in front of the cross (his soldiers prostrate as well) and, after praying to God, the crown miraculously descends on his head with no human hand touching it.[16] The similarity between this passage of the Julian Romance and the Ps.-Methodius may be extended by analogy to the surrender of the crown in the Neṣḥānā. Notwithstanding the difference between the object upon which the crown is suspended, the analogy between the acts performed by Alexander and Jovian is meaningful and is heightened by the commonality of the prayers recited by the two sovereigns at the moment of their surrender/refusal of the crown. And yet, when compared, the scene of Alexander's prayer in the Neṣḥānā and of Jovian's coronation in the Julian Romance display a lexical difference regarding the common element of the lifted crown. Whereas in the Romance the crown is referred to as klīlā, in the Neṣḥānā it is designated as tāgā. The fact that the word tāgā also occurs in the scene of the deposition of the crown in the Ps.-Methodius may undermine Reinink's claim that the Julian Romance and the Ps.-Methodius use exactly the same language.[17]

The lexical differences are not negligible and may have a deeper ideological significance. Tāgā is an interesting term. It is borrowed from the Middle Persian tāg[18] and occurs several times in the Julian Romance, but with a meaning quite different from klīlā. The Syriac author appears to attribute a different scale of value to the two words. Klīlā signifies a crown as an object. This object must be purified not only because it was worn by the idolatrous Julian, but also because of its fabrication. The Julian Romance relates the polemical story of a group of Jews who attracted the benevolence of the impious emperor by offering him a klīlā bearing the image of seven idols.[19] At the moment of the coronation, Jovian exclaims, referring to this abominable effigy: "Far be it from me, that the crown of the pagan who worshipped idols in it should be placed upon my head before it is placed on top of the cross."[20]

Unlike klīlā, in the Romance tāgā often signifies royal authority. Examples of this usage in the Syriac work are the following: Julian shouts: "our royal crown has been insulted, and the gods were blasphemed";[21] the people of Edessa write to Julian: "The king of our city [i.e., Jesus], the one to whose crown all crowns of creation are subjugated, dwells within its walls";[22] and, more importantly, Jovian prays to God during his coronation ceremony: "Your Divinity called me to the imperial crown while I was unworthy."[23] In this last example there is a clear distinction between the crown as an object that Jovian is about to receive after its purification (klīlā), and the crown as a symbol of imperial authority (tāgā). This distinction is also articulated by the Sasanian king Shapur, who first refers to Jovian as the one who inherited Julian's tāgā and the throne,[24] and later during their encounter, tells Jovian to wear the klīlā that he had removed from his head as a sign of humility.[25]

The Julian Romance uses tāgā systematically as a reference to the Sasanian crown. "May your crown be set upon your head!"[26] the nobles and chiefs of Persia say to Shapur. "If you do not have the strength to fight a war with us, throw down your weapon and bow to our crown,"[27] Shapur challenges Julian through his ambassador. But the most interesting occurrences of tāgā as a designation of the Sasanian crown appear as part of a tradition that makes the Sasanians the descendants of Nimrod. In the Julian Romance, Sasanian territory is repeatedly described as the Land of Nimrod,[28] and the Sasanian dynasty as the House of Nimrod.[29] After initial successes in his war against Shapur, a vainglorious Julian tells his soldiers, "Who will not call you heroes? The exalted race of the House of Nimrod was vanquished before you."[30] These initial successes seem to confirm the assurance given by the demons to Julian at the beginning of the march into Sasanian territory, according to which he "would have dominion over all of the empires of the world from heaven downwards, and he alone would be the ruler of the world, that is to say, when he had destroyed and won a victory in Persia and put the crown of the House of Nimrod [tgʾ d-byt nmrwd]."[31]

Elsewhere in the work, Shapur refers to the tāgā of Nimrod. As the heir of the mythical king, the Persian sovereign proudly refers to a tradition according to which Nimrod received his crown from heaven. In the passage of the Romance in which he predicts the coronation of Jovian by means of astrology,[32] Shapur explains to the future Roman emperor that the teaching of the art of divination "is from on high, and it was given with its sacrifices and mercy to the House of Nimrod. When he received the crown with this revelation from heaven by this heavenly wisdom which the God of heaven has deemed fitting for Our Majesty."[33] Shapur also refers to the heavenly origins of the Sasanian crown in a letter sent to the Romans between Julian's defeat and Jovian's coronation: "You should know that in the hour of your destruction, you have cast scorn upon a great race, even upon a divine kingdom which received a crown from heaven."[34]

References in the Julian Romance to Nimrod's tāgā are part of a larger tradition common to several contemporary (i.e., sixth-century) Syriac sources. In his Homily on the Star That Appeared to the Magi, Jacob of Serugh (d. 521 CE) refers to the crown of Nimrod (tgh d-nmrwd) in reference to the Persian Magi.[35] More complex is the scenario described in the Cave of Treasures, a work composed by an anonymous Eastern Christian author living in the Sasanian Empire.[36] Here the ideological link between Nimrod—described as the first king on earth[37]—and the Sasanian dynasty is highlighted by the presence in the story of Nimrod's weaver, who bears no other name than Sasan.[38] The episode is related as follows: "[Nimrod] saw the miracle of a crown [klyl] in heaven. So he called Sasan the weaver who weaved one like the one [he had seen] and he[39] put it on his head. Because of that they say that the crown [tg'] descended upon him from heaven."[40]

According to Bonura, these Syriac traditions seem to echo actual Sasanian claims to have received their crowns from the Zoroastrian God Ahura Mazda, and likely represent a Christian understanding of these claims.[41] Bonura argues that the deposition of the crown in the Ps.-Methodius brings to mind these stories about Nimrod's crown, with the aim of proving that the kingship of the first cosmocratic ruler, Nimrod, passed through several different empires—the four Danielic kingdoms—until falling into the hands of the Romans, who would eventually return it to Christ. The crown that descended from heaven on the head of the first king would return to heaven, together with the cross on which the Last Emperor will place it.[42] This view is strengthen by Ps.-Methodius's use of the term tāgā instead of klīlā. As I will now illustrate, this complex symbolism and ideology are also at play in the Neṣḥānā. In fact, the Apocalypse of Ps.-Methodius articulates the transmission of cosmocratic rulership from one kingdom to another in the same manner as the author of the Neṣḥānā did, long before the fall of the Sasanian Empire. This becomes evident when attention is focused on the second main element of Alexander’s surrender of the crown in the Neṣḥānā, that is, the throne. It is upon this throne—the reader will recall—that Alexander promises to have his tāgā lifted after his death.

The Throne

In the Neṣḥānā, Alexander’s throne is referred to as kursyā and qatedrā. In the prayer, Alexander explains that his royal kursyā is a qatedrā of silver. The two terms appear to be synonyms, and at the end of the Neṣḥānā the author refers to Alexander’s throne as a royal kursyā of silver. It is only with the term qatedrā, however, that the throne is referred to in relation to the motif of a crown suspended upon it. Qatedrā is a loanword from the Greek καθέδρα and is extremely rare in sources. To the best of my knowledge, it appears in only one source besides the Neṣḥānā, in a Life of Saint Irene included in the hagiographic collection edited by Agnes Lewis and Margaret Gibson.[43] The way in which qatedrā is used in this text, however, does not provide a close parallel to its use in the Neṣḥānā. To find a closer term of comparison, we must look to Jewish rabbinical literature.

The word קתדרא (qtdrʾ) is documented in Palestinian Aramaic, and it occurs in the late antique collection of midrashim entitled Pesikta de-Rav Kahana, where we find קתדרא דמשה (qtdrʾ d-mšh), “the seat of Moses.”[44] The phrase “the seat of Moses” also occurs in Matthew 23:2, which states that scribes and Pharisees sit on the seat of Moses (ἐπὶ τῆς Μωϋσέως καθέδρας).[45] In Late Antiquity, the seat of Moses probably signified a seat upon which the head of a Jewish congregation would sit.[46] What is more relevant for us is the context in which the phrase qtdrʾ d-mšh is used in the Pesikta de-Rav Kahana. In one statement attributed to the fourth-century Palestinian rabbi Aha, the seat of Moses is referred to while explaining the throne of Solomon mentioned in 1 Kings 10:19: “ ‘And the top of the throne was round behind’ means, according to R. Aha, that the throne resembled the seat of Moses.”[47] These words suggest that the seat of Moses must have been an element of sacred architecture sufficiently familiar to serve as a term of comparison and to provide the reader with a familiar image that could help to shape in her/his mind the iconography of the throne of Solomon mentioned in the Bible. What is more interesting for our analysis, however, are the subsequent words in the statement attributed to rabbi Aha.

"How was the throne decorated?"—the text continues—"A golden scepter was suspended behind it, and on top of the scepter was a dove. In the dove's mouth there was a crown of gold, and when the king sat under it on the seat of the throne, the crown all but touched his head."[48]

The description of the throne of Solomon in the Pesikta de-Rav Kahana is remarkably similar to that of Alexander's throne in the Neṣḥānā. Both texts use the same word, qatedrā, to signify a seat made of a precious metal—gold in the case of Solomon, silver in that of Alexander. In both texts, a crown is suspended upon the throne. The language and "iconography" leave no doubt that the author drew upon the same imagery that lies behind the midrashim on Solomon's throne.[49] But to what end does the author of the Neṣḥānā point to a connection between the thrones of Alexander and Solomon? What other meaningful elements in the traditions associated with the throne of Solomon help us to elucidate the rationale behind the description of Alexander's throne in the Neṣḥānā?

Two of the frescos found in the synagogue of Dura-Europos, the frontier city on the bank of the Euphrates, on the Roman-Parthian border, represent a sovereign enthroned. The two thrones are identical, while the two kings differ. One is Solomon, the other Ahasuerus. Why this curious couple? In Esther Rabbah, a midrash on the Book of Esther,[50] Ahasuerus is not allowed to sit on Solomon's throne because only a universal ruler, a kosmokrator, has that privilege. Ahasuerus had to content himself with sitting on a copy of that throne.[51] The midrash also mentions two *kosmokrator*s who were allowed to sit on that throne, Nebuchadnezzar and Cyrus.[52] But what were these two sovereigns doing on Solomon's throne? How did they gain access to this precious object? The midrash also answers this question. When Solomon died, his throne was captured by the Egyptian pharaoh Shishak, who later lost it to the Ethiopian king Zeraḥ. The throne was subsequently returned to its homeland by the king of Judah, Asa, and it was taken to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar after the sack of Jerusalem. The throne was later taken to Media, to Greece, and finally to Rome (Edom), where Rabbi Elezar b. Yose reportedly saw fragments of it.[53]

The midrash implies that the throne ultimately fell into the hands of a Roman emperor. A related tradition preserved in the Targum Sheni reports that Alexander took possession of Solomon's throne and brought it to Egypt. The chronology in this tradition is clearly confused, as Alexander is identified as the owner of the throne immediately after Nebuchadnezzar and before the Pharaoh Shishak, who is followed by Epiphanes, son of King Antiochus, and by Cyrus the Great. The Targum replicates the motif expressed in Esther Rabbah about the unworthiness of some rulers to sit on the precious throne. When Shishak tried to sit upon it, one of the golden lions on the throne bit his left foot and reduced him to a cripple. Epiphanes could not sit on the throne either, since none of the goldsmiths he had hired could repair one of the legs of the throne that was broken. The honor of sitting on the throne, by contrast, was reserved for Cyrus as a reward of his efforts to rebuild the Temple. Curiously, the text does not say anything about Alexander's ability or inability to sit on the throne. One wonders if, in related traditions that were not transmitted to us, the Macedonian was also allowed to sit on the throne due to his status as kosmokrator.[54]

The peregrinations of Solomon's throne in these traditions clearly appear to represent the transmission of universal kingship from one kingdom to another. The stories in Esther Rabbah and Targum Sheni lack any eschatological connotation. However, it is not unreasonable to assume that a similar understanding may have surrounded the motif of the wandering throne, as other midrashim set the concept of the translatio imperii into an eschatological framework. The so-called Midrash of the Ten Kings lists a series of kings who allegedly ruled over the entire world. In what appears to be the most ancient version, reported in Pirkei de-Rabbi Eliezer, the list is as follows: God, Nimrod, Joseph, Solomon, Ahab, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, the king Messiah, God.[55] The list is based on a cyclical understanding of sacred history in which different sovereigns assumed the title of kosmokrator, with God as the first and the last ruler, to whom universal kingship ostensibly will be returned by the ninth ruler, the Messiah. The Midrash does not mention a wandering throne inherited by the kosmokrator, but it is possible that in the larger semiotic universe to which these traditions belong, the idea that the throne would serve as a seat for the final universal ruler may have been current. A fresco at Dura-Europos that portrays an empty throne surrounded by eschatological symbols corroborates this idea—although, to the best of my knowledge, the possibility that this throne corresponds to that of Solomon in the other frescoes has not been explored by art historians.[56] Be that as it may, the idea that the throne of the kosmokrator would be the seat upon which the Messiah will sit upon his return is clearly expressed in the Neṣḥānā. Before addressing this point, one more element is worthy of attention.

Ory Amitay dates the composition of the ten kings list in the Midrash of the Ten Kings to the period between the reign of Alexander (336–323 BCE) and the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple in 70 CE.[57] The frescoes at Dura-Europos indicate that the tradition of Ahasuerus sitting on Solomon's throne was in circulation by the mid-third century—the city was abandoned after it was sacked by the Sasanians in 256—while the story of the wandering throne in Esther Rabbah may date to the sixth century.[58] As for Targum Sheni, the prevailing consensus dates the text to the late Byzantine or early Islamic period.[59] In any case, traditions about Solomon's throne must have been current at the time when the author of the Neṣḥānā was writing. But were these traditions known outside the circles of Jewish intellectuals? As a matter of fact, yes.

The story of the wandering throne is mentioned in Syriac sources. According to Apocalypse of Daniel, the prophet Daniel informed King Cyrus about the booty that Nebuchadnezzar brought to Babylon from Jerusalem. Among the precious items, particular attention is paid to the golden throne (trwnws) on which Solomon used to sit. After Cyrus sacked Babylon, the throne was brought to Persia and Elam. The man who murdered Cyrus, Germath the Magus, sat on the throne, and after his short-lived reign, the new king, Darius, astonished by the beauty of the throne, forced Daniel to show him where the rest of treasure brought by Cyrus from Babylon was hidden.[60] This is the last time that we hear about the throne in the Apocalypse, and nothing is said about its future destiny, probably due to the narrative framework of the story, which concludes with the reign of Darius. It is significant, however, that in the Apocalypse of Daniel the motif of the wandering throne is directly associated with the prophetical figure, Daniel, who discloses the mysteries of the succession of the four world kingdoms. The passage of the Solomon's throne from Nebuchadnezzar's to Cyrus's hands reflects the passage of universal kingship from the Babylonians to the Persians, which appears in all interpretations of the Danielic schema. Even if the Apocalypse of Daniel does not identify the next ruler who will take possession of the wandering throne, the reader can easily complete the sequence. The next kosmokrator, according to the Danielic prophecies, will be Alexander.

The Apocalypse of Daniel indicates that circulation of the story of the wandering throne was not confined to Jewish circles. Yet, the dating of the text is problematic. One cannot trust overly simplistic manners in which its last editor established a terminus post quem of ca. 630s,[61] and its composition might be slightly earlier. It is likely, however, that the Apocalypse postdates the Neṣḥānā, as the episode of the gate erected against Gog and Magog—mentioned in the text—in all probability originated with the Neṣḥānā itself. Be that as it may, the Apocalypse demonstrates that during Late Antiquity the story of Solomon's throne was current among Syriac-speakers and, more importantly, that it was set in the context of apocalyptic traditions surrounding the prophet Daniel. The author of the Neṣḥānā arguably was familiar with this literary motif. Although the text does not refer to Solomon, the language and imagery used by the author to describe Alexander's throne strongly suggest that he was alluding to the throne of the mythical biblical king. The complex of late antique traditions that imply that the throne at some point fell into Alexander's hands supports this reading. Moreover, the statement in the Neṣḥānā that after Alexander died the throne was sent from Alexandria to Jerusalem is consistent with Jewish traditions, like the one preserved in the Targum Sheni, indicating that Solomon's throne was brought to Egypt by Alexander. But if our author is in fact referring to the wandering throne—our pending question—why did he do so?

The author of the Neṣḥānā places the scene of Alexander's throne in a semiotic universe that evokes the idea that universal kingship belongs to the Roman Empire. To this same semiotic universe belongs the motif of Alexander's royal crown, which carries the same ideological connotation. Like the throne upon which it is lifted, the crown signifies that over the course of human history, cosmocratic rulership passed through different kingdoms until reaching its final recipient: the Roman Empire. Alexander's ownership of both the throne and the crown is the proof of this axiomatic reading of sacred history. At the same time, the ideas evoked by this symbolic universe acquire a specific connotation in the context of sixth-century political debate and in light of the author's anti-Sasanian agenda. The idea of the translatio imperii underlying the motif of the wandering throne and crown emphasizes the transition of universal kingship from the Persians to the Romans. The author uses two literary elements that his Christian readers would have understood as symbols of the cosmocratic sovereignty that had belonged to the Persian kingdom. Alexander's current possession of these two precious effigies of power demonstrates that the reign of the Persians has come to an end.[62]

By referring to the crown and the throne, the author of the Neṣḥānā hints at the fact that the right to rule over the world had been transferred from the Persians to the Romans. These political claims are made in the context of the broader role that our author believes the Greco-Roman kingdom was destined to play in sacred history. As in the eschatological scenario described by Aphrahat in the fourth century, the author emphasizes that Alexander's conquests of the other worldly kingdoms are not acts of human ambition, but rather acts that glorify the name of God, to whom the blessed empire will remit its power at the end of times. The throne left vacant by the pious king seals his promise—binding any future Roman king—to renounce his throne of universal kingship. This universal kingship will not pass to any other kingdom before the completion of sacred history. No other ruler after Alexander will sit upon the throne with the royal crown suspended over his head. Only with the coming of the Messiah will that vacant throne be occupied again. The Roman Empire is the last cosmocratic kingdom of world history.

In the Neṣḥānā, we find an explicit formulation of an idea that can only be glimpsed in earlier traditions and in the frescoes at Dura-Europos, that is, that the throne of universal rulership, transmitted from one kosmokrator to another, is also the throne upon which the Messiah will sit upon his arrival. This idea may have awakened in the readers' minds the iconography of the hetoimasia (ἑτοιμασία), the empty throne prepared to welcome Jesus's return. These figural representations are documented from the fourth century onward; beginning in the eleventh century, the motif was increasingly inserted in representations of the Final Judgment.[63] There is an ongoing debate among scholars about whether early representations of empty thrones carry an eschatological connotation.[64] Those scholars who reject the eschatological valence of the empty thrones emphasize that no sources provide textual support for the eschatological interpretation.[65] This debate goes beyond the scope of the present study and my scholarly competences. However, I suggest that the vacant throne in the Neṣḥānā is an important textual witness to the hetoimasia, and it supports the hypothesis that the empty throne had acquired eschatological valence from at least as early as the sixth century.

In much the same way, the Neṣḥānā is an early witness to another motif that became popular in later Byzantine religious-imperial discourse, that is, the Last Emperor's deposition of the regalia. Untangling the origins and the development of this complex tradition is beyond the parameters of this study. However, some comments are in order. While acknowledging the influence of the Neṣḥānā on the Ps.-Methodius, scholars have underestimated the impact of Alexander's deposition of the crown on the related episode in the Ps.-Methodius. Indeed, the scene described in the Neṣḥānā is a better parallel to the scene described by Ps.-Methodius than Jovian's hanging of the crown in the Julian Romance. Of course, the Jovian episode must be taken into account, insofar as Ps.-Methodius (and, possibly, even the author of the Neṣḥānā) was familiar with this text. The hanging of the royal crown on the cross (instead of the throne) in the Romance closely resembles the situation described in the Ps.-Methodius and suggests that the Jovian episode played a role in the elaboration of the complex scenario depicted by Ps.-Methodius. At the same time, however, Jovian's hanging of the crown over the cross is an act of purification that has little to do with the surrender of the effigies of cosmocratic rulership. By contrast, Alexander's delivery of his royal crown serves exactly the same function as in the Ps.-Methodius, that is, to symbolize the transmission of power from the Roman ruler to the Messiah. Like the Neṣḥānā, the Ps.-Methodius uses the term tāgā to designate the crown that is surrendered. This detail emphasizes the ideology, common to the two texts, about the transmission of cosmocratic kingship from the last kingdom to the Messiah.

But why in the Ps.-Methodius is the throne replaced by the cross as the object over which the crown is lifted? First, within the symbolical conceptualization of the transmission of universal kingship, the motif of the crown over the throne appears to antedate that of the crown over the cross. As noted, the throne is a main element in the elaboration of the idea that the last king of the last earthly kingdom will surrender his power to the Messiah. Apparently, the motif of the cross entered this conceptual universe at a later point in time. But why? And when? A plausible explanation is that the replacement of the throne by the cross in the scene described by Ps.-Methodius was inspired by Heraclius's restoration of the True Cross.

Writing at a time when the new Arab Empire was establishing its presence in Jerusalem through monumental constructions on the site of the holy places, Ps.-Methodius invoked the memory of Heraclius's glorious deeds. The presence in the Julian Romance of a scene, which is similar to the one described in the Neṣḥānā, but which features a cross instead of a throne, may have inspired Ps.-Methodius's readaptation of the episode of the crown raised over the throne.

A final consideration concerns the general relationship between Alexander's crown and throne in the Neṣḥānā and the Last Emperor tradition. As noted, the Last Emperor motif is only sketched in the Neṣḥānā. In the text, Alexander does not assume the role of the Last Emperor—although he appears willing to play the role: "And if the Messiah, who is the son of God, comes during my days, I will bow in front of him," the king states in his prayer. With his vow, Alexander binds subsequent Roman emperors to having their crown hung over the throne that he left vacant in Jerusalem and to keep his promise to let the Messiah sit upon that throne and beneath those crowns at the moment of his arrival. The text implies that the moment will come when a Roman king, the last Roman king, will hand over his power to the Messiah. Thus, even if the Last Emperor motif is not fully developed in the Neṣḥānā, it is already present in the text. It is hard to determine if the author was referring to traditions that already featured the story of the Last Emperor, or was creating a new idea of his own. In my opinion, either hypothesis is valid, as I do not find convincing the argument that the Last Emperor legend was current since the fourth century. In the absence of a solid consensus on this question, the Neṣḥānā presents the earliest recorded version of this legend, albeit only in an embryonic stage.

Conclusion

In this book I have argued that the Neṣḥānā d-Aleksandrōs was composed sometime during the second and the third quarter of the sixth century. The political scenario behind the Syriac work is the long series of conflicts between the two superpowers of the time, the Byzantine Empire and the Sasanian Empire. The wars affected, inter alia, northern Mesopotamia and Roman Armenia, the likely homeland of the Syriac author, as is reflected in the geopolitical interests he manifested in his work. As seen, conspicuous sections of the narrative in the Neṣḥānā, and arguably its most salient episodes, take place in the area between the Upper Tigris region and the western Caucasus. In fact, the author uses the Alexander story to address some thorny political issues that concerned those contested territories. Prominent on the author's agenda were the dispute over the kingdom of Lazica, and Sasanian demands that the Romans contribute to the maintenance of Persian fortifications in the Caucasus against the incursions of nomads from Central Asia. The author uses the theme of Alexander's gate, and the motif of the blacksmiths hired in Egypt, to address these issues. He has the Egyptian blacksmiths settle in the territory allocated to them by Alexander, and pay customs duty to the latter, in order to support Byzantium's claim to Lazica as its sphere of influence. Similarly, by having Alexander erect a gate against the Huns, the author rebuts Sasanian claims to be the defenders of sedentary populations against the bellicose nomads on the other side of the semi-mythical Caspian Gates. The agreement between Alexander and Tūbarlaq over the defense of Alexander's gate is a fictional solution to the problem of how the two empires should cooperate to defend their territories against "Hunnic" raids. At the same time, the author also addresses the not entirely satisfactory achievements of the Romans at the peace negotiations. The peace treaty signed by Alexander and Tūbarlaq, and especially the fifteen-year tribute that Persia will pay to the Romans, reverses the humiliating clauses that Justinian accepted in several attempts to terminate hostilities and assure the maintenance of a non-belligerent status on the eastern borders of the Empire.

The Neṣḥānā's tone is strongly anti-Sasanian, and the choice of Alexander as the protagonist of the work is part of the author's anti-Persian agenda. Building on the Roman paradigm of the imitatio Alexandri, the author designs a meta-historical reality in which Alexander's subjugation of Persia in the past is destined to be repeated in the future. The author supports this paradigmatic reading of history with references to biblical prophecies that he interprets in a way that corroborates his ideology. This ideology is most clearly expressed in the prophecy uttered by Alexander (and subsequently confirmed by Tūbarlaq's divination) about Rome's destiny to destroy Persia toward the end of human history and to establish a cosmocratic kingdom to welcome the arrival of the Messiah. This militant and militaristic understanding of the role of Rome in sacred history is unusual but not completely unprecedented. There is a clear precedent for the author's views in the work of Aphrahat, who, two centuries earlier, elaborated a similar hermeneutic in response to Sasanian persecutions of Christians.

The Roman triumph envisaged by the author of the Neṣḥānā was not destined to be achieved during the author's lifetime. Alexander's prophecy clearly indicates that the final events will begin only after God's removal of the gate that the hero built to contain the Huns. The text contains no indication that the author believed that this watershed event had already occurred or would occur anytime soon. In fact, there are good reasons to believe that the author understood the beginning of the eschatological drama as something far away. His reference to a recent Hunnic raid, which occurred only a few decades earlier, strongly suggests that he did not regard the Hunnic final invasion as an imminent event. As a consequence, the beginning of the process that would lead to Rome's victory over Persia is postponed to an undetermined future. This reading reflects the author's disillusion with the present. The precarious situation on the Roman-Persian border and the aggressive policy pursued by Khosrow Anōshirvān pushed the author of the Neṣḥānā to seek comfort in scripture, where he found evidence that, in spite of the current difficulties, the Christian Roman Empire could not be defeated by the Persians.

Contrary to what many scholars have argued, I do not believe that the Neṣḥānā was originally composed to celebrate the deeds of a Roman emperor. The author clearly does not consider the contemporaneous Byzantine-Sasanian conflicts to be part of the final conflict that would lead to Persia's final defeat and to the establishment of a Roman cosmocracy. More than an allegory of contemporary campaigns, Alexander's victory over Tūbarlaq represents a model victory that provides a precedent for the ultimate victory yet to come in the future. By juxtaposing glorious events that happened in an idealized past and the circumstances of the author's lifetime, the author highlights the inability of the current ruler to achieve against the Persians the same results as those of his glorious ancestor. The author's criticism of Justinian's handling of the Persian problem finds close parallels in the work of a contemporary Syriac writer, the anonymous author of the Julian Romance. Among the many narrative elements shared by the two works is the ahistorical narrative of a time period in which Persia is subjugated to a tributary status. This narrative reverses contemporary historical circumstances and clearly echoes the voices of many in Byzantine society who criticized Justinian's decision to buy peace with gold.

It was only several decades after its composition that the Neṣḥānā came to be read as a work of pro-imperial propaganda. Someone must have seen the events of the late 620s as a confirmation of Alexander's prophecy. This person left a trace of his interpretation by interpolating a passage in the text that sought to connect the last of the Hunnic invasions foretold by Alexander to the raids of Heraclius's Turkic allies in the Transcaucasian region. We cannot exclude the possibility that Heraclius's spectacular successes over the Sasanians at the conclusion of a three-decades-long conflict was in fact regarded as a repetition of Alexander's glorious deeds in the Syriac work and as the beginning of the Roman cosmocracy predicted by Alexander in the Neṣḥānā. Contemporary attempts by court propagandists to depict Heraclius as a new Alexander may have facilitated the connection. What is certain is that the specific historical circumstances of the seventh century guaranteed an interested audience for the Syriac work.

This audience included not only the interpolator, but also the several writers who used the Neṣḥānā as a source of inspiration. The first of these writers is the composer of the homily traditionally attributed to Jacob of Serugh, and sometimes referred to as the Syriac Alexander Song. Although recent scholarship dates the homily to the period immediately following Heraclius's termination of hostilities with the Sasanians, there is good reason to think that this metric adaptation of the Alexander story was composed several decades earlier. Like the Neṣḥānā, Ps-Jacob's homily was probably updated during the reign of Heraclius, as is suggested by the list of provinces that appear (with slight variations) in two of its three extant versions (rec. I, 415–420, and rec. III, 484–488).[1] Be that as it may, Ps-Jacob's homily confirms that the narrative initiated in the Neṣḥānā attracted interest in the 630s.

Other witnesses to the influence of the Syriac work are the two anonymous Syriac authors conventionally known as Ps.-Ephrem and Ps.-Methodius. These two authors adapted the story of Alexander's gate against Gog and Magog to address Arab territorial expansion in Byzantine Syria and Mesopotamia. Although the specific textual relationship between Ps.-Ephrerm's homily and Ps.-Methodius's Apocalypse, on the one hand, and the Neṣḥānā, on the other hand, has not been thoroughly investigated, it is clear that the former are connected (either directly or indirectly) to the latter.[2] A closer comparative analysis between all these texts (including Ps.-Jacob's homily) is a scholarly desideratum. Nonetheless, it is clear that the Neṣḥānā enjoyed remarkable popularity throughout the seventh century. Its success is probably due to two main elements: (1) the story of Alexander's gate served as an appealing tool to periodize sacred history; and (2) the idea that no matter how difficult the current circumstances were, the Roman Empire would endure until the end of days. This second element proved to be useful for those authors who had to make sense of the sudden and apparently unstoppable expansion of a new wave of nomadic invaders, this time emerging not from the north but from the south.

The favorable and wide reception of the Neṣḥānā in the century following its composition helps us to understand how the Alexander legend in the Syriac work entered a corpus of Arabic documents assembled in the same historical period. The connection between the Neṣḥānā and the Qurʾānic pericope of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn was signaled already by Nöldeke in his classical study of 1890.[3] Notwithstanding its ostensible importance for scholarly understanding of the genesis of the Qurʾānic corpus, this information has frequently been neglected by scholars. Only recently has the relationship between the Syriac and Qurʾānic texts become the object of renewed investigations.[4] These new analyses, which corroborate Nöldeke's hypothesis that the Qurʾānic pericope is dependent on the Neṣḥānā, have generated (unconvincing) counterarguments.[5]

Marco Di Branco finds the source of the Alexander story in the Neṣḥānā in (allegedly) pre-Islamic traditions about Himyarite kings, that (allegedly) circulated among Arab Christians at the Naṣrid court of al-Ḥīra.[6] However, the sources on which Di Branco bases his reconstruction have been demonstrated to postdate the composition of the Qurʾān.[7] For her part, Marianna Klar has tried to confute the textual relationship between the Syriac and the Arabic texts on the grounds that the details in the two texts do not always coincide.[8] Her argument is not convincing. Admittedly, the details in the Qurʾānic story of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn do not always match the narrative lines of the Neṣḥānā, but these differences are negligible compared to the substantial coherence between the two texts. In general, Klar seems to dismiss the scenario that an author sat at a table with a written copy of the Neṣḥānā to his left and a Syriac-Arabic dictionary to his right.[9] This—we can be confident—did not happen. Yet no scholar has ever claimed that the Syriac text was translated into Arabic, but only adapted.

The Ḏū-l-Qarnayn pericope displays a number of narrative elements that are unique to the Neṣḥānā. The structure of the Qurʾānic narrative, for example, reflects the Syriac author's blending of previously disparate traditions—that of Alexander's iron gates and that of the hero's travels to the ends of the earth. Further editorial choices made by the Syriac author, such as his exclusion of Alexander's unsuccessful attempt to reach Paradise, are also reflected in the Qurʾānic pericope.[10] At the same time, the Qurʾān mirrors the way in which the author of the Neṣḥānā understood and adapted the ancient tradition of the gates allegedly erected by Alexander in the Caucasus. Specifically, it reproduces the reading of this motif through the lens of scriptural passages about Gog and Magog and the consequential attribution of an eschatological valence to the gate erected by the hero. That the Qurʾānic narrative specifically elaborates on the Alexander story in the Syriac work is confirmed by an important detail that has escaped the attention of previous scholars, namely, the material composition of the gate erected by the two protagonists, Alexander and Ḏū-l-Qarnayn, in the Syriac and Arabic texts, respectively. Like Alexander in the Syriac work, Ḏū-l-Qarnayn constructs his barrier from iron and bronze[11] components. This coincidence is significant, since all references to the motif of Alexander's (non-apocalyptic) gates in sources earlier than the Neṣḥānā mention only iron as the metal from which the barrier was made. This literary development is not coincidental and relates to the broader apocalyptic and political ideology expressed by the Syriac author in his work. The introduction of bronze as an additional material in the narrative reflects the author's intention to evoke Danielic imagery on the succession of the world kingdoms, with the ultimate goal of strengthening his reading about the special role that the Greco-Roman Empire would play in sacred history. These ideological nuances are not reflected in the Qurʾānic account, which nonetheless preserves the literary transformation of Alexander's iron gates into an apocalyptic barrier composed from the melting of iron and bronze.

The position advocated by some scholars, namely, that elements of the Ḏū-l-Qarnayn story relate to broader Alexander traditions rather than to a single source,[12] is untenable. The Qurʾānic pericope and the Syriac work share much more than a common theme and some literary components. Those listed above are only a selection of elements that demonstrate the relationship between the Ḏū-l-Qarnayn story and the Neṣḥānā. In the future, I hope to dedicate a specific study to clarify this important issue. For now, it is sufficient to say that the link between the two texts can hardly be denied, although the modality of transmission—direct or indirect—of the Syriac work to the environment from which the Qurʾānic corpus emerged and their broader connection to the Alexander apocalyptic literature generated by the Neṣḥānā merit further investigation.

Through its adaptation in the Qurʾān, the story of Alexander's gate against Gog and Magog, elaborated by the author of the Neṣḥānā, became prominent in Muslim societies until today—as is proved, among other things, by the splendid 14th century Persian miniature that appears on the cover of the present volume. At the same time, Ps.-Methodius's reworking of that same motif, and its inclusion in later recensions of the Alexander Romance, contributed to its wide popularity among Western and Eastern Christians. In the centuries following its first appearance, the legend of Alexander's apocalyptic gate became one of the most common elements in world apocalyptic literature. Although often neglected in scholarship, the Neṣḥānā contributed to the start of a literary and cultural process that left permanent traces on the evolution of religious ideas. In the present study I have attempted to clarify a few elements relating to the genesis of this extraordinary Syriac text.

APPENDIX 1

English Translation of the Neṣḥānā d-Aleksandrōs (According to Budges's Critical Edition)

The victory of Alexander, son of Philip the Macedonian. How he went out to the ends of the world and made a gate of iron, which he closed in front of the wind of the north so that the Huns could not come out and plunder the countries. From the writings in the archives of the kings of Alexandria.

In the second or the seventh year of his reign, Alexander put the crown on his head and clothed with the garment of his kingdom. He dispatched to summon the knotters of the crowns of his kingdom,[1] the commanders, the patricians, the guards,[2] and the entirety of his army. He asked them and said: "Listen, you all, members of my palace." They told him: "Speak, wise king of the Greeks, and whatever you command us will be accomplished." Alexander told them: "This thought came to my mind, and I am seized by amazement: what is the extent of the earth and what the height of heaven? How many are the countries of the other kings? And on what are heavens based? Are perhaps clouds and winds that lift them up? Or are rather columns of fire rising from the earth that support the skies so that they do not move?[3] Or are they hung to God's nod and do not fall? And this is what I desire to go and see: upon what the heavens lie and what surrounds the whole creation." The nobles answered telling the king: "Command us to speak." Alexander gave command and they spoke and told him: "My lord, concerning the thing that your majesty or your greatness wants to go and see, upon what the heavens lie and what surrounds the earth, the frightening seas that surround the world will not allow the way. Because there are eleven shining seas on which the ships of the men travel. After beyond there is dry land for about ten miles, beyond which is the fetid sea, the Ocean, that surrounds the whole creation. Men cannot approach this fetid sea, neither ships can travel on it, nor can birds fly over it. If a bird fly over it, it is hunted, it falls down, and is suffocated in it. Its waters are like pus and if men swim in it they die. The leaves of the trees bordering it are burnt by the smell of those waters, like as fire had consumed them." The nobles said these things to King Alexander, who told them: "Have you gone by your feet and seen that the sea is so?" They replied: "Yes, wise king. Because the same thought that came to your majesty's mind also came to ours. We went to see what the heavens lie upon. But the fetid sea did not allow us crossing." Alexander told them: "I do not think you are lying. But even if you went and the fetid sea did not allow you the crossing, I will also go and see by myself all the ends of heavens. And if there is a king whose lands are more than mine, I will seize his lands and kill him, even if he was from the regions from where the pillagers come out." All the members of his palace accepted what Alexander had told them. At once the horns resonated in Alexandria and the army that was going to leave with him was numbered. It included three hundred and twenty thousand men.

King Alexander bowed, and worshipping said: "oh God, master of kings and judges, you who raise up kings and dismiss their power, I perceive with my mind that you made me great among all kings, and that you caused horns to grow on my head, so that I may gore with them the kingdoms of the world. Give me the power from the heavens of your sanctity so that I may receive strength greater than the kingdoms of the world, and I will humiliate them and glorify your name forever, oh Lord! Your remembrance will stay forever and ever. I will write your name, oh God, on the papers of my kingdom so that there may be always a memorial for you. And if the Messiah, who is the son of God, comes during my days, I will bow in front of him, me and my troops. And if he does not come during my days, once I will have gone and defeated kings and seized their lands, I will bring and set in Jerusalem this throne that is a chair of silver on which I sit. And when the Messiah comes from heaven he will sit on my throne, because his kingdom will stand forever. And seven hundred pounds of gold will be the gift put before the Messiah at his arrival. And whether I die in one of the regions of the world or here in Alexandria, the crown of my kingdom will be taken and lifted upon the throne, which I offer to the Messiah."

And they went out and moved to Mount Sinai where they encamped and rested. And they put the ships to the sea and crossed over to Egypt, that is, Aegyptus.[4] Watchmen went up to observe whether the seas and their waves could be seen or not. And the commanders of the army said: "King Alexander, since the troop cannot proceed without blacksmiths, command that they come with us from Egypt, because on the surface of the earth there are not such blacksmiths as those from Egypt.” Alexander called Sarnaqōs, king of Egypt, and told him: “Give me seven thousand blacksmiths, workers in bronze and iron, who may come with me. And when I come back from the regions where I am going, if they desire to be returned hither, I will send them back. And if they desire to remain in one of the regions under the rule of my kingdom, I will allow them. They will not pay tribute to the king, but they will give us a customs duty.” Sarnaqōs, king of Egypt, selected seven thousand men, workers of bronze and iron, and gave them to Alexander. Then the two kings ate bread together.

Then they put the ships down to sea and traveled over it for four months and twelve days, until they arrived at the dry land that is beyond the eleven bright seas. Alexander and his troops encamped. And he sent and summoned the commander who was in the camp and told him: “Are there any men here who are sentenced to death?” The commander told him: “There are thirty-seven men among our prisoners who are sentenced to death.” And the king told the commander: “Bring here those evildoers.” When they brought them, the king commanded them and said: “Go to the shore of the fetid sea and pitch poles to tie the ships. And arrange everything which is required for an army that is crossing over the sea.” The men went and arrived at the bank of the sea. Alexander had thought: “If it is true, as they say, that everyone who gets close to the fetid sea dies, then it is better it be those who are sentenced to death to die.” The prisoners went and when they reached the seashore they died at once. Alexander and his troop were watching them dying since he and his nobles had mounted on their horses to see what would happen to them. And they saw that they died at once when they reached the sea. King Alexander was frightened and withdrew, for he knew that they could not cross to the ends of heavens.

The whole camp mounted. Alexander and his troop set out between the fetid sea and the shining sea until reaching the place where the Sun enters the window of heaven—because the Sun is the servant of the Lord and never interrupts its journey, at neither night nor day. The place from where it rises is above the sea. When it is about to rise the people who dwell there flee and hide in the sea in order of not being burnt by its rays. It then crosses over the middle of heavens until reaching the place where it enters the window of heaven. Where it passes by are terrifying mountain peaks. Those who dwell there have caves dug in the rock. As soon as they see the Sun rising, men and birds flee from before it and hide in the caves, because the stones burnt by its flames roll down and incinerate at once whatever they touch, be it humans or beasts. As soon as the Sun enters the window of heaven it prostrates before God and venerates his creator. He then travels and descends the entire night in the skies until it finds itself at the place where it rises.[5]

Alexander watched toward the sunset and saw a mountain that descends, whose name is great Mūsās. They went down across that mountain and reached the mount Qlaudia, where they ate bread. They descended to the source of the Euphrates and they found that it pours out of a cave. Then they arrived at Halōras where the Tigris gushes like a stream that makes a millstone grind. After eating bread at Halōras they left from there and went to the river Kallath. Then they went up to a mountain which is called Rmt, where there is a watchtower. Alexander and his army stood on the top of the mountain watching the four winds of heaven[6]. And Alexander said: "Let us take the way of the North." They reached the limits of the North and they entered Armenia, Adharbaijan, and inner Armenia. They passed by the lands of Ṭwrngyws, Bēt Prdyʾ, Bēt Tqyl, Bēt Drwbyl, Bēt Qtrmn, Bēt Gbwl, and Bēt Zmrṭ. Alexander passed by all these lands, and after passing by the mount Mūsās he entered a valley which is called Bhy Lbtʾ. He went and encamped at the entrance of the great mountain. There is in that place a way by which the merchants access the inner regions. Alexander encamped there and dispatched heralds of peace, who rode around and proclaimed in the whole land: "The king of the Greeks has come to this land without killing, burning, or destroying. May each one remain in peace! 'Let three hundred men elder in age be selected and let them come to my presence'—said King Alexander—'so that I may learn from them what I seek. And may each one remain in peace!' " When the people of that land heard what the heralds of peace proclaimed they were not afraid. They choose three hundred old men who went to the presence of Alexander as soon as he had encamped in the country and commanded the people not to flee before him. And when the old men of that land came before him, he asked: "Who are you? To whom do you pay tribute? And who is the king who rules over this country?" The old men answered and told the king: "This land belongs to Tūbarlaq, the king of the Persians, who is of the family of the house of ʾḥšwrḥ.[7] It is to him that we give gold." Alexander told them: "And for how long does this mountain descend that way?" They replied: "This mountain goes forth without breach. It passes by the sea of Bēṯ Qṭryʾ and it proceeds until coming to an end towards Persia exterior and towards India. And from this way and upward the mountain reaches to a big river which is on this side of the sea. And there are in that area narrow paths through which a man cannot go unless he is mounted on a horse. And no one can go through those paths without (carrying) ringing bells, because animals coming up from the sea and the rivers and descending from the mountains crouch down the paths, so that if someone goes through them without carrying ringing bells he dies at once.” Alexander said: “This mountain is higher and more frightening than all the mountains which I have ever seen.” The old men of the region told the king: “Your majesty, my lord the king, neither us nor our fathers have ever been capable of making a single step through it. And men cannot go up from either this or that side, as this is the boundary that God has placed between us and the people who are on its other side [lit. inward from it].” Alexander said: “Who are the people who are on the other side of this mountain that we are observing? [. . .].”[8] The people of the land told him: “It is the Huns.” Alexander told them: “And who are their kings?” The old men replied: “God and Magog. And Nwl, the kings of the sons of Japhet. And the king Gyg. And Tʾmrwn and Tyʾmrwn. And Bēṯ Gmly, Ypwʿbr, Šwmrdq, Glwsyqʾ, ʿqšpr, Slgdw, Nyslyq, ʾmrpyl, Qʿwzʾ. These are the kings of the Huns.” Alexander said: “And what is their like? What their clothes and languages?” The old men responded and told the king: “Among them there are some who have blue eyes, and their women have only one breast each. And the women are more bellicose than men because they fight men with their knives. At their flanks, arms, and necks they hang knives so that if one of them goes into combat wherever [s]he extends her hand [s]he can pull out a knife.[9] They wear worked skins, eat the raw flash of whatever dies, and drink the blood of men and animals.” They do not besiege cities and fortresses, nor they attack them; instead, they run[10] to the roads and to the gates of fortresses and cities, surrounding the men who run[11] and face them on the roads.[12] Quicker than the blowing wind, before than the rumor of them going out to battle is heard, they spread over the world; because they are sorcerers and they run between heaven and earth. Their chariots, their swords, and their spears shine like terrible lightnings. They pull prwyʾ[13] in their hands and each of them has two or three horses. [Each one of them leads with him][14] fifty or sixty men who go before or after him, and the noise of the lamentation of each of them is more terrible than the noise of a lion. Because it is God to deliver the nations, the one in the hands of the other. The fear of the Huns is terrifying for all creatures who see them. And when they go to battle, they bring a woman who is pregnant and, binding her in front of a fire that they heap up, they cook her child within her until her womb splits and the child comes out when it is cooked. And they place it in a bowl and throw water on its body, which dissolves into it. Then they take their swords, their bows, their arrows, and their spears, and dip them into this water. And to whomever this water touches it appears as if there were around him a hundred thousand horsemen; and a troop of a hundred thousand demons appears to stand by the side of each hundred men. Because their sorceries are greater than those of all kingdoms. And also of this, oh Lord, we want to persuade your greatness," the old men said to Alexander. "The Huns do not go out to plunder except where the punishment of the Lord raises, so that the Lord kills fathers and sons and strikes the earth with his wrath, as in their battles they are more dangerous than all kings." Alexander told the natives of that place: "Did they go out to plunder during your days?" The old men told Alexander: "My lord the king, may God strengthen your kingdom and your crown! These fortifications which were destroyed in our land and in the land of the Romans were destroyed by them; by them these towers were uprooted. When they go out to plunder, they destroy the lands of the Romans and the lands of the Persians, then they enter their region." Alexander told them: "Who are the nations who are next to them?" The old men told him: "The nation of Pygmies[15] and the Dog-Men. And next to the Dog-Men is the nation of Mnynʾ. And next to the nation of Mnynʾ there are no humans, but only frightening mountains, hills, valleys, plains, and frightening caves in which are serpents, ʾšwp,[16] and vipers, so that men do not go there without being eaten at once by the serpents. Because those regions are deserted and there is nothing there but wilderness. And among all these mountains God's Paradise appears at distance. Indeed, Paradise is close to neither heaven nor earth. Like a noble and strong city, it appears between heaven and earth. The clouds and the fog that surround it can be seen from distance, and the horn of the wind of the north leans on it." And Alexander told them: "How do the four rivers come forward?" The old men said: "My lord, we will instruct your majesty. God made four rivers to go out from the paradise of Eden and since he knew that men would dare and seize the rivers to go by them and enter Paradise, he drew the rivers within the earth. He made them pass through valleys, mountains, and plains. He made them pass through many mountains and he made them come out from the mountains. And there is one that he made flow from a cave. He surrounded Paradise with seas and rivers, and with the Ocean, the fetid sea. Men are unable to approach Paradise and cannot see where the rivers go out. All they can see is that they go out from either the mountains or the valleys."

When Alexander heard what the old men said he wondered very much at the great sea that surrounds the entire creation. He asked his troops: "Do you wish that we make something wonderful in this land?" They answered: "As your majesty commends." The king said: "Let us build a gate of bronze and block up this breach." His troops said: "We will do as your majesty commands." And Alexander commanded to bring three thousand blacksmiths, able to work iron, and three thousand men, able to work bronze. They molded bronze and iron like a man who works the clay. Then they brought it and he made a gate of twelve cubits of length and eight cubits of width. He made a lower threshold of twelve cubits of length from one mountain to another. He pitched it in the rocks and sealed with bronze and iron. The height of this lower threshold was three cubits. And he made an upper threshold of twelve cubits of length from one mountain to another. He pitched it in the rocks and fixed in it two bolts of iron of twelve cubits each and going two cubits up into the rocks. He made two bolts[17] from one crag to the other on the back of the gate, sealing the heads of the bars into the rocks. He fixed the gate and the bars and placed extremities of iron, trampling them one by one. In that way, if the Huns were to come and dig through the rock beneath the iron threshold, although a footman could still cross through, a horseman on his horse could not, as long as the gate, anchored to the soil with bars,[18] stood. He then brought pivots for the gate and embedded them into the lower threshold.[19] He put on them iron bars and made them move around on the side like the gates of Susa brmdyʾ.[20] The men brought and kneaded iron and bronze like a man who works the clay, and they smeared them over the gate and its posts one by one. And he made a bolt of iron in the rocks and pitched a key of iron long twelve cubits, which he surrounded with bolts of bronze. Thus, the gate was lifted up and stood.

King Alexander brought [a scribe] who wrote on the gate: "The Huns will come out and will subjugate the lands of the Romans and of the Persians. They will shoot arrows b’rmgsṭ’,[21] then they will turn around and return to their country. I have also written that at the completion of 826 years the Huns will come out through the narrow path that ends in front of Halōras, from where the Tigris gushes like a stream that makes a millstone grind. They will take prisoners from among the population, they will cut off the roads and make the earth tremble with their raids. I have also written, announced and prophesied that *hwy*ʾ [22] at the completion of 940 years another king, when the world will end by the commandment of God, Governor of Creation. Creatures will enrage God. Sin will grow and wrath will reign. Human sins will increase and will cover the skies. In his anger the Lord will stir up[23] the kingdoms[24] that are behind this gate. For when the Lord seeks to kill men, he sends men against men so that they slay one other. And the Lord will gather the kings and their companies that are behind this mountain. At his signal they will all gather. They will come with their spears and their swords. They will stand behind the gate and, looking at the skies, they will call the name of the Lord: “Oh Lord! Open this gate for us!” And the Lord will send his sign from heaven and a voice will shout against this gate, which will be destroyed and will fall at the sign of the Lord. It will not be by the key which I created for it that this gate will be opened. And through this gate which I have made an army will go out. From the lower iron threshold an entire span will be consumed by the hoofs of the horsemen and of the horses [sic.] with which they go out to destroy the land by the commandment of the Lord. And from the higher threshold a span will be consumed by the edges of the spears of those who run and go out through the gate. And when the Huns will come out as God has commanded, from the ends of heavens the kingdom of the Huns, the kingdom of the Persians, and the kingdom of the Arabs will come. The twenty-four kingdoms which are inscribed in this writing. They will fall one upon the other. The earth will curdle in the blood and the excrements of men. Then the kingdom of the Greeks will move and come. It will hold a hammer of iron in its right hand and a hammer of bronze in its left hand. The kingdom of the Greeks will strike the hammers against each other and like iron dissolving in the fire and like bronze that boils in the flame, so will dissolve the strength of the kingdoms facing the kingdom of the Greeks, which is that of the Romans. And the kingdoms of the Huns and of the Persians will be destroyed each by its own comrade. Only a few will escape among those who fled to their country, while the kingdom of the Romans will destroy the rest. And my kingdom, which is called of the house of Alexander, the son of Philip the Macedonian, will go out and destroy the earth and the ends of heaven. And none among the people and the nations that dwell in the creation will be able to stand before the kingdom of the Romans. Behold! I, Alexander, have written and announced through my own handwriting. Truly I have not lied in what I have written. Perhaps men and people will not believe that the things which I have written will happen. And if you do not accept my word, then accept the word of the prophet Jeremiah, who in his prophecy already symbolized this kingdom and spoke as such in his book: 'From the North evil will be opened over all inhabitants of the Earth.'[25] Behold! I have a miracle which is the work of God. On the peak within the gate on the one edge [. . .][26] and when it goes up from the peak it is narrow. On the other edge hangs a sponge soaked with blood which descends over the peak. The Huns come to wash their heads in that blood and to drink from it; then they return home. This is a testimony of God set there so that men will see and fear: Like that blood descends from that sponge, so the blood of men will pour over mountains and hills." Alexander and his army were astonished at the gate they created.

The people of that land went down and told Tūbarlaq, king of the Persians: "The king of the Greeks, Alexander, the son of Philip the Macedonian, has come here and has made a gate of iron against the Huns. But rise, lead your army; come and slay him, and seize whatever belongs to him!" Tūbarlaq rose and dispatched to Mšzbry, king of Inner India, and to Bar Ṣydq, the king of Qādēš, and to Hwdzd, king of Greece. And dispatched to Armenia and to all countries which obeyed to him. He hired and brought eighty-two kings and their armies; one hundred and thirty myriads.[27] They consulted before Tūbarlaq and before all the kings. And the kings and their troops were compelled to come. It was summer and the entire camp of Alexander was lying and rested. As soon as the king had lied down the Lord came to him and found him asleep. He called him and told him: "Behold! I made you great among all kings, and I caused horns of iron to grow on your head, so that you may gore with them the kingdoms of the world. You relied on me when you left to war to see the countries. But behold! Many kings and their armies are moving against you to kill you. Invoke me to come to your aid, because I am the Lord and I aid those who invoke me." The Lord went away from Alexander and the king awoke his army and told them: "Behold! The plunderers are moving against us. Let the watchmen go to the top of the mountain to observe and watch them, for the Lord has appeared to me in this hour." And the watchmen went up and saw the army and their kings, an endless multitude of men. They ran and told the king: "Oh king, we are going to die! But God who knows their number will slaughter them." King Alexander immediately ordered the strength of the army to be counted, how many had died and how many were alive. The army was counted, and it was found that it contained three hundred and sixteen thousand men, while four thousand were dead—for when they left from Alexandria they were three hundred twenty thousand men. And Alexander ordered his army and all men over whom he ruled: "Let every man who is here lay a censer of perfume[28] on potsherd or on stone for the Lord, who will come to aid us. He will come and find the camp perfumed with the fragrance of the smoke of the parfum." Alexander took off his crown and his purple garments and deposed them in front of the Lord saying: "You, Lord, have power over my life and my kingdom, to you royalty belongs. Deliver your servant and his army from his enemies." And as Alexander was praying, the kings and their armies surrounded him. And Alexander intoning said: "Victory belongs to the Lord!" And the army loudly said: "God, come to our aid!" And Alexander said: "Lord who appeared to me in this land, aid us!" Then the Lord appeared coming on chariot of the seraphs. Watchers and angels praising were coming before him, and he led his army over Alexander's camp. The Lord appeared from the West standing and Alexander's entire camp watched towards the Lord who was their helper. People became strong as the Lord had come to their salvation. A frightening battle arose, and people were shouting: "This is the Lord's battle! He descended to stand in it." And the Lord appeared again to Alexander and told him: "Do not fear the kings, not their troops, since I am with you." And the voice of the Lord moved along thundering among them so that the kings and their troops trembled in front of God's camp.

Alexander and his army killed sixty kings and their troops, and those who fled, fled, and those who were dispersed, got dispersed. And Alexander took Tūbarlaq, the king of Persia, but he did not kill him. Alexander and his army stood and Tūbarlaq, the king of Persia, was bound and [so were] the nobles of all Persia. Tūbarlaq brought forth gold, silver, beryl, pearls, precious stones of sapphire, and he gave them to King Alexander, who subjugated the entire Persia and the lands over the Sea of Darkness. And he was preparing to kill Tūbarlaq when the latter told him: "What will be the benefit if you kill me? Take for yourself the gold which is mine and I am giving you as a pledge Persia, which will give you gold for fifteen years. Thus, after fifteen years, Assur and Babylon will be yours."[29] Tūbarlaq and Alexander sat, consulted, and said about the gate of iron and bronze which is in the North that six thousand men from among the Romans, and six thousand men from among the Persians, should go and guard it, and that every man should be provided with food and drinks by the king who sent him.

Tūbarlaq, king of Persia, brought magicians and incantations reciters, the signs of the zodiac, fire and water, and all of his gods; and through them he practiced divination. They made him aware that towards the end of the world the kingdom of the Romans would go forth and subjugate all the kingdoms of the earth; that the king of Persia will be killed, wherever he is found; and that Assur and Babylon will be destroyed by the commandment of God.[30] In this manner Tūbarlaq practiced divination and he gave his handwriting to King Alexander. And through this writing it was recalled to Alexander what was to happen to Persia, as the king and his nobles had prophesized that Persia would be destroyed by the hand of the Romans, and all kingdoms would be destroyed, besides that of the Romans, which would stand and rule until the End of Times, and would hand over the rulership of the earth to the Messiah who is to arrive.

Alexander and his troops stood and left Persia. They set out toward the desert and went and dwelled at the mountain of the Romans. Alexander summoned those blacksmiths whom he had brought from Egypt, and he gave them Bēt Dmʾ and Bēt Dwšr to cultivate and to dwell in without paying tribute to the king. And Alexander went up to worship in Jerusalem. Then he put the ships in the sea and went to Alexandria. And when he died, he surrendered the silver throne of his kingdom in Jerusalem.

The tale of the victories and the battles of Alexander, king of the Greeks, son of Philip, is concluded.

APPENDIX 2

List of Toponyms and Proposed Identifications

Toponym	Proposed Identification
Bēt Dmʾ	?
Bēt Drwbyl	?
Bēt Dwšr	Dioscurias (?)
Bēt Gbwl	?
Bēt Prdy’	Mt. Paryadres[1]
Bēt Qṭrmn	Kitamon/Kitharizon[2]
Bēt Tqyl	Teucila[3]
Bēt Zmrṭ	Zimara[4]
Bhy Lbt’	Belabitenē/Balahovit[5]
Halōras	Olor/Olorian/Olorean
Rmt	Akbas[6]
Ṭwrngyws	?

Notes

Introduction

1. Budge 1889.
2. An earlier translation of the text, based on one single manuscript of the Neṣḥānā, was published in 1854 by Justin Perkins (Perkins and Woolsey 1854: 416–28).
3. Bohas 2009. Muriel Debié is currently working on a new French translation.
4. Van Bladel 2007a; Greisiger 2014, 2016.
5. Tesei 2010, 2013–2014, 2018.
6. See recently van Baldel 2007a and Tesei 2013–2014.

Chapter 1

1. See Budge 1889: xv–xxxiv; Monferrer-Sala 2011: 45–7.
2. See Depuydt 2006: 181.
3. Perkins made a translation of the text of the Neṣḥānā contained in this manuscript, published in 1854, which is currently the only one available in English, besides Budge's and the one that I provide in the Appendix to this study. Perkins's manuscript appears to be one of the five manuscripts used by Budge for his edition and translation (see Budge 1889: xvii), not a sixth, additional manuscript, as suggested by Monferrer-Sala (2011: 47).
4. Budge 1889: xx–xxv.
5. The letter sent by Perkins to Fleischer reported in the 1851 issue of Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft (ZDMG 5: 393) does not help to clarify the question.
6. Budge 1889: xvii.
7. Ibid.: xxxii.
8. Nöldeke 1890: 11–17.
9. Ciancaglini 2001: 139.
10. See Budge 1889: 119, n.2; Nöldeke 1890: 13, n.4; Ciancaglini 2001: 139.
11. Brock 1997: 114.
12. On the Armenian Alexander Romance, see Traina 1997 and 2016.
13. The different versions of this story are reported in recension β of the Alexander Romance (text L: II, 39–41), in the Babylonian Talmud (Tamīd, 32b), in Ps.-Jacob's homily, and in a Qurʾānic passage on Moses in Q 18:60–82.
14. Tesei 2013–2014: 277–9.
15. See in particular the recent analysis in Henkelman 2010. See also van Bladel 2007a: 197, n.6 and Tesei 2010.
16. Bell. Iud., VII.7.
17. Hist. I.10.
18. Get. VII.50.
19. Nat. Hist., VI.12.

20. Hist., I.10.
21. Get. VII.50.
22. See the chart in Anderson 1928: 136–7. It was only in the seventh century, probably as a consequence of the events of 626–629 illustrated by van Bladel (2007a: 186–8), that the motif of Alexander's iron gate came to be connected to the Darband Pass, which is otherwise not associated with the Caspian Gates in previous sources (Anderson 1928: 154).
23. Get. VII.53–56.
24. Get. VII.55. Trans. Mierow 1915: 65.
25. Get. VII.50.
26. Get. V.44.
27. Hist. I.10.
28. Nat. Hist., VI.12. On this element of Pliny's description see Sauer et al. 2020: 861: "The Tergi/Terek River is of a width that it indeed could have been bridged by timber gates, perhaps opened when water levels were high and closed when they were lower, to make any break-through attempts even more difficult."
29. Budge 1889: 271.
30. Reinink 1983 (text): 62–3.
31. Sauer et al. 2020: 860–1.
32. See the picture of the sulfur springs in ibid.: 861.
33. On these developments, see van Donzel and Schmidt 2010: chap. 1.
34. E.g., Anderson 1932: 19; Pfister 1956: 30; Möhring 2000: 44.
35. Shoemaker 2016; 2018: 42 ff.
36. See the discussion in the Chapter 10 of this book.
37. The Mūsās has been the subject of a long scholarly debate, especially its possible connections to the Mount Māšū mentioned in the Gilgamesh Epic. See Meissner 1894: 13; Hunnius 1904: 11, n.2; Czeglédy 1957: 242, n.39, 245; Pfister 1976: 148; Jouanno 2002: 293, n.173; van Baldel 2007a: 198–9, n.12; Bohas 2009: 31, n.58, 49, n.114; Henkelman 2010: 335–6.
38. Masis can designate two other mountain complexes in Armenia: the Nex Masis, north of Lake Van, and a branch of Taurus north of Nisibis. See Russel 1985: 456–7.
39. Geog. XI.5.6, 12.4, 14.2.
40. Geog. V.18.2.
41. Brooks 1923: 296.
42. See Adontz 1970: 13; Stone 2012: 247, 250, 253.
43. Chron. LXVI.
44. Eccl. Hist. VI.36.
45. Eccl. Hist. VI.15.
46. Hist. I.12.1–7.
47. See Adontz 1970: 133–4; Hewsen 1992: 18.
48. Talbert 2000: 1226.
49. Pliny, Nat. Hist. V.83.1; Ptolemy, Geog. V.6.19; Itinerarium Antonini, 208.5; Tabula Peutingeriana, 11.7. See Adontz 1970: 45, 61–2, 65–6; Talbert 2000: 985, 991.
50. Geog. V.13.6; Aed. III.3.7. See Adontz 1970: 13–20, 112–4, 134.
51. See Adontz 1970: 134; Greenwood 2017a: 154; Greenwood 2017b: 201–2.
52. As far as I know, the first transposition into Syriac of the Hellenized version of the name, i.e., Βελαβιτηνή → ܒܠܐܒܝܛܝܢܐܬ, occurs in a record of episcopal sees that surely postdates the sixth century (see Voobus 1975: 189, 193). John of Ephesus refers to Belabitene as "the satrapy in the districts of Siria and Armenia" (see Brooks 1923: 284). This description, as well as John's omission of the name of the principality, suggests that the toponymic designation of the area had not yet been fixed.
53. See Hewsen 1992: 59.

54. Aed. III.1.26.
55. See Adontz 1970: 87–8, 93.
56. The text states that it borders the sea of Bēt Qatraye—in all likelihood the Persian Gulf—and reaches "external Persia" and the limits of India, while in the other direction it extends toward unspecified "inner regions" until "a great river from this side of the sea." Most puzzling is the connection between the formidable mountain complex described by the elders and the Great Mūsās that dominates the plain of Bhy Lbtʾ. The elders do not provide any details about the name of the majestic mountain they describe. One wonders if this mountain is the Mūsās, which, in the text, is also described as "the great mountain."
57. Eccl. Hist., II. 43. On Evagrius's use of Malalas's work, see Whitby 2000: xxvii–iii.
58. Czeglédy 1957: 245; Reinink 1985: 267–8, 280; Reinink 2003: 161; van Bladel 2007a: 179, 199, n.13.
59. See Czeglédy 1957: 245.
60. See Reinink, who proposes that one of these two cities was the author's homeland. Reinink 1985: 267–8, 280; Reinink 2003: 161.
61. The anti-Sasanian insurrections led by the Mamikonian family from 450 to 484 are narrated at great length in Łazar P'arpec'i's History and in Ełishe's History of Vardan. Both works are known for their peculiar blend of religion and warfare in descriptions of the Armenian uprisings. There is much in common—from the religious fervor of the soldiers to the piety of the commanders—between the battle scene described in the Neṣḥānā and those found in the works of the Armenian historians. One element that stands out is the recurrent theme of the multitude of the enemy's troops and of God's intervention.

Chapter 2

1. Nöldeke 1890: 30–1.
2. Nöldeke 1890: 31.
3. On these events, see Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 78; Sauer et al. 2020: 880.
4. See Malalas, Chronicle 406; Procopius, De Aedificis, III, 4.19–20.
5. Nöldeke 1890: 31.
6. Bousset 1889; Hunnius 1904; in Czeglédy 1955, 1957; Reinink 1983, 1985, 2003.
7. See my comments in the Conclusion of this study.
8. I plan to address the question of the dating of the Alexander Song in a future study.
9. Bousset 1889; Kampers 1901; Czeglédy 1957; Henkelman 2010; Shoemaker 2018.
10. On the identity of Heraclius's allies and their relationship with the Khazars who are mentioned in sources, see Zuckerman 2007: 403 ff.; see also Golden 1980: 50 ff.; Golden 1992: 135 ff., 236 ff.
11. Howard-Johnston 1999: 17, 22–3, 40–2; Kaegi 2003: 142–5; Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 202ff; and, above all, the recent periodization of the events provided in Howard-Johnston 2021: 288–90, 295–303, 340–1, 353–4.
12. Nöldeke 1890: 31.
13. Bousset 1899: 114–5; Hunnius 1904: 20ff.
14. Czeglédy 1957: 246. The situation described by Czeglédy can be observed in the second edition of Geschichte des Qorāns (an updated version of Nöldeke's monumental work, by his younger collaborator Schwally) which dismisses Hunnius's analysis on the dating of the Neṣḥānā without any argument or evidence. See Nöldeke et al. 2013, 142, n.137.
15. Bousset 1899: 117–8.
16. See Reinink 2002: 152–4. Against Bousset's idea that only one section in the Syriac homily (namely, that concerning the Arab invasion) dates to the seventh century, and that the rest of the work was composed in the fourth century, see Reinink 1993a. The dating of the Latin sermon is disputed. Reinink argues that the work was influenced by the Ps.-Methodius and sets a date of composition at the end of the seventh century (see Reinink 1993a). This dating is contended by Shoemaker, who argues that the sermon was composed soon after the end of the seventh-century conflict between Byzantines and Sasanians (see Shoemaker 2015: 547, n.90; Shoemaker 2018: 193, n.55).

17. Hunnius 1904; Reinink 2002: 152–5, 165–71.
18. Bousset 1899: 155ff.
19. See Witakowski 1996: xix–xx.
20. Witakowski 1987: 128–9.
21. Text in Harrak 2017: 85.
22. See Chapter 3.
23. Andreson 1932: 27–8.
24. Czeglédy 1957: 247, n.56.
25. See Brooks 1923: 78.
26. Czeglédy 1957: 240–1; Shoemaker 2018: 83.
27. Czeglédy 1957: 240–1.
28. Brooks 1923: 78.
29. For a general overview, see van Donzel and Schmidt 2009: chaps. 1–2.
30. Trans. Scarvelis Constantinou in Andreas of Caesarea 2011: 212.
31. The broad outlines of his theory were traced in his article of 1985 (Reinink 1985), and are repeated in his article of 2003 (Reinink 2003, esp. 155–65). Other elements of his analysis of the Neṣḥānā are explored in an article of 1999 (Reinink 1999, esp. 151–5), and his article of 2002 (Reinink 2002, esp. 84–91).
32. Reinink 2003, 164.
33. Reinink 2002: 82–6.
34. Including my previous studies: Tesei 2010, 2013–2014, and 2018.
35. Van Bladel 2007a: 183–5.
36. Ps.-Fredegar's report contains an obvious anachronism that leads the author to describe the involvement of Byzantine Turkic allies in a conflict against the "Saracens" instead of against the Sasanians (on which, see Greisiger 2014: 236; Greisiger 2016: 76–7).
37. Van Bladel 2007a: 186.
38. Van Bladel 2007a: 188.
39. Like van Bladel, Greisiger brings into his analysis elements derived by the chronicles of Ps.-Fredegar and Movsēs Dasxurancʿi. Greisiger 2014: 231–42; Greisiger 2016: 73–6.
40. See, in particular, Greisiger 2017: 102ff.
41. Greisiger 2014: 234ff.; Greisiger 2016: 77–8.
42. Henkelmann 2010: 345.
43. Shoemaker 2018: 80ff.
44. Ibid.: 82.

Chapter 3

1. On the word b'rmgsṭ', see note 21 in Appendix 1.
2. On *hwy*ʾ (ܗܘܝܐ) and this sentence, see below.
3. Text in Budge 1889: 268–70.
4. Bousset 1889; Kampers 1901; Czeglédy 1955, 1957. These scholars' opinions about the genesis, evolution, and readaptation of the text, however, differ considerably. For instance, Kmoskó suggests that the final form of the Neṣḥānā was produced soon after the fall of Byzantium in 1455 (Kmoskó's study is described in Czeglédy 1955: 19–90).
5. Reinink 1985: 270, n.27.

6. Reinink 1983: 10–1; Reinink 1985: 269–70, n.27.
7. Reinink 1983: 10–11.
8. Ibid. and Reinink 1985: 270, n.27.
9. On which, see Shoemaker 2018: 81ff.
10. Reinink 1983: 10–1; Reinink 1985: 268–70, n.27.
11. Budge 1889: 268–9.
12. Ibid.: 269, n.1.
13. Ibid.: 154.
14. Bohas 2009: 38.
15. Greisiger 2014: 234.
16. See Greisiger 2014: 236–7; Greisiger 2016: 76–7.
17. Greisiger 2014: 235–7; Greisiger 2016: 77.
18. Text in Budge 1889: 269.
19. Greisiger 2016: 77.
20. Text in Budge 1889: 270.
21. Greisiger 2016: 77.
22. More examples are found in Acts 2:43, 12:9, 27:10; 1 Cor 15:21; Gal 3:21; 2 Thess 2:10; Heb 6:8; 1 Pet 1:20, 2:20.
23. Van Baldel 2007a, 183.
24. Ibid.
25. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 17–19; Sauer et al. 2020: 874ff.
26. Howard-Johnston 2021: 288–90.
27. Ibid.: 295–303.
28. Ibid.: 340–1, 353–4.
29. Budge 1889: 265.
30. This is also the earliest mention of a North Caucasian Hunnic leader in Byzantine sources.
31. On this episode reported, among others, by Malalas and Theophanes, see Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 80–1.
32. See Moravcsick 1958: II, 131; Golden 1980: 260. In these studies, the variation “Ziligdes” is attributed to the late seventh-century Chronicle of John of Nikiû. However, the Ethiopic text in which the Chronicle survives reports yet another variant: Zeqā. It seems that the form “Ziligdes” in the text results from a correction imported by the first editor of the Chronicle, Zotenberg, who imposed on the Ethiopic text one of the known Greek spellings of the name. This correction was then perpetuated by R. H. Charles, author of the first and only English translation available (see Rodinson 1968–1969: 117).
33. The story is reported, among others, by Malalas (XVIII.13) and Theophanes (AM 6019).
34. Golden 1980: 260.
35. Ibid.
36. Chron. XVI.17. Trans. Jeffreys et al. 1986: 227. Malalas’s report circulated among contemporary intellectuals. Evagrius Scholasticus derived his notice on the Sabir incursions from Malalas’s Chronicle (Ecclesiastical History III.43; see Whitby 2000: 194, n.171).
37. Procopius, Hist. I.10.
38. Jordanes, Get. VII.50.
39. On which, see the discussion in the previous chapter.
40. Van Bladel 2007a: 186–8.

Chapter 4

1. Vide infra.

2. Sauer, Chologauri, and Naskidashvili 2016: 21–22. For a much more detailed (and impressive) study of these archaeological findings, see Sauer et al. 2020, esp. chaps. 1–4, 7, and (above all) 25. Sauer et al. 2020 fills an enormous gap in research about the history of the Caspian Gates. Regrettably, due to the COVID-19 epidemic, I was only able to consult (an electronic version of) this study at a late stage in the preparation of the present volume. Had I been able to consult it at an earlier stage, the drafting of this chapter would have been much easier!
3. De Mag. 3.52–3. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 20.
4. Ibid.
5. Frg. 41.1.3–27; 47.
6. Text in Budge 1889: 140.
7. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 252, n.3.
8. Hist. II.83. See Thomson 1982: 299; and Thomson 1991: 129.
9. Frg. 47. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 58.
10. Ibid. On the Persian demand for money to secure the mountain passage, see Blockley 1985a: 55. See also the discussion below.
11. Sauer, Chologauri, and Naskidashvili 2016: 20. On the archaeological site at Dariali, see Sauer et al. 2020: chap. 25 (esp. part 3).
12. Hist. I.10
13. See Harmatta 1996: 82–4.
14. Ibid.: 83.
15. Murtazali 2016.
16. Harmatta 1996: 83.
17. See Kettenhofen 1994: 4 and bibliography. See further bibliographical references in van Bladel 2007a: 201, n.42.
18. See Ełishe, History of Vardan, p. 78; Łazar P'arpec'i, History, I.35.
19. The composition date of Ełishe's History of Vardan is contested. Thomson has argued in favor of a late sixth-century dating. Thomson 1982: esp. 19–29.
20. History of Vardan, p. 129. Trans. Thomson 1982: 181.
21. Kettenhofen 1994: 4.
22. On which, see van Bladel 2007a: 186, with reference to Hewsen 2001: 89.
23. Further fortifications were erected on the eastern shore of the Caspian Sea, with the impressive example of the great wall of Gorgan, which covers a distance of almost 200 km. On the Wall of Gorgan and other fortifications in northern Iran, see Nokandeh et al. 2006.
24. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 58.
25. Ełishe, History of Vardan, p. 78; Łazar P'arpec'i, History, I.35.
26. Ełishe, History of Vardan, p. 198. Cf. Movsēs Dasxuranc'i, History, I.10. On this expedition, see Braund 1994: 274; Bíró 1997: 53–6; Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 262, n.11.
27. See Blockley 1985a; Blockley 1992: 50–1; Braund 1994: 269–70. See also the discussion below.
28. De Mag. 3.52–53. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 20. On John Lydus's report, see Blockley 1985a: 64–66.
29. Frg. 41.1.3–27. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 57.
30. Frg. 47. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 58.
31. Chron. VIII–X. Procopius reports that a Byzantine ambassador named Eusebius accompanied Pērōz during his first campaign against the Hepthalites (Hist. I.3).
32. Chron. VII and XVIII.
33. See Blockley 1985a: 67.
34. Ps.-Joshua the Stylite, Chron. XXIII. Cf. Chron. XX, which reports Kavadh's earlier demands for funds. Procopius, Hist. I.7.
35. Procopius, Hist. I.7. Trans. Dewing 1914: 49–51.

36. Ibid.
37. De Mag. III.53. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 74.
38. Blockley 1985a: 69.
39. Ibid.
40. Eccl. Hist., VIII.5 (77.9–24). Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 84.
41. Hist. I.16.
42. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 74ff.
43. Hist. I.16.
44. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 96.
45. Hist. II.10. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 106.
46. Frg. 6.1.314–97. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 132.
47. Frg. 6.1.145–50.
48. Blockley 1985a: 72.
49. This dynamic in Roman-Persian negotiations is illustrated in passages by Menander Protector, which describe the talks that preceded the peace of 562: "The Persians wanted a treaty without a time limit and a fixed amount of gold every year from the Romans in return for their not taking up arms [. . .]. The Romans for their part wanted the treaty to be a short one and proposed to pay nothing for peace" (Frg. 6.1.130–40. Trans. Blockley 1985b: 61).
50. See Payne 2013: 10 and bibliography reported in n.31.
51. Payne 2013: 12–13.
52. Chron. VIII. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 59.
53. Ibid.
54. Chron, XVIII.44.
55. Chron. XVIII.76. Trans. Jeffreys et al. 1986: 282.
56. Blockley 1985a: 71.
57. Hist. II.10. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 106.
58. Ibid.
59. De Mag. III.52. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 20.
60. "A host of wars proceeded to disturb the empire of the Romans inasmuch as the Persians kept demanding their ever talked-of outlay over the Caspian Gates." De Mag. III.51 (trans. Bandy 1983: 213).
61. Blockley 1985a: 63–6.
62. See ibid.: 66.
63. Luther 1997: 106 n.30.
64. On this treaty see Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 1ff.
65. See Blockley 1985a: 65.
66. As suggested above, both Ps.-Joshua and Malalas refer to this element of imperial foreign policy (independently of whether it was ever in use or not) to mitigate the embarrassing situation created by the payments given to the Persians. Lydus, however, makes a different use of the idea of a Byzantine-Sasanian "joint venture" in the Caucasus. His goal is not to shed positive light on the Roman role in the defense of the Caspian Gates, but to reject in toto the rivals' pretensions.
67. Hist. I.16. Trans. Dewing 1914: 141.
68. Czeglédy 1957: 248.
69. Ibid.
70. See the discussion below.
71. Hist. II.104.
72. On Sesonchonis/Sesostris in the Romance, see Nawotka 2017: 67–9, 110–1.
73. Ibid.: 69.
74. Bibl. I.55.4. On the Colchians' alleged Egyptian origins, see also Strabo, Geo. XI.2.17.

75. Jordanes refers to Sesostris as Vesosis. Get. V. 44.
76. Hist. II.18.4. Trans. Frendo 2011: 52. Cf. Procopius's statement: "the Colchians have [. . .] changed their name at the present time to Lazi, just as nations of men and many other things do." Trans. Dewing 1962: 61.
77. Talking about the inhabitants of Lazica, Agathias refers to Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus as authorities from the past who already knew the story of Lazi's Egyptian origins.
78. Budge 1889: 225–6, 252.
79. Ibid.: 70.
80. Ibid.: 70.
81. Ibid.: 71.
82. Ibid.: 76.
83. Ibid.: 173.
84. Text in Budge 1889: 258.
85. Hist. II.18.6. Trans. Frendo 1975: 52.
86. On the Lazic War, see also Braund 1994: 287 ff.
87. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 82.
88. Ibid.: 96–7.
89. Ibid.: 115.
90. Ibid.: 116–9.
91. Ibid.: 120–2.
92. Ibid.
93. Ibid.
94. Menander Protector (mid-sixth century) also refers to the story of Sesostris in reference to Roman-Sasanian hostilities (Frg. 6.1205–35). Menander makes Sesostris's campaign an example of the "shifting and unstable nature of fortune" (trans. Blockley). According to Menander, the Sesostris story was told by the Roman ambassador Peter during the preliminary talks that led to the peace of 562 (on this peace treaty, see the discussion in the following chapter of this study). Even if Menander does not mention the legend of the Egyptian settlers of the Colchis, his work testifies to the widespread knowledge of the Sesostris story among late antique authors. Like Agathias, Menander colors the story with anti-Sasanian tones.
95. Hist. II.15.1–2. Trans. Dewing.
96. Hist. II.15–22–24. As Braund observes: "In addition to import duties, that payment also included the provision of supplies at low prices and, it is claimed, the forced purchase of unwanted imports. Hitherto the relationship between Byzantium and Lazica had been underpinned by vigorous trade. Now trade had ceased to be an advantage to the Lazi and had instead become a burden" (1994: 295).
97. Hist. II.29.10–12. On these events, see Braund 1994: 297–8.
98. See Braund 1994: 290–1.
99. Hist. I.15.7.
100. Hist. II.28. Trans. Dewing.
101. Georgian chronicles attribute the fortification of the Dariali Gorge (named Darubal) to the mythical king Mirvan. See Thompson 1996: 41.

Chapter 5

1. Czeglédy 1955: 31–36; Czeglédy 1957: 246–8.
2. Czeglédy 1957: 247.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. See the discussion in the next chapter.

6. See Tesei 2013–2014.
7. Reinink 1985: 276–7; Reinink 1999: 153; Reinink 2003: 162.
8. Reinink 1985: 276–7.
9. Some scholars argue that Heraclius's conduct of the conflict against the Sasanians can be seen as a model of a proto-crusade. Others maintain that the concept of holy war was alien to the Byzantines, as suggested by their failure to develop their own model of crusade in response to the challenge of Islamic expansionism. On this academic debate, see Stouraitis 2012: 235ff.; Kolia-Dermitzaki 2011: 121–32; Stoyanov 2012: 33–6 and 42–4; Laiou 2006: 33–4; Dennis 2001: 34–5.
10. Kaegi 2012: 21.
11. Eusebius (d. 339 CE) and Lactantius (d. 320 CE) present Constantine's clash with Licinius as a religious conflict, with the former representing the Christian God against the latter's pagan beliefs. See Whitby 1998.
12. A good example is found in the story about the siege of Nisibis by the army of Shapur II (r. 309–379 CE), reported in three distinguished sources: the Historia Ecclesiastica (II.26) of Theodoret of Cyrus (d. ca. 458 CE); Historia Ecclesiastica, the Syriac text known as the Historia Sancti Ephraemi (6–7); and the Syriac Chronicon (VII.3) of Michael the Syrian (d. 1199 CE). All these reports agree about two miraculous events that took place during the Sasanian offensive against Nisibis.
13. Whitby 1998: 194.
14. Frendo 1997.
15. Ibid.: 107.
16. Wars II.12.20–30.
17. Frendo 1997: 112.
18. Eccl. IV.24.
19. Text in Budge 1889: 273.
20. Reinink 1985: 275–6; Reinink 1999: 151–2; Reinink 2002: 81; Reinink 2003, 155–6.
21. Reinink 1985: 275–6; 2003: 155–6.
22. Greisiger 2014: 239; Greisiger 2016: 72.
23. Budge 1889: 274 (text).
24. Strategikon II.18.
25. Strategikon XII.10. Cf. Strategikon XII.24.
26. Epitoma rei militaris (III.5).
27. Strategikon II.18. Trans. Dennis.
28. The author is probably referring to this same formula when he discusses the inappropriateness of shouting Nobiscum at the beginning of the charge (II.18).
29. Budge 1889: 274 (text).
30. Ibid.: 158.
31. Ibid.: 272, n.3.
32. Nöldeke 1890: 29.
33. Hunnius 1904: 15.
34. Czeglédy 1957: 248.
35. Reinink 2003: 157–8. The same claim was expressed in Reinink 1985: 270–1, n.28.
36. Reinink 2003: 157.
37. Reinink 2003: 158.
38. On the peace negotiations of 628–629, see Howard-Johnston 1999: 26–9. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 223–7; Kaegi 2003: 178–91; and, above all, the recent reconstruction of the events in Howard-Johnston 2021: 322ff.
39. On this second round of negotiations, see Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 226–8 and Howard-Johnston 2021: 336ff.

40. Howard-Johnston 2021: 327–8, 342–3, 354.
41. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 226. I find speculative the suggestion by Howard-Johnston, according to whom Heraclius "seems to have obtained a promise of some war reparations (in the form of generous presents)." Howard-Johnston 1999: 28. In fact, the presents that Shahrbarāz reportedly gave the Byzantine ambassadors were likely part of diplomatic court ceremonies, not compensation for war damages.
42. Reinink 1985: 271, n.29.
43. See Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 113 and 123ff.
44. Ecc. Hist. VI.23. Trans. Payne Smith 1860: 426–7.
45. Ecc. Hist. VI.23.
46. Ibid.
47. Hist. VIII.15.1–7. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 128–9.
48. Hist. VIII.15.16–18. Trans. Greatrex and Lieu 2002: 129.
49. Julian Romance, p. 179. Trans. Sokoloff 2016: 364.
50. Nöldeke 1874: 281–4; Wood 2010: 141–2, 158–61.
51. Wood 2010: 142.
52. Ibid.: 141.
53. Ibid.
54. Wood 2010: 159–60. See also Schwartz 2011.
55. Hist. V.15.3–7. Trans. Whitby and Whitby.
56. Reinink 1984: 277–8; Reinink 2002: 85–9; Reinink 2003: 161; Greisiger 2014: 240–3.
57. Alexander 1969: 4–5; Mango 1980: 205.
58. Whitby and Whitby 1986: 150, n.81.
59. Whitby 1988: 240, n.35.
60. Whitby and Whitby 1986: 150, n.80.
61. Reinink 2002: 88.
62. "The hebdomad system requires some flexibility on our part in fixing dates, and one cannot exclude the possibility that they indicate the period of Persian successes and military supremacy only roughly." Reinink 2002: 87.
63. Reinink 2003: 159–60.
64. Reinink 2002: 89. See also Reinink 2003: 159–60.
65. Reinink 2003: 159, with reference to Reinink 1984: 279, n.47.
66. Schreiner 1985: 2–3 n.591; Olajos 1988: 11; Kaegi 2003: 84; Efthymiadis 2010: 180. See also Bonura 2019: 145–6.
67. Reinink 1985: 278–9; Reinink 2002: 85–91; Reinink 2003: 159–63.
68. Greisiger 2014: 242.
69. Shoemaker 2018: 85.
70. See Tesei 2018.
71. Chron. LXVIII.
72. Hist. V.15.3. Trans. Whitby and Whitby.
73. CoT, XXVIII.13–17.
74. Julian Romance, p. 103. Trans. Sokoloff.
75. Ibid., p. 104.
76. Harmatta 1996: 80.
77. Harmatta talks about "the preserved form of the Syrian Alexander Romance." Harmatta 1996: 80.
78. Budge 1889: 150, n. 1.
79. Bohas 2009: 32, n.62.
80. The figure of Darius the Mede is a scholarly riddle. In the Book of Daniel, he is identified as a king of Babylon, between the Chaldean Belshazzar and the Persian Cyrus the Great, and as the son of the equally obscure Ahasuerus (Dan 5:31; 6:1; 9:1). However, no Darius the Mede is recorded in historical sources, nor is there historical evidence for the biblical report that a Median seized the Babylonian throne. The few details that the Book of Daniel provides about his reign and genealogy do not match the profile of Darius I, the only Persian sovereign bearing that name who also reigned in a period close to the chronological framework described in the Danielic books. Unlike Darius the Mede, Darius I reigned after Cyrus, and was the father, not the son, of Xerxes—a detail that is not consistent with his designation as the son of Ahasuerus. Finally, he was not Median, but Persian by birth. Insomuch as the Book of Daniel is not considered to be historically accurate, the character of Darius the Mede should be considered fictional.

81. On which see the discussion in Chapter 9.
82. E.g., Aphrahat (Dem V.12).
83. I owe this observation to Khodadad Rezakhani. Private conversation, February 13, 2021. On Middle Persian names, see Gignoux 1986. A few examples (among many) of -q as a transposition into Syriac of the final -g are: bhrqʾ from bahrag; bzyqʾ from bāzīg; blylqʾ from balīlag; dnqʾ from dāng; wsqʾ from wāzag (see Ciancaglini 2008).
84. The particular word tubbārā (ܬܘܒܪܐ) means breaking/fracture, whereas tbārā (ܬܒܪܐ) is used in the Peshitta to indicate a breaking (e.g., Isa 30:13–14), a calamity (e.g., Nahum 3:19, Prov 17:7), or even a prey (e.g., Job 4:11, Am 3:4).
85. See Gignoux 1986.
86. See Chapter 9.
87. See Chapters 8 and 9.

Chapter 6

1. Reinink 1985: 277; Reinink 1992: 167, n.73; Reinink 1999: 153; Reinink 2002: 86; Reinink 2003: 162.
2. Reinink 1985: 276–7; Reinink 1999: 153; Reinink 2003: 162.
3. The title for one of Reinink's studies is: "Heraclius, the New Alexander" (Reinink 2002).
4. Greisiger 2014: 183.
5. Herac. I.110–121.
6. Herac. I.84–88.
7. Herac. II.133–137.
8. Herac. I.69–71.
9. Herac. I.133–135.
10. See Procopiou 2015: 201; Stewart 2018. On the representation of Alexander crowned with the horns of Ammon, see Chapter 9.
11. See Procopiou 2015: 210, n. 37.
12. Stewart 2018: 167 and fig. 21 at p. 194.
13. Ibid. and fig. 22 at p. 195.
14. One thinks of the so-called David Plates.
15. Procopiou 2015: 201; Stewart 2018: 156–7. Stewart mistakenly identifies the Neṣḥānā with the Syriac translation of the Alexander Romance.
16. On the analytic categories of comparatio Alexandri, imitatio Alexandri, and aemulatio Alexandri, see Green 1978, 1998, and, more recently, Welch and Mitchel 2015.
17. Trajan's fascination with Alexander was closely connected to a renewed interest in the ancient king among contemporary Roman intellectuals. Both Arrian's Anabasys Alexandri and Plutarch's Life of Alexander date from this historical period (see Monaco Caterine 2017).
18. On Caracalla's imitatio Alexandri, see Bruhl 1930, 214ff.; Baharal 1994; Kühnen 2008, 176ff.; van Bladel 2009: 59; Shayegan 2011: 342ff.

19. See Shayegan 2011: 343ff.
20. See the cases of Diocletian (r. 284–305) and Constantine (r. 306–337) in Smith 2011: 50, and that of Constantius II (r. 337–361) in Lane Fox 1997: 239–47.
21. See Shayegan 2011: 361 ff. On Julian's imitatio Alexandri, see Smith 2011; Lane-Fox 1997.
22. In this case, the flattering prediction by Claudian (d. 404) that the teenage emperor Honorius (r. 393–423) would become "as great [as Alexander], lording it over the Indians, worshipped by the Mede" (IV Cons. Hon., 257–8) should not be read as an exhortation to emulate Alexander's Persian campaigns, but as an encomiastic comparison adopted by the panegyrist to celebrate his protector. Cited in Smith 2011: 50.
23. Wars II.2.3–9. Trans. Dewing 1914: 267.
24. Wars II.3.41–49. Trans. Dewing 1914: 283.
25. Wars II.2.9–15. Trans. Dewing 1914: 269–71. The mention of Cyrus the Great as another model of ideal sovereign reflects a more complex idealization and propagandistic dynamic, to which we will return later.
26. See Smith 2011: 73–85. See also Lane Fox 1997: 249ff.
27. Hist. IV.13.4–26. Trans. Whitby and Whitby 1986.
28. Howard-Johnston 2010: 146.
29. See Cameron 1977: 43.
30. Anthol. Graeca XVI.62. Trans. Mango 1986: 117–8.
31. Anthol. Graeca XVI.63. Trans. Mango 1986: 118.
32. See Cameron 1977: 44–46; Mango 1986: 118, n.318. The two epigraphs mention two different names, Eustathius and Julian, as the dedicator(s) of the statue. Mango and Cameron have successfully identified the Julian of the second epigram with the praetorian prefect of the East between March 530 and February 531. The Eustathius mentioned in the first epigram, however, remains unidentified, although the title of "father of Rome" (γενέτης Ῥώμης) suggests that he was the city prefect of Constantinople. Mango wonders whether the two names reported in the Anthology of Planudes belonged to the same person, who held both offices, or to two different officials who dedicated the same statue to the emperor. The first hypothesis is rejected by Cameron, who argues that it is more likely that "Eustathius was city prefect while Julian was praetorian prefect, namely 530/1" (Cameron 1977: 45). At the same time, Cameron emphasizes that it was unusual for a statue to bear a double dedicatory epigram. On these grounds, he asks whether the two epigraphs originally may have belonged to two different statues. Ultimately, however, Cameron considers that "on balance it is probably easier to accept two prefects erecting one statue in collaboration than two apparently identical monuments commemorating apparently identical achievements" (ibid.: 46). Feissel is skeptical about the ascription of the two epigrams to the same statue and, commenting on the second epigram, affirms that "rien n'autorise à confondre cette statue avec celle de l'Hippodrome" (2000: 90). By contrast, the two epigrams are treated as part of a single inscription in a recent study by Canepa (2009: 169).
33. Cameron makes this point in Cameron 1977: 43.
34. Canepa 2009: 169.
35. Cf. the information reported by Malalas (Chron., 408, 22–3), according to whom Justinian modified a statue originally that depicted Arcadius (r. 383–408 CE).
36. Build. I.2.10–12. Trans. Dewing 1940.
37. See Weitzmann 1977: 35; Canepa 2009: 115. I do not agree with Stewart's suggestion that the figure represented in the ivory is the idealized person of the apocalyptic kosmokrator described, inter alia, in the Pseudo-Methodius. Stewart 2018: 171.
38. Canepa 2009: 115.
39. On which, see Smith 2011: 73–85. See also Lane Fox 1997: 249ff.
40. I.28–29. See Budge 1889: 35–6.

41. See van Ginkel's remarks about John of Ephesus's position toward Justinian (van Ginkel 1995: 109).
42. See the detailed study by Jack Tannous (2018).
43. Wood 2010: 159–60.

Chapter 7

1. Interestingly, the Middle-Persian apocalyptic text entitled Zand ī Wahman Yasn depicts Alexander not only through the common epithet of hrōmāyān, "the Roman," but also through that of kilīsāyīg, "the ecclesiastic" (III.26. See Cereti 1995: 165 and Gignoux 2007: 95). This peculiar definition of Alexander has puzzled scholars, and some have questioned the identification of Alexander with the epithet kilīsāyīg (Cereti 1995: 185; Gignoux 2007: 95; Daryaee 2015: 9). I would suggest that the description of the Macedonian king as "the ecclesiastic" relates to the process of Christianization of the character of Alexander that is first certified in the Neṣḥānā. This characterization of Alexander became widespread in later Syriac literature. The new evolution of the figure of Alexander into a pious Christian sovereign arguably contributed to the elaboration among Zoroastrians of the image of an evil Roman, and now also Christian, king.
2. See Smith 2011: 73–85. See also Lane Fox 1997: 249ff.
3. Djurslev 2020: chap. 2.
4. The most recent study of Alexander in the Danielic schema is Djurslev 2020: 99–128.
5. Ibid.: 122.
6. As Djurslev observes: "The sudden absence of the Fortune topos in the early Christian tradition is striking. The topos is never associated with Alexander across a wide range of historiographical texts, even those that seek to criticize him" (ibid.: 120).
7. Dem. V.18–19. Trans. Lehto: 161. On this passage of Aphrahat's Demonstrations, see Ubierna 2012: 150ff.
8. This explanation reflects a standard interpretation among Syriac Christians, as suggested by the fact that the Peshitta on Daniel 8 contains glosses in which the ram is identified with "Darius the Mede" and the he-goat with "Alexander the son of Philip." See Taylor 1994: 219.
9. Dem V.6. Trans in Lehto 2010: 152.
10. Morrison 2004: 68–9. On Aphrahat's interpretation of the Danielic prophecy, see also Ubierna 2012: 149–54.
11. When Aphrahat was writing his Demonstration V, he did not know that Constantine had recently passed away (see Morrison 2004: 57).
12. Chron. VIII.1. Trans. Jeffreys et al. 1986: 102.
13. Chron. VII.19. Trans. Jeffreys et al. 1986: 101.
14. One wonders if Malalas is referencing fictional information about alleged relationships between Alexander and Rome, like those found in the Alexander Romance, where Alexander forces the Romans into submission (rec. α I.26.5; rec. β I.29.2–3).
15. Text in Budge 1889: 270.
16. Ibid.
17. Dem V.10.
18. Dem V.6.
19. Vide infra.
20. On this tradition, see Goldstein 1993.
21. See Djurslev 2020: 129–36.
22. Ant. XI.317–345.
23. Text in Budge 1889: 155.

24. The terms ܦܪܙܠܐ / parzlā (“iron”) and ܢܚܫܐ / nḥāšā (“bronze”), which in the Neṣḥānā designate the materials from which the two hammers are made, are the same terms that the Peshitta uses to translate the words פַּרְזְלָא / parzəlā (iron) and נְחָשָׁא / nəḥāšā (“bronze”) in Daniel 2 and 7.
25. For sure, this innovation had a lasting legacy, since later versions of the story—including the Qurʾānic pericope of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn—describe the gate against Gog and Magog as made of iron (ḥadīd) and brass (qiṭr).
26. Tertullian, Apologeticus, xxxii. On other authors who embraced this idea, see Shoemaker 2018: 40–1.
27. See Bonura forthcoming.
28. From this perspective, it is not surprising that the author omits the motif of the coming of the Antichrist, which might have raised fears among Christians about the collapse of Rome (cf. Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses 15.11–13) or—even worse—the idea elaborated by some exegetes that Satan would take control of the empire, which would then be destroyed by God (cf. Theodoret, Commentary on Daniel, PG 1431–1432).
29. I emphasize the word “eschatological” in order to distinguish the episode in the Syriac work from those early references to the motif of Alexander’s iron gate that do relate to the theme of the Eschaton.
30. Pfister 1956: 30 and Pfister 1976: 325.
31. Bell. Jud. VII.7.4.
32. Ant. Jud. I.122.
33. Anderson 1932: 19–20.
34. See, among others, Greisiger 2016: 64 and Djurslev 2018.
35. Anderson 1932: 16–20.
36. See the criticism already made by Barry 1933: 265.
37. Djurslev 2018: 203.
38. Potestà 2011.
39. Bonura 2016.
40. Sackur 1898: 186.
41. See Mayerson 1993.
42. The symbiosis of the two motifs of Alexander’s horns and of the iron gate into the elaboration of the legend of the eschatological gate is reflected in the Qurʾānic pericope of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn.

Chapter 8

1. Van Bladel 2007a: 187–8.
2. Reinink 2002.
3. Reinink 2003: 163ff.
4. The Seventh Vision of Daniel was originally composed in Greek, but it survives only in Armenian. On the dating and contents of the text, see DiTommaso 2005: 100ff., DiTommaso 2014, and La Porta 2013.
5. Hist. V.5.
6. Shoemaker 2018.
7. Shoemaker 2018: 70ff., with reference to Scott 1985: 108 and Scott 2012: 6–9.
8. Apologeticus, xxxii.
9. See Shoemaker 2018: 38–9.
10. On Eusebius, see Chesnut 1986: 170, 173–4; Thielman 1987; Shoemaker forthcoming. On Lactantius, see Digeser 2014; Shoemaker forthcoming. On Ephrem, see Papoutsakis 2017; Shoemaker forthcoming. In his PhD dissertation and in a recent article, Bonura questions the eschatological enthusiasm attributed to the reign of Constantine (Bonura 2019, 2021). See, however, Shoemaker's counterarguments in Shoemaker forthcoming.

11. Lehto 2010: 22ff.
12. See ibid.
13. See the remarks by Lehto in ibid.: 22–23, n.42.
14. Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses XII.18, XV.11–13; John Chrysostom, Commentary on Daniel 2; Theodoret of Cyrrhus, Commentary on Daniel 2 & 7.
15. Jerome, Commentary on Daniel 7.
16. Jerome, Commentary on Daniel 2 (trans. Archer).
17. Theodoret of Cyrrhus, Commentary on Daniel 2 (trans. Hill).
18. Ibid.
19. See Morrison 2007: 72–73.
20. See Canepa 2009.
21. See Shoemaker 2018: 64ff.
22. On the (perhaps too rosy description of the) integration of Eastern Christians in the Sasanian Empire, see Payne 2015.
23. See Buck 1996.
24. See Brock 1982: 11.
25. See Chapter 9.
26. Christian Topography II.74–75.
27. Christian Topography II.75. Trans. McCrindle. Greek text and French translation in Wolska-Conus 1970, I: 390.
28. Ibid.
29. Magdalino 1993: 10.
30. Christian Topography II.76–77.3.
31. See Gariboldi 2016 and Shayegan 2017: 439–40.
32. Cosmas's distinction between Sasanians and Achaemenids implicitly denies polemical forecast of the future, like the one elaborated by Aphrahat, about the former's destiny to repeat the catastrophic fate of the latter.
33. Christian Topography II.76–77.3.
34. Canepa 2009: 118.
35. Ibid.: 120.
36. See, among others, Witakowski 2008; Debié 2008; Minov 2021.
37. Minov 2014: 191.
38. See, for instance, Brock 1982: 15, with reference to the classical study of Monneret de Villard (1952).
39. See Minov 2014: 174ff. One case of this cultural phenomenon discussed by Minov will be analyzed at the end of this chapter. It concerns Abā's encomiastic opening words of the synod of 544, and his hailing Khosrow as the second Cyrus.
40. Minov 2014: 193. See Jullien 2009.
41. See Minov 2014: 169ff.
42. Christian Topography II.2.
43. Wolska-Conus 1968: 63–85; Berti 2017.
44. Bonura 2019 and Bonura forthcoming.
45. Ut supra.
46. Berti 2017.

Chapter 9

1. Text in Budge 1889: 257.

2. The question of Alexander's horns has generated a long and often inconclusive academic debate around a mysterious figure who appears in the Qurʾān under the epithet of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn, literally "the Two Horned One." In what follows, I deliberately refrain from engaging with scholarship dedicated to the figure of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn or any questions relating to Qurʾānic origins.
3. See Collins 2014.
4. Fulińska 2012: 385–6.
5. FGrHist 126.5.
6. Anderson 1927: 103; Fulińska 2012: 386.
7. These "Arabian Alexanders" began to appear in the eastern Arabian Peninsula in the third century BCE, and were probably produced in two different periods: between the late third and early second centuries BCE, and between the first century BCE and the third century CE. On this numismatic evidence, see Van Alfen 2010: 563–4 and bibliography. For further details, see Mørkholm 1973; Potts 1991: 13–62; Potts 2010: 70ff.
8. See Anastasiades 2009: 262–4.
9. See Fulińska 2012, 396.
10. See Stewart 2018: 147 and image at p. 188.
11. See Dalton 1901: 16; Stewart 2018: 147–8. Whereas Dalton dates the cameo to the fourth-sixth centuries CE, Stewart dates it to the fourth-seventh centuries CE. Neither offers any explanation for the suggested dating.
12. Fulińska 2012: 393–4.
13. See Procopiou 2015: 201.
14. See the discussion in Stewart 2018: 143–52.
15. See Anderson 1927: 103–4; Stewart 1993: 41, 411; Nawotka 2017: 261–2. On Clemens's condemnation of Alexander's attempted deification, see Djurslev 2020: 71–2.
16. Stewart 2018: 152. On early Christian discussions regarding Alexander's alleged divine origins, see Djurslev 2020: 70ff.
17. On this episode, see Jouanno 2002: 57–68.
18. Alexander Romance, III.34. The adjective κερασφόρον is the same used by Clemens of Alexandria in the above quoted passage.
19. See Wolohojian 1969: 158.
20. Text in Budge 1889: 272.
21. See Djurslev 2020: 70ff.
22. Significantly, the Peshitta refers to the horns in the plural.
23. Text in Burge 1889: 272.
24. Ibid.
25. On Byzantium as the elected nation, see the recent monograph of Shay Eshel (Eshel 2018). See also Magdalino and Nelson 2010: 25–30; Sivertsev 2011: 1ff.
26. All extant manuscripts seem to be consistent on this passage, at least according to Budge's critical edition (Budge 1889: 257).
27. Reinink 1985: 273, n.37; Bohas 2009: 28, n.53.
28. Reinink 1985: 273, n.37. However, exegeses on Daniel 7 more often associate Alexander with with the third beast of the prophecy.
29. The sentence "the he-goat had a horn between its eyes" is rendered in the Peshitta as: w-ṣpryʾ qrnʾ mtḥzyʾ byt ʿynwhy.
30. "[The ram] had two horns. Both horns were long, but one was longer than the other, and the longer one came up second."
31. Text in Budge 1889: 272.
32. See Djurslev 2020: 99ff.
33. The gloss reads: "the he-goat is Alexander, son of Philip."

34. Text in Assemani 1743: 217.
35. Dem V.5, 10, 18.
36. See Djurslev 2020: 99ff.
37. Commentary on Daniel IV.26. Trans. Djurslev 2020: 99–100.
38. Antiquities X.11.4.
39. On Daniel 8:3.
40. Ibid.
41. On Daniel 9:1. Trans. Stevenson et al. 2008: 259.
42. Chron. VIII.1 (Trans. Jeffreys et al.).
43. According to Jerome, Cyrus and his (alleged) uncle Darius the Mede reigned together. On Daniel 8:3.
44. On Daniel 8:3. Trans. Stevenson et al. 2008: 248.
45. History XLIV.142.
46. See Lane Fox 2007: esp. 279–80 and 284–5.
47. XI.11.4.
48. See Shayegan 2017: 426–33; Facella 2005.
49. See Shayegan 2017: 433–6.
50. Brutus 282. See Nabel 2018: 217.
51. Vita Constantini I.7–9. See Peltonen 2018: 486ff.; Djurslev 2020: 199ff.
52. As for Alexander's control over Assyria, this should be related to traditions examined in the next chapter that characterize the Sasanians as the heirs of Nimrod.
53. The exception is the propaganda operated by Julian during his campaign against Shapur II. Unlike previous Roman emperors and his contemporary Aphrahat, Julian promoted a denialist strategy centered around the rebuttal of alleged Sasanian claims of an Achaemenid lineage. See Gariboldi 2016 and Shayegan 2017: 440.
54. Hist. VI.2.1–2.
55. Hist. LXXX.3.4.
56. Res Gestae XVII.5.5–6.
57. On the (un-)historicity of the information provided by Roman authors, see Huyse 2002; Frendo 2002; Shayegan 2011: chap. 2.
58. The proclamation: "by the care of the second Cyrus (ܘܒܝܨܝܦܘܬܗ ܕܝܠܗ ܕܟܘܪܫ ܕܬܪܝܢ)" occurs in the report of the synod found in the anthology of the texts of Eastern Christian synods published in Chabot 1902 (p. 69).
59. See Payne 2015: chap. 3. On Abā's possible role in suppressing the revolt of Gundeshapur, see Jullien 2011: 112–3.
60. For an extensive bibliography of the scholarly positions on this debate, see Shayegan 2011: 1–2, nn.2–7. See also a recent important contribution in Canepa 2018: chap. 12. The possibility of Achaemenian recollections has been debated—without reaching a full consensus—only with reference to early Sasanian period, while not much scholarship has specifically focused on the reign of Khosrow.
61. Buildings I.14. Trans. Dewing.
62. See Canepa 2009: 311, n.53.
63. See also Whitby 2008: 131.
64. Canepa 2009: 311, n.53.
65. On Justinian's attitudes toward the Eastern Church, see Guillaumont 1969.
66. Hist. IV.29.5–7.
67. Ibid. IV.29.8–10.
68. Herodotus, Hist. I.26–94.
69. Trans. Frendo 2011: 133.

70. Noticeably, the reference in the Neṣḥānā to Alexander's subjugation of Assyria and Babylon finds a precise parallel in the epigram reported in the Anthology of Planudes.
71. I owe to Domenico Agostini the observation that, with the motif of Alexander's ram horns, our author may want to appropriate another element of Sasanian political culture, that is, the ram as a symbol of royalty. Depictions of sovereigns wearing helmets decorated with ram horns appear on Sasanian coins and artworks (Dmitriev 2017: 115). Shapur II is said to have worn a golden headgear shaped in the image of a ram's head (Ammianus Marcellinus, Res Gestae XIX.1.3.). These representations are likely related to the symbolic value of the ram in Zoroastrian religious tradition. In Zoroastrianism, the ram appears as a manifestation of the xwarrah, the divine force of royal glory. Perhaps the best-known example of the xwarrah epiphany is described in the Kār-Nāmag ī Ardašīr ī Pāpakān, where a ram accompanies Ardashir I, seated on his horse behind him (see Shenkar 2014: 131, 138–40; Dmitriev 2017: 118).

Chapter 10

1. Text in Budge 1889: 257–8.
2. Reinink 1993b: 21 n.4, 67 n.2.; Potestà 2011: 282ff.; Shoemaker 2018: 58; Bonura 2016: 56ff.
3. Text in Sackur 1898: 186.
4. Ps-Methodius, XIV.2–5. Trans. Palmer 1993: 240. Text in Reinink 1993b: 44.
5. Shoemaker 2018: chap. 2.
6. Potestà 2011.
7. Bonura 2016.
8. Reinink 1993b: 21 n.4, 67 n.2; Potestà 2011: 282ff.; Shoemaker 2018: 58; Bonura 2016: 56ff.
9. Potestà 2011: 280ff.
10. Shoemaker 2018: 84.
11. Scholars have identified Heraclius's ceremonial reinstallation of the True Cross in Jerusalem as the historical background to the scene of Alexander's visit to the holy city and his promise to have his throne transferred to Jerusalem after his death (Reinink 1985: 279–80; Reinink 2003: 164–5; Stoyanov 2011: 63; Greisiger 2016: 216). However, there are several discrepancies between the dynamics depicted by the Syriac author and the historical reality of the 630s. For instance, in the peace negotiations between Alexander and Ṭūbarlaq, we find no mention of any precious object returned to the Romans that could represent the holy relics recovered by Heraclius. Moreover, in the Syriac work, we read that Alexander's throne is relocated to Jerusalem after Alexander's death, something that significantly differs from Heraclius's return of the Cross at the end of the conflict. As for the motif of Alexander's visit to Jerusalem, the author of the Neṣḥānā certainly did not need the example of Heraclius to assert the centrality of Jerusalem for the Christian kingdom that, in his view, Alexander founded. Alexander's journey to the holy city is intimately connected to the image of the pious, divinely inspired emperor that our author depicts. To produce this image, the author adopted a number of tropes and topoi of the Jewish and Christian tradition, including the one that had the Macedonian king visiting Jerusalem during his invasion of the Achaemenid Empire.
12. Shoemaker 2018: 61.
13. At the same time, the deposition of the crown and the regalia in the Tiburtine Sibyl brings to mind another passage in the Neṣḥānā, namely, the section immediately before the battle against Tūbarlaq in which Alexander takes off his crown and his purple robes and lays them in front of God in a display of humility.
14. See the bibliography in Shoemaker 2018: 196, n.94.
15. The Syriac author here struggles somewhat to explain (not very convincingly) why the pagan emperor Julian did not abolish the practice established by Constantine of having a cross at the head of the army (Julian Romance, p. 199).

16. Ibid., pp. 200–1.
17. Reinink 1992: 174.
18. Ciancaglini 2008: 266.
19. Julian Romance, pp. 108ff.
20. Ibid., p. 200 (trans. Sokoloff).
21. Ibid., p. 85 (trans. Sokoloff).
22. Ibid., p. 127 (trans. Sokoloff).
23. Ibid., p. 201 (trans. Sokoloff).
24. Ibid., p. 210.
25. Ibid., p. 213.
26. Ibid., p. 209 (trans. Sokoloff).
27. Ibid., p. 183 (trans. Sokoloff).
28. Ibid., pp. 102, 107, 159, 163, 165.
29. Ibid., pp. 74, 103, 172.
30. Ibid., p. 172 (trans. Sokoloff).
31. Ibid., p. 74 (trans. Sokoloff).
32. Vide infra.
33. Julian Romance, p. 103 (trans. Sokoloff).
34. Ibid., p. 193 (trans. Sokoloff).
35. Text in Bedjan 1905–1910: I.93, 120.
36. See Minov 2021.
37. CoT, XXIV.4.
38. Ibid., XXIV.25–26.
39. Here it is not clear whether the subject is Nimrod or Sasan.
40. CoT XXIV.25–26, rec. 1. Text in Ri 1987: I.194.
41. Bonura forthcoming.
42. Ibid.
43. Lewis and Gibson 1900: 704.
44. PRK I.7. The dating of the Pesikta de-Rav Kahana is contested.
45. The Peshitta translates καθέδρα as kursyā.
46. Newport 1990.
47. PRK I.7. Trans. Braude 2002: 22.
48. Ibid. Trans. Braude 2002: 22–3.
49. According to a tenth-century report, the Ottonian ambassador at the Byzantine court, Liutprand of Cremona, saw a representation of the throne of Solomon in the imperial palace of Constantinople (Liutprand of Cremona, Retribution, VI.5). As Ra'anan Boustan argues (Boustan 2013: 173), the throne described by Liutprand does not predate the reign of Leo VI (r. 887–912). In this case, the scene in the Neṣḥānā appears to be an early testimony to the tendency to deploy the motif of Solomon's throne in imperial discourse, one that became prominent in later centuries.
50. For a (not completely satisfying) analysis of the relationship between the motif in the Neṣḥānā and these Jewish traditions, see Greisiger 2014: 212–6.
51. On the relationship between this midrash and the frescoes at Dura-Europos, see Siverstev 2011: 22.
52. EsthR I.12. On this midrash, see Boustan 2008: 363–4; Siverstev 2011: 22; Boustan 2013: 179.
53. EsthR I.12.
54. Targum Sheni I.2.

55. In later versions, the Midrash appears to have been updated in order to include more recent historical figures, such as Caesar Augustus, Vespasian, Ardashir, and the Umayyad caliph Hišām b. ʿAbd al-Malik. Of the eight kings, some almost always appear in all variations of the list. They are: Nimrod, Joseph, Solomon, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, and the king Messiah. See Amitay 2010: 116.
56. On the empty throne at Dura-Europos, see Mera 2014: 141.
57. Amitay 2010: 115. The repeated updating of the kings' list indicates the continuous circulation of the Midrash in Late Antiquity. The last historically recognizable figure interpolated in the list is the Umayyad caliph Hišām b. ʿAbd al-Malik (r. 724–743 CE).
58. See Strack and Sternberger 1996: 318–9.
59. Amitay 2010: 115.
60. Apocalypse of Daniel 2, 9–10.
61. Henze 2001: 14.
62. One even wonders if, by means of the peculiar description of the crown suspended over the throne, the author of the Neṣḥānā was seeking to compete with Sasanian court ceremonies. According to later Arab historians, the practice of suspending the crown from the ceiling over the throne was inaugurated during the reign of Khosrow Anōshirvān (see Ettinghausen 1972: 28–9).
63. Weyl Carr 1991.
64. For a recent discussion, with reference to previous scholarship, see Bergmeier 2020: 88–90.
65. Ibid.: 97, 100.

Conclusion

1. The provinces are enumerated by the angel who instructs Alexander about the terms of the peace that he must dictate to Tūbarlaq. The angel tells the king to establish the frontier between the two empires on the Tigris and to take possession of several territories. As observed by Reinink, these territories correspond to the Byzantine prefectures occupied by the Persians during the seventh-century conflict and restored to Byzantium after the peace treaty signed by Heraclius and Kavadh II in 628 (Reinink 2003: 153). Thus, Reinink argues that the homily was composed in the immediate aftermath of those peace agreements. However, the absence of the list of provinces in one of the three recensions of the homily suggests that the list was not part of the original text. If so, it is easy to imagine that a similar addition was made in order to connect the story of Alexander's victory over the Persians to Heraclius's campaigns.
2. On the sections of the Neṣḥānā that may have been borrowed by Ps.-Ephrem, see Reinink 2003: 170, n.117.
3. Nöldeke 1890:
4. Van Bladel 2007a; Tesei 2013–2014.
5. Di Branco 2011; Klar 2020.
6. Di Branco 2011: 71.
7. The traditions about Ṣaʿb Ḏū Marāṯid are likely the product of post-Islamic elaborations by the Yemenite intellectual elite (Friedländer 1913: 285ff.). According to Horowitz, Alexander's Qurʾānic epithet of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn was transferred to a Yemenite king in the post-Qurʾānic period (Horowitz 1926: 111). Nagel identifies the origins of the legends about Ḏū-l-Qarnayn/Tubbaʿ in the circle of the Himyarites who settled in Egypt after the rise of Islam. He argues that the South Arabian saga of Ṣaʿb Ḏū-l-Qarnayn is based on legends about Alexander/Ḏū-l-Qarnayn produced by post-Islamic Yemenite intellectuals with propagandistic purposes (Nagel 1978). Inexplicably, Di Branco mentions the outcomes of Nagels's study in support of his analysis (Di Branco 2011: 301–2), although his theory is contradicted by those very same outcomes. Similarly odd is Di Branco’s reference to the saga of “il grande monarca sudarabico costruttore della muraglia contro Gog and Magog” as the source of inspiration for the Syriac seventh-century texts about Alexander. This description suggests that the Syriac authors derived the motif of Alexander’s eschatological gate from the Yemenite epic of Ṣaʿb Ḏū-l-Qarnayn, and not—as one would expect—from earlier traditions about the Macedonian sovereign. Postulating a South Arabian origin for this literary motif, however, would be hardly possible, since Greek and Latin sources credit Alexander with the construction of fortifications in Central Asia since at least the times of Josephus—as the present study has documented. In fact, Di Branco does not explain how the story of the wall erected against Gog and Magog, usually attributed to the figure of Alexander, came to be associated with a Himyarite literary figure. These are only two of the several problematic aspects of Di Branco’s analysis.

8. According to Klar, “the Qurʾānic exemplum is highly allusive, and makes no reference to vast tracts of the narrative line attested in the Nesḥānā. Where the two sources would appear to utilize the same motif, there are substantial differences in the way these motifs are framed. These differences are sometimes so significant as to suggest that the motifs might not, in fact, be comparable at all.” Klar 2020: 134. Cf. Zadeh 2015: 333.
9. For instance, Klar dismisses the relationship between the fetid waters in the Neṣḥānā and the boiling water in the Qurʾān on the basis of the argument that the Arabic term ḥāmiya does not exactly translate the Syriac sryʾ (Klar 2020: 135).
10. Tesei 2013–2014.
11. Note that Syriac language does not distinguish between bronze and brass. Consequently, the Arab term qiṭr (“brass”) in Q 18:96 appears as an exact translation of the Syriac word nḥšʾ (“bronze/brass”).
12. Zadeh 2015: 333.

Appendix 1

1. For a possible explanation for the curious image of the knotters of crowns, see Bohas 2009: 25–6, n.47.
2. Here I follow Bohas’s understanding of the words pryqyws and prglʾ as corruptions of the Greek terms patríkios and fulakai (Bohas 2009: 26, n.48). The word ܦܪܝܩܝܘܣ (pryqyws), in particular, appears to be a misspelling ܦܛܪܝܩܝܘܣ (pṭryqyws), that is, πατρίκιος (patríkios).
3. Literally “they reach nothing.” I prefer to literally translate mṭyn l-mdm rather than glossing mṭyn into myṭyn as suggested by Budge (1889: 256, n.2).
4. Curiously, the author uses the two toponyms, Mṣryn and ʾgbṭwṣ, to designate Egypt.
5. Van Bladel suggests a different interpretation of this passage, according to which it is Alexander, and not the Sun, to prostrate in front of God and to travel along the cosmic path (van Bladel 2007a: 198, n.12).
6. The expression “the four winds of heaven” is reminiscent of Daniel 7:2: “I, Daniel, saw in my vision by night the four winds of heaven stirring up the great sea.” The Peshitta displays the same formula ʾrbʿ rwḥy šmyʾ that occurs in the Neṣḥānā.
7. On the name ʾḥšwrḥ see at the end of Chapter 5.
8. Budge does not translate the words ܘܗܘܢ ܟܕ ܗܘ ܗܢ (Budge 1889: 150, text p. 263). Bohas opts for what he defines as a “traduction conjecturale”: “telle que nous la voyons devant nous” (2009: 33). I prefer to leave the sentence untranslated, as the meaning is unclear.
9. As Budge of observes, one would expect to find the feminine, rather than the masculine, forms of the verbs here (1889: 263, n.11).
10. Budge notices that the verb rhṭyn is strange in this context and proposes to emend it with d-npqyn (“that come out”) (1889: 264, n.1).
11. Ut supra.

12. Here I accept Budge's suggestion to read brytʾ as b-brytʾ (Budge 1889: 264, n.3). See also Bohas 2009: 34, n.71.
13. Budge translates the prwyʾ word as "maces," and compares it to the term prwnʾ which appears in the Chronicle of Joshua the Stylite (1889: 264, n.4). Prwnʾ is the word that appears at v. 277 of Pseudo-Ephrem's homily, which reproduces the passage in the Neṣḥānā almost ad litteram (see Beck 1972: 66). Noticeably one of the manuscripts used by Beck reports the same reading prwyʾ that is found in the Neṣḥānā). Prwnʾ also poses interpretation problems, however. Several emendations have been proposed: qrwnʾ ("clubs"), pdwʾʿ ("axes"), krwkʾ ("lassoes"). For these various emendations see Trombley and Watt 2000: 81, n.387. Trombley and Watt translate the word as "thongs" (ibid.). Bohas seems to follow a similar reading and translates prwyʾ in the Neṣḥānā as "rênes" ("reins") (2009: 34). It is possible that the form prwyʾ in the Neṣḥānā is a distortion of one of these words provoked by assimilation with the personal name prwyʾ that appears in the Peshitta on Nemeiah 7:57.
14. As Budge observes, some words must be missing here in the text (1889: 264, n.2). However, as Bohas notices, it is possible to recover the missing words from the homily of Ps.-Ephrem, who almost literally reproduces the same passage found in the Neṣḥānā (2009: 34, n.73). The words I indicate in brackets come from John C. Reeves's translation of Ps.-Ephrem's homily (I thank Reeves for sharing with me this unpublished translation of the text).
15. The Bēṯ ʾmrdt mentioned in the Neṣḥānā corresponds to the ʾmzrtʾ (the Pygmies) which are mentioned together with the Dog-Men in the Geographical appendix in Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor's Ecclesiastical History (XII.10) (on which see Greatrex et al. 2011: 451).
16. Probably the name of a snake (the term ʾšwpʾ, meaning snake charmer).
17. As Bohas suggests, the word swkrʾ ("bolt") should be probably replaced here with mwklʾ ("bar") (2009: 37, n.80).
18. Lit. "which was trampled with bars."
19. The text here is not completely clear. In my interpretation, I follow Bohas's suggestions (Bohas 2009: 37, nn.82–83).
20. Budge suggests reading brmdyʾ as byrtʾ (1889: 268, n.3). In this case the reference in the Neṣḥānā would be to Esther 1:2, where the same expression šwšn byrtʾ ("the citadel of Susa") appears. Bohas translates brmdyʾ as "en Médie," that is, "in Media" (2009: 37). I prefer to leave the word untranslated.
21. The term b'rmgsṭ' is problematic. Budge does not translate the word (1889: 154). Bohas (following a suggestion by Reinink) understands it as a corruption of the late Latin arcuballista and translates it as "arbalètes" (2009: 37, n.85). The same possible reading is reported by Czeglédy (1957: 244). I prefer to leave the term untranslated.
22. The problems with interpreting hwyʾ (ܗܘܝܐ) and this sentence in general is analyzed in Chapter 3.
23. The verb ndyl is reminiscent of Jeremiah 50:9: "For I am going to stir up (mdyl) and bring against Babylon a company of great nations from the land of the north."
24. The text reads "and the kingdoms" (Budge 1889: 269).
25. This is an exact quotation from the Peshitta translation of Jeremiah 1:14.
26. Budge notes that some words seem to be missing here (1889: 271, n.4; 155, n.2). See my analysis of this passage in Chapter 1.
27. That is, one million, one hundred thirty thousand.
28. In Budge's edition bsmʾ is misspelled as bsbʾ (1889: 273).
29. As explained in Chapter 5, I privilege the reading d-npšk over d-npšh.
30. I follow Bohas's suggestion and read ʾyn as ʾyk (2009: 42, n.99).

Appendix 2

1. Talbert 2000: Map 87 (Pontus-Phasis), C4.
2. Ibid.: Map 89 (Armenia), C2.
3. Ibid.: Map 64 (Caesarea-Melitene) G2.
4. Ibid.: Map 64 (Caesarea-Melitene) G2.
5. Ibid.: Map 89 (Armenia), C2.
6. Ibid.: Map 89 (Armenia), D2.

Bibliography

Adontz, Nicholas, 1970, Armenia in the Period of Justinian, The Political Conditions Based on the Naxarar System. Translated with Partial Revisions by Nina Garsoïan, Lisbon: Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation.

Alexander, Paul J., 1964, "Historiens byzantins et croyances eschatologiques," in Actes du XIIe Congrès international d'études byzantines, Ochride 10–16 septembre 1961, Belgrade: Comité yougoslav des études byzantines, 1–8.

Amitay, Ory, 2010, From Alexander to Jesus, Berkeley: University of California Press.

Anastasiades, Aristodemos, 2009, "Two Ptolemaic Queens and Cyprus: Iconographic issues," in Cahiers du Centre d'Etudes Chypriotes 39, Actes du colloque « Chypre à l'époque hellénistique et impériale », Recherches récentes et nouvelles découvertes, Université Paris Ouest-Nanterre et Institut National d'Histoire de l'Art Nanterre – Paris 25–26 septembre, 259–270.

Anderson, Andrew R., 1927, "Alexander's Horns," Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 58, 100–22.

Anderson, Andrew R., 1928, "Alexander at the Caspian Gates," Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 59, 130–63.

Anderson, Andrew R., 1932, Alexander's Gate, Gog and Magog, and the Inclosed Nations, Cambridge, MA: Medieval Academy of America.

Archer, Gleason L. (trans.), 1958, Jerome's Commentary on Daniel, Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House.

Assemani, Giuseppe Simone (ed.), 1743, Ephraem Syri Opera Omnia, Syriace et Latine 3, Rome: Typographia Pontificia Vaticana.

Baharal, Dora, 1994, "Caracalla and Alexander the Great: A Reappraisal," in C. Deroux (ed.), Studies in Latin Literature and Roman History VII, Collection Latomus 227, Brussels: Latomus, 524–567.

Bandy, Anastasius C. (ed. and trans.), 1983, John Lydus, De Magistratibus Populi Romani, Philadelphia: American Philosophical Society.

Barry, Phillips, "Alexander's Gate, Gog and Magog, and the Inclosed Nations by A. R. Anderson," Speculum 8.2, 264–270.

Beatrice, Pier Franco, 1993, "Pagans and Christians on the Book of Daniel," Studia Patristica 25, 27–45.

Beck, Edmund (ed.), 1972, Des heiligen Ephraem des Syrers Sermones III, CSCO 320, Leuven: Secrétariat du Corpus SCO.

Bedjan, Paul (ed.), 1905–1910, Homiliae Selectae Mar-Jacobi Sarugensis, Paris-Leipzig: Otto Harrassowitz.

Bergmeier, Armin, 2020, "Volatile Images: The Empty Throne and Its Place in the Byzantine Last Judgment Iconography," in V. Wieser, V. Eltschinger, and J. Heiss (eds.), Cultures of Eschatology: Volume 1: Empires and Scriptural Authorities in Medieval Christian, Islamic and Buddhist Communities, Berlin: De Gruyter, 84–122.

Berti, Vittorio, 2017, "Mar Aba the Great on Exodus: Fragments from the Commentary of Ishoʿdad of Merv and the Christian Topography of Cosmas Indicopleustes," Cristianesimo nella storia 38, 27–50.

Bíró, Margit, 1997, "On the Presence of the Huns in the Caucasus," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 50, 53–60.

Blockley, Roger C., 1985a, "Subsidies and Diplomacy: Rome and Persia in Late Antiquity," Phoenix 39, 62–74.

Blockley, Roger C., (trans.), 1985b, The History of Menander the Guardsman, Liverpool: Francis Cairns.

Blockley, Roger C., 1992, East Roman Foreign Policy. Formation and Conduct from Diocletian to Anastasius, ARCA 30, Leeds: Francis Cairns.

Bohas, Georges, 2009, Alexandre syriaque, Lyon: ILOAM.

Bonura, Christopher J., 2013, "Did Heraclius Know the Legend of the Last Roman Emperor?" Studia Patristica 62, 503–14.

Bonura, Christopher J., 2016, "When Did the Legend of the Last Emperor Originate? A New Look at the Textual Relationship between the Apocalypse of Pseudo-Methodius and the Tiburtine Sibyl," Viator 47.3, 47–100.

Bonura, Christopher J., 2019, The Roman Empire of the Apocalypse: History, Eschatology, and the Four Kingdoms of Daniel in Late Antiquity, the Early Medieval Middle East, and Byzantium, PhD Diss., University of California, Berkeley.

Bonura, Christopher J., 2021, "Eusebius of Caesarea, the Roman Empire, and the Fulfillment of Biblical Prophecy: Reassessing Byzantine Imperial Eschatology in the Age of Constantine?" Church History 90.3, 509–36.

Bonura, Christopher J., forthcoming, The Apocalypse of Pseudo-Methodius of Patara: Empire, Eschatology, and Political Theology from Late Antique Mesopotamia to the European Imagination (provisional title).

Bousset, Wilhelm, 1899, "Beiträge zur Geschichte der Eschatologie I," Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 20, 103–31.

Boustan, Ra'anan S., 2008, "The Spoils of the Jerusalem Temple at Rome and Constantinople: Jewish Counter-Geography in a Christianizing Empire," in G. Gardner and K. Osterloh (eds.), Antiquity in Antiquity: Jewish and Christian Pasts in the Greco-Roman World, Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 327–72.

Boustan, Ra'anan S., 2013, "Israelite Kingship, Christian Rome, and the Jewish Imperial Imagination: Midrashic Precursors to the Medieval 'Throne of Solomon,'" in N. B. Dohrmann and A. Y. Reed (eds.), Jews, Christians, and the Roman Empire: The Poetics of Power in Late Antiquity, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 167–82.

Braude, William G. (trans.), 2002, Pĕsiḳta dĕ-Rab̲ Kahăna: R. Kahana's Compilation of Discourses for Sabbaths and Festal Days, Philadephia: Jewish Publication Society.

Braund, David, 1994, Georgia in Antiquity: A History of Colchis and Transcaucasian Iberia 550 BC–AD 562, Oxford: Clarendon Press.

Brock, Sebastian P., 1982, "Christians in the Sasanian Empire: A Case of Divided Loyalties," Studies in Church History 18, 1–19.

Brock, Sebastian P., 1997, A Brief Outline of Syriac Literature, Kottayam: St. Ephrem Ecumenical Research Institute.

Brooks, E. W. (ed. and trans.), 1923–1926, John of Ephesus: Lives of the Eastern Saints, 3 vols., Patrologia Orientalis 17–19, Paris: Firmin-Didot.

Bruhl, Adrien, 1930, "Le souvenir d'Alexandre le Grand et les Romains," Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire 47.1–5, 202–21.

Buck, Christopher, 1996, "How Persian Was Persian Christianity?" Journal of the Assyrian Academic Society 10.1, 54–95.

Budge, Ernest A. Wallis (ed. and trans.), 1889, The History of Alexander the Great, Being the Syriac Version of the Pseudo-Callisthenes, Cambridge: The University Press.

Cameron, Alan, 1977, "Some Prefects Called Julian," Byzantion 47, 42–64.

Canepa, Matthew P., 2009, The Two Eyes of the Earth: Art and Ritual of Kingship between Rome and Sasanian Iran, Transformation of the Classical Heritage 45, Berkeley: University of California Press.

Canepa, Matthew P., 2018, Iranian Expanse: Transforming Royal Identity through Architecture, Landscape, and the Built Environment, 550 BCE–642 CE, Berkeley: University of California Press.

Cereti, Carlo G., 1995, The Zand Ī Wahman Yasn: A Zoroastrian apocalypse, Serie Orientale Roma LXXV, Rome: IsMEO.

Chabot, Jean-Baptiste (ed.), 1902, Synodicon Orientale ou Recueil de synodes nestoriens, Paris: Librairie C. Klincksieck.

Chesnut, Glenn F., 1986, The First Christian Histories: Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Evagrius, Macon, GA: Mercer University Press.

Ciancaglini, Claudia A., 2001, "The Syriac Version of the Alexander Romance," Le Muséon 114, 122–123.

Ciancaglini, Claudia A., 2008, Iranian Loanwords in Syriac, Beiträge zur Iranistik, Band 28, Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag.

Collins, Andrew, 2014, "Alexander's Visit to Siwah: A New Analysis," Phoenix 60.1–2, 62–77.

Constantinou, Eugenia Scarvelis (trans.), 2011, Commentary on the Apocalypse, Washington, DC: Catholic University of American Press.

Czeglédy, Károly, 1955, "Monographs on Syriac and Muhammadan Sources in the Literary Remains of M. Kmoskó," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 4, 19–90.

Czeglédy, Károly, 1957, "The Syriac Legend Concerning Alexander the Great," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 7, 231–49.

Dalton, Ormonde M., 1901, Catalogue of Early Christian Antiquities and Objects from the Christian East in the Department of British and Medieval Antiquities and Ethnography of the British Museum, London: Trustees of the Museum.

Daryaee, Touraj, 2015, "Alexander and the Arsacids in the Manuscript MU29," Dabir 1.1, 8–10.

Debié, Muriel, 2008, "Suivre l'étoile à Oxford, inédits sur la venue des Mages," in G. A. Kiraz (ed.), Malphono w-Rabo d-Malphone: Studies in Honor of Sebastian P. Brock, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press, 111–33.

Dennis, George T., 2001, "Defenders of the Christian People: Holy War in Byzantium," in A. E. Laiou and R. P. Mottahedeh (eds.), The Crusades from the Perspective of Byzantium and the Muslim World, Washington, DC: Dumbarton Oaks, 34–5.

Depuydt, Leo, 2006, "Classical Syriac Manuscripts at Yale University: A Checklist," Hugoye: Journal of Syriac Studies 9.2, 173–88.

Dewing, Henry B. (ed. and trans.), 1914–1940, Procopius / with an English translation by H. B. Dewing, London: W. Heinemann; New York: Putnam's Sons.

Di Branco, Marco, 2011, Alessandro Magno: Eroe arabo nel Medioevo, Rome: Salerno Editrice.

Digeser, Elizabeth D., 2014, "Persecution and the Art of Writing between the Lines: De vita beata, Lactantius, and the Great Persecution," Revue belge de philologie et d'histoire 92.1, 167–85.

DiTommaso, Lorenzo, 2005, The Book of Daniel and the Apocryphal Daniel Literature, SVTP 20, Leiden: Brill.

DiTommaso, Lorenzo, 2014, "The Armenian Seventh Vision of Daniel and the Historical Apocalyptica of Late Antiquity," in K. B. Bardakjian and S. La Porta (eds.), The Armenian Apocalyptic Tradition: A Comparative Perspective. Essays Presented in Honor of Professor Robert W. Thomson on the Occasion of His Eightieth Birthday, Leiden; Boston: Brill, 126–48.

Djurslev, Christian T., 2018, "Revisiting Alexander's Gates against 'Gog and Magog': Observations on the Testimonies before the Alexander Romance Tradition," in R. Stoneman, K. Nawotka, and A. Wojciechowska (eds.), The Alexander Romance: History and Literature, Ancient Narrative Supplementum 25, Groningen: Groningen University Library, 201–14.

Djurslev, Christian T., 2020, Alexander the Great in the Early Christian Tradition: Classical Reception and Patristic Literature, London; New York: Bloomsbury Academic.

Dmitriev, Vladimir, 2017, “Ram’s Horns as a Religious Element of Sasanian Kings’ Military Equipment (notes to Amm. Marc. XIX.1.3),” in K. Maksymiuk and G. Karamian Crowns (eds.), Hats, Turbans and Helmets: The Headgear in Iranian History: Volume I: Pre-Islamic Period, Siedlce-Tehran: Institute of History and International Relations, Faculty of Humanities, 113–20.

Efthymiadis, Stephanos, 2010, “A Historian and His Tragic Hero: A Literary Reading of Theophylaktos Simokattes’ Ecumenical History,” in R. Macrides (ed.), History as Literature in Byzantium, Farnham, UK: Ashgate, 169–85.

Eshel, Shay, 2018, The Concept of the Elect Nation in Byzantium, Leiden; Boston: Brill.

Ettinghausen, Richard, 1972, From Byzantium to Sasanian Iran and the Islamic World: Three Modes of Artistic Influence, The L. A. Mayer Memorial Studies in Islamic Art and Archaeology 3, Leiden: Brill.

Facella, Margherita, 2005, “Φιλορώμαιος καὶ Φιλέλλην: Roman Perceptions of Commagenian Royalty,” in R. Fowler and O. Hekster (eds.), Imaginary Kings: Royal Images in the Ancient Near East, Greece and Rome, Stuttgart: Steiner Verlag, 87–103.

Feissel, Denis, 2000, “Les édifices de Justinien au témoignage de Procope et de l’épigraphie,” Antiquité tardive 8, 81–104.

Frendo, David, 1997, “The Religious Factor in Byzantine-Iranian Relations,” Bulletin of the Asia Institute, New Series 11, 105–22.

Frendo, David, 2002, “Cassius Dio and Herodian on the First Sasanian Offensive against the Eastern Provinces of the Roman Empire (229–232),” Bulletin of the Asia Institute 16, 25–36.

Frendo, David, (trans.), 2011, Agathias: The Histories, Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae—Series Berolinensis 2, Berlin: De Gruyter, 2nd edition.

Friedländer, Israel, 1913, Die Chadhirlegende und der Alexanderroman. Eine sagengeschichtliche und literarhistorische Untersuchung, Leipzig: B. G. Tuebner.

Fulinska, Agnieszka, 2012, “Oriental Imagery and Alexander’s Legend in Art: Reconnaissance,” in R. Stoneman, K. Erickson, and I. Netton (eds.), The Alexander Romance in Persia and the East, Ancient Narrative 15, Groningen: Barkhuis Publishing and Groningen University Library, 383–404.

Gariboldi, Andrea, 2016, “The Birth of the Sasanian Monarchy in Western Sources,” in V. Sarkhosh Curtis, E. J. Pendleton, M. Alram, and T. Daryaee (eds.), The Parthian and Early Sasanian Empires: Adaptation and Expansion. Proceedings of a Conference held in Vienna, 14–16 June 2012. Oxford; Philadelphia: Oxbow, 47–52.

Gignoux, Philippe, 1986, Noms propres sassanides en moyen-perse epigraphique, Iranisches Personennamenbuch, Vienna: Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften.

Gignoux, Philippe, 2007, “La demonisation d’Alexandre le Grand d’apres la literature pehlevie,” in M. Macuch, M. Maggi, and W. Sundermann (eds.), Iranian Languages and Texts from Iran and Turan, Wiesbanden: Otto Harrassowitz Verlag, 87–97.

Golden, Peter B., 1980, Khazar Studies: An Historico-Philological Inquiry into the Origins of the Khazars, Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó.

Goldstein, Jonathan A., 1992, An Introduction to the History of the Turkic Peoples, Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz Verlag.

Goldstein, Jonathan A., 1993, “Alexander and the Jews,” Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research 59, 59–101.

Greatrex, Geoffrey, and Samuel N. C. Lieu (eds.), 2002, The Roman Eastern Frontier and the Persian Wars. Part II: AD 363–630. A Narrative Sourcebook, London; New York: Routledge.

Greatrex, Geoffrey, Robert R. Phenix, and Cornelia B. Horn (trans.), 2011, The Chronicle of Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor: Church and War in Late Antiquity Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor, Translated Texts for Historians 55, Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.

Green, Peter, 1978, "Caesar and Alexander. Aemulatio, Imitatio, Comparatio," American Journal of Ancient History 3.1, 1–26.
Greenwood, Tim (trans.), 2017a, The Universal History of Step'anos Tarōnec'i: Introduction, Translation, and Commentary (Oxford Studies in Byzantium), Oxford: Oxford University Press.
Greenwood, Tim, 2017b, "A Contested Jurisdiction: Armenia in Late Antiquity," in E. W. Sauer (ed.), Sasanian Persia: Between Rome and the Steppes of Eurasia, Edinburgh Studies in Ancient Persia, Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 199–220.
Greisiger, Lutz, 2014, Messias, Endkaiser, Antichrist: Politische Apokalyptik unter Juden und Christen des Nahen Ostens am Vorabend der arabischen Eroberung. Orientalia Biblica et Christiana 21, Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz Verlag.
Greisiger, Lutz, 2016, "The Opening of the Gates of the North in 627: War, Anti-Byzantine Sentiment and Apocalyptic Expectancy in the Near East Prior to the Arab Invasion," in W. Brandes, F. Schmieder, and R. Voß (eds.), Peoples of the Apocalypse: Eschatological Beliefs and Political Scenarios, Berlin: De Gruyter, 63–79.
Greisiger, Lutz, 2017, "The End is Coming—To What End? Millenarian Expectations in the Seventh-Century Eastern Mediterranean," in H. Amirav, E. Grypeou, and G. Stroumsa (eds.), Apocalypticism and Eschatology in Late Antiquity: Encounters in the Abrahamic Religions, 6th–8th Centuries, Leuven: Peeters, 87–106.
Gruen, Erich S., 1998, "Rome and the Myth of Alexander," in T. W. Hillard, R. A. Kearsley, C. E. V. Nixon, and A. M. Nobbs (eds.), Ancient Historiography in a Modern University: Volume I: The Ancient Near East, Greece, and Rome, Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 178–91.
Guillaumont, Antoine, 1969, "Justinien et l'église de Perse," Dumbarton Oaks Papers 23.4, 39–66.
Harrak, Amir (ed. and trans.), 2017, The Chronicle of Zuqnin, Parts I and II: From Creation to the Year 506/7 AD, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press.
Harmatta, János, 1996, "The Wall of Alexander the Great and the Limes Sasanicus," Bulletin of the Asia Institute, New Series 10, Studies in Honor of Vladimir A. Livshits, 79–84.
Henkelman, Wouter, 2010, "Beware of Dim Cooks and Cunning Snakes: Gilgameš, Alexander, and the Loss of Immortality," in R. Rollinger, B. Gufler, M. Lang, and I. Madreiter (eds.), Interkulturalität in der Alten Welt: Vorderasien, Hellas, Ägypten und die vielfältigen Ebenen des Kontakts, Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz Verlag, 323–60.
Henze, Matthias (ed. and trans.), 2001, The Syriac Apocalypse of Daniel: Introduction, Text and Commentary, Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck.
Hewsen, Robert H., 1992, The Geography of Ananias of Širak (Ašxarhac'oyc'): The Long and Short Recensions, Wiesbaden: L. Reichert Verlag.
Hewsen, Robert H., 2001, Armenia: A Historical Atlas, Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
Hill, Robert C. (trans.), 2006, Theodoret: Commentary on Daniel, Atlanta, GA: Society of Biblical Literature.
Horovitz, Josef, 1926, Koranische Untersuchungen, Berlin; Leipzig.
Howard-Johnston, James, 1999, "Heraclius' Persian Campaigns and the Revival of the East Roman Empire, 622–630," War in History 6, 1–44.
Howard-Johnston, James, 2010, Witnesses to a World Crisis: Historians and Histories of the Middle East in the Seventh Century, Oxford: Oxford University Press.
Howard-Johnston, James, 2021, The Last Great War of Antiquity, Oxford: Oxford University Press.
Hunnius, Carl, 1904, Das syrische Alexanderlied (Phil. Diss.), Göttingen.
Huyse, Philip, 2002, "La revendication de territoires achéménides par les Sassanides: Une réalité historique," Cahiers de Studia Iranica 25, 297–311.
Jeffreys, Elizabeth, Michael Jeffreys, and Roger Scott (trans.), 1986, The Chronicle of John Malalas, Byzantina Australiensia 4, Leiden: Brill.
Jouanno, Corinne, 2002, Naissance et métamorphoses du Roman d'Alexandre: Domaine grec, CNRS Editions, Paris.

Jullien, Christelle, 2009, "Christianiser le pouvoir: Images de rois sassanides dans la tradition syro-orientale," Orientalia Christiana Periodica 75.1, 119–31.

Jullien, Christelle, 2011, "La révolte des chrétiens au Hūzestān (551): Modèles narratifs d'une historiographie," Bulletin of the Asia Institute 25, 107–20.

Kaegi, Walter E., 2003, Heraclius: Emperor of Byzantium, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Kaegi, Walter E., 2012, "The Heraclians and Holy War," in J. Koder and I. Stouraitis (eds.), Byzantine War Ideology between Roman Imperial Concept and Christian Religion. Akten des Internationalen Symposiums (Wien, 19.-21. Mai 2011), Denkschriften der philosophisch-historischen Klasse, 452, Vienna: Veröffentlichungen zur Byzanzforschung, 17–26.

Kampers, Franz, 1901, Alexander der Grosse und die Idee des Weltimperiums in Prophetie und Sage, Freiburg: H. Granert's Studien & C.

Kettenhofen, Eric, 1994, "Darband," Encyclopedia Iranica 7.1, 13–9.

Klar, Marianna, 2020, "Qurʾānic Exempla and Late Antique Narratives," in M. Shah and M. A. S. Abdel Haleem (eds.), The Oxford Handbook of Qurʾānic Studies, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 128–39.

Kolia-Dermitzaki, Athina, 2011, "'Holy War' In Byzantium Twenty Years Later: A Question of Term Definition and Interpretation," in J. Koder and I Stouraitis (eds.), Byzantine War Ideology: Between Roman Imperial Concept and Christian Religion, Wien: Verlag der Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, 121–32.

Kühnen, Angela, 2008, Die imitatio Alexandri in der römischen Politik (1. Jh. v. Chr.–3. Jh. n. Chr.), Münster: Rhema Verlag.

La Porta, Sergio, 2013, "The Seventh Vision of Daniel: A New Translation and Introduction," in R. Bauckham, J. Davila, and A. Panayotov (eds.), Old Testament Pseudepigrapha: More Noncanonical Scriptures, Volume I, Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 410–34.

Laiou, Angeliki, 2006, "The Just War of Eastern Christians and the Holy War of the Crusaders," in R. Sorabji and D. Rodin (eds.), The Ethics of War: Shared Problems in Different Traditions, Aldershot, UK: Ashgate, 33–4.

Lane Fox, Robin J., 1997, "The Itinerary of Alexander: Constantius to Julian," Classical Quarterly 47.1, 250–1.

Lehto, Adam (trans.), 2010, The Demonstrations of Aphrahat, the Persian Sage, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press.

Lewis, Agnes Smith, and F. Crawford Burkitt (eds.), 1900, Select Narratives of Holy Women from the Syro-Antiochene or Sinai Palimpsest as Written above the Old Syriac Gospels by John the Stylite, of Beth-Mari-Qanūn in A.D. 778, Syriac Text, Studia Sinaitica 9, London: C. J. Clay and Sons.

Luther, Andreas, 1997, Die syrische Chronik des Josua Stylites, Berlin; New York: de Gruyter.

Magdalino, Paul, 1993, "The History of the Future and Its Uses: Prophecy, Policy, and Propaganda," in R. Beaton and C. Roueché (eds.), The Making of Byzantine History: Studies Dedicated to Donald M. Nicol, Centre for Hellenic Studies, King's College London, Publications 1, Aldershot, UK: Variorum, 3–32.

Magdalino, Paul, and Richard Nelson, 2010, The Old Testament in Byzantium, Washington, DC: Dumbarton Oaks Research Library and Collection.

Mallory Monaco, Caterine, 2017, "Alexander-Imitators in the Age of Trajan: Plutarch's Demetrius and Pyrrhus," Classical. Journal 112.4, 406–30.

Mango, Cyril A., 1980, Byzantium: The Empire of New Rome, London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson.

Mango, Cyril A., 1986, The Art of the Byzantine Empire 312–1453, Toronto: University of Toronto Press.

Mayerson, Philip, 1993, "A Confusion of Indias: Asian India and African India in the Byzantine Sources," Journal of the American Oriental Society 113.2, 169–74.

Mera, Ștefan, 2014, "Hetimasia's Throne," ANASTASIS Research in Medieval Culture and Art 1, 134–60.

Meissner, Bruno, 1894, Alexander und Gilgamos, Leipzing: Druck von A. Pries.
Mierow, Charles C. (trans.), 1915, The Gothic History of Jordanes, Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
Minov, Sergey, 2014, "Dynamics of Christian Acculturation in the Sasanian Empire: Some Iranian Motifs in the Cave of Treasures," in G. Herman (ed.), Jews, Christians and Zoroastrians: Religious Dynamics in a Sasanian Context, Judaism in Context 17, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press, 149–201.
Minov, Sergey, 2021, Memory and Identity in the Syriac Cave of Treasures: Rewriting the Bible in Sasanian Iran, Jerusalem Studies in Religion and Culture 26, Leiden: Brill.
Möhring, Hannes, 2000, Der Weltkaiser der Endzeit: Entstehung, Wandel und Wirkung einer tausendjährigen Weissagung, Stuttgart: Thorbecke.
Monferrer-Sala, Juan Pedro, 2011, "Alexander the Great in the Syriac Literary Tradition," in Z. D. Zuwiyya (ed.), A Companion to Alexander Literature in the Middle Ages, Leiden: Brill, 41–72.
Monneret de Villard, Ugo, 1952, Le leggende orientali dei Magi Evangelici, Studi e Testi 163, Vatican City: Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana.
Moravcsik, Gyula, 1958, Byzantinoturcica I–II, Sprachreste der Türkvölker in den Byzantinischen Quellen, Deutsche Akademie Der Wissenschaften Zu Berlin, Institut für Griechisch-Römische Altertumskunde, Berlin: Deutsche Akademie Der Wissenschaften Zu Berlin.
Mørkholm, Otto, 1973, "En hellenistisk møntskat fra Bahrain," Kuml 1972, 182–202.
Morrison, Craig E., 2004, "The Reception of the Book of Daniel in Aphrahat's Fifth Demonstration 'On Wars,'" Hugoye: Journal of Syriac Studies 7.1, 55–82.
Murtazali, Gadjiev, 2016, "РАСКОПКИ ДЕРБЕНТСКОГО ПОСЕЛЕНИЯ В 2013 г. (Excavation of Derbent Settlement in 2013)," ВЕСТНИК ИНСТИТУТА ИАЭ 1, 144–73.
Nabel, Jake, 2018, "Alexander between Rome and Persia: Politics, Ideology, and History," in K. Moore (ed.), Brill's Companion to the Reception of Alexander the Great, Leiden: Brill, 197–232.
Nagel, Tilman, 1978, Alexander der Grosse in der frühislamischen Volksliteratur, Beitriige zur Sprach- und Kultur- geschichte des Orients 28, Walldorf-Hessen: Verlag für Orientkunde Dr. H. Vorndran.
Nawotka, Krzysztof, 2017, The Alexander Romance by Ps.-Callisthenes A Historical Commentary, Mnemosyne Supplements Monographs on Greek and Latin Language and Literature 339, Leiden; Boston: Brill.
Newport, Kenneth G. C., 1990, "A Note on the 'Seat of Moses' (Matthew 23:2)," Andrews University Seminary Studies 28.1, 53–8.
Nokandeh, Jebrael, Eberhard Sauer (ES), Hamid Omrani Rekavandi, et al., 2006, "Linear Barriers of Northern Iran: The Great Wall of Gorgan and the Wall of Tammishe," Iran Journal of the British Institute of Persian Studies 44, 121–73.
Nöldeke, Theodor, 1874, "Ueber den syrischen Roman von Kaiser Julian," Zeitschrift der deutsche Morgenland Gesellschaft 28, 271–92.
Nöldeke, Theodor, 1890, "Beiträge zur Geschichte des Alexanderromans", Denkschriften Der Kaiserlichen Akademie Der Wissenschaften in Wien, Philosophisch-Historische Klasse 38, 27–33.
Nöldeke, Theodor, Friedrich Schwally, Gotthelf Bergsträßer, and Otto Pretzl. 2013. The History of the Qurʾān: Texts and Studies on the Qurʾān 8, ed. and trans. Wolfgang H. Behn, Leiden; Boston: Brill.
Olajos, Thérèse, 1988, Les sources de Théophylacte Simocatta historien, Leiden: Brill.
Palmer, Andrew, 1993, The Seventh Century in West-Syrian Chronicles, Translated Texts for Historians 15, Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.
Papoutsakis, Manolis, 2017, Vicarious Kingship: A Theme in Syriac Political Theology in Late Antiquity, Tübingen: Mohr Seibeck.
Payne, Richard, 2013, "Cosmology and the Expansion of the Iranian Empire, 502–628 CE," Past & Present 220, 3–33.

Payne, Richard, 2015, A State of Mixture: Christians, Zoroastrians, and Iranian Political Culture in Late Antiquity, Transformation of the Classical Heritage 56, Oakland: University of California Press.

Payne Smith, Robert (trans.), 1860, The Third Part of the Ecclesiastical History of John, Bishop of Ephesus, Oxford: University Press.

Peltonen, Jaakkojuhani, 2018, "Church Fathers and the Reception of Alexander the Great," in K. Moore (ed.), Brill's Companion to the Reception of Alexander the Great, Leiden: Brill, 477–502.

Perkins, Justin, and Theodore D. Woolsey, 1854, "Notice of a Life of Alexander the Great," Journal of the American Oriental Society 4, 359–440.

Pfister, Friedrich, 1956, A*lexander der Grosse in den Offenbarungen der Griechen, Juden, Mohammedaner und Christen*, Berlin: Akademie-Verlag.

Pfister, Friedrich, 1976, Kleine Schriften zum Alexanderroman, Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie 61, Meisenheim am Glan: Anton Hain Verlag.

Potestà, Gian Luca, 2011, "The Vaticinium of Constans: Genesis and Original Purposes of the Legend of the Last World Emperor," Millennium-Jahrbuch 8, 271–90.

Potts, D. T., 1991, The Pre-Islamic Coinage of Eastern Arabia, Copenhagen: CNI Publications.

Potts, D. T., 2010, "The Circulation of Foreign Coins within Arabia and of Arabian Coins outside the Peninsula in the Pre-Islamic Era," in M. Huth and P. G. van Alfen (eds.), Coinage of the Caravan Kingdoms: Studies in the Monetization of Ancient Arabia, Numismatic Studies 25, New York: American Numismatic Society, 65–82.

Procopiou, Eleni, 2015, "The Excavations at Akrotiri-Katalymata ton Plakoton 2007–2014," in S. Rogge and M. Grünbart (eds.), Medieval Cyprus: A Place of Cultural Encounter, Schriften des Instituts fur Interdisziplinare Zypern-Studien 11, Münster: Waxmann Verlag, 185–218.

Reinink, Gerrit J. (ed. and trans.), 1983, Das syrische Alexanderlied, Die drei Rezensionen, CSCO 454, 455, Script. Syri 195, 196, Leuven: Peeters.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 1985, "Die Entstehung der syrischen Alexanderlegende als politisch-religiöse Propagandaschrift für Heraklios' Kirchenpolitik," in C. Laga, J. A. Munitiz, and L. van Rompay (eds.), After Chalcedon: Studies in Theology and Church History Offered to Professor Albert van Roey for His Seventieth Birthday, Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta 18, Leuven: Departement Oriëtalistik/Peeters, 263–81.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 1992, "Ps.-Methodius: A Concept of History in Response to Islam" in A. Cameron and L. I. Conrad (eds.), The Byzantine and Early Islamic Near East: Problems in the Literary Source Material, Studies in Late Antiquity and Early Islam 1, Princeton, NJ: Darwin Press, 149–87.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 1993a, "Pseudo-Ephraems 'Rede über das Ende' und die syrische eschatologische Literatur des siebten Jahrhundertsm," Aram 5, 437–63.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 1993b, Die Syrische Apokalypse des Pseudo-Methodius, 2 vols., CSCO 540–41, Scriptores Syri 220–21, Leuven: Peeters.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 1999, "Alexandre et le dernier empereur du monde: les développements du concept de la royauté chrétienne dans les sources syriaques du septième siècle," in L. Harf-Lancner, C. Kappler, and F. Suard (eds.), Alexandre le Grand dans les littératures occidentales et proche-orientales, Paris: Centre des Sciences de la Littérature Université Paris X-Nanterre, 149–59.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 2002, "Heraclius the New Alexander: Apocalyptic Prophecies during the Reign of Heraclius," in G. J. Reinink and B. H. Stolte (eds.), The Reign of Heraclius (610–641): Crisis and Confrontation, Groningen Studies in Cultural Change 2, Leuven: Peeters, 81–94.

Reinink, Gerrit J., 2003, "Alexander the Great in Seventh-Century Syriac 'Apocalyptic' Texts," Byzantinorossica 2, 150–78.

Ri, Su-Min (ed. and trans.), 1987, La caverne des trésors: Les deux recensions syriaques, 2 vols. CSCO 486–87, Script. Syri 207–8, Leuven: Peeters.

Rodinson, Maxime, 1968-1969, “Éthiopien et sudarabique,” École pratique des hautes études, IVe section, Sciences historiques et philologiques, Annuaire 1968–1969, 97–118.

Russell, James R., 1985, “Armeno Iranica,” in Papers in Honour of Professor Marcy Boyce, Acta Iranica 25, Homages et opera minora, vol. XI, Leiden: Brill, 447–58.

Sackur, Ernst, 1898, Sibyllinische Texte und Forschungen: Pseudomethodius Adso und Die tiburtinische Sibylle, Halle: M. Niemeyer.

Sauer, Eberhard, Lana Chologauri, and Davit Naskidashvili, 2016, “The Caspian Gates: Exploring the Most Famous Mountain Valley of the Ancient World,” Current World Archaeology 80, 19–24.

Sauer, Eberhard, et al., 2020, Dariali: The “Caspian Gates” in the Caucasus from Antiquity to the Age of the Huns and the Middle Ages. The Joint Georgian-British Dariali Gorge Excavations and Surveys 2013–2016, Vols. 1–2, British Institute of Persian Studies Monograph Series VI, Oxford: Oxbow.

Schreiner, Peter, 1985, Theophylaktos Simokates: Geschichte, Stuttgart: Hiersemann.

Schwartz, Daniel Louis, 2011, “Religious Violence and Eschatology in the Syriac Julian Romance,” Journal of Early Christian Studies 19, 565–87.

Scott, Roger D., 1985, “Malalas, The Secret History, and Justinian’s Propaganda,” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 39, 99–109.

Scott, Roger D., 2012, “Justinian’s New Age and the Second Coming,” in R. Scott, Byzantine Chronicles in the Sixth Century, XIX, Variorum 1004, Farnum, UK: Ashgate, 1–22.

Shayegan, Rahim, 2011, Arsacids and Sasanians: Political Ideology in Post-Hellenistic and Late Antique Persia, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Shayegan, Rahim, 2017, “Persianism: Or Achaemenid Reminiscences in the Iranian and Iranicate World(s) of Antiquity,” in R. Strootman and M. J. Versluys (eds.), Persianism in Antiquity, Oriens et Occidens 25, Stuttgart: Franz Steiner, 401–55.

Shenkar, Michael, 2014, Intangible Spirits and Graven Images: Iconography of Deities in the Pre-Islamic Iranian World, Magical and Religious Literature of Late Antiquity 4, Leiden; Boston: Brill.

Shoemaker, Stephen, 2015, “The Tiburtine Sibyl, the Last Emperor, and the Early Byzantine Apocalyptic Tradition,” in T. Burke (ed.), Forbidden Texts on the Western Frontier: The Christian Apocrypha in North American Perspectives, Eugene, OR: Cascade Books, 218–44.

Shoemaker, Stephen, 2016, “The Afterlife of the Apocalypse of John in Byzantium,” in D. Krueger and R. Nelson (eds.), The New Testament in Byzantium, Washington, DC: Dumbarton Oaks Research Library, 301–16.

Shoemaker, Stephen, 2018, The Apocalypse of Empire: Imperial Eschatology in Late Antiquity and Early Islam, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.

Shoemaker, Stephen, forthcoming, “Constantine and the Birth of Medieval Apocalypticism: Imperial Eschatology in Eusebius, Lactantius, Ephrem, Aphrahat, and the Tiburtine Sybil,” in J. Rubenstein and R. Bast (eds.), Apocalyptic Cultures in Medieval and Renaissance Europe, Interdisciplinary Studies in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. Publications of the Marco Institute (ISMAR) 3, Turnhout: Brepols.

Sivertsev, Alexei, 2011, Judaism and Imperial Ideology in Late Antiquity, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Smith, Rowland, 2011, “The Casting of Julian the Apostate ‘in the Likeness’ of Alexander the Great: A Topos in Antique Historiography and its Modern Echoes,” Histos 5, 44–106.

Sokoloff, Michael (ed. and trans.), 2017, The Julian Romance: A New English Translation, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press.

Stevenson, Kenneth, Michael Glerup, and Thomas C. Oden (eds.), 2008, Ezekiel, Daniel, Ancient Christian Commentary on Scripture, Old Testament 13, Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity.

Stewart, Andrew, 1993, Faces of Power: Alexander’s Image and Hellenistic Politics, Berkeley; Los Angeles; Oxford: University of California Press.

Stewart, Charles A., 2018, "A Byzantine Image of Alexander: Literature in Stone," in Report of the Department of Antiquities Cyprus 2017, Nicosia: Government Publications, 1–45.

Stone, Michael E., 2012, "The Names of the Rivers," in Aren M. Maeir (ed.), "Go out and study the land" (Judges 18:2): Archaeological, Historical and Textual Studies in Honor of Hanan Eshel, Leiden; Boston: Brill, 245–56.

Stouraitis, Ioannis, 2012, "'Just War' and 'Holy War' in the Middle Ages: Rethinking Theory through the Byzantine Case-Study," Jahrbuch der Österreichischen Byzantinistik 62, 227–64.

Stoyanov, Yuri, 2011, Defenders and Enemies of the True Cross: The Sasanian Conquest of Jerusalem in 614 and Byzantine Ideology of Anti-Persian Warfare, Veroefentlichungen zur Iranistik 61, Vienna: Verlag der Oesterreichichen Akademie der Wissenschaften.

Strack, H.L., and Giinter Sternberger, 1996, Introduction to the Talmud and Midrash, Minneapolis: Fortress Press.

Talbert, Richard J. (ed.), 2000, The Barrington Atlas of the Greek and Roman World, Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.

Tannous, Jack, 2018, "Romanness in the Syriac East," in W. Pohl, C. Gantner, C. Grifoni, and M. Pollheimer-Mohaupt (eds.), Transformations of Romanness: Early Medieval Regions and Identities, Millennium-Studien 71, Berlin: De Gruyter, 457–79.

Taylor, Richard A., 1994, The Peshiṭta of Daniel, Monographs of the Peshitta Institute, Leiden 7, Leiden: Brill.

Tesei, Tommaso, 2010, "Survival and Christianization of the Gilgamesh Quest for Immortality in the Tale of Alexander and the Fountain of Life," Rivista degli Studi Orientali 83, 415–38.

Tesei, Tommaso, 2013–2014, "The Prophecy of Ḏū-l-Qarnayn (Q 18:83–102) and the Origins of the Qurʾānic Corpus," Miscellanea Arabica 5, 273–90.

Tesei, Tommaso, 2015, "Some Cosmological Notions from Late Antiquity in Q 18:60–65: The Qurʾān in Light of Its Cultural Context," Journal of the American Oriental Society 135.1, 19–32.

Tesei, Tommaso, 2018, "The Romans Will Win! A Qurʾānic Prophecy (Q 30:2–7) in Light of 7th c. Political Eschatology," Der Islam 95.1, 1–29.

Thielman, Frank, 1987, "Another Look at the Eschatology of Eusebius of Caesarea," Vigiliae Christianae 41, 226–37.

Thomson, Robert W. (trans), 1982, Eḷishē, History of Vardan and the Armenian War. By Eḷishē, Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

Thomson, Robert W. (trans.), 1991, Łazar Pʻarpecʻi, The history of Łazar Pʻarpecʻi, Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press.

Thomson, Robert W. (trans.), 1996, Rewriting Caucasian History. The Medieval Armenian Adaptation of the Georgian Chronicles. The original Georgian Texts and the Armenian Adaptation, Oxford Oriental Monographs, Oxford: Clarendon Press.

Traina, Giusto, 1997, "Problemi testuali dello Pseudo-Callistene armeno," in A. Valvo and R. B. Finazzi (eds.), La diffusione dell'eredità classica nell'età tardoantica e medievale: Forme e modi di trasmissioni, Alessandria: Ed. dell'Orso, 233–40.

Traina, Giusto, 2016, "Some Observations on the Armenian Pseudo-Callisthenes," in F. Gazzano, L. Pagani, and G. Traina (eds.), Greek Texts and Armenian Traditions: An Interdisciplinary Approach, Trends in Classics—Supplementary Volumes 39, Berlin; Boston: De Gruyter, 23–30.

Trombley, Frank R., and John W. Watt (trans.), 2000, Chronicle of Pseudo-Joshua the Stylite, Translated Texts for Historians 32, Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.

Ubierna, Pablo, 2012, "Syriac Apocalyptic and the Body Politic," Imago Temporis Medium Aevum 6, 141–64.

van Alfen, Peter G., 2010, "A Die Study of the 'Abiel' Coinage of Eastern Arabia," in M. Huth and P. G. van Alfen (eds.), Coinage of the Caravan Kingdoms: Studies in the Monetization of Ancient Arabia, Numismatic Studies 25, New York: American Numismatic Society, 549–94.

van Bladel, Kevin, 2007a, “The Alexander Legend in the Qurʾān 18:83–102,” in G. S. Reynolds (ed.), The Qurʾān in Its Historical Context, London; New York: Routledge, 175–203.
van Bladel, Kevin, 2007b, “The Syriac Sources of the Early Arabic Narratives of Alexander,” in H. P. Ray (ed.), Memory as History: The Legacy of Alexander in South Asia, New Delhi: Aryan International, 54–75.
van Bladel, Kevin, 2009, The Arabic Hermes: From Pagan Sage to Prophet of Science, Oxford Studies in Late Antiquity, Oxford: Oxford University Press.
van Donzel, Emeri, J., and Andrea B. Schmidt, 2010, Gog and Magog in Early Eastern Christian and Islāmic Sources: Sallam’s Quest for Alexander’s Wall, Leiden: Brill.
van Ginkel, Jan, 1995, John of Ephesus: A Monophysite Historian in Sixth Century Byzantium, PhD Diss., Groningen: Rijksuniversiteit.
Vööbus, Arthur (ed.), 1975–1976, The Synodicon in the West Syrian Tradition. CSCO 367–368, 375–376, Script. Syri 161–164. Leuven: Secrétariat du Corpus SCO.
Weitzmann, Kurt, 1977, Late Antique and Early Christian Book Illumination, New York: George Braziller.
Welch, Kathryn, and Hannah Mitchell, 2013, “Revisiting the Roman Alexander,” Antichthon 47, 80–100.
Weyl Carr, Annemarie, 1991, “Hetoimasia,” in Alexander P. Kazhdan (ed.), The Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 926.
Whitby, Michael, 1988, The Emperor Maurice and His Historian: Theophylact Simocatta on Persian and Balkan Warfare, Oxford: Clarendon Press.
Whitby, Michael, 1998, “Deus Nobiscum: Christianity, Warfare and Morale in Late Antiquity,” Bulletin of the Institute of Classical Studies 42, 191–208.
Whitby, Michael (trans.), 2000, The Ecclesiastical History of Evagrius Scholasticus, Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.
Whitby, Michael, and Mary Whitby (trans.), 1986, The History of Theophylact Simocatta, Oxford: Oxford University Press.
Witakowski, Witold, 1987, The Syriac Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius of Tel-Maḥrē: A Study in the History of Historiography, Uppsala: Almqvist & Wiksell International.
Witakowski, Witold (trans.), 1996, Pseudo-Dionysius of Tel-Mahre. Chronicle (Known also as the Chronicle of Zuqnin). Part III, Translated Texts for Historians 22, Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.
Witakowski, Witold, 2008, “The Magi in Syriac tradition,” in G. A. Kiraz (ed.), Malphono w-Rabo d-Malphone: Studies in Honor of Sebastian P. Brock, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press, 809–43.
Wolohojian, Albert M. (trans.), 1969, The Romance of Alexander the Great Pseudo-Callisthenes. Translated from Armenian with an Introduction by Albert Mugrdich Wolohojian, New York; London: Columbia University Press.
Wolska-Conus, Wanda (ed. and trans.), 1968–1973, Cosmas Indicopleustes, Topographie Chrétienne, 3 vols, Sources chrétiennes 141, 159, and 197, Paris: Les Éditions du Cerf.
Wood, Philip, 2010 ‘We have no King but Christ’: Christian Political Thought in Greater Syria on the Eve of the Arab Conquest (c. 400–585), Oxford: Oxford University Press.
Zadeh, Travis, 2015, “Quranic Studies and the Literary Turn,” Journal of American Oriental Society, 135.2, 329–42.
Zuckerman, Constantine, 2007, “The Khazars and Byzantium: The First Encounter,” in P. B. Golden, H. Ben-Shammai, and A. Róna-Tas (eds.), The World of the Khazars: New Perspectives. Selected Papers from the Jerusalem 1999 International Khazar Colloquium Hosted by the Ben Zvi Institute, Leiden; Boston: Brill, 399–432.

Index

For the benefit of digital users, indexed terms that span two pages (e.g., 52–53) may, on occasion, appear on only one of those pages

Agat‘angełos, 48
Agathias, 61–63, 64, 122, 154
Ahasuerus, 89–90, 147–48, 151, 162, 163
Alexander Romance, 1, 9–10, 46, 60–62, 74, 94, 100, 107, 140, 142–43, 172
Alexander Song. See Ps.–Jacob of Serugh
Ambazuces, 46–47, 54
Ammianus Marcellinus, 130, 151–52
Ammon, 5–6, 138–41, 142–43, 150–51
Anastasius I (r. 491–518), 46–47, 49, 50–51, 53, 54, 55
Andrew of Caesarea, 16, 26–27
Anōshazād, 134–35, 152–53
Anthology of Planudes, 96–97, 153–54, 196n.32
Antiochus I of Commagene (r. 70–38 bce), 149–50
Antiochus IV Epiphanes (r. 175–164 bce), 106–7, 145
Aphrahat, 5, 87–88, 107–8, 109, 110–13, 114–15, 116, 123, 124–25, 126–28, 129, 132–33, 134–36, 146–47, 152, 153, 165, 168–69
Apocalypse of Daniel, 163–64
Apocalypse of Ps.–Methodius. See Ps.–Methodius
Ardashir I (r. 224–242), 48, 88, 90, 151–52
Ardashir III (r. September 628–April 630), 77–78

Bahrām Chōbin, 84, 95
Belabitene, 19–20, 41–42
Bohas, G 1, 34–35, 89, 145
Boran (r. June 631–June 632), 77–79
Budge, E A Wallis 1, 9, 24, 34–35, 74–75, 76, 89

Caracalla (r. 211–217), 93
Caspian Gates, 3–4, 13–14, 20, 43, 45, 46–47, 48–52, 54–59, 61–62, 65–67, 68, 79–80, 82, 119, 168
Cassius Dio, 151–52
Cave of Treasures, 88, 131–32, 160
Chronicle of Zuqnin. See Ps.–Dionysius
Cicero, 150
Clemens of Alexandria, 139–40, 141
Constans II (r. 641–668), 157
Constantine I (r. 306–337), 70, 106, 107–8, 109, 122–23, 124, 126–27, 150
Cosmas Indicopleustes, 128–31, 132–36

Cyril of Jerusalem, 125–26, 150–51
Cyrillona, 118
Cyrus the Great (r. 559–530 bce), 94–95, 96, 147–51, 152–55, 162–64
Czeglédy, K 22, 23–24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 59, 68–69, 75–76

Darband, 28, 35–36, 41–42, 44, 47–48, 67
Dariali pass, 13, 14–15, 40, 45–48, 49–50, 54, 55–56
Darius I the Great (r. 522–486 bce), 147
Darius II (r. 423–404/5 bce), 147
Darius III (r. 336–330 bce), 74, 89–90, 108, 109, 147–48, 153
Darius the Mede, 89–90, 110, 111, 147–48, 151, 194n.80
Diodorus Siculus, 60–61
Ḏū–l–Qarnayn, 1–3, 171–72, 199n.42, 206n.7
Dura–Europos, 162, 163, 165–66

Ełishe, 47–48
Ephippus of Olynthus, 138
Ephrem the Syrian, 23, 124, 146–47
Esther Rabbah, 162–63
Eusebius of Caesarea, 106, 124, 126, 150
Evagrius Scholasticus, 17–19, 20, 71

Galerius (r. 305–311), 106
George of Pisidia, 79, 91
Glom/Glones, 42
Gog and Magog, 1–2, 11, 13, 15–17, 21, 24–25, 26–27, 31–33, 37, 40–41, 42–44, 67, 114–15, 117–19, 149, 156, 164, 170–72
Greisiger, L 1, 28, 35–38, 87, 91
Gubazes II (r. ca. 541–555), 62–63, 64

Harmatta, J 47, 88–89
Heraclius (r. 610–641), 1, 2, 3, 4, 22–23, 27–29, 31–32, 33–34, 35–38, 41–42, 43–44, 59, 68–70, 71–72, 75, 77–80, 82–83, 84–88, 91–93, 95, 121–23, 157–58, 166, 170
Herodian, 151–52
Herodotus, 60–61
Hetoimasia, 165–66
Hormizd IV (r. 579–590), 131–32

Jacob of Serugh, 1, 15, 21, 22, 160, 170
Jerome, 16, 118, 125–26, 146–49, 150
John Chrysostom, 125–26, 146–47
John of Ephesus, 17–19, 25–27, 43, 80–81
John Lydus, 45–46, 49, 50, 55–57, 58–59
John Malalas, 20, 43, 53–54, 56–57, 58–59, 110–12, 113, 114–15, 148
Jordanes, 13–14, 16, 43, 61–62, 66–67
Josephus, 13, 16, 113–14, 118, 147–48
Jovian (r. 363–364), 4–5, 55, 81–82, 83, 88, 100–1, 105, 114–15, 127, 158–59, 160, 166
Julian (r. 361–363), 55, 81–82, 88, 93, 95, 100–1, 106, 127, 130, 158–60
Julian Romance, 4–5, 81–82, 83, 88, 100–1, 105, 114–15, 158–60, 166, 169–70
Justinian I (r. 527–565), 2, 3–5, 19, 42, 43, 44, 51–52, 53, 56–57, 58–59, 62–63, 64–65, 68–69, 70, 80–81, 82–83, 93–97, 98–101, 122, 128, 129–31, 132–33, 149–50, 153–55, 168, 169–70

Kavadh I (r. 488–496, 498–531), 42, 46–48, 49–51, 52, 55–57, 127
Kavadh II (r. February–September 628), 77–79
Katalymata ton Plakoton, 91–93, 139–40
Khosrow I Anōshirvān (r. 531–579), 3–4, 9–10, 47–48, 51–52, 53, 54, 56, 62–63, 64, 66, 68–69, 80, 89, 90, 94, 98, 99, 127, 134–35, 152–53, 154–55, 169
Khosrow II Parvēz (r. 590–628), 9–10, 59, 68, 77–78, 84–88–, 95
Kök Turks, 22–23, 28, 31–32, 35–36, 37–38, 41–42, 43–44

Lactantius, 106, 124, 126–27
Last Roman Emperor, 6, 16–17, 156, 157–58, 166, 167
Łazar Pʻarpecʻi, 46, 48
Lazica, 3–4, 13, 20, 61, 62–63, 64–67, 119–20, 168
Libanius, 93

Mar Abā, 127, 133–35, 152–53
Menander Protector, 51–52
Midrash of the Ten Kings, 163
Mithridates VI Eupator of Pontus (r. 120–63 bce), 138–39, 149–50
Movsēs Dasxurancʿi, 28, 35–36

Narses, 71
Nebuchadnezzar, 125–26, 162–64
Nechtanebus, 140, 142–43
Nikephoros of Constantinople, 79
Nimrod, 88, 154–55, 159–61, 163
Nöldeke, T 9–10, 21–24, 75, 76, 81–82, 171

Origen, 146–47

Pērōz I (r. 459–484), 47, 48, 49–50, 71
Pesikta de–Rav Kahana, 161, 162
Pliny the Elder, 13, 14–15
Priscus, 46, 49
Procopius, 13, 14–15, 16, 19–20, 43, 46–47, 50–52, 54, 56–57, 64, 65–67, 70–71, 80–81, 83, 93–96, 97, 98, 100, 149–50, 153–54
Ptolemy (geographer), 17, 19
Ptolemy (Alexander's general and king of Egypt), 138–39, 140
Ps.–Ephrem, 23, 148–49, 170–71
Ps.–Dionysius, 24–25
Ps.–Fredegar, 28, 35–36
Ps.–Hegesippus, 118
Ps.–Jacob of Serugh, 15, 17, 21, 22, 23–24, 25, 28–29, 88–89, 170–71
Ps.–Joshua the Stylite, 17–19, 49–50, 53–54, 56–57, 58–59, 80–81, 87–88
Ps.–Methodius, 1–2, 6, 16–17, 119, 123, 156, 157–59, 160–61, 166, 170–71, 172
Ps.–Sabeos, 149

Reinink, G J 1, 22, 23–24, 27–29, 31–34, 69, 70, 72–73, 76, 77, 78–80, 83, 84–86, 87, 91, 92–93, 12 1–22, 145, 158–59

Sabir Huns, 21, 25–26, 31, 41–44
Sarnaqōs, 59–60, 61–62, 64

Sesostris/Sesonchosis, 60–62, 119–20
Seventh Vision of Daniel, 122, 127
Severus Alexander (r. 222–235), 93
Shahrbarāz, 77–79
Shapur II (r. 309–379), 88, 93, 107, 109, 124–25, 127, 133, 151–52, 159–60
Shērōē. See Khavad II
Shoemaker, S., 16–17, 23–24, 28–29, 31, 87, 122, 157–58
Solomon, 161, 162–64
Strabo, 17, 149–50
Strategikon of Maurice, 72–74

Targum Sheni, 162–63, 164
Tertullian, 117, 123–24
Theodoret of Cyrrhus, 125–27, 147–49
Theodosius I (r. 379–395), 56, 106
Theophylact Simocatta, 17–19, 84, 87–88, 95
Tiburtine Sibyl, 6, 16–17, 119, 156, 157–58
Trajan (r. 98–117), 80, 93
Tūbarlaq, 4, 11–12, 19–20, 24–25, 57–60, 64, 68–69, 71, 74, 75, 76–77, 78–80, 81–82, 83–84, 87–89, 90, 99, 105, 128, 135–36, 137–38, 143–44, 151, 152, 154–55, 168–69

van Bladel, K., 1, 28, 39, 40–41, 44
Vegetius, 73–74

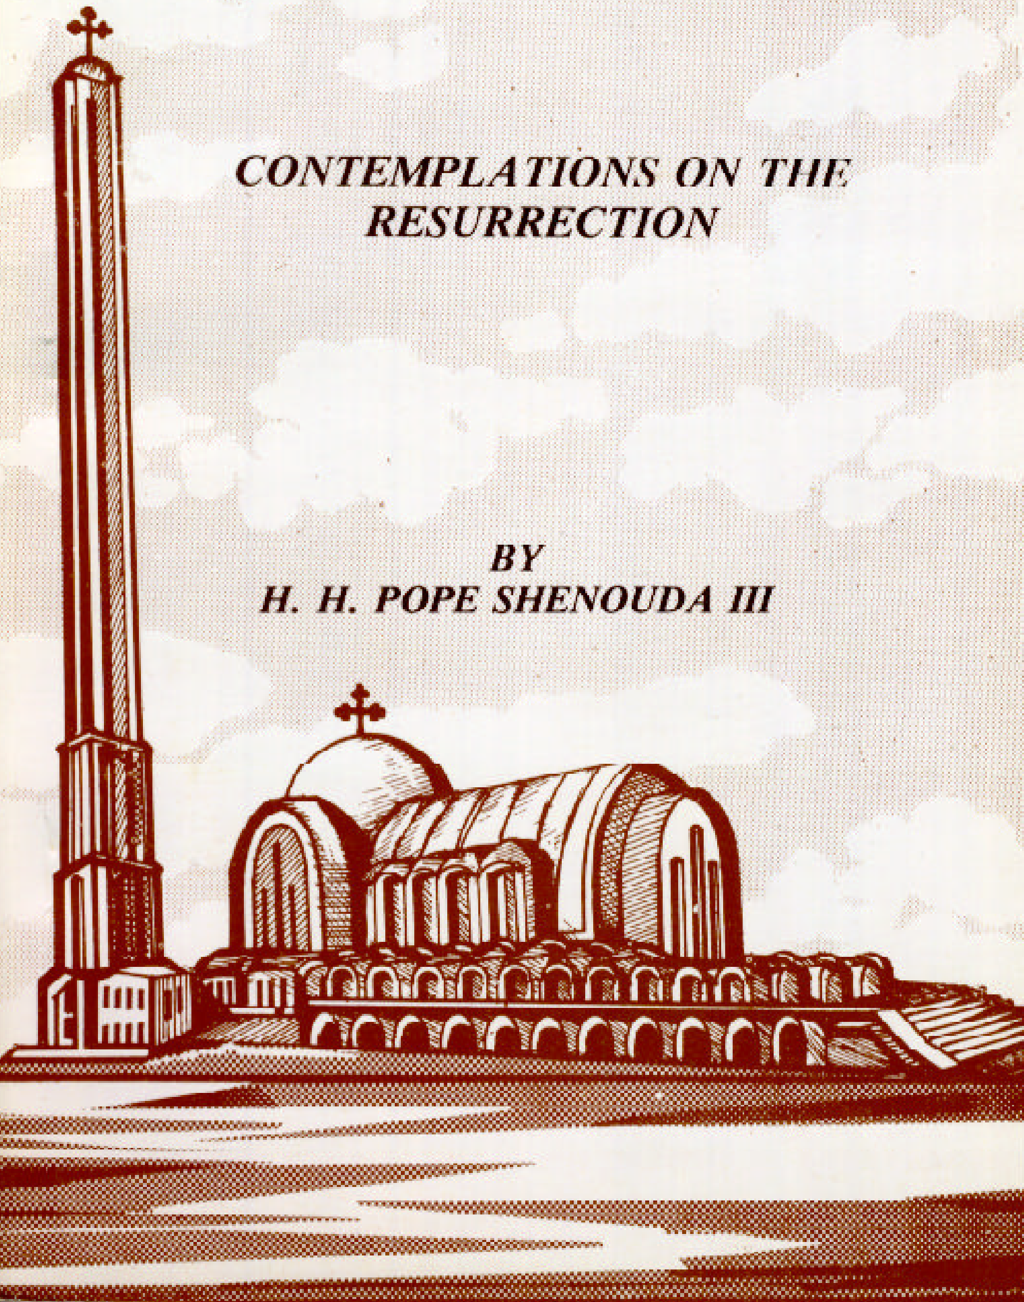
Xerxes, 9–10, 154

Yazdegard II (r. 438–457), 47–48
Yazdgird I (r. 399–420), 131–32

Zachariah of Mytilene, 50–51
Zedekiah, 141–43
Zeno (r. 474–475 and 476–491), 19–20, 49–50, 53, 122
Zilgibis/Ziligdes, 42

CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE RESURRECTION

BY
H. H. POPE SHENOUDA III



COPTIC ORTHODOX PATRIARCHATE

See of St. Mark

CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE RESURRECTION

BY
H. H. POPE SHENOUDA III

Title	: Contemplations on the Resurrection.
Author	: H. H. Pope Shenouda III.
Translated by	: Mr. Aziz Gharbawi.
Illustrated by	: Sister Sawsan.
Edition	: The First - November 1990.
Typesetting	: J. C. Center
Press	: Dar El Tebaa El Kawmia.
Legal Deposit NI.	: 8 7 94/1990.
Revised	: COEPA 1997

H.H. Pope Shenouda III, 117th Pope of Alexandria and the See of St. Mark

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE	8
CHAPTER ONE	10
The Resurrection And Its Spiritual Depth	10
CHAPTER TWO	20
The Necessity Of The Resurrection And Its Possibilities	20
CHAPTER THREE	32
The Concept And Significance Of The Resurrection	32
CHAPTER FOUR	40
The Message Of The Resurrection	40
CHAPTER FIVE	56
The Reality Of Christ's Resurrection And Its Results	56
The Lie Concocted About The Stealing Of The Body	60

CHAPTER SIX 64

The Blessings Of The Resurrection In Our Life 64

CHAPTER SEVEN 77

The Resurrection Is Joy And Gladness 77

CHAPTER EIGHT 89

The Lord Jesus Christ's Resurrection Its Power And Its Effectiveness89

CHAPTER NINE 106

Contemplations On The Resurrection 106

CHAPTER TEN 128

The Power Of Christianity And Abolition Of Impossibility 128

CHAPTER ELEVEN 137

Questions Related To The Resurrection 137

PREFACE

This is the first book I publish about The Resurrection.

But I have published many articles about the resurrection in the Preaching magazine and in the daily newspapers.

Moreover, every year, on Easter Eve, we used to deliver a sermon about that subject in the Great Cathedral.

It was necessary to collect all these articles and sermons for this book, So we could publish it.

This book is comprised of two principal elements:

1. General - theoretical theology -talks on the resurrection.

This is an ideological trend which falls under the limits of theoretical theology or the philosophy of the resurrection written in a good style which suits all denominations.

It, also, explains how resurrection was an essential necessity; how it was potential and the uses and benefits gained from it both spiritually and generally.

2. Topics concerning the resurrection of The Lord Jesus Christ; glory be to Him.

It comprises the events of the resurrection and explains its power and its effects; how Jesus' resurrection surpasses other resurrections; the blessedness of this resurrection and its effects on your life; the joys caused by it and the proofs and confirmation of its authenticity.

3. Questions related to the resurrection.

A question about the glorified body; a question about the words of the Lord to Mary Magdalene "Do not hold on to me. "; two other questions about Saint Peter, the apostle and a question about the circumstances of the resurrection and to what extent its events agree with each other.

This last question needs a separate and complete article which will be delivered on another occasion; God willing.

Now, it suffices to wish you a happy Easter and good returns.

Pope Shenouda III

April, 1990

CHAPTER ONE

The Resurrection And Its Spiritual Depth

The Resurrection Is A Wonderful Meeting:

1. The resurrection is a wonderful meeting between two united friends who have lived together their whole life since their birth and even before it, during pregnancy in their mothers' wombs.

They never separated even for one moment; They are: the body and the spirit.

Each of them has a special nature; the body is earthly and the spirit is celestial. They have united in one nature-the human nature.

You cannot separate one from the other and say "This is the body and that is the spirit."

They have lived together in an admirable unity. The body expresses all the sensations and feelings of the spirit. If the spirit becomes glad the body will smile and rejoice. If it becomes sad, sorrow will appear in the eyes.

After a long life they will separate from one another because of death but in the end they will meet each other in the resurrection.

After a long separation they will unite again. I wonder!! how will the sensations of the spirit be when it meets the body - the life long partner after hundreds and may be thousands of years as Adam, Noah and Abraham had done before!?!?

The spirit meets the body after seeing the body change into a handful of dust. Then returns more radiant than before, without any blemish.

Even the faults, stuck to the body in the past, disappear. Yes, it is raised without defects because wrong and evil deeds do not agree with eternal paradise.

The body returns more friendly. It never disagrees with the spirit in the other world for it is raised a spiritual body.

2. The second wonderful meeting in the resurrection is a meeting of nations and races of the whole history.

It will be a general resurrection since the days of Adam. All nations and races that lived through generations and centuries, with their different languages, features and lineaments, with all their heroes and leaders will meet together and try to be acquainted and understand each other.

Undoubtedly, they will do so because there will be one language the language of the spirit or that of the angels.

How wonderful this meeting will be!! It will be the greatest of all stories and the strangest narrative of long epochs.

The best of all will be the procession of the triumphant and victorious people who struggled during their life on earth, then conquered and supported truth and morals.

They will meet together and everyone has a story related by generations... then the world will become once more one nation as it had been before parting and dispersion.

I wonder!! how will the meeting of the nations which had fought with each other be? Will the causes that forced them to wage wars against each other seem insignificant?

3. The third marvellous meeting is that of the human-beings with the angels who are made of a nature more eminent than ours.

Meeting with them will be one of eternity's happy enjoyment.

4. But the most wonderful meeting with the Lord will surpass any other meeting in its eminence.

Our meeting with God, blessed is His name, will be the eternal paradise for there will be no paradisiacal life without Him.

Now my pen stops in silent submissiveness because I am before a scene which words fail to describe or interpret. It is above the standard of any language to express or any intelligence to imagine. Thus, the resurrection is a strange and wonderful meeting .... and what else?

The Resurrection Is A Miraculous Transition:

1. It is a transition from the limited to the unlimited.

It is an interchange from a life measured with days and years to an infinite one which has no connection with time.

I wonder! Is there another earth which revolves around itself and round the sun; and interprets its revolutions into days and years?

Or shall we rise over time and enter a new world?

Measures of time will come to an end... One moment in eternity is longer and deeper than the whole life of earth.

2. The resurrection is also a transition from the visible to the invisible.

It is an entrance to what is written in the Holy Bible "Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, Nor have entered into the heart of man The things which God has prepared for those who love Him." (1 Cor 2:9)

It is an entrance to the spiritual world and a way to the meeting with the angels, the invisible spirits where joys never known on earth will take place. Here, the resurrection surpasses all the grades attained by senses and rises to the realms where the spirit alone can realise everything.

3. Thus, the resurrection means transition from the world of sensation to the world of spirits.

In the resurrection we acquire spiritual senses which differ from earthly material ones.

The new senses see the spirits and spiritualities and are dazzled by them. Now, I myself keep silent once more.

Here is a kind of the revelation of human nature when it becomes conscious of what it could not perceive in the past and acquire spiritual characteristics not practised before.

In the resurrection the spirit can see the invisible or some of it or advance gradually in sight moving from spiritual satiety to more and more fullness in the life of revealment.

4. The resurrection is transition from the world of falsehood to the life of truth.

From the world of evanescence to the world of immortality. From a world in which everything will be abolished after a time to an everlasting world in which there is no falsehood but well fixed truth.

It is a world free from sin where men live with each other in association very pure, clear and everlasting.

What else about the resurrection?

The Resurrection Is A Multi-Faceted Miracle:

Here appears the miraculous power of God. How will the bodies be gathered once more after they changed into dust! ?

Isn't it He who created and formed them from dust; from nothingness?

Dust had been a nonentity before it existed. He who looks attentively at the resurrection from this side can consider the limitless power of God, our creator. It is enough for Him to wish and everything will be accomplished according to His will, even without an utterance. It is His will which is in root and essence an effective order, capable of doing everything.

We consider the resurrection a miracle not owing to its difficulty but because our mind is unable to perceive how it takes place!! But though the mind fails to comprehend that matter, yet faith can easily understand it.

Thus, the resurrection is the creed of the believers.

He who has faith in God and His power can believe in the resurrection. He who has faith in God as a creator believes also that He has raised the dead.

But the apostates intelligence cannot reach that standard. They do not believe in the resurrection. They have no faith in the spirit and its immortality. Moreover, they do not believe in God Himself.

It Is also a necessary one for justice, serenity and evenness of mind.

It is necessary for justice to judge everyone according to his deeds done during his life on earth-whether good or bad. If they are good he will be rewarded; if they are evil and bad deeds he will be punished.

If there had been no resurrection men would have coveted greedily on worldly pleasures with their corruption and immorality without any care for what will happen to them in future life.

But believing in the resurrection and the following final judgement - reward or punishment - is a restraint to men because they will perceive that justice must prevail in the future life.

This final judgment will take place after the resurrection and the unity of the spirits with their bodies.

For it is unjust for the spirit to be judged alone leaving the body without retribution according to its obedience or disobedience to the spirit. Thus, the body must rise and the spirit must unite with it. And before God the two stand together because they were partners responsible for everything they did on earth.

The resurrection is also necessary for equality.

On earth there is no equality among human beings. There are the rich and the poor; the happy and the miserable, the one who lives in ease and comfort and that who suffers torture.

If there is no equality on earth, it will be appropriate to find it in heaven; and he who does not get his rights on earth can afterwards get them in heaven and the Lord will compensate him for what he had lost on earth if his deeds were satisfactory in the eyes of God.

The story of the rich man and Lazarus in the Holy Bible (Luke 16) presents to us a certain proof about equipoise between life on earth and life in heaven.

The resurrection is also a very magnificent, thrilling and admirable miracle.

It presents to the other world an idealistic life. The ideal man about whom the philosophers spoke and for whom Diogene searched but in vain, the man whom scientists fancied in their imagination, this man is presented by the resurrection to the other world in which there is no sin, no sorrow, no weeping, no depravity, no injustice, no deficiency or poverty.

It is a miracle presented by the resurrection. Moreover, it is an inordinate desire to a life of righteousness, which is ascertained by the resurrection.

Thus, the resurrection is considered a gladdening miracle.

It is cheering because life is completed by it, for man conquers death and lives forever.

The eternal life is the dream of the human-race which is threatened by death from time to time.

Although the life of mankind on earth is short yet it is full of weariness and affliction.

So great will be the pleasure of man when he gets rid of fatigue and death and lives happily in eternal paradise.

It is a dream which is ascertained by the resurrection.

Thus, we come to a very important reality.

The Resurrection Is The Gate Of Eternity:

But for the resurrection death would have been a decisive evanescence.

Evanescence is a dreadful matter. It is a distressing end which is considered the grimmest tragedy.

But God did not create man for evanescence but for continuance and life.

If man was exposed to death because of sin God laid before him the way of salvation.

He raised and rescued him from this death.

When God created man, He gave him something eternal-the spirit.

Man dies but his spirit does not perish but remains alive. In this way, man differs from other creatures which live on earth because their lives are annihilated and come to an end.

Man, by the resurrection, begins another new, endless life.

In this way, man's degree and his preference to other earthly creatures appear.

Because the spirit cannot form a perfect man, it was necessary for the body to rise and unite with it.

Thus, the eternal life cannot be complete with one part but with the two parts-the spirit and the body in order that man may return to life.

Thus, the resurrection is considered a wakefulness after a long sleep.

By this we mean the wakefulness of the body or that of the perfect man because the spirit is wakeful forever.

The resurrection is the end of death. No death will come afterwards.

It is an end to that dreadful enemy.

Man has triumphed over many enemies except death which has conquered and still conquers humanity as it was the irrefutable punishment inflicted by God against him when he fell down and sinned.

But, by the resurrection, God has saved humanity from that enemy and exterminated it forever.

Now, we stand before a bridge which separates between two lives. Death is at its beginning and the resurrection is at its end.

Death is the end of the first life and the resurrection is the beginning of the other world.

The distance between them is an interval of waiting in which the spirits of those who had gone away will wait till their brothers on earth continue their strife and probations.

The eternity presented by the resurrection must be preceded by the final judgment.

The doomsday will come between the resurrection and eternity when all human beings stand before the Lord to render an account of what they did when they were on earth whether good or bad.

They render an account about every deed, every thought, every feeling or sensation, every resolution or determination they had, every word they uttered; then the righteous go to eternal paradise while the evil doers go into continuos anguish.

So, whilst the resurrection is gladness in regard to the righteous, it is also a fright to the apostates and evil-doers.

As for the righteous, God arranges their standing once more according to their past deeds.

He gives every man a new standing according to the purity of both heart and thought and according to his carrying out God's commandments and to what extent he could establish the good and love among people and also, according to his love and strong desire towards God.

CHAPTER TWO

The Necessity Of The Resurrection And Its Possibilities

The Resurrection Of The Body:

When we speak about the resurrection we mean the rising of the bodies from death because the spirits are immortal by nature. Death has neither effect nor power over them. So, they are not in need of resurrection.

These bodies which change into dust from which God has created will come back to existence once more. The spirits will settle down in them and unite with them. All of them will stand before God in the doomsday - the day of the resurrection - in order to present an account of what they did on earth whether good or bad.

It is the dreadful day of final judgment which will be followed by the eternal termination of all humanity.

It will be either the paradise or the hell according to what one will deserve in regard to his faith and deeds.

The Resurrection Is A Possible Matter.

The possibility of the resurrection - with no doubt depends on the plenary and unlimited power of God.

All of us believe that the Almighty God is omnipotent. There is no limit to His heavenly ability.

However difficult the matter may seem to the renegades and the unbelievers or to those who depend on thought and science yet God, without any doubt, is able to raise the bodies from death.

The practice and the operation of the resurrection of the bodies is easier than creating them previously.

God, who gave these bodies the blessing of existence, is undoubtedly able to return them, once more, from the dust of earth.

Moreover, God has created everything from nonentity. He created the earth and its dust from nothingness; and from dust He created man.

Then, which of them is more difficult: the creation from non-existence or raising the bodies from dust?

Thus, it is intuitive that he who is able to carry out the most difficult matter can also execute the easiest one... and He who caused the creation to exist, can, with stronger reason, keep it.

We say so whatever obstacles and entanglements the perverts and the apostates and the half-educated savants and scientists may set before the possibility of the resurrection.

When I refer to the half-learned men I will declare innocent of the charge the scientists and the learned men who acquire complete knowledge.

The half learned man is a materialist and the resurrection seems to him and impossible operation.

Meanwhile, he ignores or may be ignorant of the other half of the truth which is the ability of God.

Half of the truth is that the earth may absorb some of the body's elements. A part of it may be decomposed or interfere with other substances or bodies.

The other half of the truth is that the material is imperishable.

Wherever the body may go, its component parts will remain extant and existing in the earth; the way of all flesh.

The infinite God knows quite well where the origins of the body are found. He, with His limitless power, can bring them back once more especially because it is His desire.

At the same time, He promised the human race to rise again according to the sayings of the prophets and what was registered in the holy books.

Thus, the resurrection, in its essence and reality, depends on God, blessed is His name. It depends on His will, His knowledge and His acquaintance and ability.

As for the will, God wishes man to rise from death. He promised him the eternal life and spoke of the resurrection, frankly and very clearly.

As long as God has promised something, there is no doubt that He will carry out His promise.

As for knowledge and ability, God knows where are the origins and the elements of the bodies which were decomposed and the places of their bones.

Moreover, He knows how to form and compose them again. Indeed He can do all that - great and dignified His great name is; high and elevated His omnipotent ability is.

With complete faith we believe in the power of our Almighty God.

He who denies the possibility of the resurrection must, consequently, deny the creation from nonentity.

He also denies the ability of God as well as His existence.

But the believers, who have faith in God and believe in His miracles and in the process of creation and the infinite power of this great Creator, consider the resurrection a very simple matter, easy to believe in.

The Necessity Of The Resurrection

There is a principal point why the resurrection is necessary and the understanding of the meaning of perpetuity.

God has promised man an eternal life. His promise was given to man as a whole and not to the spirit alone which is a part of man.

If the spirit was given the chance to enjoy perpetuity and eternal paradise we could not say that man as a whole enjoyed an easy prosperous life in eternity, but only a part of him which is the spirit.

Thus, it is very necessary for the body to rise from death and consequently the spirit will unite with it to form a complete man who can enjoy a perpetual life.

But for the resurrection, the end of the human body would have been the same as that of animals.

Then, what are the characteristics of that wise, living being, endowed with the faculty of speech whom God has gifted with the talent of thinking, invention and the ability to build rocket , aeroplanes which convey him to the moon and whirl round the earth, then bring him back safely to it after collecting different data about other planets ?

Can it be intelligible and reasonable that the body of this marvellous and admirable man, whom the Lord gave the mastery over many sides of nature come to the same end of animals and insects? Indeed, the mind cannot accept that matter as true.

Thus, it is reasonable that the resurrection of the body keeps pace with man's prestige.

Man is distinguished and chosen out from other creatures which have bodies. With the gifts given to him by God, he can rule over them, pay attention to them and take care of them all.

So, the dignity of the body of this wise creature must be distinguished from the bodies of other unwise and dumb creatures.

The rising of the bodies from their graves is also a necessity incumbent for God's justice.

Man is a wise creature. He has his own will and consequently he is responsible for his deeds.

He will stand before God to take his recompense, whether reward or penalty, for what he did during his life on earth.

That deed was done by man, with his body and his spirit together. So, is it reasonable to judge the spirit alone? or to judge both of them together?

The spirit and the body are partners in everything, so, according to God's justice, they, together, have to enjoy the good reward or carry out the penalty and remain in torture.

The spirit and the body

The body is the systematic organisation of the spirit, or the soul or the mind.

The spirit has an inclination for doing the good, and the body takes upon itself carrying out that good. It moves, toils, suffers hardships and passes the night awake and tolerates.

Isn't this body worthy of a reward for the good role which he plays and takes part in it with the spirit!? Is right for the spirit alone to lead an easy and comfortable life while the weariness and efforts of the body is blown to smithereens? Does such matter agree with God's justice?

Let us take the soldier in the battlefield as an example .

The soldier's spirit impels him to do reckless adventures; to be a commando and a redeemer. It forces him to sacrifice himself for the sake of his country. It is infatuated with love and patriotism for its homeland and its compatriots.

But the body carries and takes upon its shoulder the whole burden and pays all the expenses and payments.

It is the body which toils, passes the night awake and struggles. It is wounded, becomes torn and its blood flows. Is it right for the spirit; after all these sufferings, to enjoy alone the heavenly rewards without its partner-the body?

The body seems as if it got neither earth nor heaven!? God's justice does not agree with this at all.

Thus, it is necessary for the body to rise from death to share the spirit its joys.

We mention the same question in regard to doing evil deeds in which the body shares the spirit.

Perhaps the role of the body may exceed that of the spirit.

It is the body which plunges into worldly pleasures as food, drinking, drunkenness, narcotics, adultery, dancing, sport, jesting and insult.

After the body gives all these pleasures to its senses, will the spirit alone pay the price in eternity without any punishment or recompense to the body?

Certainly the answer is "No" because this does not agree with God's justice which must judge man as a whole-body and spirit.

So, the body must rise from the death to take his share in retribution.

Both the spirit and the body will be judged on the last judgement because they were partners in everything whether the spirit was the beginner and the body continued the work or the body had the bestial passion and the spirit yielded and submitted and took part in the body's libido and desires.

Let us give you one example about the partnership between the spirit and the body. It is the eye.

The spirit loves and feels pity for others and sympathises with them. Both love and sympathy appear in the eye.

The spirit flies into a rage at others or may have an inclination to revenge itself upon another; so, in the eye, you see the look of anger or the desire of avengement.

The spirit tends to pray to God. So, in the eye you see the look of supplication or you may observe the eye brimmed over with tears owing to the impression of the spirit.

With meek and humble looks, the body enters into partnership with the meek and modest spirit.

With haughty, insolent and elevated looks, the body shares with the insolent, elevated and haughty spirit.

As the eye plays its role, so do the features of the face. Also, the beats of the heart take part as well as the cerebral centres and other organs of the body.

These are examples about the partnership between the spirit and the body.

We observe such partnerships in the field of diligence and energy. The poet explains that and says: "If the spirits are eminent, the bodies will suffer much to fulfil their aims and desires."

Thus, the reward in eternity will be given to eminent spirits which had the good will and insisted to do the good. It will be given also to the body which took upon its shoulder carrying out these good deeds; that body which toiled, struggled, suffered much and was patient in order that it might fulfil the spirit's desires.

Thus, as the body took part in the spirit's deeds it must rise to share her the reward or the punishment and to carry the responsibility because recompense will be for man as a whole.

Even on earth, we also repay the body and at the same time we consider this as a reward to the spirit also.

Don't we venerate the bodies of the saints and the righteous? Don't we visit their tombs and put flowers and roses on them? Don't we pray for them?

We do not consider all these deeds mere respect to the body or to the bones or to the corpse or to dust but to man as a whole because with such deeds we greet the spirit as well.

Man is one unity. He is indivisible.

If he is worthy of honour and respect, we shall treat his body with deference and salute his spirit as well.

If he is unworthy of honour, we will pay no attention either to his body or to his spirit.

The bodies of the criminals who are sentenced to death or prison will obtain their punishment. At the same time, bad reputation will cling to their spirits which will be affected by what has happened to their bodies.

If our earthly justice acts in such a manner, now much the more the heavenly justice will be?

God's justice prevails man as one unity-spirit and body. Thus, the body which lived on earth and shared the spirit every action must rise.

The body was affected by the spirit's conditions, by its thought, by its sensation or reverential fear and the body bows spontaneously in submission.

When the spirit mourns the eye will weep and sorrow will appear on the face and in the movements of the body.

When the spirit rejoices the smile will appear on the features. When the spirit becomes afraid the body will shiver and fear will overcome the face.

When the self is blushing the body will perspire and shyness may appear on his features.

Both spirit and body are partners in everything. So, it is unjust to let the spirit by itself or the body alone bear the responsibility of that partnership.

The two are responsible and that is what will happen on the last judgement.

From the style of some of those who deny the resurrection, it seems that they disdain the body.

They consider it a material element while they esteem the spirit to have an essence which vies in excellence with the body's nature.

But we say that although man is formed of two natures: material nature and spiritual one, yet both of them are united together in one nature which is known as "The human nature"

The body is not evil; otherwise God would not have created it.

The evil is the submission of the body to the material with its desires and bestial passions. In this yielding, the spirit takes part.

We must not forget that the body has its virtues and advantages. He bows during the prayers. He kneels down and raises his hands and eyes to God. He fasts and toils and does the good.

It is the body who sacrifices himself for the sake of his country. It is he who stretches his hand and gives the poor and the needy.

Then, why do we reduce and lessen his important standing?

Aren't the artist's fingers which play the musical instrument and affect and move the hearts to be benevolent and charitable?

Aren't his fingers which cut out the statues, carve the wood, make pictures, paint portraits and present the art with which they direct the hearts towards the good?

Thus, the body itself is not evil; but it can work in the field of both good and evil.

The spirit can also work in the same field. Thus, they become partners.

Moreover, it is just for the bodies to rise from death in order to be compensated for what they had been deprived of, during their life on earth.

It is just for the bodies of the blind, for example, and the disabled, the crippled, the disfigured and persons whose bodies were so unlucky that they had no touch of beauty, no sign of health, no trace of power to rise on the last judgement without any shortage or deficiency in order that God may compensate them for the sufferings and deficit they had on earth.

All those, whose bodies were affected by poverty, hardship, hunger and illness during their life on earth, need to rise in soundness which will compensate them for the misery they suffered on earth.

This agrees with God's justice.

We rejoice with the resurrection and perceive that it is necessary, essential and possible.

Christ's resurrection was the first-fruit of the resurrection of all human-beings.

CHAPTER THREE

The Concept And Significance Of The Resurrection

Death is an alien and a stranger to humanity

When God created man He formed him for life. He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living being.

God wished him life and perpetuity but man's option inclined to sin.

So he brought death and caused it to himself as a result of his sin. "For the wages of sin is death" (Rom 6:23)

Thus, death came into the world and reigned over humanity.

So, we rejoice with the resurrection because it is a triumph over death and a return of man's nature to life.

God has created man to live and not to die.

Christ's resurrection is a handsel of our resurrection. Thus saint Paul, the apostle, described Him as "The first-fruits of those who have fallen asleep". (1 Cor 15:20)

He is the first-fruit and we will rise after him.

Perhaps someone may ask saying "How can Christ be the first-fruit of the dead while many rose before Him? "

1. The son of the widow in Zarephath in the region of Sidon whom Elijah, the prophet, raised from death (1 Kin 17:22)

2. The son of the Shunammite who Elisha, the prophet, raised from death. (2 Kin 4:32-36)

3. There are three others whom the Lord Jesus Christ Himself raised from death. They are:

a) The son of the widow of the town called "Nain".

b) The daughter of Jairus.

c) Lazarus.

In fact, there are some persons who rose from death before the days of Christ but, after their rising, they died once more. They are still waiting for the general resurrection.

Christ's resurrection was the one after which there was no death. It was the first-fruit and the inordinate desire for which longs every believer in eternity.

We mean by the resurrection the way which leads to eternal life.

We know that man's life on earth is a very short story. It is nothing if measured or compared to eternity and the land of the Joy which is the good hope and the dream of all human beings.

The resurrection elevates the value of man and asserts that his life is not ended by death.

It affirms that there is another life which differs from this earthly one. We, God willing, will enjoy that new life after the resurrection.

Thus we say in "The Creed" which we recite every day in our prayers "and we are waiting for the resurrection of the dead and the eternal life as well, Amen."

So, we may say that the most important events of the resurrection are those which will follow it.

The resurrection shows that there is an extension to man's life in eternity. It proves that death is a mere stage of the journey of man's life. It is a bridge between two lives: an earthly life and a heavenly one.

Undoubtedly, the heavenly life is far better than the earthly one because it will be in heaven above any material standard.

It will be pure and without any sin.

Moreover, it will be an association will God, His angels and His saints. The holy Bible says about it "Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, Nor have entered into the heart of man The things which God has prepared for those who love Him." (1 Cor 2:9).

So, Mar Isaac said "Fear of death disturbs the heart of the ignorant but the righteous longs for death as he loves life ".

Thus, Saint Paul, the apostle said "having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. " (Phil 1:23)

Indeed, death becomes inordinate desire to those who love God and the life in heaven. They consider it far more better than life on earth which has lost its purity.

Those, who believe in the resurrection, do not consider death as an end of life but a removal to another life.

The resurrection has changed people's look in regard to death. It is a mere transition or a bridge which leads to another life.

You can say that it is an ascent operation.

Thus, death has become the inordinate desire of the righteous.

The apprehension of death fell down forever after Christ had trodden down death by His resurrection.

Saints do not fear death any longer. They pay no attention to its causes as illness and conspiracies and aggression of the wicked.

He who fears death is the sinner who has not turned from sin. He becomes afraid of his destiny and the last judgement when he will stand before God.

The sinner, who practises certain desires and bestial passions, fears death lest it should deprive him of such lusts. But the righteous never fears death because he believes in the resurrection.

The resurrection is connected with faith. The heretics, for example, do not believe in the resurrection.

The believer believes that God has the ability to raise the body from death. He who has created human-beings from dust and made dust from nothingness can bring the body back to life in order to return and unite with the spirit.

The apostates do not believe in the spirit's existence or its perpetuity after death. They do not believe in eternity or in recompense and punishment. So, I said that the resurrection is connected with faith.

Believing in the resurrection leads to the life of righteousness and virtue.

The believer believes that in the dreadful last judgement he will stand before God to give an account for all his past deeds whether good or bad.

Thus, this faith leads him to be cautious and precision in his life for fear of the final judgment.

Consequently, he reckons himself up for every deed, every thought, every sensation and every word; then, he reforms himself as Saint Maccarius said "My brother, restrain yourself before they check you."

The true faith in the resurrection leads to the life of religious devotion and monasticism.

The resurrection drew men's attention to the glories of the other world; thus, the evanescent enjoyment of this perishable world diminished.

By their extravagant thinking in the invisible they paid no attention to the tangible and visible things.

They became as the Bible said " while we do not look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal." (2 Cor 4:18).

But for the resurrection, men would have coveted greedily on the earthly life and plunged in its inordinate desires as the Epicurians used to say "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." (1 Cor 15:32)

Those who believe in the resurrection and prepare themselves for it control themselves and keep down their desires and passions.

They practise spiritual training to make themselves right. They do not yield to bodily or material desires but lead a spiritual life and suppress their bodies, their senses and their nerves.

Love of eternity made the righteous long for something greater and more eminent than the world.

Everything in the world cannot satisfy or fill them because, from within, there is a strong desire for heaven and a great longing for the spiritual and happy life which exceeds sensation and intelligence and excels all earthly desires.

Thus, the saints looked at the earth as an expatriation and considered themselves strangers on it.

They always long for a heavenly home; long for another different spiritual and heavenly life which no eye has seen.

They longed for the other world which is adorned with holiness, innocence, spirituality, peace, love and purity. There, God fills the hearts and there is no place for any other desire.

In the resurrection, there is a kind of consolation and compensation for men.

He who does not find justice on earth feels that his rights are kept for him in heaven with the Lord who gives sentence in favour of the oppressed.

He who does not find the good on earth, as poor Lazarus, is consoled because he will find all the good in heaven. As he was tormented on earth he will find consolation in heaven.

The resurrection makes equipoise for the life of every man.

Justice makes a balance between all that man has got on earth and what he will get in heaven.

The resurrection offers a true consolation to all friends and lovers because it will gather them together once more after death separates them.

If life came to an end in the tomb without resurrection our dear friends who had passed away would perish. Our relationship would be all over with them and we would never see them.

Undoubtedly, this case wearies the heart and causes disaster to lovers who will lose their friends forever.

The resurrection gives us an idea about the power of God and His love to man.

This powerful loving God who can raise the bodies after they have been decomposed and changed into dust and who is able to bring them back to their first form in a kind of transfiguration- spirituality and luminosity - did not wish to enjoy the Cosmos alone but created other creatures.

He did not like to be alone in eternity, so, He bestowed perpetuity upon both men and angels and granted human beings an eternal life after rising from death.

One of the enjoyment of the resurrection is cessation of evil and all that sin has caused.

In paradise where the righteous live, there is neither evil nor sin. Our sins will come to an end. We will lead the life of plenary plainness and complete purity and cleanness.

We will be like angels and children in their innocence. The soul will get rid of the blemishes caused by sin as fear, doubt, lust, anxiety etc.

Then, the soul will be adorned with the crown of righteousness. All defects whether psychic or corporal will vanish.

CHAPTER FOUR

The Message Of The Resurrection

As we rejoice at Christ's resurrection, we also delight in the resurrection itself, I mean the resurrection of all human beings.

We, also rejoice at the profound, spiritual and good points of the resurrection which elevate the value of humanity and show clearly the good and the enjoyment the Lord has prepared for man in the other world.

First, we say that the resurrection is an indication to faith.

Undoubtedly, it refers to man's faith in God, and man's faith in spirit and in eternity as well as the other world. It shows his faith in the general last judgement which will be after the resurrection.

The resurrection clears up man's faith in reward and punishment and consequently his belief in heaven, in saints and in God's kingdom.

Because the apostates believe neither in the resurrection nor in the other world, they consider Nian's life equal to that of animals saying that both of them perish and come to an end by means of death.

Indeed, how worthless and significant the life of both man and animal, which ends in death is, in the eyes of the apostates.

Surely, man's life will be of no importance if he is content with some years spent on this planet and no more!

How inexorable and ugly death is in the eyes of those apostates. It is like an eraser which effaces existence, intelligence and knowledge of human beings and annihilates and leads them to nothingness.

Like the apostates are the Sadducees about whom the Holy Bible said that they did not believe in the resurrection or the spirit or the angels.

The Epicureans are no less ignorant than the apostates. They say "Let us drink and eat because we will die to-morrow".

Undoubtedly, the devil is the cause of repudiating the resurrection.

It is he who inspires the apostates, whether philosophers or ignorant, with such pretension.

If he succeeds in convincing them with the idea that there is no life after death, then, they will plunge themselves into mundane life with its anxieties and pleasures without thinking neither in their eternity nor in their standing before God in the last judgement. In this way they perish.

But the believers who have faith in God, believe in the resurrection and the Last Day.

The resurrection shows the unlimited capability of God.

All the abilities of man stand still before death. Both his power of intelligence and science and even his mind seem helpless before its potency.

But the Holy Bible teaches us that "With men it is impossible, but not with God; for with God all things are possible." (Mark 10:27)

God is omnipotent. Both life and death are at His hand. He vitalises and He Himself puts to death. He can raise man from death.

As He has created him from the dust of earth, He can bring him back to life after the incorporation of his body into death inside the dust of the earth.

God, who has the ability to create everything from nothingness, can also raise man from death.

The resurrection proves God's love as well as his munificence.

God, who did not wish to be alone in the Universe, has originated and created creatures amongst which was man.

But after man's death, God did not wish him to perish and through His love and His generosity donated him life after death in order that his existence might be incessant, not for a time but forever.

Thus, God has endowed the mortal man with immortality.

The resurrection is something gladdening. By means of it, men will meet with their friends and loved ones who departed from this life.

What will be the case of the lovers whose hearts unite together during their life on earth and are separated afterwards by death?

I wonder!! Will it be an eternal separation without any connection or meeting in future?

Of course, God's love and mercy do not tolerate that matter.

After death, the spirits of lovers and friends will meet together but after the resurrection they will see each other with their bodies and spirits.

It will be a general meeting in which, not only shall we meet with our friends, but also with all generations that passed through history.

After the resurrection, there will be a great festival, made by God, in which all men will become acquainted with one another.

In this wonderful festival we shall be acquainted with all historical personalities about whom we have read without seeing them or knowing their shapes or their styles and dialects whether they were governors or rulers, or scholarly or idealists.

Perhaps God may send His angels to acquaint us with all the Fathers and apostles and also, we shall see fathers Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Job.

We shall also see our mothers Eve, Sarah, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Rachel and in the front our mother Saint Mary the Virgin.

The resurrection presents to us many other joys as the association with the angels and the saints. Above them all, the enjoyment of being in the presence of God Himself, before which the mind becomes so astonished and delighted that a person cannot express himself. It is sufficient for him to relish and enjoy its sweetness.

The resurrection carries within itself an operation of equipoise and compensation.

Those who did not receive their merits on earth will get them completely in heaven after the resurrection and those whom the human race treated with injustice will receive complete heavenly justice as well.

Also, those who offered their charities in secret, without telling any one, will get their reward in heaven because God used to record their good deeds in order to reward them.
God will also repay all those who were not rewarded on earth for their good deeds.

In the resurrection men will perceive that God's judgments differ from those of men and that His justice will be completed in heaven.

Moreover, those who were born under certain circumstances or in special environments which could not guarantee for them happiness and social equality, will be compensated by God for everything they could not get on earth. See the story of the rich man and Lazarus. (Luke 16)

In the resurrection man is brought back to his first rank. His spirit restores its dignity and the body gets back its radiance.

Moreover, the body as well as the soul will have a kind of revelation and glory. Both of them will get rid of their deficiencies.

Thus, the Holy Bible said about the body "It is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. " (1 Cor 15:43,44)

By the resurrection, the body gets rid of all its illnesses, infirmities and deformities. It appears in full radiance.

The soul also will be cleared of its sickness and defects.

There will be no fear, no doubt, no hesitation, no anxiety, no libido, no bestial passions and no cowardice ... etc.

The philosophers, who used to search for the superman will find him in the resurrection.

The man of the resurrection will be in his best form. All will have luminary bodies. Everyone will shine according to his own standard.

The dream of humanity will be ascertained and a righteous complete society will come to existence.

In the city of God about which Saint Augustine has given some descriptions, there are no combats, no dissension, no disagreements, no hatred, no selfishness and no competition. It will be a society of love and sanctity.

In the resurrection men lead a simple and innocent life. The Bible says they become like God's angels in heaven.

In it, sin vanishes and the body yields no more to it or to depravity.

The body is completely cleansed from sin. God washes it till it becomes whiter than snow (Psalm 50).

Thus, man lives in a spiritual standard fit for heaven and its purity.

In the resurrection, the indigenous obtains victory over the foreigner.

Truth overcomes falsehood because truth is the former and the origin while the untruth is foreigner and exotic in regard to this world.

In the resurrection life triumphs over death, because life is the origin and the source while death is a stranger.

Man is composed of a spirit and a body. The spirit is living and active by its nature and will remain, so, forever but the body, which was disposed to death when it was on earth, will become an immortal, animate and spiritual one after the resurrection.

Man will have a spiritual perception. He will never depend on his bodily senses.

Thus, man struggles and does his best on earth in order that he may enjoy the glories of the resurrection.

But not all men will enjoy such glories. They will only be for the worthy because, after the resurrection, there will come the Last Judgement in which all peoples will stand before the Just God "And behold, I am coming quickly, and My reward is with Me, to give to every one according to his work." (Rev 22:12).

Blessed is the one who becomes worthy of the glories of eternity and the happy companion-ship with the saints.

Everyone, with strenuous effort, must do his best to make good deeds on earth in order that he may find them there.

Everyone must be in good relationship with God and with men. He must be dutiful both to himself and to the society in which he lives.

He must do good to all. So, he will have good reminiscence on earth and good reward in heaven.

For All Reasons, It Was Necessary For Christ To Rise

1. It was necessary for Christ to rise because in Him was life.

So, said Saint John, the Evangelist "in Him was life" (John 1:4). He who has life in Him cannot remain dead.

He said to Martha "I am the resurrection and the life. He who believes in Me, though he may die, he shall live." (John 11:25)

As long as He Himself is life, how can't He rise? Jesus confirms this meaning saying "I am the way, the truth and the life" (John 14:6)

How can't He rise, He who said to John, the Visionary, "I am the First and the Last. I am He who lives, and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen. And I have the keys of Hades and of Death." (Rev 1:18)

For these reasons, the angel of the resurrection rebuked the women saying "Why do you seek the living among the dead?" (Luke 24:5)

2. It was necessary for Christ to rise from death because He Himself has raised many others from death with a mere command.

Elijah has raised a dead person after prayers. Also, Elisha has raised a man from death but after many prayers.

But The Lord Jesus Christ, with an order, raised the daughter of Jairus and the son of the widow of Nain as well as Lazarus because He is the Donor of life. On raising the daughter of Jairus "He took her by hand and said to her "Talitha kowmi!" (which means "Little girl, I say to you, get up!") Immediately the girl stood up and walked around. (Mark 5:4,42)

On raising the son of the widow of Nain, He went up and touched the coffin, and those carrying it stood still. He said "Young man, I say to you, arise." So he who was dead sat up and began to speak. And He presented him to his mother. (Luke 7:14,15).

On raising Lazarus Now when He had said these things, He cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth!" And he who had died came out bound hand and foot with graveclothes, and his face was wrapped with a cloth. Jesus said to them, "Loose him, and let him go." (John 11:43,44).

Then; Was it difficult for Jesus to rise? He who ordered the dead to rise and they rose?

Indeed, it was necessary for Him to rise because He is the raiser of the dead. Yes, it was necessary for Him to rise as it was written about Him "For as the Father raises the dead and gives life to them, even so the Son gives life to whom He will." (John 5:21)

Can't He who gives life to others raise Himself?

3. It was necessary for Jesus to rise because His resurrection was a prophecy which had to be fulfilled.

After Peter's testimony that Jesus is the Son of God, the Bible says "From that time Jesus began to show to His disciples that He must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised the third day." (Matt 16:21)

After the miracle of the Transfiguration and as they were coming down the mountain, Jesus instructed them "Now as they came down from the mountain, Jesus commanded them, saying, "Tell the vision to no one until the Son of Man is risen from the dead.""(Matt 17:9)

Now while they were staying in Galilee, Jesus said to them, "The Son of Man is about to be betrayed into the hands of men, and they will kill Him, and the third day He will be raised up." And they were exceedingly sorrowful." (Matt 17:22,23).

After He had explained the parable of the vineyard, and as He was going up to Jerusalem, He took the twelve disciples aside and said to them, "Now while they were staying in Galilee, Jesus said to them, "The Son of Man is about to be betrayed into the hands of men, and they will kill Him, and the third day He will be raised up." And they were exceedingly sorrowful." (Matt 20: 18,19) (Luke 9:31-33).

After the resurrection, men began to remember all those topics and remind each other of them.

But the angel answered and said to the women, "Do not be afraid, for I know that you seek Jesus who was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." (Matt 28:5,6)

The phrase "as He said" means the prophecies He had mentioned about His resurrection on the third day. In the Old Testament, there are other prophecies about His rising from death.

Thus, after His resurrection, The Lord Jesus Christ said to His disciples "These are the words which I spoke to you while I was still with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Me. And He opened their understanding, that they might comprehend the Scriptures. Then He said to them, "Thus it is written, and thus it was necessary for the Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day. " (Luke 24:44-46)

In the Old Testament, the story of the prophet Jonah, is one of the indications which refers to this resurrection.

When the Jews said to Jesus "Teacher, we want to see a miraculous sign from You. " He answered and said to them, "An evil and adulterous generation seeks after a sign, and no sign will be given to it except the sign of the prophet Jonah. For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, so will the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. (Matt 12:39,40)

4. It was necessary for Christ to rise because His resurrection was under His own influence and authority.

He died by His own will. He presented Himself to death.

In His immortal words, He explained that matter saying "Therefore My Father loves Me, because I lay down My life that I may take it again. No one takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This command I have received from My Father." (John 10:17,18).

Indeed, how wonderful is this phrase!! "and I have power to take it again" which means "I have authority to take back the life which I Myself had laid, and no-one could take it from Me".

For these reasons, it was necessary for Him to rise by His own will.

We may ask a question: Why did He lay Himself? What is the use of that matter in regard to the resurrection?

5. It was necessary for Him to rise because His death was a mere temporary one to perform a double message.

It was possible for him not to die according to His nature and also "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord. " (Rom 6:23).

Moreover he did not commit any sin. He accepted to die instead of us in order to give His life for us as the apostle said " being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God set forth as a propitiation by His blood, through faith, to demonstrate His righteousness, because in His forbearance God had passed over the sins that were previously committed. " (Rom 3:24,25)

This was the chief message of death; I mean redemption

After the resurrection, it was also necessary for Him to go and announce good news to those who died in hope and open the gate of paradise and transfer the sleeping from hell to heaven.

About this matter, Saint Peter says " For Christ also suffered once for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but made alive by the Spirit, by whom also He went and preached to the spirits in prison. " (1 Pet 3:18,19).

Yes, He preached those spirits with salvation and carried them to paradise as well as the right thief.

Saint Paul, the apostle, says " Now this, "He ascended"; what does it mean but that He also first descended into the lower parts of the earth? He who descended is also the One who ascended far above all the heavens, that He might fill all things." (Eph 4:9, 1 0)

6. It was necessary for Christ to rise because His divine nature was never separated from His human nature not even for a twinkling of an eye.

About His death, the Syrian Division says "His spirit was separated from His body but His divine nature was not separated at all from His spirit or from His body.

His spirit which was united with His divine nature went down to the underground depths and preached the imprisoned spirits and elevated them to heaven. His body remained in the tomb united with His divine nature.

As for the separation of the spirit from the body, He died as a human being but He was alive with His spirit.

He had the life of the divine nature for which Nicodemus, when he was shrouding him, cried "The all holy, the all powerful, the living forever. "

Yes, it was necessary for that body, which united with the divine nature, to rise. It was impossible for the Body to remain dead.

Death could not overcome The Lord Jesus Christ. It was impossible for it to defeat Him. By His death, Christ Himself trampled over that death which triumphed over all human beings.

The Lord died on behalf of us to save us. He paid the price of our sins and in this way He did away with the influence of death.

7. Thus, it was necessary for this one who, by his death, exterminated the power of death, to rise.

It was necessary for Him to rise in order that He might proclaim His victory over death by His resurrection and to announce to all peoples that death would have no sting according to the praise of Paul, the apostle "O Death, where is your sting? O Hades, where is your victory?" (1 Cor 15:55)

8. It was necessary for Christ to rise in order to console and support the disciples.

It was necessary for Him to rise to obliterate the horrible results of His crucifixion because some of the disciples became afraid and others hid in the attic.

The rest of the believers dispersed for fear of the violence of the Jews...

Some ignored and denied Him; others mistrusted Him, but it was necessary for Christ to rise in order to repair and overhaul people's faith and to encourage them to remain firm in their faith and to hold out against Jews' persecution.

Thus, His resurrection was the greatest motive which urged them to preach the Gospel.

9. It was necessary for Him to rise to prove that he was not a common man who dies as other people.

All men die and remain dead waiting for the general resurrection in order to rise but it was necessary for The Lord Jesus Christ to rise immediately, otherwise, they would have considered Him a common man. His resurrection has proved His divinity especially because He rose by Himself without any help from anyone.

10. It was necessary for Him to rise to be the first fruits according to which all men will rise.

So, Saint Paul said " But now Christ is risen from the dead, and has become the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep. For since by man came death, by Man also came the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive. " (1 Cor 15:20-22)

He also speaks of the importance of the resurrection of Christ and says " And if Christ is not risen, your faith is futile; you are still in your sins! Then also those who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men the most pitiable. " (1 Cor 15:17-19).

11. It was necessary for Christ to rise in order to lay the foundation of Christianity.

And to stay with the disciples a period of forty days through which He speaks with them about the matters which belong to the kingdom of God. (Acts 1:3) and to lay before them the rules of faith and give them the secrets and the rituals and to breathe on them saying " And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and said to them, Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven them; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained." (John 20:22,23).

Then He promises them saying "But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be witnesses to Me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the end of the earth." (Acts 1:8)

After that, He commits to them preaching the Gospel saying:

"Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He who believes and is baptised will be saved; but he who does not believe will be condemned. " (Mark 16:15,16)

"Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt 28:19,20)

CHAPTER FIVE

The Reality Of Christ's Resurrection And Its Results

The Jews' opposition to the resurrection

Christ's resurrection from amongst the dead was the greatest occurrence which shook the entity of the Jews. So, they tried, by all means, to resist it.

Moreover, they tried to oppose the resurrection before its happening. Even after it had taken place, they made great attempts to resist it.

Before His crucifixion, The Lord Jesus Christ had announced the good news of His resurrection. More than one time, he said to His disciples that the Son of Man would be betrayed and given to the hands of the Gentiles who would condemn Him to death and would turn Him over to the Jews to be mocked and flogged and crucified. On the third day He would be raised to life!!

He said these words while they were going to Jerusalem. (Matt 20:18,19); (Mark 10:33,34); (Luke 18:31-33). He, also, said the same words on their way to Galilee. (Matt 17:22). He repeated these words after Peter's confession that Christ is the Son of the living God. (Matt 16:21).

So after the transfiguration He ordered them not to tell anyone what they had seen " … tell no one the things they had seen, till the Son of Man had risen from the dead. " (Mark 9:9)

He, also, said to them on the great Thursday I have power to take it again "But after I have been raised, I will go before you to Galilee." (Mark 14:28). Moreover, he gave them the sign of Jonah. (Matt 12:38)

On the next day, which followed the Day of Preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees gathered together to Pilate, saying, "Sir, we remember, while He was still alive, how that deceiver said, 'After three days I will rise.' Therefore command that the tomb be made secure until the third day, lest His disciples come by night and steal Him away, and say to the people, 'He has risen from the dead.' So the last deception will be worse than the first." (Matt 27:62-64)

What was that fearful evil which the resurrection would bring to them that they imagined it more dangerous than the instructions of Christ whom they gave the nickname "The first deception".

Christ's resurrection proved His truthfulness and that His prophecies were true. It proved that He was powerful and His crucifixion was not due to His weakness but it was an arrangement for saving humanity.

All the matters lead men to have fixed and firm faith in Him.

So, they made all precautions against the rising of Christ. They rolled a big stone in front of the entrance to the tomb.

They made the tomb secure by putting a seal on the stone and posting the guard (Matt 28:66) They were not ashamed of doing that on the Sabbath evening (After preparation) although they accused The Lord Jesus Christ of opening the blind's eyes on a Sabbath. (John 9:16:24)

All their precautions became a great evidence in regard to Christ's rising from among the dead.

Every action made against the resurrection turned to be a proof and a witness for its existence.

Both the seal on the tomb and the guards in front of the empty tomb proved the reality of Christ's resurrection.

They also asserted that Jesus went out of the tomb while its entrance was closed and sealed.

This matter resembled Jesus' coming of Saint Mary's womb without causing any decoration to her virginity. It also resembled Jesus' visit to His disciples, who were together, with the doors locked, when He came and stood among them and said "Peace be with you. "

As for the bribe paid by the chief priests to the guards in order to announce that Christ's disciples carried Him away during their sleep, it was a false artifice which was too Weak to stand against the power of the resurrection.

The burial cloth of the head and the shrouds

The existence of the strips of linen lying by themselves and the burial cloth that had been around Jesus' head folded by itself separate from the linen are clear proofs of the reality of the resurrection. Then; how was it possible for Jesus to get out of these linen shrouds which were wrapped strictly around His body?

And if anyone had stolen the body how could He have denudated it from the strips of linen sticking to it?

And what is the aim and the use of separating the linen cloth from the body? How did this event take place very quietly while the soldiers were on guard?

Thus, it is not strange to read in the Bible that " Then the other disciple, who came to the tomb first, went in also; and he saw and believed. " (John 20:8)

The Lie Concocted About The Stealing Of The Body

It is incomprehensible for any-one to believe that the disciples stole Christ's body because they will not benefit by stealing it.

Moreover, on grasping Jesus, they escaped because they were afraid of the Jews.

Also, it is something unbelievable for the disciples to contrive the tale of the resurrection and suffer imprisonment and flogging and face death for the sake of a false and untrue story.

No-one can believe that the disciples denuded their master from His shrouds and took Him naked.

If they had done so there would have been no dignity either for Him or for them.

You can add to such bad deeds, the loss of time and exposing the matter to be shown up.

What is the use of pretending that Christ has risen from among the dead then they themselves face death for preaching the resurrection and at the same time they have no faith in it?

Indeed, stealing the body was something impossible.

How can they penetrate the lines of the guards at the tomb?

How can they roll the big stone from the entrance of the tomb without making any noise which attracts people's attention and causes the guards to wake up from their sleep?

How can they carry a corpse on Sunday? How can they perform all these matters while the eyes are gazing at the tomb?

How can we believe that the guards were asleep and paid no attention to the severity of the Roman law?

If the sentinels wished to sleep, why didn't they divide the watch-time among themselves and did the thing by turns?

If they were all asleep, how couldn't the noise of the act of stealing the body arouse even some of them?

Why weren't they tried by a court martial for their negligence?

Why did they remain without punishment? Why was there no judicial inquiry about the act of stealing? Why didn't the authorities make any inspection?

The disciples and their dwellings are well known... Where did they hide the stolen body?

How did they bury it on Sunday?

And if the guards were asleep; how did they know that the disciples came at night and stole the body?

Indeed, it was a cunning stratagem of an evil, weak thought, non acceptable by anyone.

It showed the depravity, the falsehood and the lies of those priests and proved their false pretence, the bribes they paid and their deviating people from the truth and from the right course.

What about the great numbers of those eyewitnesses who were contemporary with the resurrection?

Were they liars? Then, how did God make miracles through them if they were impostors and deceivers?

Any how, as the chief priests of the Jews tried to oppose the resurrection before its happening, they also made great efforts to mar its glories after it was accomplished.

For these reasons they were neither religious nor truthful.

They broke the Sabbath when they sealed the tomb and put guards at its entrance.

They told many lies about the resurrection and tempted the guards to say false stories.

They gave bribes to the guards in order to broadcast their lies about the resurrection.

Through their authority and their relations with the governor they could deceive all the people. They persecuted the disciples wrongfully although they know....

As they brought false witnesses during Christ's trial, they also brought other false witnesses to deny His resurrection.

Also, the chief priests of the Jews were not men of faith.

They did not believe in the miracles done by Christ during His life among them.

Although the miracle of the resurrection was very clear before them, they did not believe in it.

Moreover, they had no faith in the miracles done by the disciples in the name of Christ.

Their hearts were closed completely before the clear truth.

They proved that they would have no respondence to any miracle even if they witnessed it.

They also did not believe in the disciples' preaching the Gospel.

Christ's resurrection frightened them because His existence used to tire them and reveal their wrong deeds.

So, they rejoiced when they thought that, by His crucifixion, they got rid of Him.

The phrase "The living Christ" tires the sinners but gladdens the righteous. There are many men like the priests of the Jews. They wish to get rid of Christ because His existence admonishes them with their wrong deeds.

CHAPTER SIX

The Blessings Of The Resurrection In Our Life

1. Everything is possible:

Nothing is impossible Men do their best in all fields but if they stand before God they will stop both work and abilities completely for every attempt will be of no use.

This was the sensation of Mary and Martha after the death of their brother Lazarus who had already been in the tomb for four days. It was said about him "By this time, there is a bad odour".

When The Lord Jesus Christ raised him from death, they became sure that nothing is impossible. After Jesus had raised Lazarus from death, this Lazarus died once more and has not risen yet.

But Jesus Christ, by His own resurrection, conquered and smashed death forever.

Christ's resurrection was an eternal one after which there would be no more death.
Paul, the apostle looked at the power of this resurrection and said "O Death, where [is] your sting? O Hades, where [is] your victory?" (1 cor 15:55).

Indeed, death was broken up and everything became possible.

Not only did men believe that all things are possible with God (Matt 19:26) who is able to do everything but the apostle also says " I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me. "

(Phil 4:13) He also said " that I may know Him and the power of His resurrection … " (Phil 3:10)

The Holy Bible gives us a general rule about "impossibility" and says " All things are possible to him who believes." (Mark 9:23)

The resurrection has given men a gigantic power.

As death has been conquered and smashed before them, all the obstacles and difficulties became smooth and easy and there was no impossibility. What else did the resurrection present? What is its second blessing?

2. Longing for the eternal life.

The apostle said "I desire to depart and be with Christ , which is better by far. "(Phil 1:23)

The apostle desires to be with Christ who rose from among the dead and went up to heaven, then sat on the right of God. Christ who said " And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all [peoples] to Myself."(John 12:32)

Christ who said " I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to Myself; that where I am, there you may be also. " (John 14:2,3)

Love of eternal life made men long for some-thing greater than life on earth, more dignified than substance and elements and more powerful than any desire or lust on earth.

The saints looked at the earth as a remote strange foreign land. They considered themselves aliens and foreigners.

They longed for a heavenly residence. They wished to lead a spiritual and eternal life.

Also, men longed for the other world where there is no sorrow, no gloominess, no sighing, no sin, no hatred and no fights. A world of love, joy, peace and purity, where there is no evil and where the good prevails.

3. By means of the resurrection the human nature is cleared up both physically and spiritually.

As for the bodies; some are raised spiritual and imperishable. They do not become tired, or hungry. They do not feel thirsty. They never fall ill or decompose.

They become like the angels of God in heaven. They rise taking the similarity of "His glorified body".

How thrilling and magnificent is this revealment through which the human nature becomes glorified.

Indeed, this brings back to our minds the happenings of the transfiguration on Mount Tabour.

Also, the spirit takes part in the transfiguration. It returns as it had been in the beginning and resembles God's image and likeness in an inexpressible purity.

Some approaches to the resurrection

Many miracles took place during Christ's crucifixion. The sun gave no light and darkness came over the land. The curtain of the temple was torn in two from top to bottom. Earthquakes shook the earth and the rocks split and the tombs broke open. But did all men make use of these miracles? No, everyone benefited by them according to the aptitude and readiness of his heart.

When the earth shook, the robber believed in Christ while the priests and their chiefs did not believe in Him.

When blood and water drew out of Christ's side the centurion and his soldiers believed in Him while the leaders of the people denied Him and His resurrection.

The matter is not connected with the miracle and its might and strength but with the inner readiness of man's heart and his wish to benefit by it.

As for the miracle of the man who was born blind and whom Christ healed, the man himself believed in Christ but the Pharisees did not trust the man although the miracle was very powerful and clear.

They became agitated because the man defended Christ who healed him. So, they threw the man out of the Synagogue. (John 9:34)

Also, when Christ healed the man with the paralysed hand they refused to make use of the miracle pretending that it was made on the Sabbath. All these matters remind us of the Parable of the Sower which the Lord explained.

The growth of the plants depends on the kind of the soil. Is it formed of stony layers; is it good for sowing; is it full of thorns?

The sower is the same sower; the seeds are the same seeds but the soil on which the sower scatters the seeds differs in regard to its reclamation, its efficiency and its acceptance to the divine sowing.

This is what happened in regard to the story of the resurrection and the story of the crucifixion.

The miracles have taken place but the people differed from each other; some benefited by them while others gained nothing.

Seeds on a stony soil

Although the chief priests and the leaders of the Jewish people witnessed the darkness that spread at the time of Christ's crucifixion, yet they got no benefit because their hearts were darker than the obscurity and the darkness that covered the whole world.

Even after the miracles in which the right robber and the Centurion believed, they went to Pilate and said "Sir, we remember, while He was still alive, how that deceiver said, 'After three days I will rise.' Therefore command that the tomb be made secure until the third day, lest His disciples come by night and steal Him away, and say to the people, 'He has risen from the dead.' So the last deception will be worse than the first." (Matt 27:62-64)

Thus, they took some soldiers with them and went to the tomb to make it secure.

They sealed the tomb and set some soldiers to guard it.

They did all that on the Sabbath although they criticised Jesus and said that He was a sinner because He healed the sick on the Sabbath.

They were very enthusiastic and had great zeal for the Sabbath. They contracted the enmity of Christ because of this day "The Sabbath".

Moreover, they claimed from the authorities to break the bones of the crucified and to bring them down from the crosses lest they should contaminate the Sabbath.

What a strange zeal for the Sabbath!!?

In spite of this enthusiasm, they, in the evening before the Sabbath, took the soldiers with them, sealed the tomb and set the guards to keep its entrance on the Sabbath without considering their deed as a sin.

After sealing the tomb, they seemed to say in their hearts "We have broken the Sabbath in order that we may break the one who infringed the Sabbath".

While they were sealing the tomb, Christ, Himself, set free the redeemed and rescued them from hell, and disjoined the seals of the closed paradise, then, let in those who have fallen asleep in hope.

It is very easy for men to play with their consciences as they wish.

Some persons have consciences which resemble the balls which roll on every side and in every direction till they come to a stop.

Indeed, the chiefs of the Jews were of the same moulds.

What they have done was against them and not in their interest.

If they themselves had not sealed the tomb and set their own guards at its entrance they would have been able to protest and say that the disciples stole the body. But, now, they have set the guards and sealed the tomb. What could they say about the empty tomb?

Christ has risen from among the dead with great glory and came out of the sealed tomb as He had come out of Saint Mary's womb while she remained virgin.

After Christ's resurrection " And behold, there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat on it. His countenance was like lightning, and his clothing as white as snow. And the guards shook for fear of him, and became like dead men." (Matt 28:2-4)

Did the guards benefit from of this great miracle? Did the priests and the elders benefit from it?

No, the sacred seeds had fallen on a stony soil.

How truthful our Father Abraham was when he said " If they do not hear Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rise from the dead. " (Luke 16:31)

If we can fumble for an excuse for the Gentile soldiers who do not know anything about Christ and His glory, what about the priests and the teachers of the law.

They should have taken care of God's commandments and their execution.

When they heard of the resurrection from the guards, they gave them bribes and put false words on their tongues and told them "…Tell them, ”His disciples came at night and stole Him [away] while we slept.' And if this comes to the governor's ears, we will appease him and make you secure." So they took the money and did as they were instructed; and this saying is commonly reported" (Matt 28:11-15).

Thus, they did not only make use of the miracle of the resurrection but their wickedness and their evil grew more also.

Not only did they tell lies but they taught others to be liars.

Their falsehood was not perfect. They suggested to them to say that the disciples stole Him while they were asleep.

If you were asleep how could you know that He was stolen by His disciples!?

Indeed, lies' string is too short.

They were not satisfied with their lies. They placed some accusations to others, falsely and spuriously.

They accused disciples of theft. They paid bribes to cover their deeds. They spoiled the soldiers' fame, deceived the ruler and misled the people and cheated them.

In spite of all this deviation from the truth they described Christ as a delusive deceiver as if they wished to say to Pilate "Rescue the people from this deceiver in order that we may delude them.

Scattering the seeds of the miracle of the resurrection in the hearts of those leaders is like sowing them in a stony soil. So the miracle did not affect them.

Their care of keeping their posts trespassed their thinking of eternity.

From their behaviour we can see how man glides down from sin to sin, then, rolls down in a long endless chain of sins.

The principle of their sins is love of worthless glory. This love led them to resentment.

They envied Christ because they wished to be the most outstanding nation without competitors.

What would be the matter with that Nazarene who covered their fame and revealed their hypocrisy?

Resentment led their leaders to weave conspiracies which led them to be false witnesses in Christ's judgment; to treat Him with cruelty during His crucifixion and to delude all the people.

This wrong attitude led them to fear, and fear guided them to seal the tomb and set the guards at its entrance although it was the Sabbath.

Certainly, they took the people in their partnership in breaking the Sabbath.

These sins, revealed by the resurrection, led them to bribery, telling lies, apostasy, instigation to evil and deluding the people.

By such bad deeds, they wished to become magnificent in their own eyes and in people's eyes as well. In fact they lost themselves and gained neither heaven nor earth.

They are a stony soil. They are a sin surrounded by fear. They feared Christ even after His death. They feared His resurrection lest it should destroy what they had done. They felt that He still had work to do.

It is well-known that the killer always fears the ghost of the killed person.

Psychologists were true when they said that the killer hovers about the place of the crime. So the Jews, continued hovering about the spot of their crime.

The disciples forgot that He had told them that He would rise on the third day but those priests and elders, who were afraid of Christ, did not forget His words. They said to Pilate: " We remember, while He was still alive, how that deceiver said, 'After three days I will rise.' "

It is something strange that they remembered that phrase and did not remember His words "I and My Father are one." John 10:30)

They did not remember the deeds done by Him, which no one had carried out before Him.

They did not remember how He raised Lazarus from death after four days.

They did not remember how He offered sight to the born blind. They only remembered His resurrection because it disturbed them and made their thoughts uneasy. So they committed crimes to get rid of their troubles.

They seemed to be samples of those seeds which were scattered on the stony soil.

There were many other samples. There were some seeds which sprouted but thorns choked them afterwards.

Mary the Magdalene was the most outstanding example during the events of the resurrection.

As for the effect of the resurrection on the disciples, we say that it was like the seeds which were picked up by the birds.

The birds, in regard to the disciples, are the devil of doubt which snatched their faith and flew away.

How did these matters take place? How did Christ change them into a good cultivable land which yielded hundred fold.

How did He restore faith to their hearts and to Mary Magdalene's heart as well?

Seeds snatched by the birds

What happened was heavy and cruel to God's heart.

Even His disciples doubted in His resurrection and did not believe in it.

But He did not face such doubts with admonition. He embraced their weakness with love and treated their doubts with convincing.

Mary Magdalene went and told them about the resurrection of the Lord. " And when they heard that He was alive and had been seen by her, they did not believe." (Mark 16:11)

When the women returned from the tomb and told them about God's resurrection “ And their words seemed to them like idle tales, and they did not believe them.” (Luke 24:11)

When the Lord came up and walked along with the disciples from Emmaus " Now behold, two of them were traveling that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was seven miles from Jerusalem. " (Luke 24:13)

When Jesus Himself stood among them, they did not believe that He rose but " But they were terrified and frightened, and supposed they had seen a spirit. " (Luke 24:37)

The devil of doubts could snatch the seeds of faith which God had scattered on their soil, so the Lord condescended and came down to their weakness in order that He might convince them of His resurrection.

In the same way He behaved with the two disciples of Emmaus who were not intelligent as He " And beginning at Moses and all the Prophets, He expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself. " (Luke 24:27)

He stayed with them till " Then their eyes were opened and they knew Him; …" (Luke 24:31). Then they went and told the Eleven.

The Lord, also, condescended to the weakness of the Eleven and said to them "Why are you troubled? And why do doubts arise in your hearts? Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself. Handle Me and see, for a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have." (Luke 24:38,39)

Then, He, who rose in a glorified body, condescended to convince them and asked them ; "Have you any food here?" " So they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish and some honeycomb. And He took it and ate in their presence. " (Luke 24:43)

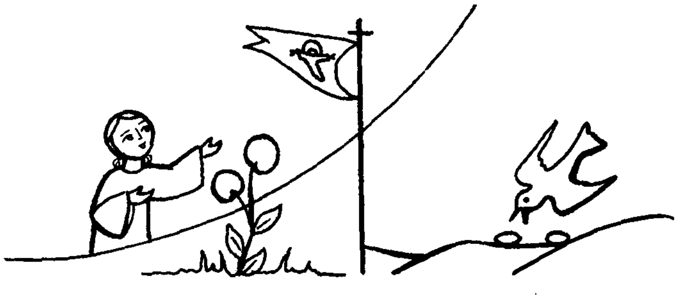
As Thomas was absent, the Lord showed Himself especially to him to reveal his doubts and to convince him.

The Lord stayed with them till they became sure and believed. " He also presented Himself alive after His suffering by many infallible proofs, being seen by them during forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. " (Acts 1:3)

He did not leave them but appeared to them over a period of forty days and spoke about the kingdom of God.

He sent away the birds which used to snatch their seeds. He changed them into a good soil which did not give thirty only but sixty and hundred also.

Their faith became a big fruitful tree which yielded all kinds of good fruit.



CHAPTER SEVEN

The Resurrection Is Joy And Gladness

1. On announcing the good news to the women, the two angels said to them "Why do you seek the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen! " (Luke 24:5,6)

The phrase "The living Christ" caused great joy to the disciples while it caused terror to the chiefs of the Jews and to the sinners as well.

This phrase did not only intimidate them at the time of the resurrection and preaching it but this fear will chase them till the next coming of Christ and will pursue and follow them in the Dooms-day.

About this the Bible says " Behold, He is coming with clouds, and every eye will see Him, even they who pierced Him. And all the tribes of the earth will mourn because of Him. Even so. " (Rev 1:7)

Like the priests of the Jews, there were many who wished to get rid of Christ lest He should reprimand and show them up.

2. Christ's resurrection was a joy and gladness to the disciples and to us also.

The day of crucifixion was a mournful and a distressing day as to the psychic side but as for the divine side, it was a day of deliverance.

The people witnessed the pains, vituperations, insults, spittle and nails only, but they did not witness either the deliverance or the opening of Paradise's gate and how the sleeping in hope were transferred to it.

The disciples were filled with terror but they rejoiced when they saw the Lord.

Equal to the disciples ' grief and restlessness on Friday, there were much more joy on Saturday because of the resurrection. Thus, the words of the Lord were verified " but I will see you again and your heart will rejoice, and your joy no one will take from you." (John 16.-22)

They rejoiced because they saw the Lord. They saw Him alive outside the tomb after thinking that there would be no future meeting.

They, also, rejoiced because the Lord obtained victory in His combat against falsehood and that He " … who always leads us in triumph in Christ, … " (2 Cor 2:14)

They also rejoiced because they got rid of their enemy's gloating and malevolence as well as their disturbance, anxiety and disappearance.

At that time, they were able to go out of their places and face the situation and speak publicly with might and power about Christ's resurrection.

They rejoiced because the cross was not the end of the story.

The end of it was the gladdening and cheering resurrection which removed and eliminated the pains of Golgotha and Gethsemane and the events which took place before and after them.

He said to them "I will see you again and you will rejoice " .

We celebrate the joys of the resurrection which give the sensation that the Lord is living with us and among us and that no tomb can enclose Him, who holds all men in His heart. The disciples rejoiced at Christ's resurrection.

They also rejoiced when they saw Him. His resurrection was the point which changed both their history and the history of Christianity.

3. By means of the resurrection and by this material proof which they witnessed, they rejoiced and believed that it was something possible.

So, Saint John, the apostle, said about Him " which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, " (1 John 1:1)

Saint Peter, the Apostle, said " Us who ate and drank with Him after He arose from the dead. " (Acts 10:41)

By means of the resurrection the disciples' fear changed into courage, boldness and non observance of the powers and forces which declare war against the word of God.

Thus, after the resurrection, saint Peter could say " We ought to obey God rather than men. " (Acts 5:29)

By means of the resurrection, the disciples never feared anything.

All that their enemies can do, is to threaten them with death. But what can death do to those who have seen the resurrection and believed in it!?

Thus, Christianity believes that death is mere transition and "To die is gain " and "it is better by far" and "never feared by anyone. "

4. By means of the resurrection, the disciples felt that they were overshaded with a powerful God.

They believed in Him "who holds the keys of death and Hades."

Life is in Him. He is the resurrection and the life. He who believes in Him will live, even though he dies. He is the source of life not only on earth but in the eternal life also.

5. The disciples rejoiced because the Lord kept His promise with them.

Because the promises of Christ, that He would rise and that they would see Him, were fulfilled; they believed in the other promises as " … I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to Myself; that where I am, there you may be also. " (John 14:2,3)

They had confidence in what He said about sending the Counsellor to them (John 16:7) and that "they will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes on them. (Acts 1:8)

They believed in His promise " I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt 28:20)

All these promises gave them power, faith and joy.

6. Not only did the disciples rejoice at the resurrection but they also, with pleasure, met the pains caused to them as a result of giving testimony in favour of the resurrection. Pain had a new conception in the minds and feelings of the disciples because they had the " *But we have the mind of Christ. ". (1 Cor 2:16).

They became convinced that pain was the way to glory as it happened with Christ through His crucifixion.

They put this perception before them " We suffer with Him, that we may also be glorified together." (Rom 8:17)

So, he tolerated and suffered pains saying " As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing. " (2 Cor 6: 10)

7. By means of the resurrection, the cross became honour and glory but not pain.

The disciples were not disturbed any more. So, Paul, the Apostle, says " Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in needs, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake." (2 Cor 12:10) He also says "As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing ."(2 Cor 6:10).

8. The resurrection became joy to all the believers and good news for the general resurrection.

The resurrection gave the Christians hope and trust in the other world. So, they concentrated all their desires in it and renounced worldly pleasures.

All that Christianity proclaimed about the life of devoutness, religious devotion and monasticism and forsaking the world depends on believing in the resurrection and longing for the other world which surpasses all earthly desires.

Thus, in every liturgy, the church repeats the words of the apostle " Do not love the world or the things in the world. … And the world is passing away, and the lust of it; … " (1 John 2:15-17)

9. In the joys of the resurrection they rejoiced at the kingdom and the eternal paradise which would come afterwards.

They knew that, after the resurrection, there would be great happiness. Saint Paul, the Apostle, could say about these matters "Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, Nor have entered into the heart of man The things which God has prepared for those who love Him." (1 Cor 2:9)

The same apostle spoke about the crown prepared for the righteous saying " Finally, there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give to me on that Day, and not to me only but also to all who have loved His appearing. " (2Tit 4:8)

In the "Revelation" God explained other glories which those who overcome will get after the resurrection. He spoke about the tree of life, the crown of life, the hidden manna authority, the morning star and the white robes ... (Rev 2,3)

How beautiful his words were when He said "To him who overcomes I will grant to sit with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat down with My Father on His throne. " (Rev 3:21)

We cannot separate the resurrection from its glories for which the saints longed for death.

Saint Paul said " Having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. " (Phil 1:23). He also said "and be with the Lord all the time. "

In "Revelation", saint John spoke about the new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven which is the dwelling of God with men.

Indeed, how beautiful is the resurrection which leads to all that we, in hope, are waiting for rejoicing at the Lord and His promises.

10. Thus, the resurrection gave us hope to be with Christ forever.

The joy of the resurrection is not only to rise from death but also to rise with Christ and live with Him.

So, the resurrection, in itself, became a means and not end aimed at.

It is a means to live with God and enjoy His companionship in continuous inexpressible and glorious joy, with the queues of His angels and saints.

The resurrection has become the desire and the passion and the faith of all men.

They consider it the way to eternity and living with God which is the aim of our life on earth.

11. At the time of Christ's resurrection, the disciples who had been afraid of being related to Him, rejoiced at being His followers.

In the past, they were so terrified of being attributed to Him that Peter, the night before judgment, denied his relationship with Christ and with an oath he said "I do not know the Man!" (Matt 26:74)

Now, after the resurrection, they became proud of Him.

They rejoiced because the Lord, by His own will, appeared to them for forty days, in the attic in Jerusalem, on the shores of the sea of Tiberias, and in Galilee.

They were filled with joy because the Lord spoke with them, tranquillised their hearts, forgave Peter's denial, convinced Thomas of his doubts and came down to their weakness in order that He might elevate them to his power without rebuking them because of their escape, hiding, and doubt.

12. They rejoiced because The Lord Jesus Christ searched for them after His resurrection.

The time He spent with them was a period of dressing their wounds, removing their doubts and forgiveness for their sins.

It was an interval of preparation for the coming service.

The Lord spent with them forty days through which He showed Himself to them " Speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. " (Acts 1:3).He gave them many convincing proofs that He was alive.

13. They rejoiced because through Christ's appearance to them, they perceived His glory and His greatness.

With a light from heaven flashed around Him, He showed Himself to Saul of Tarsus that he fell to the ground puzzled. (Acts 9:3-6)

He appeared to John the visionary. " His countenance was like the sun shining in its strength. And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. " (Rev 1:16,17)

14. The disciples rejoiced because, after the resurrection, they were trusted with a mission.

The Lord said to them "Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt 28:19,20) " Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He who believes and is baptised will be saved; … And these signs will follow those who believe … " (Mark 16:15-17)

Thus, they had a mission, a great and important one for which they Eve and do their best for its ascertainment. Thus, they will be crowned and the words of the Lord " I will make you fishers of men." (Matt 4:19) will be realised.

Undoubtedly, Peter has rejoiced when the Lord said to him after the resurrection "Feed My lambs. ", "Tend My sheep." (John 21:15,16)

No doubt, all the disciples rejoiced when the Lord, after the resurrection said to them "Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive anyone his sins, they are forgiven; if you do not forgive them, they are not forgiven. … As the Father has sent Me, I also send you. -" (John 20:21-23)

15. After the resurrection, the disciples rejoiced at the spiritual body because The Lord Jesus Christ will raise their bodies as He rose.

This transfiguration which will happen to human nature after rising from death was mentioned with extended detail by Saint Paul, the Apostle who said "So will it be with the resurrection of the dead. The body that is sown perishable, it is raised imperishable,. it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. (1 Cor 15:42-44).

He also said about Jesus Christ " who will transform our lowly body that it may be conformed to His glorious body, … " (Phil 3:21) take note of "Like His glorious body".

These words give us an idea how beautiful the other world is. They, also, give us a notion about its spirituality and the resplendence of the spirit when it is freed from the bonds of materiality and the abilities of the spirit and its talents.

16. The resurrection supported preaching the Gospel with confidence and faith.

Confidence in Christ who rose from among the dead; with whom the disciples lived forty days after the resurrection " He also presented Himself alive after His suffering by many infallible proofs, being seen by them during forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. " (Acts 1:3)

John, the Apostle, said about Him "Which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked at and our hands have touched. " (1 John)

A summary of the disciples' joys:

"Then the disciples were glad when they saw the Lord." (John 20:20). Joy remained with them as a plain course of their life.

They rejoiced at the Lord's resurrection. They were very happy when He showed Himself to them.

They rejoiced at His true promises and at the resurrection in general.

They rejoiced at His triumph over death. They were glad because the Jews would not gloat over them any more.

They rejoiced at the power they were given. They were very glad because of the mission which the Lord gave them after the resurrection.

They were delighted with the spreading of preaching the Gospel.

They were happy in spite of the persecutions and the difficulties they met because of their testimony in favour of God.

The Bible said about them " So they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name. " (Acts 5:41)

They rejoiced also because He fulfilled His promise and sent to them the Holy Spirit.

They rejoiced when He said to them " But tarry in the city of Jerusalem until you are endued with power from on high." (Luke 24:48)

They rejoiced at His saying "For where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there in the midst of them." (Matt 18:20) and His saying " I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt 28:20)

CHAPTER EIGHT

The Lord Jesus Christ's Resurrection Its Power And Its Effectiveness

There is a great difference between the two days

They were two days. As for the human senses, they were diametrically opposite: Friday, 14th of Nisan and Sunday 16th of Nisan, the year 34 AD

Friday was a gloomy day in regard to all the disciples and the followers of Christ.

It was an exciting and thrilling surprise which they never expected to happen to their great teacher.

The conspiracy which was accomplished very soon. It was woven very quickly; the crowds who shouted all the louder "Crucify Him; Crucify Him".(Luke 23:21),(John 19:6) the disciple who betrayed His master in return for thirty silver coins, the series of insults to which the Lord was exposed as cursing, derision, mockery, slapping on the face, spittle in addition to the pains caused by the thorns, the flogging and fastening on the cross with nails.

Was it true that everything had been accomplished so rapidly.

Did the doer of the miracles and the great teacher who amazed all men become so delusive and deceptive that the authorities crucified Him between two robbers?

And those who benefited by His love, kindness and miracles disappeared from existence! Even His disciples scattered and escaped and left Him alone as it is written " I will strike the Shepherd, And the sheep of the flock will be scattered." (Matt 26:31) (Zech 13:7)

Peter Himself, the most enthusiastic among the disciples denied his master before a servant girl and called down curses and swore to the people that he did not know the man (Matt 26:74)

As for Christ's enemies, they got grip of everything. They could hold the Sanhedrin and take a decision against him. They could excite people's anger and make them repeat their words.

They could make an impression on the governor till he rendered a judgment against Christ although he said “ … I find no fault in Him." (John 19:4) that he had found no fault in Christ

So, evil seemed so triumphant and cruel and the words of Christ to those rulers we fulfilled " But this is your hour, and the power of darkness." (Luke 22:53)

All that the devil could do was done. He could get rid of Christ who was beloved by all men and followed by thousands who were amazed by His instructions. Jesus, " He laid His hands on every one of them and healed them. " (Luke 4:40)

He also raised the dead, gave sight to the blind and, by His power, evil spirits came out of many.

Even after they killed Him, they made the governor give an order for the tomb to be made secure by putting a seal on the big stone and posting the guard.

They completely felt assured that Christ came to an end. It was a bad end "And He was numbered with the transgressors , … " (Is 53:12). All His followers were scattered ... !!

Thus, that Friday was a distressing one in which injustice predominated, treason and cruelty spread and covetousness and evil obtained victory.

Christ's disciples found themselves perplexed and at a loss. Belonging to Christ was a dangerous matter. Christ was still in the tomb.

Everything was in the hands of the authorities. It seemed that there was no hope in enjoying once more the good days they had spent with their beneficent teacher.

As for the deliverance which was accomplished on the cross, none has felt it. All that was seen by men was that the crucified one seemed too weak to save Himself.

They defied Him saying " If You are the Son of God, come down from the cross … " (Matt 27:40)

In the same way the chief priests, the teachers of the law and the elders mocked Him "He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He is the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him. " (Matt 27:40-42)

Also, one of the criminals who hung there hurled insults at Him "If You are the Christ, save Yourself and us." (Luke 23:39)

In this way, Friday was a day of gloating, injustice and dispersion but something took place and turned the rudder towards the opposite direction, It was the resurrection which shook the whole Jewish existence whether rulers or people.

The resurrection took place at the dawn of Sunday in spite of the existence of the guards, the big stone and the seals.

Great precautions were taken to guard the tomb but the empty tomb stood as a material witness for the resurrection as well as the well arranged strips of linen and the burial cloth that had been around Jesus' head.

The chiefs of the Jews tried, by all means, to deface and disfigure the reality of the resurrection but they could not.

Indeed, the tangible occurrence was much more deeper than all pretence.

Christ appeared alive to His disciples. His appearance banished their fears, encouraged them and gave them an extra-ordinary power to he witnesses for His resurrection.

After His resurrection, Jesus appeared to Mary Magdalene. (Mark 16:9) and to Simon Peter (1 Cor 15:5) and to the two companions of Emmaus. (Luke 24:12-3 1) and to the ten disciples in the absence of Thomas. (Luke 24:33-43) and to the disciples in the presence of Thomas and showed them His wounds. (John 20:26-29)

He, also, appeared to seven of His disciples by the Sea of Tiberias. (John 21:1-7) and to more than five hundred of the brothers at the same time, then appeared to James. (1 Cor 15:6,7) and " He also presented Himself alive after His suffering by many infallible proofs, being seen by them during forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." (Acts 1:3)

He was with them when He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight. (Acts 1:9)

He appeared to Saul from Tarsus; on his journey to Damascus and chose him as an instrument and apostle to carry His name before the Gentiles. (Acts 9:3-15)

All these events gave the disciples a abnormal power. About this the Bible says " And with great power the apostles gave witness to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. And great grace was upon them all. " (Acts 4:33)

What was the power of the resurrection which gave them strength?

The power of the resurrection

The Lord Jesus Christ's resurrection from among the dead was the greatest event that shook the Jews' entity.

By all means, they tried to resist it saying "This last deviation from the truth will be more powerful than the first straying" They meant preaching the Gospel.

Then, what was that power of the resurrection and what were its effects?

1. Christ came out of the tomb while it was closed.

This miraculous performance was not something strange for Jesus as He had come out of Saint Mary's womb while she remained a virgin.

Also, during His appearances to His disciples after the resurrection; while they were gathering together in the attic, He came in and stood among them " when the doors were shut. " (John 20:19)

2. One of the signs which prove the resurrection's power is that Christ rose by Himself and not by others' help.

All those who rose before Him were raised by others' help.

Elijah, the prophet raised the son of the widow at Zarephath. (1 Kin 17:22)

Elisha, the prophet, raised the son of the Shunammite. (2 kin 4:36)

The Lord Jesus Christ raised the daughter of Jairus, and the son of Nain's widow and Lazarus but He rose by Himself because the energy and the power of the resurrection were in Him. It was impossible for death to keep Him under its control because " In Him was life." (John 1:4)

3. The Lord Jesus Christ rose in spite of the stressed guardianship, the strong guards, the seals and the big stone at the entrance of the tomb.

The worldly power used its utmost energy but Christ was stronger than it.

The resurrection proved that it was more powerful than all the obstacles. It was a victory against all Christ's opponents and adversaries; a triumph over death, over Hades, over the tomb, over the big stone, over the seals and over the strips of linen that were wrapped around His body.

Thus, when Saint Paul knew Him, He said " I may know Him and the power of His resurrection. " (Phil 3:10)

Paul knew the power of Christ's resurrection when he saw Him after the resurrection. The Bible says " As he journeyed he came near Damascus, and suddenly a light shone around him from heaven." (Acts 9:3)

Thus, this apostle became sure of Jesus' powerful resurrection and could share in His sufferings, becoming like Him in His death.

Saint John, the beloved one, experienced the same power when Jesus appeared to him " His countenance was like the sun shining in its strength." (Rev 1:16) Inside the tomb, Christ's power was greater than any power outside it.

On sunday, at dawn, He left the tomb in a moment not known by anyone. The stone was in its place till the angel came and rolled it to announce the resurrection which was accomplished. So the women could see the tomb empty.

4. The aspects of His power after the resurrection:

These are some sides of the power which men witnessed on earth, in addition to the powerful numerous appearances; the power of His ascension to heaven and sitting on the right of God; the power of entering the attic with the doors closed and the power of changing the disciples from weak terrified persons into brave heroes who could preach the Gospel with all ability and without any objection.

As His resurrection was powerful, so, there was another power which preceded that resurrection.

5. His power between the time of His death and that of His resurrection.

After His death, it was His own power with which He could open the gates of Hades and go to preach to the spirits in prison. (1 Peter .3:19)

With this power, He could descend to the lower, earthly regions and lead captives in His train and give gifts of redemption to men, then, after the resurrection, He could ascend higher than all heavens, in order to fill the whole universe. (Eph 4:8-10)

6. By His resurrection, The Lord Jesus Christ, proved that He was more powerful than death and that His death and His silence during the judgment were not due to any point of weakness in Him.

If He had spoken, He would have dumbfounded and convinced His audience, but this was not His aim. His aim was to redeem us.

So, when they asked Him to come down from the cross He did not respond to them although He was able to come down. His only aim was to suffer pain and die on behalf of us and pay the price of sin, return and redemption for us.

The resurrection proved that Christ's silence was not weakness.

The power of the resurrection was the strongest reply to those who charged Him with weakness, or those who thought that His crucifixion was a sign of His disability.

By the resurrection, it was proved that Christ's silence had eminent aims.

He kept silent because He wished to give Himself for us. If he had defended himself he would have won the case without any doubt.

Many a time, He answered the chiefs and the elders and the priests of the Jews and they gave no reply.

Moreover, they witnessed the power of His words when He was twelve years old. Even His audience certified that He spoke as one who had authority.

Christ's silence during His judgment was a proof that He died by His own will.

He said about Himself “I lay down my life only to take it up again. No one takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. … " (John 10:18)

He laid it down at the time of crucifixion and took it up at the time of the resurrection.

Jesus has given up the Spirit with love and self sacrifice not because of weakness and disability and as He rose in power, He died in power as well.

When He breathed the last, He cried out with a loud voice while the body was completely exhausted. His water and His blood were drained.

Flogging, walking, beating, bleeding and hanging on the cross made Him powerless.

His body died but His divine spirit remained alive without death.

During His death He could give good news to those who slept on hope. Also, He could open the closed gates of paradise and let in it the robber to be with Adam, his descendants and the saints of the past ages.

He could also rise and His resurrection mocked at the guards, the seals and the big stone at the entrance of the tomb.

It did not happen; in the history of humanity, that anyone other than Christ could overcome death by his own authority; or rose by his own will or went out of a tomb with an entrance closed by a huge stone and guarded with fully armed soldiers.

7. The power of Christ's resurrection smashed the chief priests of the Jews as well as all the Sadducees. It proved their crime of His judgment and His crucifixion.

It proved that all their past pretences were false. So, by the resurrection, they became blamable before the nation.

When the disciples proclaimed the resurrection in every connection, the chief priests said to them "Did we not strictly command you not to teach in this name? And look, you have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this Man's blood on us!" (Acts 5:28)

The power of the resurrection terrified the chiefs of the Jews because it showed His righteousness.

If He had been culpable, He would not have been able to rise from among the dead.

As the resurrection was a proof of His righteousness, the resurrection at the same time proved the injustice of those chiefs and their trumping up charges against Him. Those chiefs who had rejoiced thinking that they had got rid of Him by killing Him.

The speech about His appearance after He had been killed terrified them.

The holy saints did not stop blaming them for this point itself. So, Saint Peter, the Apostle said to them after the miracle of healing the crippled beggar "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God of our fathers, glorified His Servant Jesus, whom you delivered up and denied in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let Him go. But you denied the Holy One and the Just, and asked for a murderer to be granted to you, and killed the Prince of life, whom God raised from the dead, of which we are witnesses.. " (Acts 3:13-15)

8. The Saddukees, in general, do not believe in the resurrection. so, Christ's resurrection was a dangerous practical proof against the proceeding of their creed and instructions.

Thus, with all their power, they resisted the resurrection and opposed the disciples when they announced it.

So, the Bible says " Then the high priest rose up, and all those who were with him (which is the sect of the Sadducees), and they were filled with indignation, and laid their hands on the apostles and put them in the common prison.. " (Acts 5:17,18)

But the power of the resurrection was stronger than their resistance.

Indeed His resurrection from death was more powerful than His coming down the cross.

Moreover, His resurrection proved that He died by His own will and not by force especially because He Himself rose without others' help and by Himself came out of the closed and sealed tomb as He came out of Saint Mary's womb with her virginity sealed.

Indeed as He said about Himself " I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." (John 10:18)

9. His resurrection proved that He was more powerful than death; so, He was stronger than all human powers which kill and put to death.

He was more powerful than the injustice of the evildoers; more powerful than their conspiracies and their authority.

They did all that they could do till they prosecuted Him and fastened Him with nails on the cross.

They defied Him and mocked at Him. They thought they triumphed over Him especially because Christ remained silent all the time of His judgement and challenging Him. " He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, And as a sheep before its shearers is silent." (Is 53:7)

His resurrection proved that His death was a self-sacrifice and not by force.

Trusting His resurrection meant believing in His love, in His self-sacrifice and in redeeming humanity.

It meant trusting His power, His past words about Himself and His relationship with God.

This is the power of the One who died by body and remained alive by His divinity.

It is the power of that One who said to John in the Revelation " … I am the First and the Last. I am He who lives, and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen. And I have the keys of Hades and of Death.. " (Rev 1:17,18). That powerful One " whom God raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that He should be held by it. " (Acts 2:24)

10. The power of Christ's resurrection, with which it was distinguished from other preceding ones, is that there will be no death after it. It will be a continuous eternal resurrection.

All those who had been raised from death died once more and are still under the power of death waiting for the general resurrection.

But Christ has risen alive and will remain so forever. Death has no power over Him. So, the Bible gave Him the surname " the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep." (1 Cor 15:20)

11. One of the clear and strong signs of Christ's resurrection is that it was a glorified one.

He was raised in a glorified body which did not feel tired or feel sick.

A body which did not feel hungry or thirsty. A body which did not become decomposed.

A body which could come out of the tomb with its entrance sealed and could enter with the doors closed. A body which could ascend to heaven.

In the general resurrection, we expect to be raised in the same way as the apostle said " … we also eagerly wait for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will transform our lowly body that it may be conformed to His glorious body, " (Phil 3:20,21)

12. As Christ's resurrection was powerful so was its effect on the church and all men.

It could change the occurrences on every side. The disciples who were afraid and dared not declare openly their relationship with Christ gained a strange power to preach the Gospel.

And Peter, who formerly denied Christ before a slave maid, could bravely say to the chief priests "We ought to obey God rather than men. "(Acts 5:29) "For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." (Acts 4:20)

13. The power gained by the disciples from the resurrection may he concentrated in two points:

a) They knew quite well that Christ was more powerful than death.

He has triumphed over death. As we say in our prayers "By death He trampled over death. " It means that after He died He could trample over death by His resurrection.

The knowledge about this occurrence confirmed their faith and they remembered the Lord saying " I lay down My life that I may take it again. No one takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. " (John 10:17,18)

b) By Christ's resurrection, they knew that they would be raised from death like Him.

Thus, they never feared death. The dread of death was smashed before them when Christ trampled over it and went out of the tomb alive and glorified.

They feared death no more and paid no attention to it. Such bravery remained the characteristic peculiarity of the disciples and of all the members of the church.

Saint Paul, the Apostle, says more than that " Having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." (Phil 1:23)

14. One of the remarkable signs of Christ's resurrection is confirmation of faith.

The Lord Jesus Christ spent forty days with His disciples talking to them about the kingdom of God. (Acts 1:3)

During that period, He confirmed their faith and explained to them everything about Himself in detail.

He put before them all the disciplines of the church, as well as the Liturgy and all the rules of faith and its creeds.

After the period which Christ spent with them after His resurrection, they were filled with spiritual and faithful abilities with which they could face the whole world with steadiness and stability. They spoke about the resurrection from their own experience.

As Saint John, the beloved one, says " That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, … " (1 John 1:1)

The resurrection was no longer a mere theoretical creed but something which they themselves witnessed and viewed.

This experience endowed them with a power of faith that they could spread it all over the world with confidence and certitude.

15. The power of the resurrection appeared in the resurrection itself, in its circumstances, in its results and in what happened after it.

It was not a single resurrection special for The Lord Jesus Christ alone but for all of us.

It was a handsel for the general resurrection, for heavenly Jerusalem and for eternity with its enjoyments and happiness according to God's promises.

The resurrection was so powerful that it revealed Christ's nature - What was it? Who is he who could do such things?

It was also a forepart to the miracle of ascension.

It was a silencing and conclusive answer to the Sadducees who did not believe in the resurrection as they trusted neither in spirits nor in angels.

CHAPTER NINE

Contemplations On The Resurrection

The first thing we observe is the modesty of the Lord when He allowed His crucifixion and the insults of the Jews against Him to occur publicly before all the people. At the same time He made His glorified resurrection in private and a secret not seen by anyone.

He did not rise in glory before all men in order that He might be compensated for the insults and the reproach caused to Him during the crucifixion but He rose in secret.

He chose the dawn to be the time of His resurrection because at that time all human were sleeping.

He chose the dawn in order that no one might see Him during His glorious resurrection.

He was far from the dazzling views of His resurrection as it happened on His birthday.

Then, He appeared to Mary Magdalene, to the other Mary, to Peter, to the women, to the two of Emmaus, to the Eleven, to Saul from Tarsus and to some of the brothers .... to the favourites, to His own but not to those who formerly gloated on Him.

In spite of all that, the resurrection which took place in secret troubled the Jews and caused to them terror beyond measure. They made great efforts to oppose it or at least to prevent people from believing in it .... but in vain.

When they found that they had failed in preventing the occurrence of the resurrection by setting the guards, the big stone and the seals, they wished to prevent it from being conveyed to men in another way, by telling lies, with bribery and by rumours.

When their trials failed and they could not prevent the news of the resurrection by their false means and when the news spread all over the world through the preaching of the disciples they resorted to another stratagem.

They tried to prevent preaching the resurrection by arresting the disciples, flogging them, putting them in jails and making complaints to the governors against them.

All the human plans done to prevent men from believing in the resurrection failed.

It was true when the Bible said " No weapon formed against you shall prosper. " (Is 54:17)

What was the secret of this great resurrection? Its secret was that for the first time and also for the last time a person could rise from death by himself. He was raised by no one.

Indeed, this occurrence terrified them.

The Lord Jesus Christ has fulfilled what He said about Himself. "No one can take it from Him." " I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." (John 10:18)

The powerful Nazarene has triumphed over them. That Nazarene whom death could not conquer.

That Nazarene who trod death down and rose at the time He had fixed and according to His former prophecies. No one could oppose His resurrection. But why didn't Christ appear to them after the resurrection? Wasn't it suitable to convince them to believe in Him!?

He did not appear to them because they were unworthy of Him... Even if He had appeared to them, they would not have believed in him.

This point reminds us of what Abraham, the Father of Fathers had said to the rich man who was contemporary with poor Lazarus “If they do not hear Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rise from the dead”(Luke 16:31)

Moreover, the Lord Jesus Christ made many other miracles before them and they did not believe in Him.

When He healed the born blind they said to the man "We know that this Man is a sinner." (John 9:24)

During the crucifixion, darkness came over all the land; the earth shook and the rocks split; the curtain of the temple was torn into two from top to bottom and some of the holy people who had died were raised to life and in spite of all these occurrences they did not believe in Him.

He did not appear to them because they were not only unworthy of Him but also because they had no faith. Then, why did He not appear to other men?

The Lord Jesus Christ left a field for faith about which Paul, the apostle, said " … faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. " (Heb 11:1)

If the resurrection had been something visible it would have been added to the circle of viewing and not to that of faith because faith means: "to be certain of what we do not see."

It was enough that when He appeared to the rulers, all men believed in Him through them.

As for faith, all men could not bear this matter, so, when Christ appeared in His resurrection, He did not appear in His glory, even to His own, because they could not bear it.

With the two of Emmaus, who did not know Him at first, He spoke to them gradually.

With Mary Magdalene, He hid His personality that she thought Him to be the gardener; then He revealed Himself bit by bit.

As for Saul, from Tarsus; when Jesus appeared to him in some of His glory, his eyes were blinded by the radiant light of Christ's face, then He healed him.

Also, when Jesus appeared in some of His glory to Saint John, the beloved one, he fell to Christ's feet as if he were dead. The Lord raised him and told him not to be afraid.

Indeed, who can bear seeing Christ in His glory? But as for His modesty, it was enough for Him to make Himself nothing.

He will appear to them with His glory in the second coming and then they will say to the mountains, "Cover us!" and to the hills, "Fall on us!" and all nations on earth will mourn.

With the spirit and power of the resurrection Christianity began its glorious history.

The disciples went forward into a new epoch of power. " And with great power the apostles gave witness to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. And great grace was upon them all. " (Acts 4:33)

All the attempts they had done to smash Christ, He Himself smashed by His resurrection.

Even the devil himself was completely destroyed by this resurrection.

The Christ who conquered death and who said " … I have overcome the world. … " (John 16:33) is able to do everything. He can always lead us in His victorious procession.

This triumphant, the rising from the dead, can lead a group of the triumphant ones and give them from His grace and from His power.

Thus, the defenceless Christianity could face Judaism and other ancient religion. It, also, could stand firm before pagan philosophies, Roman authorities, conspiracies, judgments and persecutions.

Christianity remained persisting and moved forward under the power of Christ, the rising from the dead, till it changed the Roman nation to a Christian one.

Paganism disappeared from the world and the whole land became for God and His Christ.

Also, the resurrection of the body was a sign of rising from sin.

About this matter, the apostle said "And you He made alive, who were dead in trespasses and sins. ", "and raised us up together, and made us sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, " (Eph 2:1,6)

May we all live under the power of the resurrection. This resurrection which changed the disciples and made the empty tomb a sign of perpetual triumph.

This resurrection which was the beginning of the power in the life of the first church.

Some Of The Occurrences Of The Resurrection

The Lord Jesus Christ, glory be to Him, did not stop work for the benefit of humanity even when His body was in the tomb.

He has done work between the crucifixion and the resurrection.

God, by His resurrection, sanctified the human nature which is liable to death and made it liable to the resurrection.

Before the resurrection, God, also, worked for our sake even when His body was on the tomb.

By means of death His spirit was separated from His body but His divinity never separated from His soul or His body.

His spirit, united with His divine nature, could do a wonderful rescuing action for the sake of those who are sleeping on hope.

With His death He paid the price of sin and bought us by His blood. So, after He redeemed humanity, it was His right to carry the sleeping from Hades to Paradise and it was so.

With His spirit, united with divinity, He went down to Hades to say the good news to the sleeping there on hope. " … He also first descended into the lower parts of the earth? When He ascended on high, He led captivity captive, And gave gifts to men." (Eph 4:8).

He opened the gate of paradise and carried to Him the righteous who were waiting in Hades. With them, He also let in the right robber to paradise.

Indeed, how trustful He was when He said to Saint John, the visionary, "And I have the keys of Hades and of Death." (Rev 1:18) (Phil 4:3)

Indeed, blessed are those whose names are written in the book of life because death has no authority on them.

They may stay there for a time, as Jonah remained in the belly of the huge fish (whale) then He rescued him safely without any harm.

Thus, God brought out those who were in Hades and by His authority He let them into Paradise.

This great deed was done by god in secret. Heaven praised God. The sayings of the prophets were accomplished and in secret, also, the Lord rose from the dead.

His spirit, united with His divinity, came and united with the body which was united with divinity, then, He was raised by the power of His divinity and went out of the tomb with its seals.

The Women Carrying Spices And Perfumes

It was something strange that the women took spices and perfumes and went to the tomb while these perfumes do not agree with believing in the resurrection.

But the Lord took interest in their love and treated the defect found in their faith.

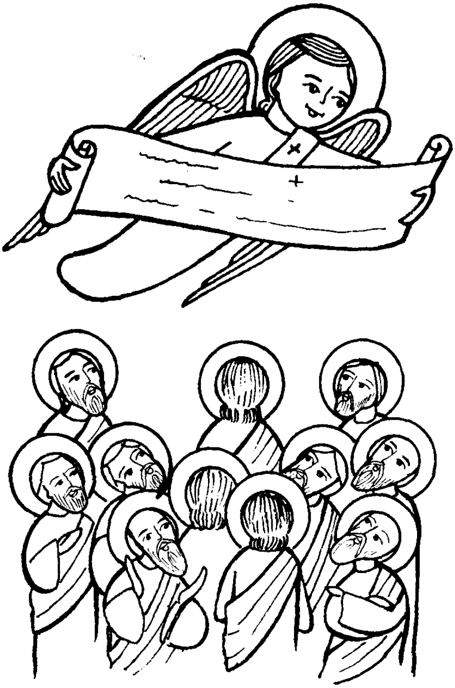
Did they carry the perfumes for the body which was in the tomb? Hadn't they the faith that Christ had risen and left the tomb?

Thus, the good tidings of the angel revealed the same meaning when he said to the two Marys "I know that you seek Jesus who was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen, as He said. " (Matt 28:5,6)

The same words of reproach were said to the women, who were carrying the perfumes and the spices, but with clearer style "Why do you seek the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen! Remember how He spoke to you when He was still in Galilee, saying, 'The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.' And they remembered His words." (Luke 24:5-8)

Yes, He, formerly, said that He would rise from the dead. He did not only say those words to the women but many a time, he said them to His disciples also.

If the Lord informed the disciples of His resurrection and they did not believe Him, how much the more would those women be?



The Disciples' Doubts

The resurrection of Christ was an occurrence never happened before as He rose by Himself without any help from others and His strange words, never said by anyone before, were verified. “ I lay down My life that I may take it again. No one takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This command I have received from My Father." (John 10:17-18).

Who dared say such words except Christ? So, His resurrection distracted the minds. It was above intelligence especially after the events of the cross and the pains and the insults directed to Him. And after the potency and authority with which the Jews treated Him.

Thus, it was not easy for the disciples to believe in the resurrection while they were afraid and hiding in the attic.

On the cross, He said "It is finished" which meant that the redemption was completed and the price of sin was paid.

But, there was another work for Him to complete. It was a work special for patronage.

Before Him, there were righteous persons who were troubled and in need of soothing.

What would He do to strengthen their weakness and to banish their doubts and fears?

He did not wish to blame these persons kindly for their weakness or for their doubts or for their ingratitude but He came to soothe them.

As He formerly said that He had not come to judge the people but to save them; how much the more His own who were in the world, He now showed them the full extent of His love. (John 13)

Saint John said about this love "We love Him because He first loved us." (1 John 4:19).

He did the same thing with Thomas who doubted in His resurrection and insisted on putting his finger in the places of the wounds. He did not blame him kindly for his doubts but tackled the matter with him.

Jesus responded to Thomas and let him put his finger to be sure of the places of the wounds.

The same thing happened with Peter, with Mary Magdalene and with the two from Emmaus.

The Lord wished to strengthen the faith of those persons who would carry faith all over the world and it was so.

Thus, the matter was not limited by His resurrection, but there happened many appearances afterwards.

He stayed with the disciples for forty days during which " … after His suffering by many infallible proofs, being seen by them during forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. to whom He also presented Himself alive" (Acts 1:3)

What did the Bible say about the disciples who did not believe in that resurrection and their repeated doubts which caused others to stumble?

The Holy Bible says that He appeared first to Mary Magdalene " … She went and told those who had been with Him, as they mourned and wept. " (Mark 16:10)

How did the disciples receive her good news about the resurrection?

Saint Mark, the evangelist, gives the answer saying: “ And when they heard that He was alive and had been seen by her, they did not believe. " (Mark 16:9-11)

He appeared to the two from Emmaus who did not know Him and who did not believe what the women had said about the resurrection that Lord Jesus rebuked them saying "O foolish ones, and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not the Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His glory? And beginning at Moses and all the Prophets, He expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." (Luke 24:25-27)

At last, those two from Emmaus believed. What was the impression of their faith on the apostles?

Saint Mark says "And they went and told it to the rest, but they did not believe them either.. " (Mark 16:13)

We hear, afterwards; that the women went to the tomb, entered it and did not find Jesus' body. Then the angels appeared to them and announced the good news of the resurrection.

They hurried away from the tomb and ran to tell the disciples.

Saint Luke, the evangelist says "And their words seemed to them like idle tales, and they did not believe them. " (Luke 24:11)

These were the eleven apostles, the columns of the church, before whom there were many testimonies as Mary Magdalene; the two from Emmaus and the women... and they did not believe them.

Afterwards, Mary Magdalene hurried to Peter and John and told them about the empty tomb. They immediately arrived and went into the tomb "and he saw the linen cloths lying there, and the handkerchief that had been around His head, not lying with the linen cloths. " (John 20:6,7).

Here the Bible says about John "… he saw and believed. " But inspite of all that we read something strange...

We read that after all of them knew that saying, "The Lord is risen indeed, and has appeared to Simon! ". (Luke 24:34), it happened that the Lord Himself stood among them and said to them "Peace be with you. ".

Did they believe when He appeared to them and spoke with them?

No, "But they were terrified and frightened, and supposed they had seen a spirit.” . (Luke 24:37).

The Lord rebuked them for their situation and said to them "Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself. Handle Me and see, for a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have." (Luke 24:39).

If the disciples had thought that what they had seen had been a ghost it would have been a heresy which would shake their as if the body did nit rise. For this reason , the lord showed them his hands and His feet .

Thus , the problem was not that of Tomas only to whom the Lord said “Reach your finger here, and look at My hands; and reach your hand here, and put it into My side. Do not be unbelieving, but believing." (John 20 :27). But , it was the problem of the eleven apostles.

All of them complained ; all of them were in need of proofs They needed feeling, touching and seeing the places of the wounds in order to believe .

The Lord tackled the problem of their thinking him a ghost or a spirit practically.

About this matter Anba Peter the Sedmenty, said that the Lord , during the period he spent in human nature on earth , He proved his divine nature , but after the resurrection He proved His human nature

The Lord Proves His Human Nature

Thus, after the resurrection, we hear that, in order to convince them of His human nature, And He took it and ate in their presence. (Luke 24:43)

He said so, while we know that the body of the resurrection is a luminous spiritual body which neither eats nor drinks.

God did so to convince them of His human nature but, after the ascension, His body had not any relation with this material food.

In all these matters we see that the Lord met the disciples' doubts with convincing and not with rebuking or punishment.

They are the persons in whom He will have confidence to promulgate faith all over the world. So, they themselves must have a strong, firmly established faith which they can convey to others, convincing and without any doubt. So, the Lord led them to this strong faith.

If they did not acquire the faith which believes without seeing, there would be no objection for them to begin with faith which depends on senses although it is of a weak degree.

The Lord condescended and accepted their sensuous faith, not to be stabilised in Him but to be mere beginning that leads to faith. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" . (Heb 11: 1).

Thus Saint John said "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, " (1 John 1:1).

This faith which, in the beginning, depended on senses because stronger and could convince the whole world with what it had seen and heard lest some men should think that the apostles had been deceived or believed in some matters which had not taken place.

So, we notice Saint Paul, the Apostle, announce good news about what he had seen and beard on his way to Damascus.

He explained the whole matter to king Agrippa saying " … O king, along the road I saw a light from heaven, brighter than the sun, shining around me and those who journeyed with me ... " (Acts 26:13-15)

The apostle concluded his words saying " Therefore, King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, " (Acts 26:19)

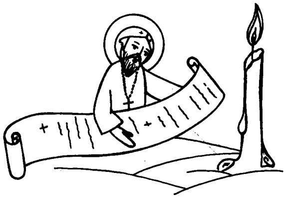
This is The Lord Jesus Christ who worked to strengthen the disciples' faith; who tackled Thomas' doubts; who comforted Peter's sorrow and Mary Magdalene when she wept. It is He who gave faith back to the church.



The Risen Christ Works For Us

The Lord Jesus Christ rose from the dead because it was impossible for death to overcome Him. He bore in Himself the power of His resurrection.

So, He was the only one who rose from the dead by Himself without any help from anyone.

He rose, and by His resurrection, He gave humanity the blessing of the resurrection “ … for the hour is coming in which all who are in the graves will hear His voice and come forth … " (John 5:28,29)

He rose triumphant and trod on death to lead us in the procession of His victory and to teach us not to fear death as the apostle said afterwards "O Death, where is your sting? O Hades, where is your victory?" (1 Cor 15:55)

God who has allowed death to enter our human nature, also, with His mercy, has allowed the resurrection to do the same thing.

As He had created man from dust and, because of sin He has brought Him back to dust, He, also, by the resurrection, allowed this dust to be changed into a body once more but in a better nature.

Before His crucifixion, He said "My father is always at his work to this very day, and I, too am working. "

After the resurrection the Lord continued His work not only to soothe the fatigued souls and strengthen the weak disjoined knees but also to make His disciples ready for service and able to take over the great responsibility of preaching the Gospel to all creation.

In this way, after the resurrection, the Lord continued to work for patronage.

By His resurrection, He gave the spirit of joy to His disciples as He had told them before His crucifixion " … but I will see you again and your heart will rejoice, and your joy no one will take from you. " (John 16:22)

It was so, and they got rid of fear and terror "The disciples were overjoyed when they saw the Lord. (John 20:20)

They were greatly affected by the resurrection which strengthened them so deeply that they testified to it.

In every circumstance, they used to preach the rising of the Lord from the dead.

Those, who were afraid and hiding in the attic, appeared with stout hearts and filled the world with evangelising.

They did not care for the threatening of the chiefs of the Jews. They said to them "We ought to obey God rather than men." Acts 5:29)

”And the Lord added to the church daily those who were being saved.. " (Acts 2:47)

"And with great power the apostles gave witness to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. And great grace was upon them all. " (Acts 4.33)

As God stayed with Moses on the mountain a period of forty days to give him the Laws and the copy of the tent of meeting and its contents, the Lord also appeared to the Disciples over a period of forty days and spoke " of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. " (Acts 2:3).

Indeed, there is time for tranquillity, contemplation and recess while attending others has another time.

The Lord Jesus Christ stayed with God a period of forty days in a spiritual recess. He, also spent another period of forty days with his disciples during which he taught them and confirmed their faith. He gave them the creed and all the details of faith, the sacred sacraments of the church and instructed them how to practise them.

He also gave them all the arrangements concerning worship.

The resurrection of the Lord became the centre of the disciples' joy and the subject of their preaching.

It was a period of delivery, teaching and comprehension.

After that, He also appeared to Saint Paul who said about the Sacrament of Eucharist "For I received from the Lord that which I also delivered to you … " (1 Cor 11:23).

Thus, the act of delivery went on successively from the Lord to His disciples and then to others and so on.

The Lord delivered Paul; but what did Paul do? He says to His disciple Timothy "And the things that you have heard from me among many witnesses, commit these to faithful men who will be able to teach others also.. " (2 Tim . 2:2).

Thus, after He had taught His disciples, He said to them before his ascension, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. " (Mark 16:15).

"Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you; " (Matt 28:19,20).

And, as He handed instruction over to them he committed baptism as well.

As for instruction and baptism. He did not charge the whole people with them but only the disciples who delivered them to their successors, the bishops.

Those bishops, by turns, gave them to honest persons adequate for the job and not to the common people. It is a sacerdotal work done by priests.

So, He handed priesthood over to them before delivering instruction and baptism.

With priesthood He gave them the power to forgive sins.

Thus, Saint John, in. his gospel, explains to us how the Lord appeared to His disciples.

He entered, with the doors locked, and said to them "Peace be with you. As the Father has sent Me, I am sending you. And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and said to them, Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven them; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained." (John 20:19-23)

The act of the Holy Spirit bestowing authority of priesthood and forgiving sin on the disciples differs from that on the Pentecost when the Holy Spirit bestowed on them the talent of speaking in new tongues and the power of preaching the Gospel.

CHAPTER TEN

The Power Of Christianity And Abolition Of Impossibility

The resurrection was so powerful that it reminded us of the words of the Bible "With men this is impossible , but with God all things are possible." (Matt 19:26)

This power which amazed Paul, the Apostle that he said about the Lord " that I may know Him and the power of His resurrection, "(Phil 3:10).

God has granted us that power of His resurrection that everything became possible with the believer, About this matter, Paul, the Apostle, said " I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me. "(Phil 4:13).

After the Lord has trampled death, there is nothing difficult or impossible before us.

He gave us victory over it and opened the locked gate of Paradise.

He put that nice song in our tongues.

"O Death, where [is] your sting?

Hades, where [is] your victory?" (1 Cor 15:5).

The power of the resurrection encouraged the disciples and gave them boldness to preach the Gospel.

Who could think that those weak persons who had hidden in the attic could preach the Gospel publicly and without opposition!?

Who could think that twelve men, most of them were ignorant fishermen can spread Christianity all over the world?

The resurrection has taught us that there is nothing impossible. With God everything is possible, It is possible for the foolish things of the world to shame the wise and the weak things of the world to shame the strong.

It seemed very difficult for Christianity to stand against Paganism and the ancient religions whose roots were fixed and stable in men's creeds.

Moreover, it seemed difficult to oppose or stand against Judaism which tried to exterminate or to extirpate Christianity.

It also seemed difficult to stand against the philosophies which were prevalent at that time or against the Roman Empire with its tyranny and its armed forces.

It seemed difficult for Christianity to face all these powers and to overcome them but the power they received from the resurrection of Christ and His triumph over death gave them an admirable energy.

Who could think that Peter, the ignorant fisherman can with one sermon, transmute three thousand Jews to Christian faith?

A famous eloquent preacher needs great effort to turn, with one sermon some sinners to repentance but to let three thousand persons change their religion after listening to one sermon seems to be something imaginative!

It is the power which the apostles received from the Holy Spirit and which changed them before they could change the people.

It remained with them and with it they did miracles.

Who could think that those apostles go to foreign countries where there was not even one Christian, no possibilities to perform religious service and in spite of all these difficulties they began from naught and could change the inhabitants' religion into Christianity ... ?

Indeed the resurrection taught us that there is nothing difficult and that everything is possible with the believer.

Who could think that Saul, from Tarsus, the most enormous persecutor of his time against Christianity becomes Paul, the greatest apostle who evangelised Christianity?

Who could think that the centurion, the general of the soldiers, who crucified Christ, adopted Christianity and died as a martyr because of it becomes a saint?

Who could think that the robber, on the right, believes when he was on the cross?

Who could think that Pilate's wife believes and asks her husband for the sake of "that righteous one?"

With Grace of God everything becomes possible. God is capable of everything. He who overcomes death, the most dangerous enemy, has the power to overcome any difficulty. Everything is quite easy before Him.

Who could think that Mary Magdalene, in whom there were seven devils becomes a preacher and announces good news of the resurrection to the apostles.

This power of the resurrection assured us that there is nothing impossible.

What we saw in preaching we witnessed in repentance:

The power of repentance which changed the worst sinners into the greatest saints and not to mere repentant taught us that there is nothing impossible.

The utmost thing men expected from Augustine, the debauchee, was his repentance. But to become a saint by whom the generations benefit was something difficult not expected by anyone.

The same thing can be said about Black Moses, the cruel killer, who became a modest, meek and humble saint.

Nothing is difficult before God. Isn't He who said “What are you, O mighty mountain? Before Zerubbabel you shall become a plain!” (Zec 4:7).

God who makes the barren a rejoicing mother with sons and says to her "Sing, O barren, You [who] have not borne! … Enlarge the place of your tent, … For you shall expand to the right and to the left, And your descendants will inherit the nations, And make the desolate cities inhabited. " (Is 54:1-3)

Christ's birth as well as His resurrection were wonderful and strange events which prove that there is nothing impossible. His miracles, also, prove the same thing.

The act of incarnation seemed, in men's view, to be something impossible!! How can God make Himself nothing and take the very nature of a servant? How can a virgin become pregnant and give birth to a child without matrimony?

So, the resurrection was something impossible. Thence, the Jews were afraid lest it should take place and considered it worse than the first deception.

In spite of all that, incarnation took place; the virgin gave birth to a child and the resurrection happened.

Christianity is not a religion of weakness but a religion of strength. It gives man wonderful energies. It cancels the word "impossible."

Christianity is a religion of power

There is nothing difficult in Christianity. In it there is neither despondency nor failure. Through it " I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me. "(Phil 4:13).

There are some things which seem difficult in Christianity such as: the cross; the narrow gate, and in spite of that the Christians carried the cross and entered through the narrow gate chanting the words of the apostle "And His commandments are not burdensome. (1 John. 5:3)

Yes, in the world's view, how difficult it is to turn the other cheek, to go the second mile, to love your enemy and to sell everything and give the price to the poor.

How difficult it is to follow a religion which calls upon devoutness and monasticism.

This religion, which seems difficult, spread everywhere. The people entered in its devoutness by their own will. They longed for its pains and were desirous of being martyrs. They took up the cross as an emblem.

The difficult commandment in Christianity bears in itself the power to carry it out.

Christianity has offered humanity excellent models and eminent commandments. But at the same time it presented to people spiritual ability and assistance from Grace to practise these models easily and with pleasure.

It gave men the spiritual life as well as the Holy Spirit to reside in them and offer them the power to behave spiritually.

Christian commandments seem difficult to those who are outside, who do not live in Grace and who did not take part in the Holy Spirit.

But, to the believer, these difficult commandments become an inordinate desire and spiritual enjoyment that he does not find any difficulty.

The believer puts on the full armour of God with which he can take his stand against the devil's schemes.

He fully believes that he does not stand alone in his spiritual and religious war.

He believes that "for the battle is the Lord’s." (1Sam 17:47) who is able to conquer whether with great numbers or few numbers.

He always feels that a divine power keeps close to him and works with him.

Thus, the life of the believer is a lasting victory because God leads him in His triumphal procession and "The Lord will fight for you, and you shall hold your peace." (Ex 14:14).

He who becomes conscious of failure has not put Grace to the test yet. He has not experienced the work of God whether in him or with him.

How wonderful are the words of the Lord to His disciples when He spoke to them about miracles "Most assuredly, I say to you, he who believes in Me, the works that I do he will do also; and greater works than these he will do," (John 14:12)

Christianity is a religion of power. It began with the resurrection which overcame death, opened the gates of Hades, led captives in His train and let the righteous enter Paradise.

Then we witness the power of preaching and the powerful endurance of the martyrs.

With great power, the apostles used to give testimony. With it they stood before the authorities and spoke without opposition.

Stephen could astound three synagogues "And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spoke. " *(Acts 6:10).

Thus "Then the word of God spread , and the number of the disciples multiplied greatly" (Acts 6:7) with the power of miracles and marvels, with the power of the word, with the poker of a heart, stood firm before sword and fire, with a power put on them from heaven. As the Lord said to them *"But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be witnesses to Me" *(Acts 1:8).

With this power He gave them authority on all the devils and on the cruelty of the enemy.

He, also, gave them the keys of heaven and earth.

In their prayers, there was a power which shook the place. They received power from the angels around them who broke the chains and brought them out of prison.

Thus, there were two powers, one, within themselves and the other around them.

This power caused Paganism to be exterminated and fade away.

It is the power of the defenceless Christianity which overcame an empire fully armed till it yielded to the new religion and adopted it.

It is the power of the cross which they thought a sign of weakness while it was a source of power and pride.

The Christian is a strong man with a sturdy spirit and perfect morals. He fears nothing. His power is derived not from his own self but from the Spirit of God.

Pilate feared the defenceless Christ and wished to set Him free. Felix, the governor, trembled when Paul, the captive, spoke about the judgement day.

It is the power of Christ who said "but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." (John 16:33).

It is the power of the monastic hearts which lead an ascetic life and which overcame all the worldly desires. They led a sacred life which distracted men's minds and terrified the devil.

It is the power expressed in Augustine's words "I sat on the top of the world when I felt within myself that I desired nothing and feared nothing. "

It is the power of divestment, monasticism and chastity.

If we are enjoying the joys of the resurrection let us live in its power and overcome death, that death which resulted fro-in sin, in order to rise in the resurrection of the righteous.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Questions Related To The Resurrection.

The Glorified Body Between The Body Of The Resurrection And The Body Of Birth

Question:

With what kind of body did the Lord Jesus Christ rise? Did He rise with an ordinary body like ours or with a glorified body? If He rose with a glorified one what would be the meaning of: "He ate in the presence of His disciples?" (Luke 24:43). What is the meaning of "they touched His flesh and His bones?" (Luke 24:39)

Was the glorified body, with which the Lord rose, the same body He took from The Virgin? Why don't we say that He was born with a glorified body?

Answer:

1. Undoubtedly, the body of the resurrection, in general, is a glorified body.

Saint Paul explained this glory saying "The body that is sown is perishable, it is raised imperishable,. it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power, it is sown a natural, it is raised a spiritual body. " (1 Cor 15:42-44)

2. If we shall be raised with a glorified body - a spiritual body - how much the more was Christ's resurrection?

This resurrection was the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep. (1 Cor 15:20,23). So will it be with us when we will be raised in the general resurrection.

The clearest proof that we will be raised in the likeness of His glorious resurrection is the saying of Saint Paul, the Apostle, in his Epistle to the Philippians "who will transform our lowly body that it may be conformed to His glorious body, " (Phil 3:21)

Thus, The Lord Jesus Christ has risen with a glorified body and so will it be with us "conformed His glorious body. "

This is a clear matter which needs neither proof nor argument.

It is well known that the glorified body is a spiritual one according to the words of Paul the Apostle in his first Epistle to the Corinthians (1 Cor 15:44,49).

The spiritual body has risen high above materials as food and drink and above flesh and bones....

3. How was it said then that Christ had eaten after His resurrection and that He had flesh and bones?

This matter is very clear in the Bible according to our teacher Luke, the Evangelist. He wrote about Christ's appearance to

His disciples after the resurrection " But they were terrified and frightened, and supposed they had seen a spirit. And He said to them, "Why are you troubled? And why do doubts arise in your hearts? "Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself. Handle Me and see, for a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have. When He had said this, He showed them His hands and His feet. " (Luke 24:37-40)

In the same chapter and in the same occasion He took a piece of broiled fish and ate it in their presence (Luke 24:41-43). How can we explain that matter?

4. We explain that matter by the following: He wished to prove to them the resurrection of His body, while they did not understand the meaning of the spiritual body.

At that time, they did not understand the entity of the spiritual body. They never heard of such words.

Of course, without the proofs given to them as eating and touching His flesh and His bones, they would have thought Him a spirit. (Luke 24:37), a mere spirit without body. In their understanding it meant that the body had not risen.

5. The important matter in the resurrection is "The rising of the body."

It is because the spirit is, by nature, a living thing which does not die.

Only the body dies when it is separated from the spirit. It changes into dust, but the spirit remains alive in the waiting place.

Thus, the resurrection is the rising of the body which will unite with the spirit once more.

In the Liturgy of renouncing the devil from the baptistery we say "We believe in the resurrection of the body."

As the disciples thought they had seen a ghost, it meant that the idea of the rising of the body was far from their minds.

So, it was necessary to convince them with it in order that they might convince others.

Here, we mention the words of Saint Peter, the Sedmenty "Before His crucifixion, The Lord Jesus Christ used to prove His divinity to the people, but after the resurrection He wished to prove man's proper nature."

The spirit alone does not represent a complete human nature. It is necessary to prove that the body has risen. Thus He said to Thomas "Reach your finger here, and look at My hands; and reach your hand here, and put it into My side. Do not be unbelieving, but believing." (John 20:27) He said to His disciples "Handle Me and see, for a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have." (Luke 24:39)

Also, He allowed Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, when they came to Him and worshipped Him after the resurrection to clasp His feet (Matt 28:9) All this was to prove the rising of the body.

7. This spiritual glorified body was that which went up to heaven.

Perhaps the act of ascension may not agree with a material body submitting to the law of earthly gravity because it is heavier than air; but He went up, in glory, with a spiritual body and with the same glory He sat at the right hand of God.

This same glorified body will come back "in His glory. " (Matt 25:3 1) " in His [own] glory, and [in] [His] Father's, " (Luke 9:26)

The glory of the ascension and that of the second coming is not only a mere miracle but it is also special case in His nature permanent forever.

8. This glorified body is that body with which He appeared to Saul, from Tarsus, on his way to Damascus. when " suddenly a light shone around him from heaven. Then he fell to the ground, and heard a voice saying to him, "Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting Me?" And he said, "Who are You, Lord?" Then the Lord said, "I am Jesus, whom you are persecuting.”. (Acts 9:3-5)

9. This glorified body is the same body with which He was born of the Virgin.

But that body with which He was born was not so glorious as that of the resurrection because in His birth, '"but made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant," (Phil 2:7).

The act of making Himself nothing ended in the glory of the resurrection and ascension.

10. The body of the resurrection was the same body of the birth; but in a case of transfiguration. He gave us a handsel of it on the mountain of transfiguration. (Mark 9:2,3)

As an example of comparison - measurement but with difference the three young men in the fiery furnace. Their bodies were the same bodies but they were granted, for a time, a kind of transfiguration which kept them from the harm of the fire.

The resurrection of The Lord Jesus Christ was with the same body of birth but in glory or in a case of transfiguration which gave the body a glorified nature, then it became a spiritual one. The same steps will happen to us.

11. Some may ask "Did Christ's body take His glorified nature immediately after the Resurrection or after the Ascension?

I say to you "His body took that nature during the resurrection itself."

The cases with which He proved His human nature were nothing but exceptional cases in order that the disciples might believe that His body had risen and, with confidence, spread faith saying " … which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled," (1 John 1:1) "even to us who ate and drank with Him after He arose from the dead." (Acts 10:41)

In cases other than these cases, the glorified body of the resurrection does not drink or eat any material thing. It needs nothing. It does not feel hungry or thirsty.

In glory it does not feel tired. It does not suffer pain. It does not become subject to death.

12. Entering the locked doors and coming out of the closed places are clear proofs of the glory of the body of the resurrection.

In the attic, with the doors locked, He came in and stood among the disciples. He did so many times (John 20:19,26)

In His resurrection, He went out of the tomb with the entrance sealed. It was after the resurrection that the angel came and rolled the big stone in order that all men might see the empty tomb. (The women and all men) and not for Christ to come out because He had formerly come out with the entrance closed and sealed.

Among the examples of His coming out of the closed things is His getting out of the shrouds with the mummification substances while they remained where they were.

He, formerly, came out of The Virgin 's womb. Here some may ask: Was the Lord born with a glorified body as that of the resurrection? The answer is as follows:

13. The Lord Jesus Christ was born with a body like ours. He resembled us in everything except sin.

He took our human nature for which He was called "The Son of Man " and with which He could redeem us.

"So the child grew and became strong in spirit,. " (Luke 1:80)

"He was hungry." (Matt 4:2)

"I thirst!" (John 19:28)

"Jesus therefore, being wearied from His journey," (John 4:6)

"But He was asleep." (Matt 8:24)

In Gethsemane "Then His sweat became like great drops of blood falling down to the ground." (Luke 22:44)

14. If He had not taken our human nature, He would not have felt pain.

He was in a nature liable to feel pain. Through the body He suffered pain. He experienced the pains of beating, flogging and crucifixion.

Many a time He fell under the cross when He carried it, that Simon, from Cyrene, carried it for Him.

His nature was liable to death, so, He died on behalf of us and redeemed us while the glorified body did not feel pain and did not die.

Thus, He was born with a human nature liable to pain and death, to suffering and sorrow.

In this way, this human nature could accomplish the act of redemption, then, it was glorified in the resurrection.

15. The glory of His nature before the redemption was an impeccable one.

His birth, the period of Mary's pregnancy, the time He spent on earth were spiritual glories done by His good will but His body was, in everything, like ours except for sin.

He made Himself nothing taking the very nature of a servant.

16. His unity with divinity is considered one of His glories.

This unity lessened nothing of His human nature. It did not nullify the weaknesses of the body as hunger, thirst, weariness and death. Otherwise redemption would have lost its nature and its value.

His pains were true, so was His redemption. He made Himself nothing in order that He, in His resurrection, might bestow glory on us.

Because He made Himself nothing from glory, He, before the crucifixion, said to God "Father glorify Your Son, that Your Son may glorify You." "O Father, glorify Me together with Yourself, with the glory which I had with You before the world was." (John 17 :1-5) 17. It was said about the resurrection "but when Jesus was glorified,.... (John 12:16).

18. The disciples could not bear seeing His glory.

Thus, when John, the beloved one, saw some of God's glory in the Revelation "I fell at His feet as dead." Why? "His head and hair were white like wool, as white as snow, and His eyes like a flame of fire". (Rev 1:17,16,14)

19. For these reasons, the Lord advanced gradually with His disciples when He showed them the glory of His resurrection.

He did so with the Magdalene, who, at first, thought Him the gardener, then, at last He revealed Himself to her (John 20:14,16)

He did the same thing with the two of Emmaus, with whom He walked along But their eyes were restrained, so that they did not know Him.. (Luke 24:16)

With the disciples, He used the same style of graduation in order that they might bear these matters because seeing Him after the resurrection with His glorified body was not so easy.

It was a story too long to be supported by this treatise.

20. Does this mean that we shall not see Him in His glory? If we shall see Him: how and when?

Who will transform our lowly body that it may be conformed to His glorious body, (Phil 3:21) then we shall see Him and as the apostle says "For now we see in a mirror, dimly, but then face to face. " (1 Cor 13:12)

What is the meaning of the phrase ':face to face"? How will that be accomplished?

My brothers, now, it is better for me to keep silent for this is easier and better by far.

Do Not Hold On To Me

Question:

Why did the Lord appear to Mary Magdalene after the resurrection?

Why did He say to her ""Do not cling to Me," (John. 20:17) While He allowed Saint Thomas to touch Him? (John 20:27).

He, also, allowed the rest of the apostles to touch him. (Luke 24:39)

Did He prevent her from touching Him because she is a woman?

Did He allow them to touch Him because they are men?

Answer:

The Lord Jesus Christ allowed Mary Magdalene to touch Him before anyone of the apostles, as it was mentioned in their first meeting after the resurrection in (Matt. 24)

Mary Magdalene, with the other Mary went to look at the tomb. The tomb was empty. The big stone was rolled away from the entrance.

The angel told them the good news of the resurrection of the Lord. On leaving the tomb, the Lord met them and said to them "Peace be with you. "(John 20:19).

Here, Saint Matthew, the Evangelist says, "So they came and held Him by the feet and worshiped Him. ". (Matt 28:9)

So, Mary Magdalene has touched Christ after the resurrection.

The Lord did not prevent her from touching Him because she is a woman but, on the contrary, He charged her with going to His disciples and telling them about the good news of the resurrection and her meeting with Him in the Galilee.

It was a great honour that the Lord charged a woman with carrying good news to the apostles.

But it happened afterwards that Mary Magdalene yielded to the doubts spread by the chief priests about the resurrection.

They filled the world with rumours announcing that the body was stolen from the tomb while the guards were sleeping.

It was possible for these rumours to leave no effect on Mary were it not for her to see that the apostles themselves did not believe in the resurrection.

As for the doubts of the disciples, they were very clear as they did not believe the story of the resurrection.

Mary has gone to them and told them the good news of Christ's resurrection. When they heard that Jesus was alive and that she had seen Him, they did not believe it. (Mark 16:9-11)

When Mary Magdalene saw that Jesus' apostles did not believe her and trusted neither the other women nor the two from Emmaus, she began to doubt.

She was still a young lady and perhaps what she had seen at the tomb was a dream or imagination. Had she faith stronger than that of the apostles? It is something absurd.

She thought in herself; perhaps some men might have stolen the body and carried it from its place!

They might not be the apostles but other men, perhaps the gardener, for example, might have taken it for any reason!

Of course, all these were doubts against faith because she herself saw the empty tomb. She also saw Christ, touched Him and heard His voice.

Moreover, she heard the good news from the angel, then from the two angels.

As Peter had denied Christ three times during the judgment, so did Mary Magdalene. She denied the resurrection of the Lord three times. These denials are written in one chapter. (John 20:12,13,15)

1. The first denial took place when she went to the Saints Peter and John and said to them "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb, and we don't know where they have put Him!" (John 20:2)

These words mean that God has not yet risen from the dead as they have taken His body and put it another place.

2. The second denial took place when she was weeping outside the tomb and the two angels asked her "Woman, why are you weeping?" She said to them, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I do not know where they have laid Him." (John 20:13)

3. The third denial took place when The Lord Jesus Christ appeared to her. Because of her weeping, she did not see Him well and thought Him to be the gardener. Perhaps He concealed Himself from her ... She said to Him "Sir, if You have carried Him away, tell me where You have laid Him, and I will take Him. " (John 20.-15)

When He showed Himself to her and she knew Him, she cried out "Rabboni!" (which means: Teacher)

The Lord prevented her from touching Him to rebuke her for denying His resurrection three times.

Also, it was not permissible for her to touch Him with her precarious faith as if He were a common person carried by someone to any place.

She said to Peter and John "They have taken away the Lord out of the tomb, and we do not know where they have laid Him." (John 20:2).

She said to the two angels " they have taken away my Lord, and I do not know where they have laid Him " (John 20:13).

She said to the Lord thinking He was the gardener "Sir, if You have carried Him away, tell me where You have laid Him, " (John 20:15).

All her words were repetition to the soldiers' pretence and showed her precarious faith.

The Lord said to her "Do not cling to Me …" which means 'Don't approach Me with your shaken faith and with you doubts after you have seen Me, clasped My feet and heard My voice.'

'Don't approach Me after I have charged you with a message to My disciples.'

'Don't approach Me after you have seen the tomb and heard the angels' testimony.'

'Don't hold on to Me with your denial, for I have not yet returned to the Father.'

As for the phrase " I have not yet ascended to My Father. " (John 20:17) Saint Severus, from Antioch as well as Saint Augustine did not take it literally but symbolically because she had held on Him before.

The two saints added that the Lord wished to say to her "Don't hold on to Me with your precarious faith because I have not reached in your mind the standard of My Father's divinity. "You think My body is still dead and the people can carry it wherever they wish!!"

However, He consoled her and at the same time He charged her with a message to the apostles.

Feed My Lambs, Take Care Of My Sheep

Question:

Why do we deny Peter's headship while the Lord said to him after the resurrection: "Feed My lambs,. take care of My sheep?

Answer:

The Lord Jesus Christ did not say these phrases to him in order to appoint him Pastor of the Universal Church but to bring him back to the apostolic rank which he was on the point of losing because of his denial.

With this phrase, the Lord made him equal to the other apostles.

He was exposed to the text which says "But he who denies Me before men will be denied before the angels of God." (Luke 12:9) to be applied to him.

It is clear that The Lord Jesus Christ said to him "Tend My sheep." in a reprimand situation as He asked him three times saying "Simon, son of Jonah, do you love Me?" (John 21: 15-17)

By these words, the Lord wished to remind him of his denials.

Moreover His question carried a light reprimand with which the Lord reminds Peter of his words " Even if all are made to stumble because of You, I will never be made to stumble " (Matt 26:33)

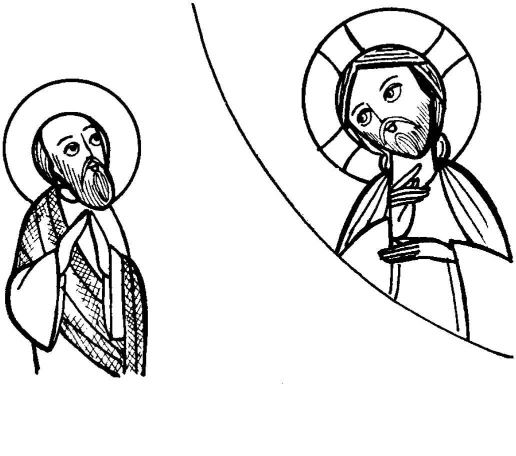
In that situation we notice that The Lord Jesus Christ called him by his old name before he was given the name "Peter".

The most conspicuous proof that the Lord meant by his words some reprimand was the shame and the sorrow that appeared on Peter's face after the Lord had said to him "Take care of My sheep" because he understood the Lord's aim.

If the phrase had been said in a good circumstance of magnifying or investiture, it could have caused Peter joy and pleasure.

Patronage is a job God has invested with rank to many as it appears in many texts of the Holy Bible.

All the apostles are patrons. The Lord Jesus Christ is the chief patron.



But Go, Tell His Disciples And Peter

Question:

After Christ's resurrection, the angel said to the Marys "tell His disciples; and Peter; that He is going before you into Galilee; there you will see Him, " (Mark 16:7). Does mentioning Peter by name mean that he was preferable to other disciples?

Answer:

The Lord wished to give Peter special care because he was perturbed about himself and about his destiny after his denial, blasphemy, denunciation and saying " I do not know the Him. " (Luke 22:57).

If the Lord applied to Peter the text " he who denies Me before men will be denied before the angels of God. " (Luke 12:9) he would perish.

He mentioned Peter by name as a kind of sympathy and consolation because of denial and sin.

Perhaps he was too ashamed of the Lord to be able to meet Him without a special call.

Don't, you see with me that Adam, after he had sinned hid from the face of God and was afraid of Him?

When the Lord God called to him "Where are you?", he answered "I heard Your voice in the garden, and I was afraid because I was naked; and I hid myself." (Gen 3:9).

Peter was in the same situation. He was in need of a special call by name.

Thus, the matter is not a subject of headship or preference but consoling a poor person.

About The Events Of The Resurrection And Their Coincidence With Each Other

Question:

Is there any contradiction among the events of the resurrection according to what was written in the four gospels?

A gospel mentions one angel. Another gospel mentions two angels.

Also the persons who visited the tomb. Some gospels differ in regard to them.

Answer:

There is no contradiction. Each gospel mentioned a special visit accomplished at a time different from that of the other visit and with other persons.

The first visit was mentioned by Matthew's gospel. The tomb was empty. The angel said the good news to Mary Magdalene and to the other Mary. The appearance of the Lord to the two of Emmaus, The women's visit. (Luke 24)

But the visit of Mary Magdalene and seeing the Lord as if He were the gardener was accomplished afterwards. (John 20). Different visits at different times.

If it had been one event, there would have been contradiction but they were many events, appearances and visits.

In This Book

In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit One God. Amen

This is the first book I publish about Resurrection. It is the outcome of many lectures and sermons delivered on this topic.

The book consists of three important elemets;

1. A general view of the Resurrection, how it is necessary, possible and useful; and its spiritual and general effect.

2. Various articles on the Resurrection of the Lord Christ - glory be to Him - comprising the events of the Resurrection, its power and joy, its effect and blessings and how it changed situations. Proofs and confirmation of the authenticity of the Resurrection are also included.

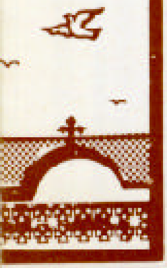
3. The third part of the book includes five important questions relating to the subject.

We present you with this book to give you some contemplations on the Resurrection.

We hope that you may expreience the effectiveness of the Resurrection in your life.

I wish you happy Easter and good returns.

Pope Shenouda III



n

THE

GOSPEL OF THE RESURRECTION.

THE

GOSPEL OF THE RESURRECTION:

THOUGHTS ON ITS RELATION TO REASON AND HISTORY.

BY

BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L.,

LORD BISHOP OF DURHAM.

SEVENTH EDITION.

London and Cambridge:
MACMILLAN AND CO.
AND NEW YORK.
1891

[The Right of Translation is reserved.]

Εὐλόγως ὁ διδάσκαλος ἡμῶν ἔλεγεν,

ΓΙΝΕΣΘΕ ΤΡΑΠΕΖΙΤΑΙ ΔΟΚΙΜΟΙ.

First Edition printed 1866 (Ext. Fcap. 8vo.), Second 1867, Third 1874 (Cr. 8vo.), Fourth 1879, Fifth 1884, Sixth 1887, Seventh 1891.

NOTICE TO THE FOURTH EDITION.

IN revising the following pages I have had the great advantage of considering two important criticisms upon its main argument, one by Mr R. W. Macan in his Essay on The Resurrection of Christ, 1877, and the other by the Author of Supernatural Religion, in the third volume of his work, and in two papers in the Fortnightly Review for February and March, 1878. It would be affectation to say that either writer has brought forward arguments which I had not considered previously to the best of my ability; but I gladly acknowledge the help which both have given me in understanding modes of thought which are foreign to my own. I hope that the few verbal changes and additions which I have made in the statement of my views may help to render my meaning clearer, where I find that it has been misapprehended. One or two errors have been corrected, and one or two difficulties have been touched upon more fully than before, where the reasoning of my critics or my own experience shewed such changes to be necessary. But I have made the changes silently, for I cannot think that the pursuit of the highest Truth is a matter for personal controversy. No one, I feel, has a monopoly of Truth. It is enough that in defending the Truth which we know, we never consciously underrate or neglect the objections of opponents. The teacher who either presumes to claim the knowledge which he has not, or dissembles his own difficulties, carries in his own heart the elements of a stern and inevitable chastisement.

2017209

TRINITY COLLEGE,
CAMBRIDGE,
May 13, 1879.

NOTICE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

BEFORE issuing a new edition of the present Essay I have carefully reconsidered the whole argument, and by the help of several kind critics have been enabled to correct (as I hope) some faults and to remove some ambiguities, which had been overlooked before. I have not, however, made any attempt to alter the general character of the book. No one can feel more keenly than I do how often I must try the patience of my readers, but I believe that any one who has felt the difficulties which are touched upon, will be willing to follow out in detail the lines of thought which are suggested; and in subjects where all language necessarily falls short of the truth which we perceive 'in many parts 'and in many fashions,' it seems better to stir inquiry, if it may be, than to appear to anticipate and satisfy it.

Some recent speculations on the scope and foundation of Christianity shew with singular clearness that even the most candid interpreters of the Gospel can still miss its scope. For it cannot, as far as I can see, be finally questioned by any student of the apostolic records that the earliest known description of a Christian is 'one 'who believes on Christ' and not 'one who believes 'Christ.' Or in other words, a Christian is essentially one who throws himself with absolute trust upon a living Lord, and not simply one who endeavours to obey the commands and follow the example of a dead Teacher. The question at issue is not the observance of a certain number of definite precepts but a view of the whole Universe, of all being and of all life, of man and of the world, and of GOD.

In this aspect the Resurrection is not an isolated fact, but emphatically a revelation (ch. ii. §§ 16 ff.). If the fragmentary accounts of the Resurrection were such as to yield a simple and consistent narrative of the restoration of the Lord to the circumstances of the earthly life which He lived before, it is not too much to say that the hope which they convey would be destroyed. The marvel of the records is that details which mark the identity of the Lord's person are combined naturally (so to speak) and in the same Gospel with details which mark the change in the conditions of His personal existence, as if those who put the facts together were conscious of no difficulty in the apparent contradiction from their actual realisation of the new Truth. And when we come to combine their narratives we find it impossible to form any theory of the nature of the Resurrection as a fact like in kind to any other facts of our experience which is not at variance with some at least of the recorded details. Thus if we take one series of events, the Resurrection might appear to have been a mere coming back to life: if we take another, it might appear to be a deduction from a series of apparitions. Either supposition would be more or less consistent with the ordinary course of things; but an examination of the records will not justify a simple choice between the two alternatives. In some cases again the manifestations carried with them instant conviction to those to whom they were made: in others they raised questionings and even left doubt. But so far from these variations creating a difficulty they lead us to the fullest perception which as yet we are able to gain of the new life as a fact. If they are held firmly as a whole they offer an adequate explanation of the faith of St Paul. If on the other hand any one series of phenomena be disregarded, we lose something either of the reality or of the breadth of the revelation: there are features in the unquestionably contemporaneous faith of the Apostles which are left without an adequate explanation[1].

Thus as we reflect upon the substance of the apostolic records and the experience of the Church with more simplicity of heart and more complete self-devotion, the more nearly are we brought back to the words of St Paul, If thou shalt make the confession with thy mouth JESUS is LORD, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. The acknowledgment of the present sovereignty of the Son of Man in this earliest Creed (τὸ ῥῆμα) rests upon faith in the actual Resurrection of the Son of Man; and together these two facts,—Christ's Sovereignty and Christ's Resurrection—offer to men the power and the motive which are required for a life of sacrifice and hope.

[1] I have endeavoured to give a general view of the lessons of the different narratives in The Revelation of the Risen Lord.

This elementary conception of Christianity as involving a living relation with One 'who died 'and is alive again' may be of service in the prospect of immediate dangers. For it seems to be commonly admitted that once again we are approaching a great crisis in the history of human society and human thought; and many look with doubt, or even with more than doubt, on the adequacy of Christian Theology to meet and reconcile the conflicting elements which are rising around us. It is, indeed, confessed that our distinctive Faith—the Gospel of the Resurrection—contained within it the vital and constructive forces which were able to preserve the treasures of the old world from the shipwreck of the Roman Empire, to organise and guide the fresh energies of the northern nations, to receive and consecrate the recovered heritage of Greek art and Greek speculation; but there is still a vague fear that the dangers by which we are now menaced are greater than any which have gone before, greater than political dissolution, greater than triumphant barbarism, greater than paganised culture. It is perhaps necessary that it should be so. For while it is comparatively easy to estimate the relative value of forces from a distant and quiet vantage-ground, all that is seen through the dimness and mist of the struggle appears gigantic and alarming. Yet even at first sight we must acknowledge that the past victories of faith cannot but inspire us with confidence in entering on that struggle to which we are called, and at the same time furnish us with those lessons of experience which may free us from some natural fears. No one now questions that Christianity has been made richer and stronger by the loss of the imperial patronage with which it was once dignified, by the action of the restless freedom of the Teutonic spirit upon the personal apprehension of its teaching, by the calm light of ancient literature which reveals and harmonizes a manifold variety in the providential dealings of God with man. And thus taught we can rejoice to believe that the coming renaissance of science will minister, no less than the past renaissance of culture has already done, to the abiding efficacy of the Truth which has been handed down to us.

But though we believe that it will be so, or rather because we believe that it will be so, it is well for us to prepare for the coming access of light, to take account of the whole scope of the Truth, to consider what belongs to its essence and what to the form in which it is embodied, to test the various modes by which men strive towards a fuller knowledge of it, to ascertain the relation which the particular fragment with which we happen for the time to be busied bears to the great sum to which it contributes. There is a constant and perilous tendency in partial study, and all study must be more or less partial, to exaggerate details or shapes of Truth, to pursue exclusively a method legitimate in one region, and so to apply it to inappropriate subjects, to neglect the ennobling inspiration which comes from a sense of the magnificence of the whole work in which we are allowed to take some small part. And this, which is true elsewhere, is most true of that study, which is of all the widest and grandest, the pursuit and setting forth of the science of Theology, to which all other sciences contribute, and in which they find their crown and consummation,—a unity of idea according to our present forms of thought, and the assurance of eternal worth.

In proportion therefore as the exposition of Christian Doctrine becomes more complicated, it becomes more necessary to strive to keep ever present to our minds the thought of Christ Himself, Incarnate, Crucified, Raised, Ascended, in whose Person and Work all doctrine is implicitly contained. And the study of the Bible and the study of the Church history are the chief means through which the Holy Spirit opens out the understanding of our personal faith. Through this double study pursued fearlessly and thoroughly, because it is pursued in the sight of God and in dependence on His Spirit, doctrine and ritual first become really intelligible: and though it is a dangerous thing to use the word 'proof' of subjects to which no method of deduction or induction is applicable, this double study brings that conviction of the truth of Christianity on which the intellect as well as the soul of man can rest with absolute assurance. As we read the Holy Scriptures with more open minds, dissembling none of the difficulties by which they are beset, claiming for them no immunity from the ordinary processes of criticism, realising with the most strenuous endeavour every detail of their human characteristics, we shall learn what is meant by 'living 'words,' what is meant by 'the inspiration of a 'book.' As we follow the progress of the Christian society through conflicts and triumphs and disasters, through periods of threatening gloom and rekindled light, often checked and diverted but never stopped, often entangled and impeded by strange accretions but yet always able to cast them off, we shall feel that there is in it a power greater than that of man. Such inquiries, so far as they are undertaken in fellowship with Christ, will enable us to stand in a living relationship with prophets and apostles and confessors, so that their words will come to us not as a tradition or a formula, but as fresh utterances called out by the actual needs of men like ourselves, from the hearts of those who sympathised with them. We shall find that we are the inheritors of a life and not of a system, of a life which is a pledge of the unity of all that is seen and temporal with that which is unseen and eternal.

While therefore I do not desire to dissemble or to exaggerate the gravity and even the strangeness of the new trial of Faith, the occasion is, as I believe, more full of hope than of fear. I cannot doubt what the Church of England may do, within whose reach are placed the three great springs of power which have been given separately to other Churches, the simplicity of a pure creed, the strength of a continuous organisation, the freedom of personal faith. I cannot doubt what our own University may do, in which a grave and sober intellectual discipline prepares men for patient criticism and large-minded research. But still the time of labour is short, and if we waste it there appears to be no further prospect that the work to which we are called will be hereafter accomplished.

But it cannot be needful to dwell on the possibility of this most disastrous failure. The symptoms of dissension and confusion and doubt among us are rather indications of the restless unsatisfied energy of newly awakened life than warnings of decay and dissolution. We are, indeed, forced to confess that we have not yet shewn practically what Theology is, what the Church is, what doctrine is. We have allowed questions of social and national right to be discussed without reference to that infinite Truth which though above our grasp is yet a light by which we can guide our course. We have stood as Christians so far aloof from secular speculation that we have almost forgotten that it must be through these lower studies that our apprehension of our own unchanging message is advanced. We have so persistently dissembled the power of the Gospel—the historical reconciliation of God with the world and man—that it is pardonable if those who judge of it by us should doubt whether it is anything more efficacious and inspiring than the pathetic guesses which adorn the writings of philosophy. But while we deplore our faithlessness we can rise out of it. And this we must do, if once again we see Christ as the ascended Lord, and let the light of His glorious Person fall upon our life and upon all life.

B. F. W.

TRINITY COLLEGE,
Feb. 23, 1874.

PREFACE.

Ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς τὸ ῥῆμα ἐν τῷ στόματί σου ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς καὶ πιστεύσῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου ὅτι ὁ θεὸς αὐτὸν ἤγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, σωθήσῃ.

THE present Essay is an endeavour to consider some of the elementary truths of Christianity as a miraculous Revelation from the side of History and Reason. There seems to be a growing impression, for it is too vague to be called a belief, that such a fact as the Resurrection cannot be brought into harmony with what we see of the life of the world or what we feel of the laws of individual thought. The opponents of Christianity tacitly assume that a miracle must be explained away; and its defenders neglect to notice the manifold lines of culture and thought which converge towards the central lessons of the Gospel and again start from them with the promise of richer fruitfulness. If the arguments which are here adduced are valid they will go far to prove that the Resurrection, with all that it includes, is the key to the history of man, and the complement of reason. At least they will shew that the supposed incompatibility of a devout belief in the Life of Christ with a broad view of the course of human progress and a frank trust in the laws of our own minds, is wholly imaginary. Indeed it is not too much to assert that the fact of the Resurrection (as the typical miracle of the Gospel) becomes more natural as we take a more comprehensive view of history, and more harmonious with reason as we interrogate our instincts more closely. A conviction of the certainty of the facts of the Gospel seems to be best gained either by the most general or by the most personal view of their import. They fill up the most critical place in the great record of the progress of mankind; and they satisfy wants which each man feels for himself. Christianity has many sides; and those are by no means the least noble which are thus opened to the student of life and thought.

The object which I proposed to myself necessarily involved a mode of treatment wholly un-theological. Many topics consequently are dealt with otherwise than they would be dealt with in a doctrinal exposition; and many are wholly omitted which would have found a place in such a work. But while I have endeavoured to avoid technical language, I trust that no word in the Essay will be found at variance with the fulness of Catholic truth.

He who has long pondered over a train of reasoning becomes unable to detect its weak points. It is so, I am conscious, with what I now offer to the criticism of others. But the only desire which he can have who writes on such a subject must be to learn the truth fully that in turn he may speak it. The questions which are raised are momentous and personal. If we believe that the answers which I have given are true or like the truth, our modes of thought and our lives must bear witness to our Faith.

And it seems impossible not to acknowledge that the recognition of the Resurrection as a fact which has moulded the thoughts of Christians and yet retains the fulness of its vital power, is less spontaneous and instinctive among us than it ought to be in a Christian age. Nay, more, its teachings are not so much neglected as absolutely unperceived in popular estimates of what Christianity claims to be and is. Two passages from recent works, which have perhaps nothing else in common, will illustrate my meaning. 'There is 'no hope,' we are told, 'of a good understanding 'with Orientals [i.e. Muslims] until Western Chris- 'tians can bring themselves to recognise what 'there is of common faith contained in the two 'religions; the real difference consists in all the 'class of notions and feelings (very important ones 'no doubt) which we derive not from the Gospels 'but from Greece and Rome, and which are alto- 'gether wanting here [in the East].' And again: 'Christian morality (so called) has all the charac- 'ters of a re-action; it is, in great part, a protest 'against Paganism. Its ideal is negative rather 'than positive: passive rather than active: Inno- 'cence rather than Nobleness: Abstinence from 'Evil rather than energetic Pursuit of Good; in its 'precepts (as has been well said) "thou shalt not" 'predominates unduly over "thou shalt"......... 'It holds out the hope of heaven and the threat of 'hell as the appointed and appropriate motives to 'a virtuous life......Even in the morality of pri- 'vate life, whatever exists of magnanimity, high-'mindedness, personal dignity, even the sense of 'honour, is derived from the purely human, not the 'religious part of our education, and never could 'have grown out of a standard of ethics in which 'the only worth, professedly recognised, is that of 'obedience.' Now, apart from all other criticism, to which these statements lie open, it is not too much to say that they absolutely could not have been written if their authors had realised that Christianity is emphatically the Gospel of the Resurrection, in which fact lies a spring of human dignity and social fellowship infinitely deeper and fuller than anything which was anticipated in classical teaching.

During the passage of the Essay through the press I have been indebted to many friends, and especially to one, for important suggestions and criticisms. Of some I have been able to make use: others, if an opportunity be given me, I shall hope to use hereafter; for all I render them my sincere thanks. And the deepest obligation which any reader can confer upon me will be to point out whatever seems obscure or faulty or erroneous in what is here advanced. For writer and for reader Truth is the common aim. The subject is not a vain thing for us: it is our life.

B. F. W.

CAMBRIDGE,

Dec. 16*th*, 1865.

NOTICE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

BY the kindness of many old and some new friends I have been enabled to correct and modify and supplement many of the details in my original Essay; but a careful and (as I trust) impartial review suggests to me no change in the main argument. Indeed every symptom of the theological controversies of our own day points most distinctly to the paramount necessity of a historical appreciation of the origin and development of the Church as the key to the wider questions which are opening before us. The Epistle to the Ephesians and the writings of St John contain in a divine commentary on the Resurrection, of which Christian history is the gradual and partial fulfilment, the complete solution of the greatest problems to which the thoughts of men are now being turned, the Solidarity of Humanity and the relation of our World to the whole Kosmos.

If my leisure and health had allowed me, I should have added a final chapter on the Resurrection and the World, which has for some time been drawn up in outline. In this it would have been necessary to take account of the 'Positive 'Religion' of M. Comte, which in many of its characteristic dogmas appears to cast unexpected light upon neglected Christian Truths. The system offers in fact a very noble, though a very partial, view of Christianity in its political and social aspects, but without the one essential foundation of a historic CHRIST[1].

It may perhaps be worth while to state that the sketch of the Essay was made many years ago and that it was written in 1864 and printed in the early part of 1865, though it was not published till 1866. I cannot therefore take to myself the credit which a friendly critic gave me of 'popularising' arguments on miracles which were in time subsequent to my own and wholly independent of them. The coincidence of reasoning, if it exists, as I take for granted, is most satisfactory, though practically I believe that there can be little difference of opinion on this subject between those who will take the trouble to think it out in all its cardinal bearings.

[1] [I have now added as an Appendix an Essay which marks what appear to me to be the chief points for consideration under this head. 1874.]

But all speculation leaves the profound conviction that life is stronger than thought; and the present season itself proclaims more eloquently than many words the Gospel of the Resurrection, and, if we are faithful, more convincingly. If each Christian would openly 'confess with his 'mouth' the truth which he 'believes in his heart,' the world would gladly yield to the glorious greeting of our Easter morning, 'Christ is risen.'

B. F. W.

St Leonard's,

Easter Eve, 1867.

CONTENTS[1].

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION. pp. 1–14.

The Resurrection as the central truth of Christianity (§§ 1–3) either true or false: no mean (4).

Morally a Revelation (5).
Historically a Fact (6).
Uniting the objective and subjective elements of religion (7*).
A religion of the world necessarily historical (8).
The history essentially moral (9).

Preliminary questions (10).

INTRODUCTION.

IDEAS OF GOD, NATURE, MIRACLES.

pp. 15–54.

The difficulties of Christianity essentially included in common life (§ 1).

The Resurrection a new fact (2*), and not an explanation of mysteries essentially insoluble by us (3), which are reducible to the final antithesis of finite and infinite (4).

I. Christianity assumes the existence of An Infinite Personal God,
A finite human will (5).
Explanation of the terms (6).

[1] The numbering of the sections is made continuous, but the new sections are marked by an asterisk. [Ed. 2.]

Hence we gain some conceptions of

(α) Nature in relation to God (7).

The idea of Succession belongs to our apprehension of God's action and not to His action in itself (8).

(β) Laws of Nature: simply laws of human observation (9), which include the operation of an unknown force (10), and cannot therefore be absolute (11).

The generality of Laws decreases as the complexity of their subjects increases (12*); knowledge complete as the subject of it is limited (13*).

Indeterminate powers in Nature (14, 15).

II. Christianity claims to be miraculous (16).

The idea of a miracle (17).

A miracle not impossible (18), nor unnatural (19).

What natural explanations must be avoided (20*).

(α) In relation to God

A miracle not an afterthought (21), nor due to a material cause (22).

(β) In relation to man

A miracle generally involves an indeterminate element (23), and is predominantly subject to moral conditions (24).

Why a scientific age is incredulous of miracles (25), though Science and Theology can never meet (26*).

Theology the highest member in the Hierarchy of Sciences (27*).

Instinct is not conquered by science (28).

Miraculous records not antecedently incredible (30).

The alternative (31).

CHAPTER I.

THE RESURRECTION AND HISTORY.

pp. 55–137.

Christianity claims to restore harmony to all creation (§ 1).
A historical Progress observable in the physical (2, 3) and moral worlds (4, 5), with which Christianity is intimately connected (6), according to the teaching of the Apostles (7), whether the advance was realised among the Jews or Gentiles (8).
And Christianity itself is a history (9), and has been developed historically (10).
In this lies its distinguishing characteristic (11), which centres in faith in the Person of Christ (12).
If therefore the circumstances of its origin were unique, so also may have been the phenomena which it includes (13–15).

I. Christianity in connexion with Universal History.
(a) The relation of Christianity to pre-Christian history (16).
(a) Jewish History. Characteristics of the history of the Jews (17–20).
(1) The discipline of Egypt (21).
Sinai (22).
The Conquest (23).
The Kingdom (24, 25).
The Captivity (26).
The Dispersion (27, 28).
(2) The development of the idea of a Deliverer (29).
The doctrine of Messiah (30).
The Word (31).
Contrast of the two doctrines (32).
(b) Gentile History (33).
(1) Greek literature and thought (34).
(2) Roman statesmanship and law (35).
The crisis (36).

(β) The relation of Christianity to post-Christian history (37).

General outline of its progress (38, 39).

(a) The Church of the first centuries. Orthodox (40).

(b) The Mediæval Church. Catholic (41).

(c) The Church of Modern Europe. Evangelical (42).

The divisions mark a real but not final advance (43, 44).

II. The special evidence for the Resurrection (45).

(α) The testimony of St Paul (46).

Conclusive as to the universal and definitely expressed belief of Christians, within ten years afterwards, that the event was historically true (47–49).

(β) The character of the event

(a) Excludes the possibility of delusion (50).

(b) Not anticipated by any popular belief among Greeks (51*) or Jews (52).

(c) Contrary to the Messianic expectations of the Jews (53), to the ideas of the Apostles (54).

(γ) The effects of the event

(a) On the character of the Apostles (55),

(b) On the Apostolic view of the Person of Christ (56),

(c) Especially on St Paul's teaching on the Death of Christ (57, 58) and our relation to Him (59).

(δ) The relation of the belief in the event to other parts of Christian doctrine.

The Return of Christ (60).
The Holy Sacraments (61).
The Life of the Church (62*).

Summary (63).

CHAPTER II.

THE RESURRECTION AND MAN.

pp. 138–190.

The final elements of every moral question: GOD, the World, Self (§ 2).

The result of the suppression of any one of these elements (3*).

The individual 'self' ('I') felt at present to be twofold (4), and the antithesis which it includes is essential to our personality (5).

Hence arise the questions (6)

I. Will our Personality be preserved after death?

II. What is the future relation of Self to GOD?

III. What is the relation of Self to the World?

I. Personality, as far as we can see, depends upon the special limitation (body) through which the soul acts (7).

(α) Reason can shew that we survive death by shewing either that

(a) The soul will itself have a personal existence; or that

(b) It will act through an organism corresponding to its present one.

But (a) On principles of Reason there is no reason to think that the individual soul is personal (9).

(1) The judgment of Aristotle (10, 11).

(2) The arguments adduced in support of the belief apply to the past as well as to the future (12).

(3) Plato's teaching based on instinct not reason (13).

(b) We have no ground for supposing that the soul can take to itself any organisation soever (14).

Thus there remains a final conflict between Instinct and Reason as to our future Personality (15).

(β) The doctrine of the Resurrection preserves the idea of our Personality completely (16).

This significance brought out gradually (17*).

The Lord's Body the same (18, 19), yet changed (20, 21).

After death the whole complex nature of man is ennobled (22).

II. The final relation of man to God depends upon the reality and issues of sin (23).

(α) What reason teaches of sin.

(a) The possibility of sin included in the idea of a finite, free being (24).

(b) Its realisation not required for moral development, though in some forms it may be subservient to it (25–29).

(c) It is indeed essentially foreign to our nature, and yet when once realised permanent in its effects (30–32).

Thus there remains an Instinct which looks for forgiveness of sin, and Reason which points to the inexorable sequence of the results of action (33).

(β) The light which the Resurrection throws on the forgiveness of sin (34).

In what way the Lord's Suffering and Triumph belong to us (35–41).

III. The relation of Self to the World.

This is indicated by the dignity assigned to the body (42), which is the seed of that which shall be (43).

Effects of the doctrine:

I. Morally as to the individual and society (44–46).

II. Physically in relation to the outer world (47, 48).

Summary (49–51).

CHAPTER III.

THE RESURRECTION AND THE CHURCH.

pp. 191–247.

The Resurrection in relation to the history of the Church (§§ 1*, 2*).

Various images under which the Christian society is described.

(α) A Kingdom (3, 4).

(β) A Temple (5, 6).

(γ) A Body (7).

How these images are seen in the light of the Resurrection.

(α) A spiritual kingdom: a new heaven and a new earth (9, 10).

(β) A structure reared through many ages and hallowed by One Spirit (11).

(γ) The visible Body of the Risen Christ (12).

Contrast between the fundamental idea of Christianity as the basis of a society and those of Paganism (15).

Judaism (16).

The principle of unity (18, 19) illustrated by the Resurrection (20).

The principle of life (21).

I. The essential unity of the Church does not require external unity (22, 23), nor one visible centre of authority such as was for a time established at Jerusalem (24), till 'the end of the world' (25*), and afterwards at Rome (26).

The extent of variation consistent with substantial unity not to be determined antecedently (27); yet illustrated by the history of the Jewish Church (28).

The admission of the necessity of variations in the Church does not sanction sectarianism (29, 30).

We have to deal with a world in which sin is realised (31*).

Progress itself implies antagonism (32) and individuality (33).

II. The essential unity of the Church seen in its historic development (34, 35).

This development one of organisation (36), not of doctrine absolutely (37), corresponding to the general progress of civilisation (38), and the complexity of the Christian Body (39).

Hence it includes many partial and transitional developments, which are set aside when their work is done (40).

How far this development is due to human imperfection (41).

Scripture the unchanging test of development (42).

Our age presents an epitome of all past ages (43).

The function of national Churches (44*).

Churches like nations 'redeem each other' (45).

Grounds of hope in the midst of the contradictions of modern life (46, 47).

Conclusion (48).

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

Καλὸν τὸ ἆθλον καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς μεγάλη.

PLATO.

1. JEAN PAUL, in one of his magnificent Dreams, has endeavoured to present to the mind an image of the infinite extent and fulness of the Universe. He represents his own disembodied Spirit as carried by thought from system to system through the starry skies under the conduct of some Angel of light. Wearied at length and bowed down with the overwhelming sense of his littleness as he traverses the desolate intervals between world and world, he prays that he may go no further: 'I am lonely in creation; 'lonelier in these wastes. The full world is great; 'but Vacancy is greater.' And the answer came: 'In the sight of GOD there is no Vacancy. Even 'now, O child of man, let thy quickened eye be- 'hold, and thy dreaming heart embrace the depths 'of Being which are around thee.' Then his eye was opened and a sea of light filled all the spaces which had seemed desolate before, and his heart felt the presence of an unspeakable power, swelling in varied forms of existence around him. Suns and planets were seen to float as mere specks in the vast ocean of life which was revealed to him. For a time he was conscious of no pain. Immeasurable joy and thanksgiving filled his soul. But in this glorious splendour his guide had vanished. He was alone in the midst of life, and he yearned for some companionship. 'Then there came sailing onwards,' he continues, 'from the depth, through the galaxies of stars, a 'dark globe along the sea of light; and a human 'form, as a child, stood upon it, which neither 'changed nor yet grew greater as it drew near. 'At last I recognised our Earth before me, and on 'it the Child JESUS, and He looked upon me with 'a look so bright and gentle and loving, that I 'awoke for love and joy.'

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

2. The thought which inspires this grand vision is that which I now wish to develope and confirm. It is my object to shew that a belief in the Resurrection of our Lord is not indeed the solution (for that we cannot gain), but the illumination of the mysteries of life: that in this fact the apparent contradictions of the immensity and insignificance of the individual are harmonized: that in this lies an end to which pre-

Christian history converged, a spring from which post-Christian history flows: that in this man finds the only perfect consecration of his entire nature: that in this there is contained a promise for the future which removes, as far as may be, the sense of isolation which belongs to our finite nature, and unites our world again to the absolute and eternal: that in this, to sum up all briefly, we may contemplate Christianity in relation to history, to man, and to the future, not as a vague idea, or as a set of dogmas, or even as a system, but as the witness to actual events, in the substantial reality of which lies all its power and all its hope. STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

3. At the outset it is important to define the field within which the foundation of our inquiry lies, and to close it within the narrowest limits. It includes only the Cross and the Sepulchre. It is open to the full light of day. The Death, the Burial, and the Resurrection of Christ, claim to be facts exactly in the same sense, to be supported by evidence essentially identical in kind, and to be bound together indissolubly as the groundwork of the Christian Faith. If they are true, then they will be seen to form the centre round which other truths group themselves, not less real, nor less significant, though they are not equally capable of being directly subjected to historical tests. If they are not true, then 'is our 'faith vain.' Christianity is a name and nothing more, a sentiment, an aspiration, the expression and not the satisfaction of human need.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

4. The natural indistinctness of common language leaves room for a vague impression that in this case there is some mean between truth and falsehood: that though the Resurrection was not a fact (as the Crucifixion was a fact), yet it was something more than a fiction: that it expressed (it may be) an intuition or a divine belief. Yet it is obvious that the power of the Resurrection, as the ground of religious hope, lies in the very circumstance that the event which changed the whole character of the disciples was external to them, independent of them, unexpected by them. We are speaking here, of course, of things as they present themselves to the senses, and in this light the Resurrection claims to have been so far a fact of the same order as the Burial of the Lord. Its objectivity is essential to its significance. A conviction that a particular person had risen again, when he had not, is simply false, however it may have been produced. And if the conviction embodies itself in a circumstantial narrative of facts intended to establish the imaginary event, the narrative is simply a falsehood and nothing more. There are cases, as, for example, in the description of the tumult of a battle, where fictitious or unreal details convey a relatively true idea of the whole. It is obviously impossible either to record or to apprehend the multitudinous phases of action which go to fill up a complicated and changing scene; and the genius of an artist may be able to convey to others the reality which he has himself grasped through representative incidents moulded to his purpose. It might be so, within certain limits, with the details of the Resurrection. But 'if Christ be not risen,' it is the whole and not the details which, on such a supposition, is imaginary. The Resurrection then is either a fact in itself wholly independent of those who were witnesses to it, or it is a fiction—it matters not whether designed or undesigned—on which no belief can be founded. It is a real link between the seen and the unseen worlds, or it is at best the expression of a human instinct. Christ has escaped from the corruption of death; or men, as far as the future is concerned, are exactly where they were before He came. Whatever may be the civilizing power of Christian morality, it can throw no light upon the grave. If the Resurrection be not true in the same sense in which the Passion is true, then

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

Death still remains the great conqueror. As far as all experience goes, no pledge has been given to us of his defeat. A splendid guess, an inextinguishable desire alone have sought to pierce the darkness beyond the tomb, if Jesus has not (as we believe) borne our human nature into the presence of God.

5. When once we grasp clearly the momentous interests which are involved in the belief in the Resurrection, we shall be prepared to understand how it formed the central point of the Apostolic teaching; and yet more than this, how the event itself is the central point of history, primarily of religious history, and then of civil history of which that is the soul. It often seems indeed as if we do not realise the vastness of the consequences which it brings. An influential Christian teacher has said that the Resurrection belongs to the teaching on Scripture rather than to the teaching on the Person of Christ, forgetting that faith in Christ as the Saviour, so far as this was a Gospel for the world, did not precede but follow it. Even those who hold most firmly to a faith in the Resurrection are tempted to regard it as a doctrine rather than as a fact, as an article of belief rather than as a sensible ground of hope. Gradually we have been led to dissociate faith in the resurrection of the body from the actual Resurrection of Christ, which is the earnest of it. And not unfrequently we substitute for the fulness of the Christian creed the purely philosophic conception of an immortality of the soul, which surrenders, as we shall see hereafter, the idea of the continuance of our complete personal existence. But according to the divine instinct of the first age, the message of the Resurrection sums up in one fact the teaching of the Gospel. It is the one central link between the seen and the unseen. We cannot allow our thoughts to be vague or undecided upon it with impunity. We must place it in the very front of our confession, with all that it includes, or we must be prepared to lay aside the Christian name. Even in its ethical aspect Christianity does not offer a system of morality, but a universal principle of morality which springs out of the Resurrection. The elements of dogma and morality are indeed inseparably united in the Resurrection of Christ; for the same fact which reveals the glory of the Lord, reveals at the same time the destiny of man and the permanence of all that goes to make up the fulness of human life. If the Resurrection be not true, the basis of Christian morality, no less than the basis of Christian theology, is gone. The issue cannot be stated too broadly. We are not

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

Christians unless we are clear in our confession on this point. To preach the fact of Resurrection was the first function of the Evangelists; to embody the doctrine of the Resurrection is the great office of the Church; to learn the meaning of the Resurrection is the task not of one age only, but of all. Yet there seem to be times when the truth has a special significance: times, like our own, when the spirit of material progress tends to confine the thoughts of men within the limits of its own domain; when we are in constant danger of forgetting the larger relationships of human existence, because we find within us and around us enough to distract and occupy our thoughts; when the sense of the infinite vastness (so to speak) of our present finite being turns the soul away from its natural aspirations towards the absolute and the unseen.

6. This is one aspect of our subject. The Resurrection is a revelation, so far as such a revelation is possible, of the spiritual world and of our own connexion with it. But it has also another aspect as a fact in the common history of the world. Its essentially objective character is not less important than its divine message. For we may notice that a religion which is to move the world must be based on a history.

A religion drawn solely from the individual consciousness of man can only reflect a particular form of intellectual development. Its influence is limited by the mould in which it is cast. Its applicability is confined to those who have attained to a special culture. Even to the last it is essentially of the mind and not of the heart or of the life. This is obvious equally from the record of the speculations on Natural Theology, and from the history of all those religions which have had any power in the world. A subjective religion brings with it no element of progress and cannot lift man out of himself. A historical revelation alone can present GOD as an object of personal love. The external world answering to human instinct suggests the conception of His eternal power, but offers nothing which justifies in us the confidence of 'sons.' Man is but one of the many elements of creation and cannot arrogate to himself any special relationship with his Maker. Pure Theism is unable to form a living religion. Mahommedanism lost all religious power in a few generations. Judaism survived for fifteen centuries every form of assault in virtue of the records of a past deliverance on which it was based, and the hope of a future Deliverer which it included.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

7. Briefly the Gospel of the Resurrection harmonizes in itself the objective and subjective elements of religion. On the one hand it reposes on a fact which however unique yet claims to belong to the circle of human experience. On the other hand the fact is such that its personal appropriation offers the widest scope for the energies of spiritual life. The Resurrection is sufficiently definite to take religion out of the domain of caprice and rest its hopes upon a foundation external to the believer; and it is so far-reaching in its ultimate significance as to present itself to every age and every soul with a fresh power. It gives faith a firm standing ground in history, and at the same time opens a boundless vision of the future development of our present powers. It brings down dogma to earth and then vindicates the infinitude of the issues of temporal existence. By the definiteness of its actual occurrence it gives dignity to all human action: by the universality of its import it lifts the thoughts of the believer from the man to the race and to the world. It stands, so to speak, midway between the seen and the unseen: it belongs equally to the spiritual and to the material order, and it reconciles both: it gives immediate reality to the one by the manifestation of the Son of man who 'came forth from the Father and went to the Father;' it ennobles the other by the revelation of a divine presence in the world according to His word, Who said, 'Lo, I am with you all the days.' In both respects its teaching is essential to Christianity. Exactly in proportion as it is lost sight of in the popular Creed, doctrine is divorced from life, and the broad promises of divine hope are lost in an individual struggle after good.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

8. It is possible that individual exceptions may be found to the truth of these statements. Faith is indeed without question the spring of all progressive or universal religion; and the essence of faith lies in the transference of trust to something outside the believer. Yet on the other hand some great souls appear to have an immediate perception of isolated truths, so that in their case a thought becomes a distinct reality, contemplated, as it were, apart from the thinker. For such men faith in a thought is possible, and is the source of all that approaches most nearly to a new creation in human history. These solitary heroes can in some measure at least live as seeing the unseen by the force of their innate power; but for the mass faith needs some outward pledge to rest upon, and some outward fact to call it into action. Exactly in proportion as the popular idea of religion is separated from the personal relation of the worshipper to the Deity, attested (or supposed to be attested) by historical manifestations, the worship itself degenerates into a discipline or a form. Even Christianity is capable of such a degradation; but we need only to go back to the Evangelists to regain a pure conception of its majesty. As it is seen in their narratives it satisfies equally the wants of the few and of the many; and that most signally in the message of the Resurrection, which was the assurance of the establishment of the kingdom of God. The facts of the visible Life of Christ are for all time a living Gospel; and the doctrine which they include meets and carries forward the boldest speculations of philosophy.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

9. For it is evident that the events recorded by the Evangelists while they are most truly historical are not merely history. Their significance is not in the past only or even chiefly. And so also the evidence by which they are supported is not simply that of direct testimony. The authority of testimony is supplemented by that of the instinct[1] within us which recognises that the

[1] The word is open to many objections, but I can find no other to express the spiritual impulse through which man's constitution expresses itself, as it is slowly trained by the circumstances of life. Experience shews that it is as much a idea of a Divine Revelation corresponds with the essential wants of man. Man feels that he was born for GOD, and looks for some sign to assure him of the reality of a fellowship with the unseen. The feeling will shew itself in the course of the whole education of humanity in many ways, but it is not without its appropriate discipline. A Divine Revelation must from the very nature of the case tend to satisfy the loftiest conception which can be formed of man's destiny. If it does not do so, it is condemned by the instinct which looks for it. Thus in discussing the truth of the Resurrection as a fact it is impossible not to take into consideration its moral significance. Evidence which would be felt to be insufficient to prove the occurrence of a prodigy, may be amply sufficient to establish the objective reality of a fact which is found to answer to the circumstances or conditions of our nature. Nay more, it may be affirmed that no external evidence alone could ever establish more than an 'otiose' belief in the occurrence of an isolated or seemingly arbitrary miracle in a distant age, while the combination of external and internal evidence is capable of producing a measure of conviction part of his nature to turn to GOD as it is to turn to the light. Reason and experience in each case help him to determine how he shall best do that which he was made to do.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

STATEMENT OF THE QUESTION.

which is only less certain than an immediate intuition.

10. But in order to estimate the spiritual significance of the Resurrection we must first take into account the relation in which it stands to many elementary thoughts which lie at the very foundation of our ordinary life. Above all it is necessary that we should set down clearly what must be taken for granted and not proved: what is the conception which we form of Nature, and of miracles: what are the limits within which human speculation is confined. Till these points are determined, as far as they seem to admit of determination, all further discussion must be fruitless. If, for example, a miracle is inherently incredible, it is idle to reason about a fact which in the end must be explained away. If on the other hand we hold that miracles are, in certain cases, as credible as ordinary events generally, it is necessary that we should shew how this belief is reconcileable with the ideas which we entertain of an Infinite God and of the constancy of natural laws. These fundamental questions will form the subject of the Introduction; and afterwards we shall be in a position to consider the Resurrection in itself and in its application to History, to the Individual, and to Society.

INTRODUCTION.

Τρέφονται πάντες οἱ ἀνθρώπινοι νόμοι ὑπὸ ἑνὸς τοῦ θείου. κρατέει γὰρ τοσοῦτον ὁκόσον ἐθέλει καὶ ἐξαρκέει πᾶσιν καὶ περιγίνεται.

HERACLITUS.

1. THE simplicity of the Gospel is not due to the absence of difficulties, but to the coincidence of the difficulties which it involves with the inherent difficulties of human existence, when existence is taken as a subject of speculation. Christianity does indeed involve many difficulties, but it does not create them. The difficulties themselves beset us in our daily life (§ 3); but as long as they take a practical form, they receive a practical answer. However arduous it may be to form a clear conception of responsible freedom, we treat others and ourselves as responsible. Christianity, however, which reveals the significance of life makes us also feel its mysteries. It brings out what was ill-defined before, like the light which does not make the shadows, though they are seen by contrast with it. The truth INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION. involved in this distinction is of vital importance towards the understanding of its claims. We are so constituted that we must look beyond and beneath the phenomena of physical life. We cannot acquiesce in ignorance; and that religion necessarily claims our allegiance which answers most completely to all the conditions of our nature. If it could be shewn that Christianity introduces some idea into life wholly alien from its common tenor, or assumes principles which we do not act upon, or asserts consequences at variance with the natural reason of men, we might pause before receiving its teaching. But if on the contrary its mysteries rest on fundamental mysteries of our finite being; if it takes its stand on human nature as it is and interprets its aspirations; if it carries on thoughts of which we feel the beginnings within ourselves, and opens gleams of hope where we acknowledge that our prospect is clouded; then it cannot but be monstrous to reject it for reasons on which we might with equal justice declare life itself to be impossible.

2. For it is necessary to bear in mind that the Resurrection is not primarily an explanation of existing phenomena, growing out of them or introduced to explain them, but a new fact added to the sum of human experience. The fact may prove to be an explanation of mysteries which are already felt, so far as it opens a way towards their solution by bringing them into connexion with another order of being, but in itself it claims to take its place among the events of human history. Like all historical facts it differs from the facts of physics as being incapable of direct and present verification. And it differs from all other facts of history because it is necessarily unique. Yet it is not therefore incapable of that kind of verification which is appropriate to its peculiar nature. Physical science deals with law as uniform and consequently its results can be tested at any moment. History generally records the average results of human action, and its heroic passages are judged by the tendencies which are observed towards similar displays of exceptional power in less moving crises (§ 11). And so the Resurrection, the fact that Christ rose from the grave and did not again die—the one fact absolutely unparalleled in itself and in its circumstances—is to be taken in connexion with the whole course of human life, and with that instinct of immortality which from time to time makes itself felt with an overwhelming power. Its verification lies in its abiding harmony with all the progressive developments of man and with each discovery which casts light upon his destiny. INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

3. It is on this new fact that Christianity first rests its claims. It asserts that the Resurrection is itself a Gospel. For the rest it makes no attempt to lessen or remove the problems by which all life is perplexed. For instance, the existence of matter, the relation of soul and body, the existence of evil, existence absolutely and in time and space, individual freedom and general laws of sequence, are all fundamental and final mysteries from which we can never escape. They are taken account of and dealt with in the doctrines of Christianity, but Christianity does not make them. It will be seen hereafter how they are dealt with, but for the present it is enough to notice that the rejection of the mysteries of Christianity will not eliminate the element of mystery from life. We are absolutely unable to form a conception of a beginning or of an end of things. The very idea of life involves the antithesis of finite and infinite, and the special difficulties which have been enumerated simply represent the various forms which this one fundamental difficulty assumes when contemplated in connexion with the physical world or with human action.

4. This antithesis of the finite and infinite which meets us as soon as we lift our thoughts above single phenomena is the final basis of all religion. It is apprehended more or less sharply in different ages or races, but the essence of worship even in its lowest form necessarily includes the tendency towards a true perception of it. In this respect Christianity differs from all other religions, not in principle, but in virtue of the absolute clearness with which the idea of the antithesis is laid down. The two terms are regarded in their most complete separation and in 'the fulness of time' they are combined in one Person. But in saying this we are anticipating what will appear more naturally afterwards. It is not necessary yet to consider how Christianity resolves or harmonizes the antithesis on which it, equally with all religions, is founded. That which is essential to our argument is that the antithesis itself is not brought into being by Christianity, but is the clear expression of that element in man's nature, which has sought at all times to embody itself in religious thought and worship—in thought as well as in worship: for the mind which strives to establish its own relation to the unseen by the worship of a God, is always led at the same time to ponder on the relation of the World to the same Power. INTRODUCTION.

5. Christianity therefore as the absolute religion of man assumes as its foundation the exist-

INTRODUCTION. ence of an Infinite Personal GOD or rather of a Heavenly Father of absolute power, justice and goodness, and a finite human will (ii. § 2). This antithesis is assumed and not proved. No arguments can establish it. It is a primary intuition and not a deduction. It is capable of illustration from what we observe around us; but if either term is denied no reasoning can establish its truth. Each man for himself is supposed to be conscious of the existence of GOD and of his own existence. We can go no further. If he has not, or says he has not this consciousness, he must be regarded as one whose powers are imperfect. It would be as vain to reason with him on religion as to reason on the phenomena of light with a blind man. No proof can establish the existence of that within a man of which he alone has the final cognisance. Practically every one is found to act as if he believed that he had a will, and also as if he were justly accountable for his actions: he is conscious of satisfaction within himself, and awards praise or blame to others; but whether this be universally true or not is of no real moment to us. It is taken for granted that religion is possible; and if so the conceptions which are involved in the fundamental antithesis on which it reposes are also assumed to be true, though they do not admit of a formal proof. If they are not axioms we claim them as postulates[1]. INTRODUCTION.

6. But though we appeal to the individual consciousness for the recognition of the truth of the assumptions which have been made, the language in which one term of the antithesis is expressed requires explanation. We speak of God as Infinite and Personal. The epithets involve a contradiction, and yet they are both necessary. In fact the only approximately adequate conception which we can form of a Divine Being is under the form of a contradiction. For us personality is only the name for special limitation exerting itself through will; and will itself implies the idea of resistance. But as applied to God the notions of limitation and resistance are excluded by the antithetic term infinite[2]. For us

[1] It might appear at first sight that the Religion of M. Comte, which is a powerful reality for those who hold it, is an exception to the truth of these statements. In fact it is the strongest testimony to their necessary validity. The 'Great Being'—the sum of humanity—which is the object of worship, satisfies the condition of 'Infinity' by embracing in itself all the past, the present, and the future in the conception of the worshipper: it satisfies the condition of 'Personality' by the concession whereby each worshipper is encouraged to realise the whole by looking at it as partially represented by an individual. On the other hand M. Comte distinctly recognises human freedom within certain (undetermined) limits.

[2] From this it is evident how utterly false it is to represent

INTRODUCTION. again infinity excludes the conception of special action: it belongs to the nature and not to the manifestation of being. But as applied to GOD it is necessarily connected with action and with phenomena, because it is only through these that personality, so far as we observe it, can shew itself. Thus it follows that by speaking of GOD as Infinite we simply mean that none of the deductions which can be drawn from corresponding attributes or powers, or the uses of power in man, can be transferred to Him. It would be false for instance to argue from the usual sense of the terms employed that what He 'does' or 'purposes' is in itself bound by time and space. And on the other hand by speaking of Him as Personal we wish to express that He rules and creates as if it were by will, with a purpose towards which all things are guided. So only can we guard against the representation of GOD as the Absolute simply, whether the Absolute be regarded as the Unchangeable which lies beneath the changing phenomena of the world, or as the sum of all that 'is'.

the Christian (theological) philosophy of the world as based on the conception of 'a world governed and created by wills of which the model is in the human will.' For the use of the word 'will' in such a philosophy is simply analogical, and checked at every application by the supplementary idea of Infinite Power.

7. This conception of the Divine Being, which, it must be remembered, is not peculiar to Christianity, except in the distinctness of its enunciation, clears the way to our apprehension of the course and phenomena of nature. For we cannot contemplate nature apart from God. But it may be said that such a conception of God belongs only to a late age: that the primitive notions of God are simpler and ruder: that it is unfair to claim as natural to man thoughts which have a limited currency after the lapse of incalculable time. To such an objection it is sufficient to reply that we are in no way concerned with the manner in which the conception has been fashioned. The question is whether man has gained it, whether he was made to gain it, whether it covers the facts of his spiritual experience? The child includes the man potentially; and the principle which holds true of the development of the individual holds true with necessary modifications of the development of the race. Meanwhile this conception of God is assumed, and we must use it. Hence it is against reason to press the results of our observation of phenomena to consequences inconsistent with our conception of His infinite and personal Being. Two errors are specially to be guarded against which are most fruitful of fallacious

INTRODUCTION. issues. The one is the transference of the phenomena of succession and gradual growth and slow sequence, which are necessarily part of our observation of nature, to nature as the expression of the Divine will. The other is the supposition that 'laws' have in themselves (so to speak) a motive force: that the law, which declares the mode in which phenomena present themselves to us, has some virtue by which the phenomena are absolutely; or, in other words, that the Law not only declares how we see things, but makes them such as we see them. Each of these misconceptions will require to be noticed a little more in detail.

8. The only idea which we can form of nature, that is of the sum of all phenomena, in relation to an Infinite Mind is as one thought. For God all is one and at once[1]. He is cognisant

[1] The reader will be glad to dwell on the thought as it is worked out in Tennyson's noble words:

To your question now,
Which touches on the workman and his work.
Let there be light and there was light: 'tis so;
For was, and is, and will be, are but is;
And all creation is one act at once,
The birth of light: but we that are not all,
As parts, can see but parts, now this, now that,
And live, perforce, from thought to thought, and make
One act a phantom of succession: thus
Our weakness somehow shapes the shadow, Time.

(if we may so say) of things themselves, and not, as we naturally think and reason, of our perceptions of them. He sees them as they are and not as we observe them. Indeed, if we reflect, there is something strangely absurd in applying to the Divine Power conclusions which are based on human apprehensions of things. We must, because we are finite, conceive of things as happening in time; and in the same way we must conceive of GOD as acting, whenever He acts, in time; but it is equally clear that we must not argue as if time belonged really to the Divine relation to the world, or as if GOD acted at this time and that, or at every moment, one after another. Any conclusion which rests on this supposition as a premiss is radically false. The statement that 'GOD acts' is true at all times in regard to our human conception of Him. We can say justly that He acts now, that He acted then, and that He will act at some future moment; but when we reason on the human element in these statements, that is on the temporal limitations, it is obvious that this process of reasoning can give us no conclusion with regard to the action of GOD.

9. Again, a 'law of nature' can mean nothing else than the law of the human apprehen-

INTRODUCTION. sion of phenomena. We are forced to regard things under conditions of time and space and the like, and the consequence is that phenomena are grouped together according to certain rules. We find that for us (such is the constitution of our powers) the sequence of phenomena is this and not that. Partial sequences are compared and combined and thus more general sequences are discovered. But however far we may go we never go beyond ourselves. The law at last is a law for men: its form depends on limitations which are characteristic of men. We have not the least reason for supposing that it has any absolute existence. For to say that things when observed by men will be observed by them under such and such limitations and therefore according to such and such laws, is obviously a very different thing from saying that such and such are the laws of things in themselves and for all intelligent beings. And if we know nothing of the laws of things in themselves, how can we know anything of things in relation to GOD?

10. From what has been said it is evident that a law, which expresses nothing more than the result of our observation of phenomena, cannot make phenomena what they are. It is no explanation of how the phenomena came to be or continue to be. It would have appeared to be insisting on a truism to dwell on this, were it not for the general idea which seems to find currency, that when a law (as of gravitation) is laid down nothing more remains to be explained. The law may afterwards (it is admitted) be found to be part of one much wider and more comprehensive, but, as far as it goes, this satisfies all our inquiries. In reality it tells us that something produces results (as far as we are concerned) in such and such a way. But obviously if the knowledge were within our reach our chief desire would be to know what produces the results? What brings about the phenomena according to the law? We can shew that if a body be projected in a certain direction and acted upon by a central force varying in a particular way it will describe an orbit like that of the earth round the sun. But to go no further, What projected the earth? It would be easy to follow up this question by others; but this alone is sufficient to shew that in the simplest phenomena we are face to face with a power of which observation can tell us nothing but the fact of its existence.

11. There is then nothing absolute in laws of nature. They are relative to man, and do not explain either the origin or the preservation

INTRODUCTION. of things. It is quite possible for us to conceive that the unknown power through which phenomena are produced according to an observed way might have caused them to be produced in another way wholly different. The belief in the immutability of the observed law springs wholly from ourselves, and is simply a special expression of the axiom that the same power will produce the same results under the same circumstances. But we have no right to assume that the circumstances will always be the same. The range of our observation is bounded within very narrow limits. And yet further if, as we have supposed, the Divine thought of the world leaves room for the exercise of free human will, it is antecedently likely that we should be enabled in some way to be made sensible of what we call by a figure the Divine will. We may expect from time to time in the evolution of the whole scheme of creation to be made aware of the presence of a Personal Power, not by the suspension of the laws of sequence which we commonly observe, but by the action of some new force. Or to put the subject in another light; as changed circumstances would lead to different results under the action of the same power, so we must allow that there are many cases in which the exertion of the free human will must modify not indeed the Divine action in itself, but the phenomena in which the results of it are presented to us. The building of a city, for example, which depends on the free action of individuals, may modify to an almost indefinite extent the physical character of its immediate neighbourhood, and so more or less of all other districts, in a manner which we can generally follow out; and thus also we can conceive that the natural (though unseen) action of God may make itself felt with varying distinctness in the course of ages, though in this case the law of sequence is undiscoverable by us. At least generally it is undeniable that if we believe in the existence of a Personal God by whose influence we are affected, there is no more difficulty in admitting the reality of His action in various ways and degrees on the physical world, than in recognising it (as we do) in our own souls. Indeed the difficulty in the latter case is greater; for it is perhaps impossible for us to conceive how the Infinite Divine will can act on the human will (as it is felt to do) without destroying the freedom of man. INTRODUCTION.

12. What we can observe of the actual 'laws' of phenomena tends in some degree to illustrate the general manner and limits of this modification of effects by the introduction of new forces. It

INTRODUCTION. holds true universally that the generality of a law decreases as the complexity of the subject with which it deals increases. In other words, when a result depends upon the combined working of many elements the probability of variation is increased. The action of each element may suffer alteration as to intensity or duration, from causes which are not calculable by our powers of observation. The results of physical laws, for instance, are only infinitesimally modifiable when compared with the results of biological laws. In the former case we can approximately take account of all the interfering forces, but in the latter case forces are brought into play which, as far as can yet be known, escape all individual estimation, either as to their actual or as to their potential energy. In Sociology this uncertainty is confessedly yet greater. In Theology, which completes the philosophy of life by uniting it with a higher Order, the same progression continues, and it is as unreasonable to expect results absolutely universal in their observed form relative to us in Theology, the crowning science of being, as it would be to expect the results of Sociological laws to admit of a mechanical or chemical or biological expression. Each higher science in the 'hierarchy' includes the action of those below it according to their special laws, but at the same time it introduces new forces by which these simpler results are variously modified (§ 26). INTRODUCTION.

13. The same truth may be set forth yet in another way. Even if it is admitted unconditionally that our present knowledge is of phenomena only, it is obvious that the phenomena are of different orders, extending from those which mark the conditions of our observation (e.g. time, space) to isolated facts representing the resultants of the action of a multiplicity of forces, which facts, from the nature of things, are severally unique. Some of these may be general: others may be exceptional. In some we can analyse the result and reduce it to simple results of known 'laws': in some the problem is indeterminate. And exactly as the subject rises to a nobler elevation our knowledge becomes more incomplete. Completeness indeed is but another name for ascertained limitation. The grandest and highest faculties of man are exactly those in which he most feels his weakness and imperfection. They are at present only half-fulfilled prophecies of powers which, as we believe, shall yet find an ample field for unrestricted development[1].

[1] The student of Browning will recall countless passages in which he illuminates this truth.

For thence—a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks—

INTRODUCTION.

14. In a word, it is evident from the extent of creation, of which we see but the least fraction, and from the connexion of its parts one with another, and from the presence about us of forces which we are wholly incompetent to estimate, that we are absolutely unable to judge, whether we may not from time to time be capable of calling into action ourselves or otherwise coming under the influence of powers which are usually dormant. Every one must have felt at critical moments that he has a fund of physical strength and also a capacity for moving others by vigour of will of which under ordinary circumstances he is wholly unconscious. The crisis brings out the gift, and when the crisis is over we fall back again into our usual state. Nor is this the case with individuals only. History shews that there are epochs of extraordinary, and as we should say, who live in calmer times, of unnatural activity and power in societies and nations. A city or a race under the pressure of some great passion works wonders. Above all religious enthusiasm, whether in men or in bodies of men, is capable of producing results which under ordinary circum-

Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:
What I aspired to be,
And was not, comforts me:
A brute I might have been, but would not sink i' the scale.

stances would be regarded as impossible. It seems as if the idea of an immediate intercourse with a spiritual world, quite apart from the special form which it takes, were able to quicken man's powers with a marvellous energy and in some degree to work out its own accomplishment. INTRODUCTION.

15. Thus in contemplating nature from its moral side we find ourselves in the presence of two indeterminate forces. Not only are we forced to admit that there is room in the whole scheme of the world (of which we are poor and imperfect judges) for changed conditions which necessarily include changed results; but also we find that men and mankind generally are possessed of faculties capable of vast and indefinite energy. We cannot measure, as we cannot explain, the influence which one mind can exercise on another, or which the mind can exercise on the body. The influence is obvious, but what are the springs and what the limits of it we cannot tell. In such a case even past experience is no final judge. And this reflection brings us to another fundamental assumption of Christianity.

16. Christianity assumes, as we have seen, the existence of an Infinite Personal God and of a finite human will: it claims also to be miraculous.

INTRODUCTION. It takes for granted that 'miracles' (§ 17) are recognised modes of Divine action. From the conception which we are necessarily led to form of the relation of Nature to the Creator it has been shewn that exceptional action in its course is not only not excluded by the laws which we base on observation, but even antecedently likely. Christianity affirms that this exceptional action does actually take place. And in doing this it only affirms what every other historical religion must affirm; for all alike appeal to an immediate revelation as their original basis. It follows then that all religion which can influence the mass of men (p. 8, § 6) is declared to be impossible if such an exceptional manifestation of GOD is inconceivable or unaccomplished. Nothing remains but a faith which begins and ends within the individual. But not to dwell on this, it is evident that if the claim to be a miraculous religion is essentially incredible apostolic Christianity is simply false. If Christ did not rise again—the words cannot be too often repeated—then is our faith vain. Something may be left—a system of morals or the like—but that is not Christianity. The essence of Christianity lies in a miracle; and if it can be shewn that a miracle is either impossible or incredible, all further inquiry into the details of its history is superfluous in a religious point of view. The rise of Christianity will still furnish a historical or philosophical problem of surpassing interest, but the data which it presents will contain nothing on which to found the faith of a world. Thus we are forced to consider whether the difficulties which are supposed to lie in the conception of a miracle are a fatal hindrance to the literal acceptance of the Gospel. INTRODUCTION.

17. By a miracle (using the word in its strictest sense) we mean a phenomenon which either in itself or from the circumstances under which it is presented, suggests the immediate working of a personal power producing results not explicable by what we observe in the ordinary course of nature. Thus some facts are in their essential character miraculous, as the Resurrection; others, again, are perfectly natural in themselves, but miraculous from the circumstances under which they occur, as the miraculous draught of fishes or, to take a different example, the true prediction of a special event. But they have this in common, that they lead us to recognise the action of some personal power: they involve, as a general rule, an appeal to or a declaration of divine strength. Some facts again, as many of the cases of healing, may be regarded as natural or miraculous, according as we look at INTRODUCTION. them as resulting from powers already existing in man and evoked by special circumstances, or as immediate acts of divine blessing. This indeed is a mere question of interpretation. The principle is attested in a single case. He who believes in the Resurrection will feel no anxiety as to the exact limits within which the divine working is to be confined. Probably he will see it everywhere and that even in the same sense, for the difference or identity of mode will seem to him to depend on causes which he cannot investigate.

18. From what has been already said it will be seen that a miracle cannot be declared impossible by any one who believes in a Personal God. Nature is the expression of His will, and antecedently to experience we could not have determined that it would be manifested in one way rather than in another. Nor again can all conceivable experience give us a complete knowledge of the conditions which may affect its manifestation to us so as to exclude variety. On the contrary under particular circumstances which may happen if God reveals Himself to men, miracles are as probable as ordinary phenomena under common circumstances. If the result is different, the power being the same, we suppose that the conditions are different; and conversely if the conditions are different, we suppose that the result will be changed. Nor, again, in speaking of a fact as a miracle do we offer any explanation of its being or becoming. The mystery as to how GOD acts is left untouched. Whether He acts as He ordinarily does (naturally), or in an extraordinary way (miraculously), this fundamental difficulty remains absolutely the same. It is neither greater nor less in the one case than in the other. The power which produces the phenomena is indeterminate and indeterminable. Thus while it would be impossible that two and two should ever make five, because the law on which the result depends lies wholly within us; yet it is not impossible that an (unknown) power which as far as our observation reaches has always produced (say) four phenomena of a particular kind, should on a particular occasion produce five such phenomena.

19. Yet further it will appear that a miracle is not unnatural, that is contrary to and not only different from the observed course of phenomena. It would be unnatural only if it were supposed that the miraculous and the ordinary result were both produced by the same force acting under the same conditions. Or, if for a moment we may use popular language, if it

INTRODUCTION. were supposed that the same law could produce different effects. But on the other hand it is distinctly laid down that in the case of a miracle a new force is introduced, or rather, as the source of all force is one, that the force which usually acts freely in a particular way now acts freely in another. That is, to continue to use popular language, the law is not suspended, but its natural results are controlled. The law produces its full effect, but a new power supervenes, and the final result represents the combined effect of the two forces. Let it once be seen that the law necessarily involves the idea of a power acting according to the law, and acting freely, for the law is evidently subsequent to and not essentially regulative of the action, and there will be no more difficulty in feeling that the miraculous action of God is as truly natural, that is in accordance with what we may expect from a consideration of the whole scheme of nature, as His ordinary action. To affirm that miracles are unnatural is to constitute general laws of observation into a fate superior to God, or to deny His personal action. And it must be observed that the denial of His personal action in the physical world involves the denial of His action on the hearts of men; for there is not the least reason to suppose that what is seen is less immediately dependent upon Him than what is unseen, or that it can be affirmed beforehand that He is more likely to act on one part of that which He has created than on another. In other words, if miracles are unnatural, then we are hopelessly enclosed within the barriers of material laws and absolutely shut off from all intercourse with the Infinite. But this is against the fundamental axiom of religion. INTRODUCTION.

20. While, however, it is maintained that in this larger sense of the word miracles are 'natural,' it is necessary to guard carefully against two explanations which have been given to account for their occurrence naturally; and the more so because they have obtained a popular currency. Some have said that a miracle is but the compression, so to speak, of results which are obtained slowly and successively in the general course of things. The water, it is argued, which was made wine by a word at Cana once, is made wine by the vintage every year. The slightest reflection will shew that these two processes, as far as we can follow them, have absolutely nothing in common, so that the one cannot even illustrate the other. But even if the parallel were perfect it would be equally nugatory, for in that case it would tend, in proportion to its completeness, to exclude the INTRODUCTION. idea of personal action which is of the essence of a miracle. The same remark holds true of the second false explanation, which is in every way more profound and, even, in some aspects, unanswerable. It is alleged that natural laws, like some mathematical series, may be intermittent, so that by the action of the same law one result may be given for a thousand (or a million) times in succession and a different result next time. Miracles then, it is argued, may be the exceptional terms of such an order. They certainly may be, but if so their permanent significance is destroyed. Their moral and spiritual value vanishes at once when they are derived from the constant action of the same forces as commonly work around us. A miracle, if it has any real existence, lifts man truly and not in appearance only above the laws of the present general order.

21. It may however be objected that this view of miracles as occasional manifestations of the power of God is a conception unworthy of His Majesty: that it represents Him (so to speak) as dependent on time and circumstance. The objection, as far as it has any force, would lie equally against all action of God among men. It is, indeed, a mystery wholly beyond our comprehension how an Infinite Being can reveal or in any way manifest Himself to finite creatures. But in obedience to the bidding of our spiritual nature we have taken it for granted that He does so. And yet further the invidiousness of the objection lies in the transference to God of those ideas of time and succession which as we have seen (§ 8) are proper only to men. There is no 'occasion' to God. The world and all its history is for Him necessarily one. His action which we contemplate now in one (general) mode and now in another (exceptional) mode, is not in itself divided, though we are forced so to regard it. The principle (if we may so speak) which according to His wisdom directs the form of the general action and the principle which directs the form of the exceptional action, are not separated, so that the one is subsequent to and corrective of the other, but simultaneous or coincident. What is unfolded to us in a gradual process of 'becoming' in relation to an infinite mind simply 'is.' We are obliged to speak of 'the purpose of God's 'will,' and so we are obliged to speak of His 'Special Providence' or miraculous working; but the original phrase and the adaptation of the phrase to facts are both accommodations; and we must carefully guard against any deductions based upon the human element in them (§ 6).

INTRODUCTION.

22. Nor yet again can it be said that material results involve a material cause. We know absolutely nothing of cause. We know nothing of the power manifested in material results (§ 10). And unless we believe in the eternity of matter, (which is an absolute contradiction,) some material results must have had an immaterial cause. Moreover we experience daily the influence of will in ourselves, and this is not material. And it has been assumed that our finite will is a real power and potentially free, for otherwise religion is as completely destroyed as by denying the personality of God.

23. There is yet another aspect in which we may regard Miracles. Viewed from the human side, when man himself is looked upon as the centre of the power by which they are wrought, they fall into distinct groups, corresponding to the subject-matter (so to speak) on which they are wrought. Thus man may be conceived as acting upon the external world absolutely, where the general law is modified by his interference, as if he were to walk on water or control the movements of the heavenly bodies: or he may act upon the external world in immediate relation to himself or to those about him, as if he were to modify the perception of external phenomena in particular cases: or he may act upon man directly, either himself or others, as in the removal of disease. Now in the two latter cases an indeterminate element is introduced, the influence of man upon man, or the working of spirit upon spirit and matter in limited relation to itself; and prior to observation it is impossible to determine what varying effects may be produced by its operation. Experience alone can determine in each instance what phenomena may be produced by human will; and the vast range of the power of will and the unknown depth of its relations, suggest the possibility of an almost infinite variety of results produced by its action under new conditions. From time to time we are startled by occurrences which reveal a power of one mind over another, or of the mind over the body which seems to be practically indeterminate. In these cases then there is (it may be said) a natural opening for miracles: they have a point of contact with what we observe in the course of life. So far then we must be careful not to lay upon some 'miraculous' phenomena a weight which they will not bear. But in the first case, on the contrary, this 'natural' conception of a miracle is inadmissible. We can understand how the individual will can affect other individuals upon whom it can work immediately, but we cannot see how it can act

INTRODUCTION. upon the external world with which it has, as far as we know, nothing homogeneous, or, which would come to the same thing, upon the universal perception of men. Thus in miracles of this kind we are face to face with a final difficulty, which (from this point of view) culminates in the Resurrection. Yet even here the miracle has a corresponding phenomenon in life. Special prayer is based upon a fundamental instinct of our nature. And in the fellowship which is established in prayer between man and GOD we are brought into personal union with Him in Whom all things have their being. In this lies the possibility of boundless power; for when the connexion is once formed, who can lay down the limits of what man can do in virtue of the communion of his spirit with the Infinite Spirit? The distinctions thus indicated ought never to be overlooked in arguments on miracles, but in one respect all three cases are alike. Whether man works upon nature or upon his fellow-men, it is in virtue of a trust in the unseen. Personal faith is the condition of effectual action; and where GOD is supposed to act immediately the same condition is satisfied in the recognition of His working.

24. It follows that the moral element in miracles is both essential and predominant. There is always a natural relation between the acts and those for whom or by whom they are wrought. The external phenomenon which would in one age and to one people suggest the idea of the personal working of God would not do so in another age and to another people. The effect of the fact, and miracles are always supposed to be directed to an end, depends upon its inherent characteristics and the capacity of the witnesses to apprehend and interpret them. To use a mathematical phrase miracles must therefore be (generally speaking) a function of the age in which they are wrought. That which on one occasion would be felt to be a personal revelation of God might convey an impression wholly different at another. The miracles of one period or state of society might be morally impossible in another. It seems certain that knowledge limits faith, not indeed as diminishing its power but as guiding its direction. For instance, when any particular physical phenomena are apprehended as subject to a clear law, which is felt to be a definite expression of the Divine Will, it is inconceivable that faith could contemplate an interference with them, not because it would be impossible, but because the prayer for such an interference would itself be disloyal. For example, it would be positively immoral for us now to pray that the tides or the sun should not INTRODUCTION. rise on a particular day. The corresponding act is represented in the Gospels as suggested by the Tempter. There is even a divine 'cannot' recognised in the Gospels as well as a divine 'must.' But as long as the idea of the physical law which rules them was unformed or indistinct, the prayer would have been reasonable, and (may we not suppose) the fulfilment also. We cannot act when we feel that our influence is excluded; and may not the converse also be true? May not all things be possible for us which we firmly hold to be possible, if at least the result would be such as to convey as its whole and general effect the idea of the personal action of God? An age records only what it believes; but, in a certain sense also, it does what it believes.

25. These reflections serve to explain the real force which lies in two remarks on miracles which have at present gained a very wide currency. It is said that 'a belief in miracles de-'creases with the increase of civilisation;' and, further, that 'our age in virtue of its advanced 'civilisation is essentially and inevitably incredu-'lous of miracles.' Within certain limits both observations are undoubtedly true, but the limits within which their truth is circumscribed exclude the deductions which are drawn from them. The sense of the antecedent likelihood of a miracle proceeds from a comprehensive view of all nature, moral and physical, according to the full development of the mutual relations of its parts, as constituting a scheme for us practically infinite. But the necessary condition of all scientific inquiry, and the progress of science is here assumed to be the test of the progress of civilisation, is to put out of sight the indeterminate element in nature, and thus to unfamiliarise the mind with those aspects of the world in which the miracle finds its proper place. And not only so, but the requirements of exact science bind the attention of each student to some one small field, and this little fragment almost necessarily becomes for him the measure of the whole, if indeed he has ever leisure to lift his eyes up to the whole at all. The more intimately we are acquainted with any one subject, and the more sensible we become of the fulness of thought which it contains, the less we are fitted to take a due measure of its proper relations to other subjects, or to acknowledge practically and without effort that the conditions under which we contemplate it are not in themselves absolute. Thus in an inductive age laws of observation are treated, and with a view to the immediate results which are sought, treated rightly, as laws of nature. If the moral element of life—the idea of person-

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION. ality—be neglected, we cannot of necessity take account of any results which are not entirely physical. For physical students as such, and for those who take their impressions of the universe solely from them, miracles can have no real existence. Nor is this all: not miracles only, and this is commonly forgotten, but every manifestation of will is at the same time removed from the world: all life falls under the power of absolute materialism, a conclusion which is at variance with the fundamental idea of religion, and so with one of the original assumptions on which our argument is based.

26. At the same time such considerations shew that there can be no antagonism between Theology and Science as they are commonly contrasted. So far as these keep within their proper limits they move in distinct regions. Their respective paths lie in parallel and therefore in unintersecting planes. Theology deals with the origin and destiny of things: Science with things as they are according to human observation of them. Theology claims to connect this world with the world to come: Science is of this world only. Theology is confessedly partial, provisional, analogical in its expression of truth: Science, that is human science, can be complete, final, and absolute in its enunciation of the laws of phenomena. INTRODUCTION.

Theology accepts without the least reserve the conclusions of Science as such: it only rejects the claim of Science to contain within itself every spring of knowledge and every domain of thought.

27. This holds true of the lower and more exact forms of Science which deal with inorganic bodies; but as soon as account is taken of the Science of organic bodies—of Biology and Sociology—then Science itself becomes a prophet of Theology. In this broader and truer view of Science Theology closes a series, 'a hierarchy of Sciences,' as it has been well called, in which each successive member gains in dignity what it loses in definiteness, and by taking account of a more complex and far-reaching play of powers opens out nobler views of being. The Sciences of form and number are absolute for man and have no tendency to lift the individual out of himself. They are purely human and individual. The Sciences of inorganic bodies add the idea of external imperfectly-known forces to the universal conditions of human observation and thereby enlarge and elevate the scope of Science while they take away its claims to absoluteness. The Sciences of organic bodies by claiming to deal with the pheno-

INTRODUCTION. mena of life and will in all their separate and collective forms bear a wider margin of indeterminate problems and carry our thoughts beyond the region of certain knowledge. The Science of Theology, which is last in its complete evolution as it is first in instinctive apprehension, completes the progression, and by unfolding that which is permanent in life prepares a solid passage from the temporal to the eternal. The individual mind, the material world, humanity, GOD, form the central subjects of the successive groups of Sciences. Each Science, it will be seen, takes up into itself those Sciences which have gone before, but adds to them elements peculiar to itself (§ 12). To the last the laws of each are of full force within their proper sphere though the results which are properly due to them are liable to be modified by the interference of forces acting according to other laws. And thus in due order knowledge which begins with the knowledge of the conditions of human observation culminates in the knowledge of GOD, a knowledge infinitely less perfect than the former but at the same time infinitely more ennobling.

28. While then we admit that the tendency of a scientific age is adverse to a living belief in miracles, we see that this tendency is due not to the antagonism of science and miracle, but to the neglect and consequent obscuration by science of that region of thought in which the idea of the miraculous finds scope. And even here the power of general feeling makes itself most distinctly felt against the power of abstract reason. Exactly when material views of the universe seem to be gaining an absolute ascendancy, popular instinct finds expression now in this form of extravagant credulity, and now in that. Arrogant physicism is met by superstitious spiritualism; and there is right on both sides. The harmony of a true faith finds a witness to its fulness in this independent assertion of the antithetic elements which it tempers and reconciles.

29. It is however foreign to our purpose to consider what may be the causes which impress a very distinct character on different cycles of miracles, and on the form which the belief in the miraculous assumes at different periods. The investigation itself is full of interest, and contributes in a remarkable degree to illustrate the progressive forms of revelation. But for the present we are concerned simply with the possibility of a miracle, which is seen to be included in the idea of a Personal God. Whether the possibility has been realised in the Resurrection still remains INTRODUCTION. for consideration; but the consideration is now open.

30. For if miracles are neither impossible, nor unnatural, it follows that the records of them cannot be inherently incredible. But on the other hand in proportion as an event is rare, we are scrupulous in examining the evidence by which the truth of its occurrence is established; and the more so, if the event itself is such as to be easily misapprehended or referred to wrong causes, or connected with false antecedents or consequents. Cases of healing, for example, except under very peculiar circumstances, cannot be alleged as certainly miraculous (§ 17). Other events are unequivocal in this respect. The Resurrection is either a miracle or it is an illusion. Here there is no alternative: no ambiguity. And it is not an accessory of the Apostolic message, but the sum of the message itself (pp. 5, ff.). Its unique character is the very point on which the first teachers of Christianity support all their arguments. It claims to be the opening of a new life to the world. It cannot then be rightly contemplated by comparing it with the events of common history. It is, according to the original interpretation of it, as singular in the history of the whole race of men as birth is in the existence of the individual. In dealing with the evidence adduced in confirmation of such a fact, it is therefore necessary to take into account its relation to preceding and subsequent history; for it may well happen that the presumption in its favour gathered from the preparation which found its fulfilment in it, and from the results which flowed out of it, will more than counterbalance the natural distrust which is raised at first sight by its exceptional character. On a comprehensive survey of all nature, as far as we can judge from the results which are obtained by a faint approximation to such a view, the Resurrection of our Lord, including, as it does, the resurrection of man, may be as natural as events like birth and death, which are accepted as natural, not because we can explain them in any way, but because the range of our experience includes the observation of their constant recurrence.

31. So far then we have cleared the ground for our inquiry. If we grant the two assumptions which Christianity makes as being a religion for man (§ 5), there is nothing antecedently improbable in the Apostolic Gospel of the Resurrection considered as miraculous. The same principles which would exclude as impossible a belief in such a miracle as the Resurrection, would equally ex-

INTRODUCTION. clude a belief in anything beyond ourselves and the range of present physical observation. Thus the question practically is not simply Is Christianity true? but Is all hope, impulse, knowledge, life, absolutely bounded by sense and the world of sense? Is the present and the finite the definite limit (not only of the mode but) of the object of human thought? Is each individual personality bounded on both sides, past and future? Is life as well as science of phenomena only? Is there no faculty by which man can contemplate the temporal as (for him) a true image of the eternal? Is there no fact which unites the seen and the unseen? Is the spirit, as well as the understanding confined by present laws of observation not only in the embodiment of ideas but in intuition? Or can the soul reach forward to fuller forms of being, not so much future as absolute? Can it, with a consciousness of its divine destiny, look beyond the limits of time? Can it rejoice in feeling what is the glorious part which it has to play in the whole economy of the universe, and regard as its proper heritage a future appearance in the fulness of a glorified humanity before the presence of God?

CHAPTER I.

THE RESURRECTION AND HISTORY.

Φιλοσοφία ἡ Ἑλληνικὴ οἷον προκαθαίρει καὶ προεθίζει τὴν ψυχὴν εἰς παραδοχὴν πίστεως, ἐφ' ᾗ τὴν γνῶσιν ἐποικοδομεῖ ἡ ἀλήθεια.

CLEMENS ALEX.

1. IT is the common object of all religion to establish or realise a definite relation between the worshipper and the Divine Being whom he approaches. Christianity goes much further and proposes to reveal the relation between mankind, or more fully between the world and GOD, and to restore the original harmony of all creation. It addresses not the individual only, but the race; its effects are declared to extend not to man only, but to 'all things which are in heaven 'and which are on earth.' It is universal at the same time as it is particular. Just as Aristotle taught that the State is prior to the Man, so Christianity claims to address the World while it addresses the Individual or even more exactly to

CHAP. I.

John i. 29.

Eph. i. 10. Col. i. 20. Phil. ii. 10. Rom. viii. 21, 22. Rev. v. 13.

CHAP. I. address the Individual in the World. To use two common phrases, it contains a Philosophy of History, as well as a Philosophy of Salvation. It disregards nothing in the rich development of human life. It takes account alike of the evil and of the good. It refers to final principles—final, that is, for our present powers—the progress which we can observe in societies and nations, and the moral and spiritual education of men.

2. For all creation is progressive. It is a law as well in the moral as in the physical world that nothing is lost. All that has been modifies all that is and all that will be. The present includes all the past and will itself be contained in the future. Each physical change, each individual will contributes something to the world to come. The earth on which we live and the civilisation which fashions our conduct are the result of immeasurable forces acting through vast periods of time. There are crises in the history of nature and in the history of man, periods of intense and violent action and again periods of comparative repose and equilibrium, but still the continuity of life is unbroken. Even when the old order is violently overthrown the new order is built in part out of its ruins and not only upon them.

3. The conception of a life of the universe, of a general law which unites and directs the successive forms of all organized beings, is necessarily of modern growth. It could not be formed till History had called Geology to her aid, and men were familiarised to some extent with the vast space of time covered by the records of the ancient world. Even now the researches of science are far too limited to do more than suggest the idea and mark some salient points in its realisation. Yet it is impossible not to feel that it falls in with our general notions of the working of GOD from whatever source they may be derived; whether they lie in the original conception of a Divine Being, or are suggested by what we observe in the noblest forms of human action. There is something soothing and elevating in the thought of a scheme of Divine government reaching through all time and space thus opened to our contemplation. So far from obscuring the presence of the Creator it enlarges and strengthens our faith in His operation. It enables us to distinguish between His will as it is and our apprehension of its becoming. It teaches trust and hope when we are inclined to be dismayed at what we reckon as immobility or waste in the moral world. The sea-worn cliffs which are once again fashioned before our eyes into records of a new order by CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. the same power through which they were first built up, teach patience with a silent eloquence which would be irresistible if we could enter into its force. Surely we can afford to wait when God works thus slowly.

4. The belief in a common life of mankind is of far older date. This is the result of intuition and not of science. It was the teaching of the prophet first and not of the philosopher. If it was permitted to a later generation to see the pledge of a personal immortality in a covenanted relation which God granted to the patriarchs, it must have been equally clear at an earlier time that all men who are 'the offspring of God' were in some degree under His government and working out His will. At first sight it might appear that the spirit of the Mosaic Law was opposed to this divine unity of peoples. But the opposition was accidental, and the Law itself was potentially universal in its promises. The exclusiveness of the Jews was something wholly different from the exclusiveness of the Greeks or Romans. It was based essentially on moral and not on political or social differences. It was religious and not national. The privileges of Judaism were offered to him who accepted the responsibilities and claims of Judaism. The Jew was taught to look forward to the time when all the nations of the earth should worship his GOD. The triumph towards which he was to strive, was to win fellow-worshippers and not to raise himself as a lord over enslaved peoples. Hence the later prophets were led to regard 'the kingdoms of the world' in their relation to 'the kingdom of GOD,' of which the Jewish Church was the figure and the seed.

Matt. xxii. 31—33.

5. Something of the same notion lies in the Eastern representation of the successive ages of the world, which was borrowed by the earliest Greek poets, and again adopted by the writers of the so-called Sibylline books shortly before the Christian era. But the vastness of the scale on which this thought was moulded deprived it of all practical importance. When it was applied to human life it expressed at most the contrast which we find in the New Testament between 'this age' and 'the age to come.' Its units, so to speak, were periods, dispensations, as we call them, and not nations. It expressed a far-reaching faith in the general advance of 'the ages' through distress and disorder towards a glorious end, but it had no connexion with the progress or development of the 'age' itself in which we live.

CHAP. I. 6. Still however dim and uncertain the prospect of the life of the world and the life of humanity may have been in old times, it is impossible now to doubt the noble continuity of progress by which both are revealed and characterised; and the view which is thus opened to us of the course of history throws a fresh light on the position of Christianity. It is not an isolated system, but the result of a long preparation. According to the teaching of the Apostles, Christ came when all things were ready, and the measure of the appointed seasons was accomplished. Christianity cannot then be regarded alone and isolated from its antecedents. It is part of a whole which reaches back historically from its starting-point on the day of Pentecost for nearly two thousand years. It was new but it was not unprepared. It professed to be itself the fulfilment and not the abolition of that which went before: to reveal outwardly the principle of a Divine Fatherhood by which all the contradictions and disorders of life are made capable of a final resolution; and to possess within it that universal truth which can transfigure without destroying the various characteristics of men and nations. It is then possible that what we feel to be difficulties in its historic form are removed or lessened if we place it in its due relation to the whole life of mankind; and, on the other hand, the obvious fitness with which it carries on and completes a long series of former teachings will confirm with singular power its divine claims. CHAP. I.

Acts vii. 2 ff.

7. Again: though the birth of Christianity was comparatively late in time, yet in fact it claims to have existed from the beginning as part of the Divine Counsel. We have seen (Intr. § 8) that we are obliged to regard the purposes and acts of God as following one another, though in themselves all the results of creation simply are, without distinction of succession. But though the Apostles necessarily think and speak as men, they expressly caution us against supposing that the Incarnation of the Word was in any way an afterthought consequent upon the Fall, and not already included in the Creation. Without touching upon the abstract truth of the absence of temporal limitations in the Divine Mind, they teach, what is in this case the practical equivalent, that 'before the foundation of the world' God had foreordained the coming of Christ. The Fall necessarily modified the circumstances of the Incarnation, but the true conception of the World and of Humanity becomes first possible when they are thus regarded in their essential relation to the Word, the Son. We do not at present de-

Col. i. 15 ff. Eph. i. 4. 1 Pet. i. 20.

CHAP. I. mand more for this statement than a recognition of its significance. At least it places before us what the first exponents of Christianity believed Christianity to be. It was according to their interpretation eternal in its essence, as well as universal in its application. It was in itself beyond time though it was wrought out in time.

8. It follows necessarily from this view of Christianity that it must be placed in intimate connexion with the divine discipline of the world in former ages if we are to understand it. As we cannot conceive of the world as abandoned by GOD, and as the coming of Christ is declared to be the complete expression of His love, Christianity must have gathered up and ratified either implicitly or by a direct sanction whatever men had truly hoped or learned of Him in earlier times. And this is exactly what our Lord and His Apostles professed to do. They came not to destroy but to fulfil:—to lay open and enforce the spiritual meaning of the Law and the Prophets, in which the Jews 'thought that they had 'eternal life;' and to declare to the Gentiles the GOD whom they 'ignorantly worshipped.' They appealed to all history and to the experience of all men in support of the Gospel. Christ came, so St Paul teaches, in the fulness of time, when the due measure of the appointed seasons was accomplished, each of which was charged with the realisation of some part of the Divine Will. God spoke at last to us in the Person of a Son (so it is written) when He had spoken of old time to our fathers in the prophets, revealing His Counsel gradually (in many parts), as men were able to bear it, and variously (in many ways), as they could best enter into its purport. There have been attempts in all ages to separate Christianity from Judaism and Hellenism; but to carry out such an attempt is not to interpret Christianity, but to construct a new religion. Christianity has not only affinities with Judaism and Hellenism, but it includes in itself all the permanent truths to which both witness. It was bound up (so the Apostles said) with promises and blessings by which the Jewish people had been moulded through many centuries. It answered to wants of which the Gentiles had become conscious through long periods of noble effort and bitter desolation. It came not at an arbitrary moment, but at a crisis when 'all things were now ready.' If it was divine in its essence, it was no less human in the form of its embodiment, and in the circumstances of its reception.

CHAP. I.

Heb. i. 1, 2.

9. Christianity was connected at its origin

CHAP. I. with a vast history—with the history of the whole ancient world—and it is also a history itself. It is a history in its fundamental form so far as it is a revelation; and it is a history also in its appropriation so far as it is the informing power of modern society. The doctrines of Christianity flow from alleged facts. The belief in the historic event precedes the belief in the dogma. The life of Christ (if we may use this illustration) comes first, and then the teaching of the Spirit. The substance of our Creed lies in what Christ was and what He did, and not primarily in what He taught. Or, to put the same idea in another way, His teaching was in His Person and in His Life, and not in His words only or chiefly. It is impossible to resolve Christianity into sentiment or morality. The sentiment which it involves springs out of a historical union of man and God: the morality which it enforces is based on the reality and significance of Christ's Death and Resurrection.

10. And yet more than this. From the time of the first preaching of the Apostles, Christianity has been a power in the world acting upon society and acted upon by it. It conquered the Roman Empire, and remained unshaken by its fall. It sustained the shock of the northern nations, and in turn civilised them. It suffered persecution and it wielded sovereignty. It preserved the treasures of ancient thought and turned them to new uses. It inspired science, while it cherished mysteries with which science could not deal. It assumed the most varied forms and it moulded the most discordant characters. And all this was done and borne in virtue of its historic foundation. For its strength lay not in the zeal of a hierarchy who were the depositaries of hidden doctrines, but in the open proclamation of a Divine Saviour. The Cross has remained in every age the symbol and the monument of its power. CHAP. I.

11. These characteristics of Christianity by which it is distinguished from every other religion, —that it is historical in its Creed and historical in its development,—even if they are considered only in their most obvious and indisputable form, sufficiently prove that its origin was an event wholly unique and unparalleled in the history of the world. There have been conquerors who in the course of a lifetime have overrun half the world and left lasting memorials of their progress in cities and kingdoms founded and overthrown. There have been monarchs who have by their individual genius consolidated vast empires and

CHAP. I. inspired them with a new life. There have been teachers who through a small circle of devoted hearers have rapidly changed the modes of thought of a whole generation. There have been religious reformers who by force or eloquence have modified or reconstructed the belief of nations. There have been devotees whose lives of superhuman endurance have won for them from posterity a share of divine honour. There have been heroes cut off by a sudden and mysterious fate, for whose return their loyal and oppressed countrymen have looked with untiring patience as the glorious and certain sign of dawning freedom. There have been founders of new creeds who have furnished the ideal of supreme good to later generations in the glorified image of their work. But in all the noble line of the mighty and the wise and the good, in the great army of kings and prophets and saints and martyrs, there is not one who has ever claimed for himself or received from his followers the title of having in any way wrought out salvation for men by the virtue of his life and death, as being in themselves, and not only by the moral effect of their example, a spring of divine blessings. It is of comparatively little moment how and by whom the Christian religion was first propagated, wonderful and exceptional as that may seem. The one absolute mark by which its establishment is distinguished from that of all other systems lies in its very essence. The Gospel differs from every message delivered as from God to men, in that its substance was contained in what befel a Teacher to Whom the Apostles had listened, in what He did and suffered. Christ was Himself the Word and the Truth which He announced. CHAP. I.

12. For us Christianity is so naturally identified with abstract statements of doctrine and ecclesiastical institutions, that we are in danger of losing sight of the essentially personal basis on which it rests. It requires an effort to realise with any distinctness the sublime originality of a faith not in the might and goodness and love of a Prophet, but in the inherent power and virtue of the Person and Death of a Saviour. The conception of such a faith was equally novel and definite in the apostolic age. The relation of the Lord to men, viewed simply historically, was set forth as something wholly singular and marvellous. Within thirty years after the death of Christ, if we adopt the most extreme views of chronologers, He was habitually mentioned together with the Father as the source of spiritual grace. We need only place any other name for a moment in the same position, if our soul does

CHAP. I. not revolt from the thought, to feel what must have been the intuitive consciousness of a divine presence which enabled the Apostles to adopt such a formula and to consecrate it for universal use. And the effort is comparatively easy for us, which for them (till it was hallowed by some unquestionable sanction of GOD) must have been blasphemous. We are familiarised in theory with the idea of GOD dwelling as man with men, but a Jew had no such belief to soften the awful grandeur of the truth which he acknowledged.

13. Exactly in proportion as we apprehend the exceptional (but not unnatural) character of Christianity, we shall be better able to judge of all the phenomena by which (as we believe) it was attended. If it was—and this cannot be denied—wholly original in its fundamental idea, if it effected a revolution in the popular conception of the relation of man to GOD, if it came to a world prepared to receive but not to create it, if it was bound up with a long anterior history, and has been in turn the life of modern nations, then we may expect to find that the circumstances which attended its origin were themselves also exceptional but not unnatural. The reality of the Resurrection is an adequate explanation of the significance which was attached to the Death of Christ. It seems impossible to discover anything else which can be. CHAP. I.

14. Nothing, indeed, can be more unjust than the common mode of discussing the miracles of the first age. Instead of taking them in connexion with a crisis in the religious history of the world, disputants refer them to the standard of a period of settled progress such as that in which we live. The epoch at which they are said to have been wrought was confessedly creative in thought, and that in a sense in which no other age ever has been; and there seems to be a positive fitness in the special manifestation of God at such a crisis in the material as in the spiritual world. The central idea of the time which, dimly apprehended at Rome and Alexandria, found its complete expression in the teaching of the Apostles, was the union of earth and heaven, the transfiguration of our whole earthly nature; and the history of ancient speculation seems to shew that nothing less than some outward pledge and sign of its truth could have led to the bold enunciation of this dogma as an article of popular belief. If, as we have seen, miracles are not in themselves either unnatural or incredible, in this case there

CHAP. I. is even an antecedent presumption for their occurrence.

15. It has been said, and said rightly, though the statement has been strangely misunderstood, that science can take no cognisance of miracles. Science deals simply with the ordinary working of GOD, with phenomena which experience shews to be capable of being combined in what are for us laws of nature. It represents the power according to its general action and then assumes it to be immutable. It cannot from its very nature deal with exceptions which are so rare as not to be capable of being grouped according to our present knowledge. But while miracles do not belong to Science, they belong to History; and if they are not to be rejected without examination, the simple question in each case when they are alleged is What is the evidence in their favour both general and special? Is there anything in the character or work of the time which leads us to expect that GOD should reveal Himself outwardly as He does inwardly? Is there, that is, anything which thus makes miracles in some degree natural events according to the larger sense of the word? And then Is the special evidence for the miraculous fact as clear as we should be content to act on in ordinary cases? This is all which we can require; for the necessary presumption against a miracle, as an exceptionable occurrence, is removed by an affirmative answer to the former question; and religion is essentially a practical matter, or, to express the same truth somewhat differently, it belongs to that order of subjects in which we are forced to trust to conclusions which fall short of complete certainty. CHAP. I.

16. The position which the apostolic age occupies with regard to the development of ancient life has often been investigated. Yet even thus there are many points in the historic bearing of Christianity which are commonly neglected. It is true that we can see how the lines of Jewish and Gentile progress converge towards it. It is true that we can see how it satisfies instincts which found expression more or less vague in earlier times. It is true that the Gospel was preached first at an epoch when the organisation of society was more favourable to its spread than at any other. But this is not all; nor indeed are these essentially the most important features of the preparation by which the Advent was preceded. If this were a complete statement of the case it might be said that Christianity was a natural product of the concurrence of Rome and Greece and

 Palestine; that the anticipations of men after periods of eager expectation fashioned for themselves an imaginary fulfilment: that the circumstances of the age offer an explanation of the success of a mere creation of enthusiasm. A full view of the character of the preparation for the Gospel excludes such interpretations of its significance. There was a tendency towards the central truth of Christianity, but there was no tendency to produce it. Religious speculations had branched out in so many ways that nothing short of the coming of Christ could have harmonised the various results to which they led; but till He came the results were simply conflicting and irreconcileable, and even after He came the solution which He brought to the riddles of earlier life was long misunderstood. Philosophers and moralists had variously discussed the destiny of man and the grounds of right and duty and knowledge, but the debates had ended practically in exhaustion and despair. The records of their speculations shew at once their power and their weakness: they reveal what man aspires to know and confess his inability to gain the knowledge for himself. The combinations of various nationalities in the Roman Empire necessarily made broader views of the union of men possible; but at the same time the triumph of imperialism tended to suppress every independent power. The material advantages which it offered for free intercourse were more than counterbalanced by the depressing influence of its overwhelming might. The time was marked by the simultaneous existence of countless adverse powers then first forced into contact, but Christianity bears no trace of any temporal or local character. It came as something wholly new to a world whose course was already run. It belonged to no time and to no place. It was a beginning even more than it was an end. And as there are periods in the individual life when the exceptional becomes natural, it may be so with that vast and complex progress of humanity, which we are forced equally by thought and experience to regard under the form of a common life.

17. The very conception of the history of humanity as a life, which is now an axiom with conflicting schools, was due (as we have already seen) in the first instance to the Jews. In spite of the exclusiveness of their national religion they faithfully maintained the belief in a real unity of the human race, out of which the idea of a common life of humanity springs. The Romans had partially witnessed to the truth when

CHAP. I. they acknowledged the inherent supremacy of Greece in art: the Stoics had taught it as part of their stern theory of the world; but the Jews held it, however imperfectly, as lying at the very foundation of their religion. The promise to which they looked for the pledge of their divine election extended at the same time a heavenly blessing to all nations. The history of Israel was a continual advance towards the realisation of this fellowship of nations. Each crisis left the chosen people nearer to that kingdom of heaven of which they were the sign and the prophets. And the typical prophet of the Captivity looking upon the great powers of the world portrays them at once in Dan. ii. vii. their organic unity, and in the separate completeness of their distinctive energies. In this respect it is of no consequence how we interpret the visions of Daniel, or to what date we assign the book which bears his name. The idea of a life of mankind, of a law binding together different monarchies and states, is there; and from the time when the book became current this idea has been part of the heritage of men. The book of Daniel is (on its human side) the first philosophy of history, even as the book of Genesis is the pledge that such philosophy is possible. The one presents the kingdoms of mankind as mutually dependent and subject to the laws of a common development: the other presents them federally united in 'the first Adam.' CHAP. I.

18. The long continuance and varied fortunes of the Jewish nation enabled it to be beyond any other nation the messenger of unity and progress. And more than this, the purely intellectual defects with which the Semitic character is charged fitted the people to perform this their appointed work. The forms of literature which our western training leads us to regard as the highest, the Epic and the Drama, found no place among the Jews. The free culture of art among them was forbidden. Or, in other words, they were led to dwell upon the indeterminate and infinite and not upon the fixed and limited in the world. For them all separate histories and lives and embodiments of beauty were incomplete. They were unwilling and unable to see everywhere one formula reproducing itself. The whole history of mankind was for them an Epic, a Tragedy—the one Epic, the one Tragedy, of which the fortunes of generations or families or men were but scattered fragments. They looked upon history as a life directed by will, and not as catastrophes ruled by destiny or phenomena produced by law[1].

[1] The intellectual contrast of the East and West has never

CHAP. I. 19. Thus it is that the work of the Jews is written on their character. But it is yet more legibly written in their history. It is difficult to say whether their national integrity or their power of assimilation is more surprising. One catastrophe after another overwhelmed them, and they rise the same yet nobler from the fire in which they were purified. The old spirit remained, but it clothed itself in a new form. The conqueror lived in the conquered. The people fell beneath each of the great forms of ancient civilisation and received from each the choicest treasures which it could bestow.

20. Egypt, Persia, Greece and Rome—the great powers of the East and West—contributed to discipline the mind and further the work of the Jews. The hopes of the people were kindled by times of triumph and chastened by times of captivity. A theocracy, a monarchy, a hierarchy, brought out in succession various sides of their complex character and gave to it solidity and completeness. Meanwhile the spiritual teaching of the nation was carried on from stage to stage, been given better in a short compass than by Browning in a speech at the close of 'Luria,' beginning 'My own East! How nearer God we were!' to which whoever has not read it will be glad to be referred.

so that while nothing was lost which could serve for the training of the simplest, something was ever added which might elevate the faith of those who saw deepest into the divine truth. When the Law, fixed and eternal, failed to satisfy all the wants which were called out by the manifold growth of a high social civilisation, the prophets laid open its inner meaning and drew the outlines of a spiritual kingdom. This new creative period itself came to a close, and the learned diligence of priests and scribes then framed out of the materials which it provided a system which gave definiteness and consistency to the noblest belief of the past throughout a scattered and tributary people. CHAP. I.

21. We are often reminded that the fore-father of the Jews was an Arab Sheikh. Abraham, it is true, was a Sheikh, but he was much more. His true representative was not the Bedouin Esau, but Jacob, in whom lay the promise of a nation. The fulfilment of this promise was first prepared in Egypt. Without entering in detail into the various influences of Egypt upon the Jews, we may notice this the greatest of all: the descendants of Jacob were there bound together into one body by prosperity alike and by suffering. Every power which goes to con-

CHAP. I. solidate and unite a people was brought to bear upon them. The recollection of a noble descent, the consciousness of a high destiny, the presence of a hostile nation, common occupations, practical isolation in life and worship, combined to create and keep alive a feeling of fellowship and mutual dependence among the growing host. The sense of unity and nationality may have been degraded, though it could not be destroyed, by the conditions of ancient slavery. And thus in due time a people was prepared for a sterner discipline and a sterner work. It is impossible as yet to determine exactly how far the form of the religion of Israel was modified by Egyptian influences. But the silence of the Pentateuch as to the future life shews that a power immeasurably stronger than custom limited the character of such a dependence. That which is most conspicuous in the faith of Egypt is wholly wanting in the teaching of Moses. The earth and the present had to be felt in their full meaning. For it is only by looking both backward and forward that the circumstances of the Exodus can be seen in their true light. When the multitude had realised their common helplessness at last the voice of the God of their fathers quickened again the true life of the children of Abraham; and the faith which was called out by the sight of terrible judgments on their enemies, was deepened with awful intensity by a lonely sojourn in the wilderness in the very presence of the LORD their Saviour. CHAP. I.

22. The Jews left Egypt a host of fugitives: they entered the promised land a conquering army. But an entire lifetime lay between the two events. A new generation grew up in the wilderness to whom the LORD revealed Himself as King. Henceforth the people never wholly forgot their divine allegiance. They were the people of the LORD even when they most fatally misinterpreted the meaning of their title. The majesty of Sinai rests on the whole of their later history. The sense of a personal relation of each Jew to his GOD gave strength to the nation and dignity to the citizen. Moses made use, we must believe, of 'the wisdom of the Egyp-'tians,' of their skill in science, in art, in organisation, even in sacred symbolism; but the constitution which he framed was infinitely nobler than that of Egypt. It was based on the word of GOD addressed to all: it was free from the degradation of caste: it included the possibility of progress. Egypt made the body of the nation, so to speak; Sinai infused into it its spirit. Egypt united the race: Sinai inspired each man

CHAP. I. with the consciousness of his own direct covenant with the LORD who had redeemed His people. Each individual life, in all its parts, no less than the life of the nation, was consecrated to GOD. To realise the kingdom of heaven—the perfect Sovereignty of the LORD among men—was from this time the acknowledged mission of the Jew.

23. After the conquests of Joshua and the first settlement of the tribes followed times of disruption and disaster. The nation was not yet disciplined sufficiently by common trials to trust in an unseen Power. Hitherto heroic leaders had represented to them the personality of the Theocracy, and momentous crises had called out their utmost energy. But all was changed when they once entered on their inheritance. In times of distress they still remembered that GOD was their king; but they forgot Him in times of peace. The lessons of the wilderness were not at once applicable to the course of common life. The people acknowledged a spiritual deliverer, but they were not ripe for a spiritual sovereignty. This was indeed the end of their hopes, but the time was not yet. To lead them to look onward, to reveal the inherent weakness of dominion based on external might, even though the might was from GOD, to prepare the way for another and more gradual training, based upon the characteristic feelings of the nation—in respect of this progressive development the type of all nations—was, as it appears, the use of the troubled period of the Judges. The free uncentralised government, and the moveable Tabernacle, shewed by no uncertain symbols the nature of the kingdom which God designed for His people: arbitrary authority and unhallowed sanctuaries shewed that they were not yet prepared to submit to its sway. The idea of the Theocracy, if the phrase may be allowed, was presented at the outset of the national life; and experience proved that it could only be realised by a long season of discipline. CHAP. I.

24. Thus the establishment of the kingdom was in the truest sense a defection from God, and yet, humanly speaking, it was a necessary defection. An earthly king fell infinitely short of the type of divine government represented by Moses, or Joshua, or Samuel; but he was at once a definite centre and a clear sign of something greater than himself. If he presented the spiritual idea in a fixed and limited form, he also gave distinctness to the conception of the present moral sovereignty of God, and furnished imagery under which the prophets could construct a more glorious picture of the future.

CHAP. I. 25. The establishment of the kingdom was necessarily connected with the building of the Temple. And the Temple occupied the same place with regard to the Tabernacle as the monarchy with regard to the Theocracy. Both were earthly and partial, though at the time necessary, representatives of something greater and more spiritual. In both we see the attempt to give a limited and permanent shape to that which was, in its original revelation, divine in essence and transitory in its embodiment. But even as GOD was pleased to use the monarchy for the exhibition of higher truth, so also He used the Temple; and we cannot see now how the lessons conveyed through it to the Jews and to ourselves could otherwise have been realised.

26. The kingdom and the Temple were destroyed when they had fixed indelibly upon the heart of the nation the idea of the unity of the sovereignty and worship of GOD which they symbolised. The Captivity then spiritualised by the teaching of facts, as the prophets by word of mouth, the lessons which had been taught in a material form. The people came up from Egypt a united nation: they returned from Babylon a small colony to form the centre of a religious commonwealth. A great revolution had been wrought in their national hopes, in their social organisation, in their spiritual creed. They were no longer outwardly bound together by civil ties. Subject to different monarchs, they even served in adverse armies. Their hereditary sovereignty was lost. But political separation did not destroy true fellowship. The unity of a church succeeded to the unity of a nation; and the scattered members of the religious society looked forward in common to the eternal kingdom of a future Son of David. At the same time the service of the synagogues was added to that of the Temple. A hierarchy whose power was derived from education and not from descent, grew up, and more than rivalled the power of the priests. The labour of these scribes witnessed to the cessation of prophecy, and jealously guarded the heritage which it had left. As a necessary consequence religion assumed a more distinctly personal character. The house of prayer and the skilled teacher brought it close to the home of each Jew. Exile had taught men, when they were removed from their holy place, the full blessing of spiritual communion with GOD. In the strength of this faith they were allowed to gaze upon the conflicts of good and evil in a higher world; and the enemy of GOD was seen at length in his personal power.

CHAP. I.

Zech. iii. 1.

CHAP. I. 27. Thus Persia wrought out its work upon the Jews, and when the discipline was ended the people were prepared to meet the new influences of Greece. The most abiding monument of the triumphs of Alexander was the city which he chose to bear his name in the border land of the East and West; and the spirit of Alexandria nowhere found a truer expression than in the Jewish colony which from the first formed an important element in its population. The Alexandrine Jews penetrated deeply into the speculations of Greek philosophy, and their national faith gained breadth without losing its individuality. Nor was the influence of Greece upon Judaism, which was strong at Alexandria, confined to that centre. It was spread from the first more or less throughout Asia Minor and Syria. The policy of conquerors and the instinct of commerce scattered the Jews over the whole civilised world. The dispersion, which was begun on the return from Babylon, was extended. Judaism adopted a new language for its ancient doctrines. A people who had once been bound by the strictest ritualism within the narrow limits of one land were found throughout all nations witnessing to the spiritual truths which they had inherited and preparing the way for a universal faith. The Hellenists were thus at once missionaries and prophets. They proclaimed a purer creed to the heathen, who gathered round the synagogue without formally taking upon themselves the covenant of Israel; and they lifted the thoughts of their countrymen to the prospect of a spiritual law circumscribed by no requirements of season or place.

28. One special feature of the growth of Hellenism among the Jews demands a passing notice. The spirit of independent thought led to the foundation of sects. The conflicting tendencies which coexist everywhere in religious societies found separate embodiments. Freedom, ritualism and asceticism found a characteristic expression in Sadducees, Pharisees and Essenes. The whole breadth and depth of the national faith, so to speak, was tested. Nor was a fiery trial wanting when the elements of truth and error were in danger of being fatally confounded. The Maccabæan conflict restored the Law to its true supremacy while it left untouched all that was nobler in the lessons of Greek art and culture. A final struggle fixed the limits of the teaching of the ancient prophets, and founded the stability of the nation on the victorious profession of its completed faith.

CHAP. I. 29. Meanwhile through these vicissitudes of disaster and triumph one faith grew in many fashions and in many parts. The Jews never lost the sense of the blessing which was to come through them to all the nations. Up to the giving of the Law no personal trait of the promised Redeemer is found. Hope was centred in a narrower circle at each great crisis in the spiritual history of mankind, in a race, in a nation, in a tribe, in a family. For the first time the work of Moses furnished occasion to a special portraiture of Messiah's office. He was to be the mediator of a new Law. To establish an abiding covenant between GOD and man was declared to be the substance of His work. The Law alone was unable to train the Jews to their appointed work. A kingdom was established, and with it a new conception of Messiah was added. The king who gave unity and security to the nation was but a type of the Son of David whose kingdom should extend in eternal blessings over all the world. The earthly sovereignty of the line of David fell. The chosen people passed into captivity, and under the pressure of national disaster learnt from the teaching of prophets to see in their promised Messiah 'a Son of Man,' who should sympathise with the sufferings of those whom He came to save as well as to govern. Thus the central belief, in virtue of which Judaism lived, was providentially shaped in the progress of the history of the chosen people. Nothing was lost as the conception of the Redeemer was gradually completed. Each period added something which belongs essentially to the fulness of the conception. And so at last the Lawgiver, the King, the Prophet, the Priest, the Man, are all included in the Christ whom the Gospels present to us.

30. Two characteristic doctrines which belonged in their completest forms respectively to Palestine and Alexandria summed up this national belief at the time of the Lord's Coming. The expectation of a Messiah 'who should redeem 'Israel,' and the belief in a Divine Word by whom GOD could reveal Himself to mankind at large. The first hope found expression in a series of so-called apocryphal writings which generally agree in describing a period of intense suffering, followed by the advent of a triumphant Conqueror, who should bring beneath his sceptre and the Law all the nations of the earth. The process of the consummation is variously pictured according to the position in which the several writers stood. At one time an era of blessing, at another an era of vengeance fills the imagination of the seer. But the earth is the scene of both.

CHAP. I. The purification of the soul through suffering, the end of the great tragedy of human life, finds no fitting place in the schemes of outward aggrandisement. 'The master of Israel' was startled at the seeming paradox of a second birth. In proportion as the teaching of the prophets was made more definite, its traits were exaggerated and externalised. But in spite of error and prejudice the hope of the Palestinian Jew was in a Person, a Saviour. The deliverance for which he confidently looked was to be wrought out among men. It was to be historical in its foundation and not moral only or intellectual. He through whom it should be accomplished was recognised as 'the Son of GOD,' but none the less its end was to be the restoration of the kingdom.

31. At the same time while this external conception of Messiah was gaining definiteness and strength, wider views of the general action of GOD were gradually opened. Religious thinkers, especially in Egypt, pondered on the way in which we may conceive an Infinite Being in connexion with the finite. The result was a widespread doctrine of a Divine Word through whom GOD was supposed to be revealed in action and in utterance. In Palestine this Word was regarded chiefly as the medium of outward communication, CHAP. I. like the angel of the Pentateuch: at Alexandria as the power in virtue of which a fellowship between GOD and man is rendered possible. The one doctrine tended towards the recognition of a divine Person subordinate to GOD: the other to the recognition of a twofold personality in the divine nature. In Greek writers, like Philo, the conception of the Word was further enlarged by the ambiguity of the term Logos, which was used to express it. As this might be taken for 'Word' or 'Reason,' so the corresponding idea fluctuated between the objective manifestation of the Divine will and the subjective correlative, whether in the mind of GOD in which the primal thought lay, or in the mind of man by which he apprehends the revelation. Each varying notion has obvious points of connexion with Christian dogma, and just as the Jewish belief in Messiah preserved the belief in a historic Saviour, so the Jewish belief in the Word prepared the way for a larger view of a revelation of GOD in man and through man.

32. The two complementary conceptions of a Saviour manifested on earth and of an eternal omnipresent Word thus existed side by side, but they were absolutely unconnected. Philo may CHAP. I. have conceived of the Word as acting through Messiah, but not as one with Him. The lines of thought which pointed to the action of a second Person in the Godhead, and to the victories of some future conqueror, were not even parallel but divergent. It was reserved for St John to unite the antithetic truths in one divine phrase, which could not have entered into the mind of Philo. John i. 1—14. 'The Word was GOD,...and the Word was made 'flesh, and dwelt among us.'

33. But the preparation of Judaism was not the only preparation for Christianity. In another sense the Gentile world were making all things ready for the advent. The vast monarchies of the East, the intellectual culture of Greece, the civil organisation of Rome, each fitted men in some peculiar way for the reception of the message of the Gospel. The spirit of the East made itself felt directly through the Jewish nation while prophets yet spoke to interpret its lessons. The teaching of Greece was reflected more or less clearly in the common version of the Sacred Books and in the speculations of an influential school of Jewish teachers, both in Palestine and in the Dispersion. The material unity and order of the Roman Empire prepared the way for the spread of a new Faith and furnished the type of a universal kingdom. But it is not our purpose now to consider the relative effects of Greece or Rome on Judaism or Christianity, but rather to estimate generally what ancient life in its noblest forms was in itself as a step in the progress of humanity.

34. Something, indeed, has been said already of the direct influence of Greece upon Jewish development. But the independent progress of classical thought and life had in itself, though indirectly, a more important bearing on the consummation of the crisis of human life at the time when Christ came. In a word, it may be said that the history of the ancient world is generally the history of the gradual separation of man from God, so far as the original relation was the groundwork of faith and personal devotion. At the same time the civil power was more and more centralised and offered as the object towards which the highest hopes of the citizen might be directed. The standards which bore the image of the Emperor became the idols of the Roman army; and in its essence the idea of Imperialism is the human antithesis to the Homeric sovereignty of Zeus. It would be easy to trace out the necessary progress of this elimination of the heavenly, externally religious, element from Gentile life in society, literature, and thought. The instinct from which this element derived its origin and strength could not bear a rigid analysis, nor meet the manifold difficulties of a complex polity. Step by step the patriarchal communities, in which the ruler and the priest were one, passed into the great republics, where a solemn ceremonial witnessed to a feeling of religion, powerful only as an instrument to rule the masses. A single century, but that a century which ranks in the richness and variety of its mental results only after the first and sixteenth, saw the passage from the pious theocratic history of Herodotus to the self-reliant, human analysis of national fortunes in Thucydides; from the awful questionings on fate and foreknowledge and future punishment in Æschylus, which sound like echoes of a Hebrew prophet, to the intellectual naturalism of Euripides; from the rude choric song, in which still lingered some sense of the personal bounty of a God of gladness, to the conventional portraiture of an artificial life in the comedies of Menander. The advance of philosophy was scarcely less rapid. The discussions on being which occupied the earliest thinkers, passed into discussions on knowing. Aristotle sums up the results of all who had gone before him with stern impartiality, and a school of scepticism followed. Thenceforth philosophy was content to treat of duty and to abdicate the higher prerogatives which it had once claimed.

35. The growth of the Roman Empire is the noblest spectacle of the natural triumph of human power, as it was based upon the surest of human affections. But like Greek philosophy the Roman constitution contained essentially in itself the seeds of its own ruin. The conception of the family bound together by a common worship on which the state was built was unequal to meet the difficulties of enlarged dominion. First arose the divisions in the capital itself when the paternal authority of those who had been once fathers in act as well as in name was unable to satisfy the wants of the multitude who had placed themselves under their protection. Next the policy of isolation and civil independence, by which the early republic had sought to keep in contented loyalty her subject states, was inapplicable to the wider dominion of later times. The idea of the family and with it that of religion was lost; and when Rome had conquered the world, it was felt on every side that one irresponsible will could alone wield the resources of the state. The soul was gone when the body had reached its full development. Yet even thus the influence of Rome upon Christianity was not less than that of Greece. If CHAP. I. the speculations of Greek thinkers had raised problems and fashioned a language which could aid Christian teachers in unfolding the doctrine of the Divine Nature, the determinations of Roman jurists were equally powerful in preparing for the exhibition of the relation of man to GOD, which was the office of the Latin Church. But this work was still future and unperceived. For the present even the splendours of the reign of Augustus were a sign of failure. Greek speculation had ended in scepticism. The constitutional liberty of Rome had issued in Imperialism. The promise which the Jew had inherited from his fathers alone waited for an accomplishment, which each change seemed to bring nearer.

36. Thus the fulness and the exhaustion of hope met at the epoch of Christ's coming. The hope of an external deliverance which had been gradually moulded through a long history was waiting its fulfilment. The hope which man had formed of working out his own way to truth and freedom was wellnigh quenched. Old forms of belief, old modes of government, were passing away. It was felt that 'the world's great age' was even then to begin anew. Carried away by this belief, Romans saw in the rise of Imperialism the promise of a Golden Age. But the imagery of the Augustan poet, who described the advent of this glorious time, was borrowed from the East, and it was to the East that many still looked for the great Conqueror. So firm and so widespread was this expectation that nearly seventy years afterwards Vespasian was thought to have fulfilled the prophecy by passing from Syria to the throne of the Cæsars. It is needless however to dwell upon this instinctive homage of the age to the LORD whom it knew not. It may have been a mere echo of Jewish hopes, or one of those intuitive interpretations of a great crisis which seem to rise simultaneously in the hearts of nations. So much at least is clear to us now, that the Coming of Christ coincided with the beginning of a new life in mankind, with a new development of history which is not yet completed; and, yet more than this, that the principles of this life are found in their simplest form in the Gospels.

37. Judaism had existed in the face of every form of antagonistic religion, but it had not subdued them. It had the power of life, but not the power of conquest. The life of Christianity lay in progress. It was essentially aggressive and essentially human. Christ was the Son of Man as well as the Son of David. And thus through the Apostles first all the treasures of the East were CHAP. I. brought to the Western nations in a form which they could appreciate and accept. The strength of modern civilisation lies in the combination of faith and reason—to use the shortest phrase—which was the issue of their message. The power of their Gospel was felt far beyond the range of its acknowledged influence. The old philosophies were quickened with a new life. Christianity had revealed the seat of their weakness, and enthusiastic teachers endeavoured to supply what was wanting in them. Classical paganism itself was made to assume a new dress, and the bitterest enemy of the faith acknowledged its inherent power by a vain endeavour to transfer its spirit to the polytheistic creed.

38. These considerations suggest a conclusive answer to a fallacy which has come to be regarded as a truism. It is said that while science is progressive religion is stationary. The modes of advance in the two are certainly not the same, but the advance in science is not more real than the advance in religion. Each proceeds according to its proper law. The advance in religion is not measured by an addition to a former state, which can be regarded in its fulness separately, but by a change: it is represented not by a common difference but by a common ratio. Viewed in this light, we can trace on a great scale the triple division of post-Christian history as marked by the successive victories of the Faith. The fact of the Resurrection is its starting-point, the realisation of the Resurrection is its goal. The fulness of the Truth is once shewn to men, as in old times the awful splendours of the Theocracy, and then they are charged to work out in the slow struggles of life the ideal which they have been permitted to contemplate. Thus it is that we can look without doubt or misgiving upon the imperfections of the sub-apostolic Church or the corruptions of the middle ages or the excesses of the Reformation. Even through these the divine work went forward. The power of the Resurrection was ever carried over a wider field. At first Christianity moved in the family, hallowing every simplest relation of life. This was the work of the primitive Church. Next it extended its sway to the nation and the community, claiming to be heard in the assemblies of princes and in the halls of counsellors. This was the work of the mediæval Church. Now it has a still wider mission, to assert the common rights and fellowship of men, to rise from the family and the nation to humanity itself. To accomplish this is the charge which is entrusted to the Church of the Present; and no vision of the purity or grandeur CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. of earlier times should blind us to the supreme majesty of the part which is assigned to us in the economy of faith.

39. It is at once obvious that these great divisions of Christian history, or even more truly speaking of the post-Christian world, answer in a remarkable degree to the periods of Jewish history which have been already marked out. The law of progress is the same in both. But if history repeats itself, it is, at least in this case, on an ampler field and with more momentous issues. The discipline of a nation is replaced by the discipline of a world; and (as we believe) an Advent of Triumph answers to an Advent of Redemption. Without following out this parallel further, though it seems to include many unexpected harmonies in things old and new, we must yet notice a progress in Christianity itself corresponding with this progress in its work. The three words which by common consent characterise the great representative Churches of the different periods describe the successive stages into which it may be divided, Orthodoxy, Catholicity, Evangelicalism.

40. At first the Christian Faith was simply historic. As long as its work was confined in the narrow limits of the family or of the small communities scattered throughout the Empire, considerable latitude in interpreting the fundamental facts on which it rested was natural or even necessary. The principles of Truth were held firm, but no deductions from them were authorised. The rapid spread of Christianity through every rank made this state of things impossible for any great length of time. Philosophers became Apologists and reasoned in turn upon the truths which they defended. Yet even thus heresy was long active in every direction laying down false conclusions before the Church assumed the perilous function of defining the Truth. But the work was done by those who by natural gifts and intellectual training were best fitted for its accomplishment. It was the glory of the Greek Church to win the title of Orthodox. But the work of the Orthodox Church though necessary was full of danger. There is a strange fascination in reasoning on mysteries. As the argument proceeds men are unwilling to limit their conclusions, and they end too often by measuring Being by our conceptions of it. But yet more than this: doctrine itself is external to us. There is no right doctrine which ought not to affect conduct, but as doctrine it has no necessary effect on life: no conquering or transforming power. CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. The effects of a predominantly speculative study of Christianity were seen before long in the character and fortunes of the Eastern Communion. The Orthodox Church is the least inclined of all churches to missionary work. Its part hitherto, since its first great triumphs, has been that of a witness rather than that of a herald. It could hardly have been otherwise. Orthodoxy as such is the translation of facts into a dialectic form; but the life, the power of assimilation and expansion, remains in the facts. Unhappily the Greek Church from the time when its original mission was fulfilled was united with Imperialism. Its potential dangers were thus realised, and Mohammedanism conquered the East. It has been said that the Byzantine Empire died of Christianity: it would be more just to say that the Byzantine Empire sought to imperialise Christianity and perished in the attempt, for Greek Christianity was strong enough only to rescue itself and not the State from the ruins of the judgment which followed.

41. But meanwhile a greater Church had risen. When Constantine transferred the dignity of Empire to his new capital he was unable to bear away to Byzantium the ancient glory and name of Rome. The majesty which had grown round the city during a thousand years remained undisturbed as the prize of the power which should prove worthy to claim it. And the Roman Church was alone able to bear the weight of sovereignty, for she alone had life amidst the shadows which lingered round the ancient seats of honour. From the first, if we can interpret rightly its fragmentary records, the Roman Church had adopted something of the policy of the Roman State. It had regarded ecclesiastical problems from the point of view of society. Its characteristic was breadth rather than precision. In proportion as it embodied more and more openly the style and power of the Cæsars, Catholicity became more conspicuously its ruling principle. Its aim was to incorporate rather than to assimilate the people who were brought under its control. The Republic received the gods of conquered nations within its Pantheon, and the Church accepted under new titles such popular beliefs and superstitions as could be fitly clothed in a Christian dress. The policy of the Roman Church was to deal with society as it was, and not to rebuild it again from its simplest elements. Thus equally from its position and from its inherent character it became a sovereign power. At Constantinople the attempt was made to imperialise the Church: at Rome the Church became CHAP. I. an Empire. The transformation was subservient if not essential to the fulfilment of its work. By the glory of its name and the strength of its organisation it conquered the northern tribes and preserved the treasures of ancient civilisation for a higher use. At the same time it presented the noble spectacle of a universal spiritual power side by side with the temporal power, and independent of it. In these respects its function with regard to discipline was as needful as that of the Greek Church with regard to Truth. But the traditional policy which was its strength prepared the way for its corruption. When the Church became nobler outwardly, it engrossed more completely the devotion of its members, and conversely it became more dependent on popular opinion. At last the Christian was in danger of losing his sense of a personal connexion with Christ; and the simplicity of Truth was hidden beneath the accretions of centuries. The spirit of Northern Europe, which had never been completely Romanised, had in the meantime gained maturity, and claimed in the full consciousness of life to hold communion with God face to face.

42. Thus a third development of the Church began corresponding to a new period of life; but it differed from those which preceded by the fact that it was manifold and not one. It was essentially the expression of individual faith and not of common belief. Its ecclesiastical forms followed from the concurrence of private convictions, and did not underlie and mould the societies which arose. Its strength lay in the confident affirmation of two great principles, that the Christian is continuously in direct spiritual intercourse with God through Christ, and that he is throughout continuously responsible to Him for his judgment in divine matters. Personal vitality was infused into religion. Faith claimed the homage of free reason. Individuality was added to Catholicism.

43. It would be easy to point out the weakness of the Reformation in itself as a power of organisation. Its function was to quicken rather than to create, to vivify old forms rather than to establish new. But however we may grieve over its failure where it arrogated the office not of restoration but of reconstruction, it was a distinct advance in Christian life. Where it failed, it failed from the neglect of the infirmities of man and of the provisions which have been divinely made, to meet them. On the other hand, the lessons which it taught are still fruitful throughout Christendom, and destined, as we hope, to bring forth a still more glorious harvest. What that CHAP. I. may be we cannot as yet know, but all past history teaches us that the power of the Gospel is able to meet each crisis of human progress, and we can look forward with trust to the fulfilment of its message to our age. The advance towards that perfection of Christian fellowship which we can all imagine, and to look forward to which is our noblest hope, may be slow, but it is slow only in the same sense in which the life of nations is slow. Generations are the days by which it is measured, but in the end it will not fail. The parables of nature are fulfilled in the history of the Church.

Matt. xiii. 31—33. Mark iv. 26—29.

44. The student of history will readily see that the great forms of Christian progress which have been marked out correspond in a remarkable manner with other great periods in art and literature and science. The divisions are neither arbitrary nor applicable only to some parts of human life. The final result of each was a permanent advance, and the power by which each was animated was drawn from the Gospel. If the fact of the Resurrection be in itself, as it confessedly is, absolutely unique in all human experience, the point which it occupies in history is absolutely unique also. To this point all former history converges as to a certain goal: from this point all subsequent history flows as from its life-giving spring[1]. If the Resurrection were alleged to have occurred abruptly in the middle of a series of events which passed on slowly to their consummation unaffected by its interruption; if it stood in no definite relation to the past, as in some sense a solution of the riddle which had baffled exhausted nations: if its significance had not been witnessed to at once by the rise of a new and invincible power which fashioned the development of all aftertime: then we might have paused in doubt before so stupendous a miracle, and pleaded the uniformity of nature against the claims of such an event upon our belief. But now the testimony of nature itself is in favour of the fact. We form our notions of a result from what we know of the

[1] Tert. de Virg. Vel. I. Nihil sine ætate est: omnia tempus expectant....Aspice ipsam creaturam paulatim ad fructum promoveri. Granum est primo, et de grano frutex oritur, et de frutice arbuscula enititur. Deinde rami et frondes invalescunt, et totum arboris nomen expanditur: inde germinis tumor, et flos de germine solvitur, et de flore fructus aperitur. Is quoque rudis aliquamdiu et informis paulatim ætatem suam dirigens eruditur in mansuetudinem saporis. Sic et justitia (nam idem Deus justitiæ et creaturæ) primo fuit in rudimentis, natura Deum metuens. Dehinc per legem et prophetas promovit in infantiam. Dehinc per evangelium efferbuit in juventutem. Nunc (the words admit a Catholic interpretation) per Paracletum componitur in maturitatem... I should despair of rendering the words adequately into English. As a master of rhetorical language the 'barbarian' Tertullian has few rivals.

CHAP. I. conditions under which the forces act, no less than from what we know of the forces themselves. If the force is the same we are sure that it must act differently under varied circumstances. If the circumstances are absolutely singular in all experience we conclude that an event will occur without a parallel. If a long train of occurrences before and after lead us to expect that the event would be of some specific kind, then its singularity is an argument in favour of its credibility and not against it. On a large view of the life of humanity the Resurrection is antecedently likely. So far from being beset by greater difficulties than any other historical fact, it is the one fact towards which the greatest number of lines of evidence converge. In one form or other pre-Christian history is a prophecy of it and post-Christian history an embodiment of it.

45. If we next turn to consider the direct evidence for the Resurrection, we shall find in it several elements of singular force. These are the more deserving of attention, because the narrative of the event itself in the Gospels, is in no wise distinguished from the narrative of any other ordinary fact which they record. The Evangelists treat the Resurrection as simply, unaffectedly, inartificially, as everything else which they touch.

The miracle to them seems to form a natural part of the Lord's history. They shew no consciousness that it needs greater or fuller authentication than the other events of His life. Their position and office indeed excluded such a thought. They wrote not to create belief but to inform those who already believed. A knowledge of the chief events in the Lord's ministry, including the Resurrection, and a general conviction of their reality and significance, is everywhere assumed in the Apostolic writings. The existence of a Christian society is the first and (if rightly viewed) the final proof of the historic truth of the miracle on which it was founded (§§ 49, 50). It may indeed be said that the Church was founded upon the belief in the Resurrection, and not upon the Resurrection itself: and that the testimony must therefore be limited to the attestation of the belief, and cannot reach to the attestation of the fact. But belief expressed in action is for the most part the strongest evidence which we can have of any historic event. Unless therefore it can be shewn that the origin of the Apostolic belief in the Resurrection, with due regard to the fulness of its characteristic form, and the breadth and rapidity of its propagation, can be satisfactorily explained on other grounds, the belief itself is a sufficient proof of the fact. We CHAP. I. shall be in a position to consider whether such an explanation is possible when we have examined the form in which the outward record of the belief has come down to us.

46. The letters of St Paul are amongst the earliest, if not actually the earliest writings in the New Testament. Of these one important group has been recognised as certainly genuine even by the most sceptical critics. No one doubts that the Epistles to the Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans were composed by St Paul, and addressed to the Churches whose name they bear. Nor is there much uncertainty as to the date at which they were written. The most extreme opinions fix them between A.D. 52—59, that is under no circumstances more than thirty years after the Lord's death (A.D. 30—33). There can then be no doubt as to the authority of their evidence as expressing the received opinion of Christians at this date, and there can be no doubt as to the opinion itself. In each of the Epistles the literal fact of the Resurrection is the implied or acknowledged groundwork of the Apostle's teaching. The very designation of GOD is 'He who raised 'up the Lord from the dead.' In this miracle lay the sum of the new revelation, the sign of Christ's Sonship. To believe this fact and confess it was the pledge of salvation. On many points there CHAP. I. was a diversity of judgment among the Apostles, and a wider discrepancy of belief among their professed followers, but on this there is no trace of disagreement. Some, indeed, questioned the reality of our own resurrection, but they were met by arguments based on the Resurrection of Christ which they acknowledged. Whatever else was doubted this one event was beyond dispute.

Rom. iv. 24, viii. 11, &c.

47. Moreover the fact itself was treated historically and not ideally. It was not regarded as the embodiment of a great hope, or as a consequence of some pre-conceived notion of the Person of Christ. On the contrary, the hope was expressly rested on the fact; and the Apostolic view of the nature of Christ is deduced from His rising again. (§§ 57 ff.) In one place St Paul has given an outline of 'the Gospel' by which men 'were saved.' 'I delivered unto you first of all that which also I 1 Cor. xv. 3 ff. 'received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; 'and that He hath been raised on the third day, 'according to the Scriptures; and that He appeared to Cephas; then to the twelve; then He 'appeared to above five hundred brethren at once, 'of whom the greater part remain until now, but 'some are fallen asleep; then He appeared to CHAP. I. 'James; then to all the Apostles. And last of all, 'as unto one born out of due time, He appeared 'to me also...Whether then it be I or they, so 'we preach, and so ye believed.' Nothing can be more simply historic. What we call the miraculous facts are placed beside the others without any difference. The Resurrection of the Lord, and His appearances after the Resurrection, are taught as events of the same kind essentially, and to be received in the same way as His Death and Burial. Together they formed 'the Gospel;' and in this respect, whether it was 'the Three,' or St Paul who preached, the substance of their preaching was the same.

48. Of 'the five hundred' to whom Christ appeared many were still alive when St Paul wrote. So too were most of the Apostles, who were their fellow-witnesses, as well as St Paul himself. Thus we stand, as it were, in the direct presence of the immediate witnesses of the fact. But it has been said that the very circumstance that St Paul reckons the appearance revealed to himself in the same list with the other appearances, shews that he did not insist on their objective reality: they may have been merely subjective visions as this is assumed to be. The exact converse is, however, the true explanation of the fact. St Paul believed, and always acted as if he believed, that the Lord did appear in His human nature as really to him as to the other witnesses of the Resurrection. He asserts that all the appearances were equally actual, that is, external manifestations of the Lord, but not that they were all like in circumstances. There was an objective reality in the revelation of Christ made to him no less than in the revelations to others; but this objective reality was not limited to one outward shape. It was apprehended (as it appears) variously by various minds. Thus we find that the forms of the Lord's manifestation were, according to the Evangelists, most varied (II. § 18). A marvellous change had passed over Him. He was the same and yet different. He was known only when He revealed Himself. He conformed to the laws of our present life, and yet He was not subject to them. These seeming contradictions were necessarily involved in the moral scope of the Resurrection. Christ sought (if we may so speak) to impress on His disciples two great lessons, that He had raised man's body from the grave, and that He had glorified it. Nor can we conceive any way in which these truths could have been conveyed but by appearances at one time predominantly spiritual, at another predominantly material, though both were

CHAP. I. alike real. For the same reason we may suppose that the Lord took up into His Glorified Body the material elements of that human body which was laid in the grave, though, as we shall see (II. § 7), true personality lies in the preservation of the individual formula or law which rules the organisation in each case, and not in the actual but ever changing organisation, which may exist at any moment[1]. The resumption of the Crucified Body conveyed to ordinary minds a conception which could not otherwise easily have been gained, while at the same time it brought the fact of the Resurrection within the reach (as far as could be) of continuous observation. For us the appearance to St Paul would certainly in itself fail to satisfy in some respects the conditions of historic reality—it might have been an internal revelation—but for him it was essentially objective and outward[2]; and when taken in con-

[1] This consideration will help to explain a difficulty which has been felt as to the appearances of the Lord after the Resurrection. His dress (it has been said) must have been purely subjective. But a little reflection will shew that the special outward forms in which the Lord was pleased to make Himself sensibly recognisable by His disciples were no more necessarily connected with His glorified Person than the robes which He wore.

[2] It is important to observe that on another occasion St Paul notices the doubt which he felt as to the character of the revelation which he received: 2 Cor. xii. 1 ff. His vision of the Lord was realised under the full conditions of human life:

nexion with his life and the other appearances CHAP. I.
which he records, it lays open something more of the Divine fulness of the exalted Manhood of the Risen Saviour.

49. It is unnecessary to dwell longer on St Paul's direct testimony to the Resurrection, which is thus carried up to the time of his Conversion, that is to a date not more, at most, than ten years after the Lord's death. No one probably will deny that the Resurrection was announced as a fact immediately after the Passion. Nothing else will explain the origin of the Christian Church. We may go even further, and take for granted that the Apostles who announced it, believed in its reality. The life of St Paul may be considered conclusive on this point; and even if his life were explicable on any other theory than that of a faith which he claimed to share with the other Apostles, it is long since a critic has been found to maintain that the miraculous narrative was an intentional fiction of those by whom it was promulgated. It remains then, if the Resurrection be unhistoric, that they were deceived, and if so, that they were predisposed to his 'ecstasy' left him uncertain as to the circumstances under which he was allowed to hear 'unspeakable words,' whether 'in the body' or 'out of the body.'

CHAP. I. a credulous and ill-grounded belief, either by their own character, or by the popular expectations of the time.

50. Before examining whether this was so we may observe how incredible it is from the nature of the testimony alleged that the Apostles could have been deceived. The sepulchre in which the Lord had been laid was found empty. This fact seems to be beyond all doubt, and is one where misconception was impossible. On the other hand, the manifestations of the Risen Saviour were widely extended both as to persons and as to time. St Paul, and in this his record is in exact accordance with that of the Evangelists, mentions His appearances not only to single witnesses, but to many together, to 'the twelve' and to 'five hundred brethren at once.' One person might be so led away by enthusiasm as to give an imaginary shape to his hopes, but it is impossible to understand how a number of men could be simultaneously affected in the same manner[1]. The difficulty of course is further increased if we take account of the variety as well as of the number of the persons who were appealed to as witnesses of the fact during their lifetime; and of the length of time during which the appearances of the Lord were continued. It is stated in the Acts that the necessary qualification of an Apostle was that he should be a personal witness of the Resurrection; and St Paul admits the qualification, and shews that it was fulfilled in his case. Every avenue of delusion seems to be closed up. For forty days Christ was with the disciples talking with them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of GOD (II. § 18). If we cannot believe that the Apostles deceived others, it seems (if possible) still more unlikely that they were the victims of deception. CHAP. I.

[1] It must be observed that the question here is not as to the propagation of a belief in a statement through a large number of men, but as to the simultaneous perception by many of an alleged phenomenon. The former is intelligible even if the belief be in fact unfounded: the latter is not intelligible unless the phenomenon be really objective. In this connexion too

51. For there was no popular belief at the time which could have inspired them with a faith it is most instructive to notice that the report of the Lord's Resurrection was in each case disbelieved. Nothing less than sight convinced those who had the deepest desire to believe the tidings; and even sight was not in every case immediately convincing (Matt. xxviii. 17). See [Mark] xvi. 9—11, 13, 14. Luke xxiv. 11, 13, 22—24. John xx. 25. In St Matthew the promised sight of the Lord is the message of joy which the women are to carry to the disciples: xxviii. 7, 10. In St Luke the contrast between the effects of the report of the appearance of the Lord and the sight of Him is vividly given: xxiv. 34, 35, compared with 36 ff.

CHAP. I. in an imaginary Resurrection. There was none among the Greeks whose mythology might appear at first sight to offer scope for its spontaneous growth. But without pressing any particular interpretation of the remarkable words of St Luke, it is evident from the narrative in the Acts that the doctrine of the Resurrection was the chief point in the address of St Paul which arrested the attention and excited the ridicule of his Athenian hearers. And naturally so; for while the legends of Greece recorded the elevation of men even to the honours of Olympus, this elevation was effected by the deposition of their humanity. They became gods by ceasing to be men. If the rude inhabitants of Lystra, according to the faith of a simpler age, supposed that 'the gods were come down in the likeness of 'men,' in the persons of Paul and Barnabas, yet in this case the outward shape was but a disguise in which it was believed that their divine majesty was veiled and had no essential connexion with their nature. There is not the least trace in the popular traditions of Greece, much less in Greek speculation, of any belief in the possibility of the restoration of the dead to the transfigured fulness of a human life. The chief myths which expressed the idea of the restorative power of nature were drawn from the stated recurrence of day and night, or from the annual vicissitudes of the seasons. Their teaching was simply of the inexorable and yet kindly alternations of darkness and light, of death and life, without the element of progress or the transforming change 'from glory to glory.' Even when the fiction became personal it stopped short of the essence of Christian hope. If Hercules was fabled to have met Death and rescued Alcestis from his grasp by force, or to have descended into Hades and delivered Theseus from confinement there, he is said to have conferred on them no greater blessing than a fresh span of earthly existence. If after the accomplishment of his labours he was himself wedded to immortal Youth in the mansions of the gods, it was not till he had ceased to be the champion of men, and had consumed in the fires of Œta whatever shewed his fellowship with them. Nowhere else in ancient mythology is there a clearer embodiment of the instinct which craves for a personal immortality and communion with GOD than in this noble legend, and yet even here the entrance to the new life is symbolised by the destruction and not by the restoration of human powers. To the Greeks the Resurrection, whether as the type or as the spring of a new life, was a strange idea.

Acts xvii. 18, 32.

Acts xiv. 11.

CHAP. I.

2 Cor. iii. 18.

CHAP. I. It included and interpreted their old beliefs, but it also transcended them (II. § 14).

52. Nor was it otherwise with the Jews. Even among them there was no belief which could have furnished the basis for the apostolic Gospel. There was, it is true, a popular expectation that Elijah, or some other of the old prophets, should be sent from heaven, whither they had been specially withdrawn, to prepare the advent of Messiah; but this expectation had no real connexion either in its ground or in its scope with the Resurrection of Christ, as preached by the Apostles. It centred in a direct mission from GOD and not in a rising from the grave to a new life: it culminated in the accomplishment of a work among men, and not in the elevation of humanity to heaven. After the death of John the Baptist, again, some said 'that he was risen 'from the dead' when they heard of the works of Christ; but this was simply the interpretation of a report in connexion with the opinion that John was indeed 'Elias.' Nothing was based upon the conjecture. Others, again, in the course of the Lord's ministry were, according to the Evangelists, restored to life; but this restoration was to a mortal and not to an immortal life.

Such a resurrection, so far from being a parallel to the Resurrection of Christ, is the very opposite to it. The belief in the resuscitation of the dead to the vicissitudes of ordinary life would indispose for the belief in a rising to a life wholly new in kind and issue. And such is the life of the Risen Lord which is portrayed in the Gospels. Thus while we admit all the records of resuscitation contained in the Scriptures, there is absolutely not the slightest anticipation in earlier history of such a Resurrection as that of Christ. The conception as expressed by the Evangelists and Apostles has itself the characteristics of a Revelation (comp. II. § 16). CHAP. I.

53. But it may be said that the idea was included in that of Messiah. There were it is true very vivid anticipations of a coming Messiah, of some triumphant King who should restore the old glories of the house of David, but the path which was marked out for Him by common consent was that of victory and not of defeat and death. There is no evidence that the Jews in our Lord's time had formed any conception of a suffering Messiah. If Christ spoke of His Passion as the Son of Man, they could only ask with wonder, Who this Son of Man was? If the prophet described a deliverer, despised and afflicted, the John xii. 34.

CHAP. I. question rose to their lips whether 'he spoke Acts viii. 34. 'of himself or some other.' And if the idea of Messiah's death was unknown, so also was that of the Resurrection, which is the complement of it.

54. Nor were the disciples in this respect more far-seeing or better instructed than their countrymen. On this point the Gospels are an unexceptionable authority; and nothing is more striking than the apparent inability of the Apostles, who were nearest to the Lord, to lay aside the hopes in which they had been reared. When the Lord was raised from the dead they understood at last what He had said to them, but not Matt. xvi. 21—23. before. The thought of His death was one which they felt ought to be cast aside as a temptation to Luke xxiv. 21. distrust. And when at last He died, their hope was gone. There is not a word to indicate that this catastrophe led them to any truer view of His work. Those who loved Him most devotedly came to embalm His corpse. The first tidings of His Resurrection seemed as 'idle talk;' and the Evangelists paint in vivid colours, the strangeness of which proves them to be faithful, 'the slow-'ness' and 'hardness of heart,' which hindered the disciples from believing a fact which brought with it a revolution of their ancient faith.

55. But the revolution was accomplished. If we compare the portraiture of the Apostles as given in St Luke's Gospel with that in his book of the Acts, we cannot but feel that we are looking on the same men, but transfigured in the latter case by the working of some mighty influence. There are the old traits of individuality, but they are ennobled. The relation in which the disciples stand to their Lord is not less personal, but it is less material. He is regarded as their Saviour as well as their Teacher. What was before vague and undecided is defined and organised. Those who when Christ was yet with them wavered in spite of their love for Him, mistook His words, misunderstood His purpose, forsook Him at His Passion, after a brief interval court danger in the service of a Master no longer present, proclaim with unfaltering zeal a message hitherto unheard, build up a society in faith on His Name, extend to Samaritans and Gentiles the blessings which were promised to the people of God. However we explain it the change is complete and certain. Their whole moral nature was transformed. As far as we can see there was no spring of hope within them which could have had such an issue. The anticipations which they shared with their countrymen and those which the immediate presence of Christ had awakened, CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. were dissipated by His death. Whatever new impulse moved and animated them must have been from without, clear, and powerful. It must have been clear, to make itself felt to men who were in no way predisposed to yield to it: powerful, to remould once and for ever their notions of the work of Messiah. The Resurrection satisfies both conditions. As a fact with which the disciples were familiarised by repeated proofs it was capable of removing each lingering doubt: as a Revelation of which the meaning was finally made known by the withdrawal of Christ from the earth, it opened a new region and form of life, the apprehension of which would necessarily influence all their interpretations of the Divine promises. If the crucified Lord did rise again, we can point to effects which answer completely to what we may suppose to have been the working of the stupendous miracle on those who were the first witnesses of it: if He did not, to what must we look for an explanation of phenomena for which the Resurrection is no more than an adequate cause?

56. In nothing is the spiritual transformation of the Apostles more striking than in their view of the Person of Christ. The words in which He spoke of the atonement which He should make necessarily fell unheeded by those who could not realise the fitness of His Death. There is nothing in the Gospels (and for this we may fairly quote them) to shew that personal deliverance from sin and corruption—the transfiguration of all man's natural powers—was ever connected with His work during His lifetime by those who heard Him[1]. 'These things,' it is emphatically said, 'understood not His disciples at the first.' He received sinners, it is true, but it was not felt that their restoration was a type of the restoration of all men. Still less, if possible, is there any indication that the Apostles understood before the Resurrection that the Blood of Christ should ratify a new covenant to be embodied in a Universal Church. The meaning of the Last Supper was hidden from them, as subsequent events shewed, till after the Lord's Death. But then, from some source or other, a flood of light is seen to have been poured on all which they had regarded before with silent and hesitating wonder. The first invitation which they addressed to those who had joined in the Crucifixion was 'to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for 'the remission of sins.' The day of Pentecost

CHAP. I.

John xii. 16. Luke xviii. 34.

Acts ii. 38.

[1] The inspired confession of St Peter, John vi. 68, is the nearest approach to a direct recognition of this Truth which the Lord taught (Matt. xx. 28), but in this respect it may be compared with the use of the corresponding passage in Acts v. 20.

CHAP. I. sealed the testimony of Easter. And from that time forth union with Christ by baptism was the first condition of Apostolic fellowship. His Name Acts iv. 12. was declared to be the only 'name under heaven 'given among men whereby we must be saved.' His Passion was acknowledged as part of the divine counsel. His Return was set forth as the certain object of the believer's hope. Nor are we left in doubt as to the power which had wrought the change. The ground on which the Apostles rested their appeal was the Resurrection: the function which they claimed for themselves was to bear witness to it. Their belief was not an idle assent, but the spring of a new life. And the belief itself was new in kind. It was not like that affectionate credulity with which an oppressed state or party believes in the reappearance of a lost leader. It was a confession of error before it was an assertion of faith. It involved a renunciation of popular dogmas in which those who held it had been reared. It proclaimed a truth altogether new and unlike any which men had held before (§§ 51 f.). If ever the idea of delusion can be excluded, it must be in a case when it is alleged to explain a conviction which transformed at once the cherished opinions of a large body of men of various characters and powers, and forced them to a painful and perilous work for which outwardly they had no inclination or advantages. CHAP. I.

57. If we look a little deeper at the Apostolic faith we shall feel still more strongly the effect of the belief in the Resurrection. To do this we must turn to the Epistles of St Paul, as the earliest memorials of Christian teaching addressed to Christians; for hitherto we have noticed only the simple message addressed to mixed and unbelieving hearers. In many respects, as we might naturally expect, there is a wide difference between the contents of these two forms of the Gospel; but their groundwork is identical. The fuller and more developed doctrine of St Paul is as essentially historical as the first address of an Evangelist to Jews or Gentiles. This has been pointed out already (§§ 45 ff.); but one most important element of faith which St Paul brings out from the history remains yet to be considered. In the first addresses of the Apostles reported in the Acts the Death of Christ is treated rather as a difficulty to be explained, than as a spring of blessing. If we realise the circumstances under which they spoke, it could not be otherwise, and this peculiarity alone justifies us in assuming that the narrative is in the main authentic. But St Paul in writing to Christians (and no less in speaking to Chris- e.g. Acts xx.

CHAP. I. tians) treats this fact very differently. The Death of Christ—the mode and the issue of that Death—is the centre round which all his doctrine turns; for to the Christian the Death of Christ involves 1 Cor. ii. 2. the Resurrection. 'I determined not to know 'anything among you,' he says to the Corinthians,
Gal. vi. 14. 'save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.' 'GOD forbid,' he writes in another place, 'that I should 'glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.' And the reason is obvious; since the Death of Christ for the Christian includes the whole mystery of the Redemption. The Resurrection is necessarily involved in it, when we acknowledge that He who died was the Son of GOD. Thus the great Epistles to which we confine ourselves abound with such passages as the following:
Gal. i. 4. 'Christ gave Himself for our sins.' 'We are not 1 Cor. vi. 20. 'our own: we were bought with a price.' 'If
2 Cor. v. 15, 18. 'one died for all, then all died...Behold all things 'have become new. But all things are of GOD, 'who reconciled us to Himself through Jesus
Rom. v. 8, 9. 'Christ.' 'GOD commendeth His love towards us, 'in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for 'us. Much more then, being now justified by 'His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through 'Him.'

58. With these passages are connected others which present the same truth of the restoration of unity to humanity in the Risen Christ in different points of view. Thus: 'To us there is 'one God, the Father, of Whom are all things, 'and we unto Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, 'through Whom are all things, and we through 'Him.' And again: 'We being many, are one 'body in Christ, and every one members one of 'another.' We 'are all the children of God by 'faith in Christ Jesus...There can be neither Jew 'nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, 'there can be no male and female: for ye all are 'one man in Christ Jesus.' Or, in other words, Christ, as He is revealed to us, in His Life, His Death, His Resurrection, is the One Mediator by Whom every blessing comes; the one all-containing Presence by Whom men are bound together. In His Person every difference of race, of station, of nature, is done away. 'In Christ,' to use the favourite phrase of the Apostle, our whole life and being and work are centred.

CHAP. I.

1 Cor. viii. 6.

Rom. xii. 5.

Gal. iii. 26, 28.

59. Long familiarity with such words has made it very difficult for us to realise the magnitude of the revelation which they convey. The fitness of the doctrine to satisfy the wants of men makes us inclined to believe that it is natural. But if we place on the one side the outward cir-

CHAP. I. cumstances of Christ's Death, and on the other these interpretations of its significance: if we measure what seemed to be the hopeless ignominy of the catastrophe by which His work was ended, and the Divine prerogatives which are claimed for Him, not in spite of, but in consequence of that suffering of shame; we shall feel the utter hopelessness of reconciling the fact and the triumphant deduction from it without some intervening fact as certain as Christ's Passion and glorious enough to transfigure its sorrow. For we must ever bear in mind that the Apostles do not deal with abstract doctrine, but with doctrine centred in facts. They do not teach a redemption to be wrought out by each man for himself, after the example of Christ, but of redemption wrought for each by Christ, and placed within their reach. They do not teach merely an original union of men, but 1 Cor. xv. 45 ff. a spiritual union accomplished in the Person of Christ. They do not teach a liberty which sets aside the distinctions and duties of society, but a liberty which springs from the transformation of every claim of life into a spontaneous act of filial love through the revelation of the Father in His Son. They do not teach an immortality of the soul as a consequence flowing from any conceptions of man's essential nature, but a resurrection of the body not only historically established in the rising again of Christ, but given to us through Him who is 'the Resurrection and the Life.' If Christ rose, to repeat the alternative which we have proposed before, all this is intelligible. The miracle was as a new-birth of humanity. If Christ did not rise, we have not only to explain how the belief in His Resurrection came to be received without any previous hopes which could lead to its reception; but also how it came to be received with that intensity of personal conviction which could invest the Life and Person of Christ with attributes never before assigned to any one, and that by Jews, who had been reared in the strictest monotheism. CHAP. I.

60. There is yet one other aspect in which we may see the power of the early faith in the Resurrection. Next to the fact that Christ rose from the dead, the topic most frequently insisted on in the Apostolic writings is that He will come again from heaven. It would be out of place to discuss the form which this belief took, or the interpretation of the passages of the Epistles in which it is enforced. One point only may be noticed. The material imagery in which the belief was popularly embodied shews in what sense the Resurrection itself was understood. In proportion as the Return of Christ was apprehended

CHAP. I. in a definite outward shape, so also must His Departure have been held to have taken place in the same manner. The two events are completely correlative. And upon reflection it will be felt that the expectation of the Return was in itself exceptional and in need of explanation. It has frequently happened that nations have looked for the restoration of the hero-king in whom they had seen the pledge of unaccomplished triumphs. But in each case the hope was based on the denial of death. The hero was sleeping like Arthur in the deep shades of Avalon, or like Barbarossa in some subterranean cavern; or he was withdrawn for a time like Harold in the recesses of a cloister, or like Don Sebastian in obscure captivity; but the devotion of his people would not believe that he was dead. That alone was impossible: against that supreme issue popular faith knew no availing power. But it was quite otherwise with the belief of Christians. The Death of their Lord was as much a part of their Phil. ii. 6—11. Gospel as His Resurrection. Nay more, His Exaltation was in one aspect a consequence of His Death. Thus if the early looking for Christ has any point of contact with the instinctive expression of national love, it is essentially distinguished from it in the circumstances of its origin. Such a fact as the Resurrection intervening between the Passion and the Return explains adequately, as it appears nothing else could do, the confident expectation of Christ's Second Coming in the mode in which the early Christians looked for it.

61. The same also may be said of the Apostolic interpretation of the Sacraments. It has been frequently argued that the Christian doctrine of the Sacraments corresponds with the Christian doctrine of the Incarnation. It could be shewn that it is equally closely connected, though the correspondence is necessarily less complete, with the fact of the Resurrection. But it does not fall within our scope to examine the essential conception of a Sacrament. It is enough to observe that the external forms in which the conception was realised witness to the transforming power of the belief in the fact of Christ's rising again. The belief in the Resurrection which was the groundwork of the Church penetrated every part of its faith and worship. The earliest Christians kept 'the eighth day for joy, 'as that on which Jesus rose from the dead;'... and the two rites which were of universal observance commemorated not obscurely the same central fact. The celebration of the Holy Eucharist is absolutely unintelligible without faith

Barn. Ep. 15.

CHAP. I. in a risen Saviour. 'As often as ye eat this bread
1 Cor. xi. 26. 'and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death 'till He come.' The rite was not a memorial of death simply, but of death conquered by life.
Rom. iv. 25. The seal of the efficacy of the death of Christ was given in the Resurrection; and the limit of the commemoration of His Passion was looked for in His Return. Baptism, again, was regarded as embodying the teaching of the same facts: 'We
Rom. vi. 4. 'were buried with Him by baptism unto death: 'that like as Christ was raised up from the dead 'by the glory of the Father, even so we also should 'walk in newness of life.' So thoroughly was the faith in the Resurrection of Christ inwrought into the mind of the first Christians that the very entrance into their society was apprehended under the form of a Resurrection. The fact was not an article of their creed, but the life of it. It was confessed in action as well as in word. And no evidence of the power or reality of a belief can be less open to suspicion than that which is derived from public services, which, as far as all evidence reaches, were contemporaneous with its origin and uninterruptedly perpetuated throughout the body which holds it.

62. Thus the continuity of the life of the Christian Church is itself, when viewed in this light, a substantial proof of the reality of the fact on which it was established. Other religions have been powerful and lasting in virtue of the partial truths which they enshrined and offered to the devotion of believers. But in Christianity, if we regard the claims on which it was first accepted and through which it has at all times exercised its characteristic power, no such partiality is possible. It professes to bring a new life to light. It is a subordinate though yet a necessary part of its working that it illuminates the past. Christ is presented to us not simply as the Guide of men, but as the Way. The Apostles preach not only that men may be united to GOD, but how they may be united to Him. Every precept of Christianity is quickened by the power of the Death and Resurrection of Christ. It is by the presence of this power that they are Christian; and it is as Christian that they conquer the world. Nothing could shew a more profound misapprehension of the Gospel than to substitute the name Catholicity for Christianity in the estimate of its social and political work. Its essence lies in the exhibition of a personal Saviour. 'If thou shalt Rom. x. 9.

CHAP. I.

'confess with thy mouth 'Jesus is Lord,' and shalt 'believe in thine heart that GOD raised Him from 'the dead, thou shalt be saved.' From this confession and this faith spring directly the various organisations of the Church which have found acceptance at different times and under different circumstances. The one fact of the Resurrection underlies them all, and when divorced from it they lose their vitality (Intr. § 16). This being so it is impossible to exaggerate the importance of a living apprehension of the Resurrection as the Apostles announced it. It is not, as we have seen, taken out of the range of possible facts by any antecedent considerations; and, as it seems, no other evidence in its favour consistent with its character as the basis of a religion at once historical and spiritual, could have been more complete than that which still lies within our reach.

63. To sum up briefly what has been said. It has been shewn that the Resurrection is not an isolated event in history, but at once the end and the beginning of vast developments of life and thought; that it is the climax of a long series of Divine dispensations which find in it their complement and explanation: that it has formed the starting-point of all progressive modern societies, ever presenting itself in new lights according to the immediate wants of the age. It has been shewn that in the character of the fact there is nothing which can appear incredible or, in such a connexion, even improbable to any one who believes in a Personal God. It has been shewn that the direct evidence for the event is exactly of the same kind which we have for the other events in the Life of Christ; that St Paul appeals to his own experience and to the experience of the Apostles for the certainty of its literal accomplishment; that it is incontestable that the Apostles acted from the first as if they believed it, and that their sincerity cannot be doubted; that the nature of the outward proof alleged seems to render it impossible that they could have been victims of a delusion; that the substance of their belief was something wholly novel, removed equally from the belief in a phantastic vision, and from the belief in a restoration to a corruptible life; that the effects of it upon themselves were such that the conviction must (so to speak) have been forced upon them by overwhelming power, capable of changing their personal character, of transforming their hereditary faith, of inspiring them with new thoughts and hopes; that the Christian Church was founded upon the belief, and embodied it in rites coeval with its foundation. Nothing has been said of the testimony of St John, and St Peter, and the first three Evangelists, lest exception might be taken to their authority. Every conclusion has been rested upon

CHAP. I. documents which criticism has never assailed. But at this point we may take account of the evidence from other sources. The common contents of the Synoptic Gospels can be shewn (I believe) to be anterior to the Epistles of St Paul, and to contain the sum of the earliest Apostolic preaching in Judæa; if this be so we have in them the testimony not of one witness only, but the common testimony of most of those who saw the Lord after He rose again. The authenticity of the first Epistle of St Peter cannot be questioned without the most arbitrary neglect of external evidence, and in that the Apostle to whom Christ first shewed Himself speaks of Him as 1 Peter i. 20, 21. 'foreordained before the foundation of the world, 'but (made) manifest in these last times for '(those) who by Him do believe in GOD, that 'raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him 'glory; that (their) faith and hope might be in 'GOD.' The Gospel of St John, again, seems to me to be an indubitable work of the disciple whom Jesus loved; and after recounting some of the appearances of the Lord after His Resurrection, the Evangelist completes his Gospel, as it stood
John xx. 30, 31. originally, with the words: 'Many other signs 'truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, 'which are not written in this book; but these 'are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is

'the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing 'ye might have life in His name.' CHAP. I.

Indeed taking all the evidence together, it is not too much to say that there is no single historic incident better or more variously supported than the Resurrection of Christ. Nothing but the antecedent assumption that it must be false could have suggested the idea of deficiency in the proof of it. And it has been shewn that when it is considered in its relation to the whole revelation of which it is a part, and to the conditions of the Divine action, which we have assumed, this miraculous event requires a proof in no way differing in essence from that on which the other facts with which it is associated are received as true. In a word, the circumstances under which God is said to have given a revelation to men in the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus were such as to make the special manifestation of power likely or even natural; and the evidence by which the special Revelation is supported is such as would in any ordinary matter of life be amply sufficient to determine our action and belief.

If we next turn from history to the Individual man, it will appear that the Resurrection throws as much light on the mysteries of personal life as it does on the whole progress of mankind.

CHAPTER II.

THE RESURRECTION AND MAN.

C'est un des grands principes du Christianisme, que tout ce qui est arrivé à Jesus-Christ doit se passer dans l'âme et dans le corps de chaque Chrétien.

PASCAL.

CHAP. II. 1. HITHERTO we have considered the Resurrection simply as a fact, the central point of universal history, the outward cause of revolutions in thought and in society. It still remains to analyse the essential meaning of the fact in reference to the individual, to discover, if it may be, what are the special lessons as to our nature and destiny of the Revelation which it contains. Some of these we have indeed already touched on in considering the views of our Lord's Person and Work which were presented by the Apostles after He rose from the dead (I. §§ 55 ff.). But we may go yet further, and consider the relation of the Resurrection, accepted as a fact, to some of the great problems of life, apart from the earliest historical interpretation of its teaching.

2. That we may do this in any way satisfactorily, it is necessary that we should go back for a moment to take account of the simplest elements to which the questions which are involved in the discussion can be reduced. It appears then that we are conscious of three distinct existences, Self, the World (that is a limited 'Not-I'), and GOD. We cannot prove the reality of these existences as we have already seen (Introd. § 4); but on the other hand in some form or other all our life testifies to our conviction that they are. It is impossible to hold that Self is the only true being or self-existent: it is equally impossible to hold that Self is the only manifestation of the Being on which it depends. Thus we are forced to accept that mystery as final, which represents as essentially distinct, yet for us in inseparable juxtaposition, on one side the Creator, on the other Creation, of which the individual 'I' is a part. CHAP. II.

3. The suppression of any one of these elements necessarily involves an essentially imperfect and therefore a false view of the Universe and every age offers types of the errors which thus arise. Some speculators neglect the free power of the human will. Man is, according to this view, only a piece of mechanism which responds completely to the forces which act upon

CHAP. II. it; but in himself he has no originative power of thought or action. The result is Fatalism, which is logically unassailable and yet known instinctively to be untrue. Others again with a nobler aspiration reduce life to a personal relation between man and his Creator. For them the world vanishes before this awful fellowship, and finds no place in their scheme of existence. So mysticism arises, which with all its holy power yet does violence to the conditions of life, and neglects some of its richest resources and most certain safeguards against fatal error. Then comes a reaction, and a third school possessed by the fulness of earthly existence refuse to look beyond it. For them GOD lies wholly beyond the region of knowledge. But the conscience of man triumphs over material Positivism and claims a religion, which by a strange irony is offered in a shape most akin to Fetishism. Thus humanity rejects each imperfect system, which severally, as systems, are irrefragable; and waits patiently for that completer wisdom which shall harmonise the present contradictions of the full view of life.

4. If then we look outside ourselves there is an antithesis which cannot be reduced. If again we look at that which we each call I, it will be seen to be essentially twofold. There is an organism, and something which acts through the organism. There is a unity of will with a multiplicity of functions. There is an element of permanence in the midst of constant change. There are laws and a power which makes itself felt in accordance with these laws. The organism, with all its variety of sense, its capacity for service, its laws of decay and assimilation, we call the body: the self-moving power, which originates and controls action, we call the soul. And this twofold being is naturally influenced by a twofold affinity. On the one side, through the 'body,' it is connected with the world: on the other, through the 'soul' (the 'spirit'), with GOD. Or, in other words, the body is inherently finite, the soul aspires at least towards the infinite. Thus recurring to what has been already said (§ 2) we see that consciousness reveals to us in ourselves individually a fundamental antithesis corresponding to the antithesis which we are forced to recognise without us.

5. Yet more: the I consists in this antithesis. Nothing is more common than to hear it assumed that the 'soul' is the real self. Yet nothing can be more clear upon reflection than that the only 'self' of which we are conscious is made up of 'soul' and 'body.' The workings of these two are absolutely inseparable. We cannot contem-

CHAP. II. plate the independent action of either for an instant. If we try to do so, we find at the outset the presence of some condition or power which is due to the complementary part in our whole nature. One remarkable proof of this duality (so to speak) in our life—of all that we are, as far as we can observe ourselves—may be found in the fact that some speculators have seen in life nothing but the manifestation of the one element, and others nothing but the manifestation of the other, since the demonstrable presence on every occasion of either taken alone seemed to exclude the presence of the other. Nor is there, indeed, any possible refutation of the 'materialist' or 'spiritualist' systems except in the appeal to the individual consciousness.

6. Thus we find ourselves face to face with two great personal problems: What is the permanent relation of soul and body? and next, What is the relation of the complex self to GOD? in which latter question is included the mystery of sin. To these may be added one other question, not personal but yet inevitable to man: What is the relation of the individual self to the world? In other words, Shall we be hereafter? and, if so, What shall we be? and, What is the destiny of creation generally? Round these three questions the noblest thoughts of the ancient world turned: to these the most daring speculations of later times have been addressed. What light is thrown upon them by faith in the Resurrection?

7. Our present personality, as we have seen (§ 4), involves the antithesis of soul and body. One element is not more needful to it than the other. Indeed, the clearest conception which we can form of a person is the special limitation of a self-moving power. The power must be self-moving because a person is necessarily endowed with a will which is a spring of motion. It must be limited, because, as far as our experience reaches, a will can only make itself felt in and through an organism with which it is connected. And yet, further, the mode of the limitation, including the fundamental laws by which the generic limitation is governed, the original specialities of the particular organism and the accumulated acts by which the effects of these laws and properties are modified, expresses the individual differences of personality among beings similar in kind. This conception of personality presents to the mind an easy method of conceiving of the change of character in the same person, and likewise of the continuous effect of soul and body upon one

CHAP. II. another while the body is in constant flux. For man the body is the outward expression of the limitation in each particular case. Yet the word must be used with caution. We cannot understand by body simply a particular aggregation of matter, but an aggregation of matter as representing in one form the action of a particular law, or rather the realisation of a special formula. The specific law or formula of assimilation and combination is that which is really essential and permanent. The same material elements may enter into a thousand bodies, but the law of each body, as explained above, gives to it that which is peculiar to and characteristic of it. To take an illustration from Chemistry, the same element, pure carbon for instance, can exist in forms wholly different. This difference we represent to ourselves under the idea of some peculiar law of arrangement of the similar particles in each case. And conversely we can conceive how if the constituent element were changed the action of the different laws of arrangement (supposed to continue) would produce substances truly answering to those which resulted from their action before. Thus with regard to man, there is nothing unnatural in supposing that the power which preserves his personality by acting according to the individual law of his being in moulding the continuous changes of his present material body and all that depends upon it, will preserve his personality hereafter by still acting according to the same law in moulding the new element (so to speak) out of which a future body may be fashioned. In other words we can understand how the law which now rules the formation of our body may find its realisation hereafter in some other element, while the new body will be essentially the same as the old one, as expressing the corresponding action of the same law in relation to the new sphere in which it may be supposed to be placed. No person is what he is solely in himself, but is in part dependent on all around him. If an individual remained unchanged while everything else changed he might be physically the same, but he would not be the same morally. There is a necessary relativity in our nature, and according to the view just indicated, since all the forms of being are changed in the new sphere of existence, each body is changed harmoniously with the remainder and in due proportion to the whole. CHAP. II.

8. This consideration will help us in examining on grounds of simple reason the question of the permanence of our personality after death. This, as far as we can see, can happen only in

CHAP. II. two ways. It may be argued that the soul after death will itself have a personal existence; or that it will continue to act through an organisation (where the word is used in its widest sense) which is itself the expression of the same law as moulds all that we now call our body. These alternatives must be considered separately.

9. First then on principles of reason there seems to be no ground whatever for supposing that the soul as separate from the body is personal[1]. There is indeed an imperious instinct[2] which affirms that we shall survive death, but this instinct does not attempt to analyse our being, or deal with its constituent elements. It teaches simply that the dissolution of which our present senses are cognisant is not the destruction of ourselves; but it does not define, or even tend to define, in what the I consists, further than this. Personality implies special limitation, and this limitation (as far as we can see) is conveyed perfectly by our bodies, which though continually changing yet change according to one law. It is conceivable that the soul may have some individual inner limitation (so to speak), but of this we have and can have naturally no knowledge. Doubtless the soul is limited by general laws, which circumscribe its powers and capacities, for otherwise it would not only have an affinity with the infinite, but be infinite; but these general laws do not constitute individual personality. Again: if souls are originally the same at their connexion with the body we cannot shew how they can be so affected by it as that they should bear away, when wholly dissociated from it, the various results of the connexion. Nor if they are originally different can we see how the original differences would be modified; while the assumption of the original difference introduces a fresh difficulty into the question, unless we supplement the assumption, as Plato did, by the assertion of the previous existence of souls. CHAP. II.

[1] Nothing is here said of the intermediate state of the soul after death and before the Resurrection; and probably there is something wholly deceptive in our use of words of time ('before' and 'after') in such a connexion. Comp. Introd. § 8.

[2] Compare p. 12, n.

10. Popular language and belief are so strong in the assertion of the personal immortality of the soul in our post-Christian times, that it is very difficult for us to realise the true state of the problem. The firmness of Christian faith, even where its presence is least suspected, influences the conclusions if not the processes of independent reasoning. Happily, the noble speculations of the Greek philosophers are a monument of CHAP. II. what thought alone could do on this and kindred topics. Yet even here instinct will make itself felt; and again and again the sequence of an argument is broken by the independent assertion of the truth which instinct and not reason foresees or feels. One writer however follows the guidance of his logic to its last conclusions. In his formal treatise On the Soul Aristotle has examined with the most elaborate care the various elements included in it, and their mutual relations. He seems to watch the process which he guides as one wholly unconcerned in its issue. Sternly and pitilessly he states the last conclusion on man's natural hope of immortality as tested by reason; and the very coldness of his words gives them an undescribable pathos.

De Animâ III. 5.

11. 'In every natural object there are,' he says, 'two elements, the one the characteristic 'matter (so to speak), which includes potentially all 'the manifestations of the object, and the other the 'causative and active principle. These differences 'therefore must exist essentially in the soul; and 'the rational part of man is necessarily twofold. 'On the one side is the "reason" which is to be 'so called in virtue of its becoming everything; 'on the other that which takes its name from 'making everything, in the manner in which (to 'take an example) light does; for in a certain 'sense light makes colours existing potentially, 'to be colours actually. And this latter reason'—that is, the active reason which has an absolute existence—'is separable and impassive and un-'mixed in essence.' It is not dependent in any sense on the present organism of man; it is not affected by the changes which it reveals; it is not modified in any manner by the connexion in which it is placed. It is independent of a union which is begun and ended in time, 'and when 'separated it is that alone which it is essentially.' It carries with it no trace of its temporary combination with the passive "reason"; 'and 'this alone'—this impersonal and unchangeable reason—'is immortal and eternal.' It has been and we are unconscious of the past. It will be and we shall be unconscious of the present. 'We have no recollection' of any former existence, and we shall have none hereafter of our life on earth, 'because this' eternal reason which alone survives 'is impassive, while the passive 'and susceptible reason'—the reason which is the seat of all personal feeling and emotion and impression—'is corruptible, and without the eternal 'reason is incapable of thought or consciousness.'

12. One very important reflexion will illus-

CHAP. II. trate the force and bearing of Aristotle's judgment. We commonly interrogate the soul only as to the future: it can speak equally well of the past. Every argument for the soul's permanence hereafter based upon its essential character, tells equally in favour of its preexistence. Reason cannot take into account the idea of its creation; and all the presumptions drawn from what we can observe of its nature and action to shew that it will be, shew equally that it has been. The idea of 'continuance' is equally applicable to the beginning and to the end of the life which falls under our observation. In other words, the purely logical arguments which are supposed to prove that the soul is immortal, prove that it is eternal[1]; and the legiti-

[1] In this aspect the opening chapter of the Analogy is a most instructive lesson in the weakness of pure reason to establish that hope of a future life, which has existed more or less in every period. Here only, perhaps, Bp Butler has been unable to cast off the influences of the time in which he lived, and adopted the narrow methods of popular argument which were current in a mechanical age. Throughout he assumes that the 'living being' or 'agent,' of which he gives no definition, is separable from our present organisation and in itself personal. And again he never notices the application of his arguments to a prior as well as to a future existence. This is the more remarkable as he considers with remarkable candour and wisdom the objection urged from the extension of his reasoning to the life of brutes. From whatever cause the defects arose, and it seems most likely that the thoughts which he failed to meet were wholly foreign to the speculations of the time, the fact remains that he assumes the mate deduction is, that as we are now unconscious of any previous existence, and cannot in any way connect our present circumstances and characters in this world with our conduct in another former world, so, if we survive in any future state, we shall be equally unconscious of this through which we are now passing, and not recognise any retributive justice in the conditions under which we shall exist. At least any presumption that we shall be conscious hereafter of our present life while we are not conscious of that which we have passed through before, could only be drawn from the observation of a corresponding difference between the conditions and circumstances of our present and past lives which obviously lies wholly without the range of our faculties. For us, as far as the teaching of nature goes, this life stands absolutely alone. The application of the general experience which it gives is confined within the limits of its duration.

two great principles which above all others he ought to prove, the possibility of conceiving our personality apart from our present bodies, which, though changeable, are yet changeable according to observed laws; and next that what is true if we look back to the first origin of our present life is not true if we look forward to its close. How momentous the latter assumption is may be seen at once if any one will substitute 'birth' for 'death' and 'origin' for 'destruction' in the earlier arguments of the chapter. The former assumption is even more obviously the assumption of the chief point in the conclusion.

CHAP. II. 13. The judgment of Aristotle sums up the final result of Greek Philosophy on the soul, as a subject of pure speculation. From his time philosophy became essentially practical. The great questions of being and knowledge were merged in those of morals, in which intuition has a legitimate exercise. Later writers therefore furnish nothing of importance to the exact discussion of the hope of immortality; but it is impossible not to compare the conclusions of Aristotle with those of Plato. The master is as confident and sanguine as the scholar is sceptical and passionless. But the method of Plato is as full of instruction as the results of Aristotle. Plato is sure of his belief beforehand. His arguments are merely to justify it. And when he feels that these—though strengthened by the bold proposition that we do bring with us to earth traces of our former existence—are unequal to support the weight of his conclusion, he makes, as he expresses it, a bold venture, and presents the substance of his faith in one of those magnificent myths, by which he endeavours to bridge over the chasm between the seen and unseen worlds[1]. His "Republic" closes with the noble legend of Er the son of Armenius, who saw in a trance the judgment of the dead, and the hidden glories of the world. For once, he tells us, a soul was allowed to return to the body without drinking the waters of Forgetfulness. And so 'this story was saved and not lost, and it 'will save us,' he adds, 'should we listen to its 'teaching; and then we shall happily cross the 'river of Lethe and not defile our souls; but 'deeming that the soul is immortal and capable 'of bearing every evil and winning every good, 'we shall keep close to the upward path, and 'practise in every way justice and wisdom, that 'we may be friends to ourselves and friends to 'the gods.' 'To confidently affirm that [the fate 'of souls] is such as I have described,' Socrates says at the end of the "Phaedo," 'becomes no 'reasonable man. But I do think that it becomes 'him to believe that it is either this or like this, 'if at least the soul is shewn to be immortal; 'and that it is worthy of him to face peril boldly 'in such a belief, for the peril is glorious; and 'such thoughts he ought to use as a charm to 'allay his own misgivings, in which spirit I have 'myself dwelt thus long upon the story.' For in such questions the really brave man 'will either 'learn or discover the truth, or if this be impos-'sible he will take at any rate the best of human 'words and that which is most irrefragable, and 'carried on this as on a raft sail through life in

[1] I venture to refer for a fuller discussion of these myths to the Contemporary Review, 1866.

CHAP. II.

Plat. Resp. x. 621.

Plat. Phaedo, 114.

Plat. Phaedo, 85.

CHAP. II. 'perpetual jeopardy, unless one might make the 'journey on a securer vessel, some divine word if 'it might be, more surely and with less peril.'

14. If then pure reason cannot suggest any arguments to establish the personality of the soul when finally separated from the body, and for us personality is only another name for existence, still less can it shew any grounds for supposing that it possesses in itself the power of assuming at death another organisation corresponding to our present body whereby its personality may be preserved. Our present body is not in any way, as far as we can see, due primarily to the action of the soul, which acts through and upon it; and when the body is dissolved, the only action of the soul of which we can have naturally any knowledge ceases. It may have some inherent energy in virtue of which it manifests itself throughout the ages, now in this form, now in that. It may, but that seems harder to conceive, have gained on earth the means of realising a personal existence hereafter. It may, as many thought even among GOD's ancient people, go back to Him who gave it and continue to exist only as part of His Infinite Being. Our utter incapacity of forming a clear conception of any mode of existence differing in essence from our own, and not simply in extent of similar powers, forces us to contemplate these and other alternatives, and to withhold our judgment till we gain some new light. If we look within or without we have absolutely no analogy to carry our thoughts one step onward into a realm wholly unknown: none to shew that the soul will exert a power there which has been undeveloped or dormant here. Every change which we can follow is simply of the earth. Faith, or love, or instinct, may cross the dark river, but they go alone: reason cannot follow them. Nay more: reason shews that the visions which they see are mere shadowy projections of what we see and feel now.

15. Thus we are placed before a final contradiction. On the one side we are so constituted as to cling to the belief in the continuance of our personality after death: on the other reason points to death as a phenomenon absolutely singular which closes life, as far as we know it, and takes away the conditions of our life. But if a single experience can shew that these conditions are not destroyed, but suspended as far as we observe them, or modified by the action of some new law: that what seems to be a dissolution is really a transformation: that the soul does not remain alone in a future state, but is still united with CHAP. II. our body, that is with an organism which in a new sphere expresses the law which our present body now expresses in this (supr. § 7); then reason will welcome the belief in our future personality no less than instinct. For the truth is not against reason but beyond it. Reason shews simply that what we commonly see, and what we can learn from the analysis of our own nature lends no support to the conclusion which we cannot abandon. But let some new fact come in, and all will be changed, if that reveals to us something of the character of life after death.

16. Such a fact is the Resurrection. In one sense no event can be more natural than this, so far as it answers to a craving for knowledge of the unseen world, which by its intensity indicates that it was intended to be satisfied, as much as any other original instinct of man. In another sense nothing can be more beyond nature, for it introduces us to a novel phase of being, of which we feel even in the presence of this revelation that we can know only a part darkly and 'in a riddle.' For the Resurrection is not like any one of the recorded miracles of raising from the dead. It is not a restoration to the old life, to its wants, to its special limitations, to its inevitable close, but the revelation of a new life foreshadowing new powers of action and a new mode of being. It issues not in death but in the Ascension for which it is the preparation and the condition. It is not an extension of an existence with which we are acquainted, but the manifestation of an existence for which we hope. It is not like any of the fabled apotheoses of the friends of gods, whose spirits purified by the funeral fire from the stains of earth, were carried to the immediate presence of those whom they had loved, but it is the consecration of a restored and perfected manhood. It is not a withdrawal from men or a laying aside of humanity, complete, final, and immediate, but the pledge of an abiding communion of a Saviour with the fulness of our nature on earth and in heaven. It is not the putting off of the body, but the transfiguration of it. And so in its record it is not like any of the dreams in which earlier poets had endeavoured to convey to others the hope which they cherished. Its teaching is conveyed in a series of facts. Now one incident and now another brings out some aspect of the whole truth, as far as we can apprehend it. But all incidents alike are simple and in a certain sense natural. No vision is opened of glory or suffering. No display is made of fresh powers. No overpowering exhibition of majesty strikes unwilling conviction into the hearts of those who were before

CHAP. II.

John xx. 17.

CHAP II. unbelieving[1]. The Lord rose from the grave; and those who had known Him before, knew that He was the same and yet changed. This is the sum of the Apostle's testimony, the new Gospel of the world.

[1] It has been objected that our Lord revealed Himself only to believers or to those inclined to believe. If we regard the resurrection as a revelation of a new life it is obvious that it could not have been otherwise. In order to establish the belief in the reality of this new existence it was necessary that some power should exist in the witnesses to apprehend it. There was a spiritual side to the manifestation of the Risen Christ which could only be discerned spiritually. If it had been necessary merely to shew the restoration of the Lord to the condition of an ordinary human life, as in the case of Lazarus, the testimony of indifferent spectators would have been adequate. But if the appearances were designed to be a revelation of a glorified human life, then the manifestation to unbelievers would not only have been contrary to the usual method of the Providence of God, but also, as far as we can see, unavailing. For if the Lord had appeared to them as a man simply, their evidence would have gone to establish a false view of His Risen Person: if He had appeared to them under new conditions of being, they would have been unable to acknowledge the reality of His manifestation. The believer who had familiarly known Christ and felt His power could alone grasp and harmonise the two modes of the Revelation of His Person. Afterwards, when the idea of the Risen Christ was fully established, we find an appearance granted to St Paul, which carried with it immediate conviction to an unbeliever; but till this idea was established, as far as we can judge, such an appearance would have been without effect. The appearance to St Paul was as real as the others (ὤφθη) but made under different circumstances. It was a revelation of Christ glorified and as such left its impression on all the teaching of St Paul.

17. In this connexion there is one most important consideration which is commonly overlooked. The Apostles announce the fact of the Resurrection and its immediate bearing upon the individual hopes of men, but they do not develope its significance. The fact is added to the sum of human experience. The interpretation of it is left for life. And so it is that with the comments of eighteen centuries its meaning is yet unexhausted. Deeper insight, wider sympathies, grander aspirations, have been granted to men in the progress of ages, but the idea of the Resurrection penetrates beneath and beyond all the thoughts which history or science has hitherto made known. The Gospel is still the same, but known more fully with ever-growing clearness as the successive crises of thought and life have shewn its fitness for meeting them. And it is obvious why this is so. The Resurrection is a new creation. Its issues cannot be contemplated by man at first, though its utmost consequences are included in its actual realisation. And just as in the creative works of human genius harmonies and lessons are found in virtue of their relation to absolute truth, of which their authors were never conscious, so in this which is the Truth, all later speculation will find fresh light upon the problems of human existence.

CHAP. II. 18. There are indeed passages, especially in the Epistle to the Ephesians and in the writings of St John, in which the Apostles announce mysteries springing out of the Resurrection which are only now dawning upon the students of history and life; but as a general rule they declare the fact that 'Christ rose again' without dwelling on those aspects of its meaning for which men were not at that time prepared by knowledge or experience. In this respect the narratives of the Resurrection are unparalleled. The Evangelists[1] record the miracle so calmly, looking solely, as we must think, at its historic aspect, that in reading of it we lose sight of its stupendous significance from the natural simplicity of the details in which its lessons are conveyed. The manifestations of the risen Saviour are mixed with scenes of fear, of misgiving, of unbelief. He appeared in Galilee and at Jerusalem: now at night and again in the early morning: in the upper room and under the open sky: in an assembly gathered, as it would seem, for religious exercise, and to men busy with their ordinary work. Nothing is (if we may so speak) farther from the thought of the Evangelists than to give a doctrinal view of the mystery which they declare. Christ was the same and yet changed. That was in substance what they had to tell; and in that lies the full answer to the first great question before us. The body is not destroyed by death. Its union with the soul is for a time (as we are forced to conceive of it, though perhaps quite wrongly) interrupted but not closed. Our speculative doubts are met, as they could only be met, by a fact. CHAP. II.

[1] At this point I shall use the writings of the New Testament without reserve. If the Resurrection is admitted on other grounds to be a fact, no one will (I believe) question the general veracity of the Evangelists.

19. It is unnecessary to dwell on the various details by which the identity of the Lord's human body is brought out in the Gospels. It is obvious from a mere enumeration that they meet each misgiving. The body which the disciples had laid in the sepulchre was no longer to be found when they looked for it. The marks of the Passion were made sensibly present in the Risen Saviour to him who would not otherwise believe. Nay more, Christ Himself offered this very proof to those who 'supposed that they had seen a spirit.' 'Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: 'handle me, and see, for a spirit hath not flesh 'and bones, as ye see me have'...'And He took '[meat] and did eat before them.' And it can hardly be without reference to this incident that

John xx.

Luke xxiv. 39, 43.

Comp. John xx. 20.

Comp. John xxi.

CHAP. II. St John in his Epistle reckons this 'handling'
1 John i. 1. last among the various revelations which God had given of His Son. The length of time too during which the appearances were extended familiarised the disciples (so to speak) with the mystery which had at first filled them with terror.
Acts i. 3. For forty days He 'shewed Himself alive to them 'by many infallible proofs, being seen of them and 'speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom 'of God.'

20. But this Body which was recognised as essentially the same Body, had yet undergone some marvellous change, of which we can gain a faint idea by what is directly recorded of its manifestations[1]. Thus we find that the Person of Christ was not recognised directly by those who saw Him. However firm their conviction was afterwards that they had 'seen the Lord,' they knew Him first when He was pleased to make Himself known. Human sense alone was not capable of discerning Who He was. It could not be otherwise if His Body was glorified, for our senses can only apprehend that which is of kindred nature with themselves. At one time it was by a word of general or personal tenderness, that Christ awakened the faith by which sense was quickened: at another time by the celebration of that holy rite which He had instituted before His death: at another by a mighty act which symbolised the blessing of the apostolic work. CHAP. II. Matt. xxviii. 9. John xx. 16, 19. Luke xxiv. 30, 31. John xxi.

[1] It is not, I believe, a mere fancy to see a typical indication of this change in the words used by our Lord Himself of His glorified Body: Luke xxiv. 39 ('flesh and bones'). The significant variation from the common formula 'flesh and blood' must have been at once intelligible to Jews, accustomed to the provisions of the Mosaic ritual, and nothing would have impressed upon them more forcibly the transfiguration of Christ's Body than the verbal omission of the element of blood which was for them the symbol and seat of corruptible life.

21. And as Christ's Body was no longer necessarily to be recognised, so also it was not bound by the material laws to which its action was generally conformed. He is found present, no one knows from whence. He passes away, no one knows whither. He stands in the midst of the little group of the Apostles 'when the 'doors were shut for fear of the Jews.' 'He 'vanished out of the sight' of those whose eyes were opened that they knew Him. And at last 'while they beheld, He was taken up, and a cloud 'received Him out of their sight.' It is impossible not to feel in reading the narratives that we are regarding a form of existence human, indeed, yet indefinitely ennobled by the removal of needs and limitations to which we are at present subject. It is vain for us to speculate on the nature of John xx. 19, 26. Luke xxiv. 31. Acts i. 9.

CHAP. II. that transformed human Body. We can form no clear positive conception which is not shaped by the present laws of thought. Negatively we can only say that it was not bound by those laws of space (for example) which necessarily enter into all that we think or do. The life which is revealed to us is not the continuation of the present life, but a life which takes up into itself all the elements of our present life, and transfigures them by a glorious change, which we can regard at present only under signs and figures.

22. Thus the Resurrection answers as completely as it can be answered the first great question by which we are met. In the Person of Christ we see the whole of man, his body and soul, raised together from the grave. No part is left behind. The whole complex nature is raised and glorified. It is not that the soul only lives; nor yet that the body, such as it was before, is restored to its former vigour. The Saviour, as far as we
2 Cor. v. 4. regard His Manhood, is not unclothed, to use St Paul's image, but clothed upon. Nothing is taken away, but something is added by which all that
1 Cor. xv. 54. was before present is transfigured. 'The corruptible puts on incorruption: the mortal puts on 'immortality.'

23. This thought brings us to the second question, the final relation of man to God, of man, that is, as subject to the consequences of sin. And here it will be necessary to consider somewhat carefully the idea which lies at the root of sin, lest it may seem that we are dealing with a mere phantom. But still we may leave out of our investigation some questions which have been connected with it. Our inquiry does not extend to the obstacles which material nature places in the way of man, of whatever form they may be, nor yet to the mutual relations of animals to one another or to man. We are obviously wholly incapable of knowing anything of the position in which any beings except ourselves stand towards God, or of their latent powers, or of their future destiny. It is quite conceivable that what appears to us in the light of suffering and decay in beings wholly unlike ourselves may to a higher intelligence assume a different aspect; or (and this seems even from a view of nature far more probable) the fate of the physical and animal creation may be bound up by some mysterious influence with that of man. At least, we can see the difference between what we call evil in inorganic or brute nature, and evil (moral evil) in man which involves the operation of a free will, and an acknowledged relation between the person of CHAP. II.

CHAP. II. the sinner and GOD. Whether these conditions of action can exist in the case of other creatures or not we are wholly unable to determine; but it is at least remarkable that as soon as the phenomena of free will are observable in animals (as in the case of those which have been long associated with man) we attribute to them a measure of responsibility by according praise and blame to their actions.

24. If then we look at the problem in its simplest form it is evident that the possibility of sin is necessarily included in the creation of a finite, free being; for the simplest idea which we can form of sin, is the finite setting itself up against the infinite. Selfishness, which exists potentially as soon as 'self' exists, is the ground of all sin. Hence we can see how a perfect finite being may yet be exposed to temptation, for the sense of limitation brings with it the thought, or the possibility of the thought, of passing the limit.

25. And not only is a perfect finite being in this way necessarily under a moral probation, but the actual existence of sin is not required for his moral development. It is necessary to dwell on this point, for if it could be shewn that sin belongs essentially to the idea of individual human progress as one of the conditions of its realisation, we might at once dismiss as vain the obstinate questionings with which we ponder over its future issues. It is only if sin is an intrusive corruption of our nature that we need feel anxious about the permanence of its results. But it follows from the final analysis of sin which has been given that man, though he had not sinned, might yet have practised some (at least) essentially human virtues: all indeed which are comprised in self-control and the recognition of dependence. Nothing therefore can be more false than to say that 'moral good and moral evil—as distinguished 'from the possibility of good and evil—came into 'being together.' A command implies the possibility of obedience and disobedience, but obedience is no less real though disobedience in fact never takes place. Love, again, the centre of all social virtues, and truth the centre of all intellectual virtues, are both wholly independent of the presence of evil among men. CHAP. II.

26. But it may be said that if moral evil were removed from the world 'life would be 'impoverished.' So indeed it appears at first sight to us who are habituated to the startling contrasts of life: for us shadow is a necessity of distinct vision. Yet it would be difficult to shew

CHAP. II. that the more splendid qualities which are brought out (for instance) by war are better, in any sense, than their correlatives which need no such field for their display: that the heroic forgetfulness or contempt of danger or suffering, which springs from a great passion or a generous impulse in the midst of a fierce conflict or under the sense of a deep wrong, is better than that rational self-control which we have seen can exist in the highest degree without the presence of evil. We are too apt to think that virtue which is seen on a larger scale is itself magnified. On the other hand it may be allowed that evil itself serves as part of our discipline: that it gives occasion for the exercise of special virtues, and by antagonism calls them into play; yet this is only to say that it has been so ordered that evil shall in some degree minister to its own defeat.

27. And while we grant that in society evil may be the occasion of good, it is by no means clear that this is true in the individual. As far as we can see, the presence of evil, that is the wilful transgression of limit as distinguished from the original limitation, is neither the occasion, nor the condition of good, nor on the narrow stage of human life the preliminary to it. The highest conception of active virtue—duty—is absolutely untouched by it both in its origin and in its fulfilment, even when evil is regarded under the extreme form of pain. CHAP. II.

28. Moreover it must be observed that evil, while it may be the occasion of good, is never transmuted into good. Evil remains evil to the last in whatever form it may shew itself. Sin remains sin: pain remains pain: ignorance (so far as it is culpable) remains ignorance: though sin and pain and ignorance may call forth efforts of love and fortitude and patience.

29. Nor can it be said that sin realised, and not merely the possibility of sin by the action of a free will, is the necessary condition of human virtue, and consequently of human happiness. For if this were true, then it would follow either that evil itself will be eternal, or that human life in its true sense will cease to be. Whatever may be the function of evil in the social discipline of men whose powers are already impaired by sin, we have no reason to think that evil could find any place for giving occasion to new or higher good in a society of men animated by those active and personal virtues which have been seen to be wholly independent of it (§§ 25, 27); not to speak of the possibility of other forms of virtuous

CHAP. II. character inconceivable in our present mixed state; for the permanence of the antitypes or perfections of our present virtues in another state by no means excludes the possibility of the existence of other virtues as yet unknown, which may come into play from the manifestations of new relations between ourselves or of ourselves to other intelligent beings.

30. It follows then that sin—moral evil as involving the action of will—is in fact something wholly foreign to human nature: that in its essential character it remains always evil even when it is the occasion of good: that it is not a lower form of goodness or a necessary condition for its exercise, but the conscious transgression of limit: that in the individual it leads to no good: that even in society at large its disciplinary power only effects by sacrifice and imperfectly what the observance of the true bounds of nature would effect perfectly. It is then a foreign element in our nature, and absolutely abhorrent from our proper destiny. But it is also, as far as reason can trace, permanent in its issues. If therefore a belief in personal immortality be held on any grounds except those furnished by the Gospel, it must be accompanied by an awful sense of the consequences of past offences.

31. It is this fact which gives to the idea of sin its most terrible significance. As far as we can conceive by the help of reason the effects of every action must be infinite, and in regard to the agent (whatever they may be to others) corresponding to and like the action. But all sin (as such) necessarily involves the idea of suffering to the person who commits it; for selfishness, the final element of sin, is the contrary of love, and therefore when set against Infinite Love must bring the misery of unavailing desire and isolation. Hence punishment (for all consequences must at last be referred to the Will of the Personal Creator), or (in another light) suffering as the natural consequence of selfishness, must exist as long as sin exists; and so in any particular case the past sin must still work its full effect in separating the sinner from God without end, unless some new power be interposed.

32. For it must be noticed that suffering has in itself no power or tendency to remove or expiate sin, the consequences of which are best conceived as evolved (so to speak) naturally and centring in the changed character of the guilty, and not imposed externally according to any fixed standard. Nor again has it in itself any power to produce repentance, by which in the intercourse of man and man the effects of wrong-doing, as far as their mutual relations are concerned, may be removed. But even in this latter case no repentance can cancel the consequences of the wrong action, either without the doer or within him. These throughout life and (as far as we can see) beyond it are inwrought into the world and into his nature. Future punishment is a conclusion of reason, if we grant the future continuance of our personality. The mystery which reason cannot of itself apprehend is that this punishment can be stayed. Thus if we approach the subject from this side it is the forgiveness, or rather the 'washing away' of sins and not their punishment, which is the real subject of Revelation. If on the other hand we confine our view to this life, the idea of a Supreme Being tempering suffering with a view to repentance answers to an instinct of man and not to any logical process; and Scripture first teaches us to believe that the instinct is true.

33. For just as there is an instinct within us which claims the inheritance of a future life, so we feel that after sin repentance is still possible and efficacious, and that our Heavenly Father can do away our sins. But Reason which deserted us before equally deserts us now. It tells us from the observation of what we see around and from the conception which we are forced to make of the dependence of the future on the past, that we must be for ever, in relation to God, what we are, and bear about with us the scars and wounds which sin has inflicted upon us. CHAP. II.

34. Here again the fact of the Resurrection meets our doubts with a new Revelation. If we look at our Lord simply as He was seen outwardly, He bore in Himself all the consequences of sin. 'He was tempted in all points like as we 'are' except by personal sin. He took our flesh with its liabilities to hunger, and fatigue, and pain upon Him: He shared the emotions of anger, and sorrow, and affection: He bore death with its most terrible accompaniments, the last issue of sin, and that sense of utter isolation from God which is its complete punishment. Whatever sin could work He took upon Himself; and when all was ended God raised Him up 'for our justifi-'cation,' and the Lord Jesus bore our human nature, over which sin had no longer power, to the immediate presence of the Father. Hebr. iv. 15. Matt. xxvii. 46.

35. But it will be said that the Lord's sufferings were not the result (as ours are) of personal sin, and consequently that we can draw no

CHAP. II. comfort from His triumph over death. To this objection it is in part an answer to reply that the sufferings of Christ were as though they were due to Himself, and that not by a fiction, but by His real assumption of human nature. How this could be in regard to the more general consequences of sin, as want or grief, is sufficiently intelligible from the fact that He was truly man. But how He could take sin upon Him is a mystery which we cannot solve, though in fact it is only a mystery of the same kind as His 'becoming John i. 14. 'flesh' (comp. § 38). Yet even here so much at least we can see, that in the Agony and on the Cross He suffered, yet with an intensity which we cannot appreciate, even as those do who bear the
Heb. v. 7. consequences of personal sin. 'He offered up 'prayers and supplications with strong crying and 'tears unto Him that was able to save Him from 'death, and was heard in that He feared.'

36. The complete answer lies somewhat deeper, as has been already indicated, in the recognition of our Lord's Divine Person. It is impossible to understand the Resurrection completely apart from the Incarnation. It may indeed be said that the Resurrection is the historic seal of the Incarnation, which remains for ever a mystery removed from all witness. And it was in this sense that the first teachers of CHAP. II.

Christianity understood and interpreted it. After the Resurrection, as we have seen (I. §§ 56 ff.), they saw in Christ a Saviour of boundless power. His Life and Death were contemplated in their atoning virtue: His Name was given as that whereby men might be saved: in Him was Life. The contrast between that which was apprehended, if with the deepest reverence we may so speak, as personal discipline and redeeming power, was placed in its broadest light. 'It became' GOD Heb. ii. 9, 10.
'to make Him perfect through suffering,' and even thus 'He tasted death for every man.' He was 'declared to be the Son of GOD with power, Rom. i. 4.
'according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resur-'rection from the dead.' And 'though He were Heb. v. 8, 9.
'a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things 'which He suffered; and being made perfect, He 'became the author of eternal salvation unto all 'them that obey Him.'

37. Apart from this faith in the Divinity of Christ, His Resurrection loses its highest significance. It has in itself and absolutely no direct and immediate connexion with ourselves. It is an isolated incident in the history of mankind, glorious and full of hope but not the new birth of humanity. It answers to that view of the Lord

CHAP. II. which represents Him as a Teacher simply, and does not, according to the apostolic pattern, bring out into chief prominence what He did and what He was. If Christ was only man, such as we are in nature, then His triumph over death is no Gospel for those who are bowed down with the weight of guilt. In Him we can feel that 'the 'Prince of this world when he came had nothing:' Death could not hold Him. For ourselves, we 'receive' in corruption 'the due reward of our 'deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.'

John xiv. 30.

Luke xxiii. 41.

38. On such a theory no hope like that of St Paul could repose. But once introduce the belief in Christ's divine nature, and His Death and Resurrection are no longer of the individual but of the race. Nor in doing this are we taking refuge in an arbitrary assumption to help our argument. On the contrary, we simply repeat the interpretation which the Apostles placed on the whole work of the Saviour. It was on this belief that the Church was founded and built up. The belief was not indeed always drawn out with exact precision, yet it was always implied in the relation which the believer was supposed to hold to God in Christ. The formula of Baptism, which has never changed, is unintelligible without it. The Eucharist is emptied of the blessing which every age has sought in that Holy Sacrament, if it be taken away. CHAP. II.

39. If Christ took our nature upon Him (as we believe) by an act of love, it was not that of one but of all. He was not one man only among men, but in Him all humanity was gathered up. And thus now as at all time mankind are (so to speak) organically united with Him. His acts are in a true sense our acts, so far as we realise the union: His death is our death: His Resurrection, our Resurrection. Nothing can be plainer than the assertion of this doctrine. Our 'bodies are 'members of Christ;' and conversely a Christian society is 'a body of Christ.' 'I have been,' St Paul says, 'crucified with Christ.' If we died 'with Christ,' he writes to the Romans, 'we be- 'lieve that we shall also live with Him...Reckon 'ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but 'living unto God in Christ Jesus.' And yet more plainly, 'When we were dead in sins [God] quick- 'ened us together with Christ, and raised us 'up together, and made us sit together in the 'heavenly realm in Christ Jesus.' 'In whom also 'ye were circumcised with the circumcision made 'without hands, in putting off the body of the 'sins of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ; 'buried with Him in baptism, wherein also ye

1 Cor. vi. 15.

1 Cor. xii. 27.

Gal. ii. 20.

Eph. ii. 5, 6.

Col. ii. 11, 12.

CHAP. II. 'were raised with Him through faith in the opera'tion of GOD, who raised Him from the dead.' So
1 Pet. i. 3. again St Peter speaks of GOD 'who begat us 'again to a living hope through the resurrection 'of Jesus Christ from the dead;' and his final
1 Pet. v. 14. salutation is 'Peace be with you all who are in 'Christ Jesus.'

40. The ground of these and similar statements is found in the words of our Lord, which first receive through them their full significance.
John xv. 4, 5 'Abide in me and I in you...I am the Vine; ye 'are the branches. He that abideth in me and I 'in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for 'apart from me ye can do nothing.' And again, in His last great prayer for His disciples, He says:
John xvii. 19—23. 'For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also 'may be sanctified in truth. Neither pray I for 'these alone, but for them also which believe on 'me through their word, that they all may be 'one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, 'that they also may be in Us...I in them, and 'Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect into 'one.'

41. The full doctrine of the Resurrection cannot be understood without constant reference to these deeper revelations of Christ's Person; nor again is the Apostolic doctrine of the Person of Christ intelligible without the light of the glorious manifestations of Himself which He made to His disciples after He was risen from the dead. But it is not our object now to follow out the mutual relations of these two elements of our Creed, or to trace them both back to the Incarnation. It is enough to have indicated in what way we can conceive that the efficacy of the Resurrection is extended to those for whom Christ died; and having done this we may next notice how the teaching of the Resurrection on the dignity of the body tends to explain the relation of the individual self to the world. CHAP. II.

42. The noblest of the ancient moralists looked upon man's body as a hopeless burden and fatal hindrance to the soul; and in this they have been followed by the noblest non-Christian moralists in every age. The famous thanksgiving of Plotinus that 'he was not tied to an immortal 'body' expresses the common feeling of all who have not felt the power of the Resurrection. But Christianity transfigures what philosophy would destroy. It shews that the corruption by which we are weighed down does not belong to our proper nature, and is not necessarily bound up with it for ever. It lays open with a deeper and

CHAP. II. more searching criticism than a system of morality could direct, the internal struggles to which the 'flesh' must give occasion, and the inevitable defeats which we must suffer in our efforts towards the divine life. Plato does not describe more sadly than St Paul the afflictions by which we are
Phil.iii.21. beset while yet oppressed by 'the body of humi-'liation.' Or to take an example from a different sect and age, M. Aurelius does not express more keenly than St John a sense of the evils of the present life. But there is an immeasurable chasm between the Apostles and Platonists or Stoics. 'We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being 2 Cor. v. 4. 'burdened,' St Paul writes: 'not for that we would 'be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality 'may be swallowed up by life.' The better change for which he longed was not the destruction but Phil.iii.21. the ennobling of his body, so that it might 'be 'fashioned like unto [Christ's] body of glory, ac-'cording to the working whereby He is able even to 'subdue all things unto Himself.' And the power by which this transformation should be effected was the simple contemplation of Christ in His essential majesty. Nay, in some sense the change is already begun on earth, so far as that we can look forward with full hope to its accomplish-
2 Cor. iii. 18. ment; for 'we all, with open face beholding as in 'a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into

'the same image from glory to glory.' 'Beloved, CHAP. II.
'now are we the sons of GOD,' such are St John's 1 John iii. 2. words, 'and it doth not yet appear what we shall 'be: but we know that, when He shall appear, 'we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as 'He is.'

43. In a word our present body is as the seed of our future body. The one rises as naturally from the other as the flower from the germ. 'It 1 Cor. xv.
'is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory: 'it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it 'is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual 'body.' We cannot, indeed, form any conception of the change which shall take place, except so far as it is shewn to us in the Person of the Lord. Its fulfilment is in another state, and our thoughts are bound by this state. But there is nothing against reason in the analogy. Every change of life which we can observe now must be from one material form to another equally falling under our senses; but such a change may help us to understand how a form at present sensible may pass through a great crisis into another, which is an expression of the same law of life, though our present senses cannot naturally take cognisance of it (supr. § 7). If the analogy were to explain

CHAP. II. the passage of man from an existence of one kind (limited by a body) to an existence of another kind (unlimited by a body), it would then be false; but as it is, it illustrates by a vivid figure the perpetuity of our bodily life, as proved in the Resurrection of Christ.

44. The moral significance of such a doctrine as the Resurrection of the body cannot be overrated. Both personally and socially it places the sanctions if not the foundations of morality on a new ground. Each sin against the body is no longer a stain on that which is itself doomed to perish, but a defilement of that which is consecrated to an eternal life. To injure another, is to injure one with whom we are bound by the closest ties through a common fellowship in
1 Cor. vi. 13—15. Christ. 'The body is not for fornication, but for 'the Lord; and the Lord for the body. And GOD 'both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us 'by His power. Know you not that your bodies Eph.iv.25. 'are the members of Christ?' 'Speak every man 'truth with his neighbour: for we are members one 'of another.' Each Christian society is 'a body of 'Christ,' of which the members are charged with various functions; and these 'bodies' again are 'members' of other 'bodies' wider and greater, and these at last 'members' of that universal Church which is the 'fulness of Christ,' its heavenly Head. CHAP. II.

45. In this way the doctrine of the Resurrection turned into a reality the exquisite myth of Plato, in which he represented tyrants and Pl. Gorg. 524 f. great men waiting for their final sentence from the judges of Hades, with their bodies scarred and wounded by lust and passion and cruelty. And at the same time the notion of civic union in which lay so much of the strength and virtue of classical life, is freed from the dangers of party and class and extended to the utmost limits of a human brotherhood. The earliest religious instinct of men taught them to regard each class, each guild, each city, each state, as standing in a corporate connexion with some particular deity, and enjoying his protection: Christianity satisfies the instinct, and harmonises the idea of a special relationship to a Divine Lord with that of catholic union in Him. It gives the largest range to the sympathies and obligations of men at the very time when it lays the greatest weight on the distinct importance and eternal issues of every isolated human action.

46. The perfect reconciliation of the claims and duties of the individual and of the society

CHAP. II. is no less characteristic of the teaching of Christianity than the hallowing (so to speak) of the mutual relationship of soul and body; and both doctrines alike find their historical basis and the pledge of their realisation in the Resurrection. In præ-Christian times the individual was either sacrificed to the state, or contemplated wholly apart from it. The Platonist, in theory, regarded the man in a perfect society as simply living for it, and having independently no personal worth. The Stoic stood apart in proud loneliness, and looked on the turmoil of statesmanship and war with the stern indifference of despair or resignation. In practice both were more or less unfaithful to their creed. Socrates found problems of life which were so absorbing that till he had solved these, he affirmed that he could not interfere with politics. M. Aurelius, while he steeled himself against the future by steadfastly affirming the existence of a fatal cycle of human destinies, yet laboured with a faithful will to discharge the offices of the empire. But neither had any principle to justify the combination of the conflicting elements of action and thought. Nature only was stronger than logic. But the Apostles could declare that the sanctity of the man rests on the same fact as the sanctity of the society: that the dignity of personal action is not in conflict, but in absolute harmony, with that of social action: that duties to self and to others are simply different expressions of the same belief in one absolute unity. No power which has ever effectually stirred men to heroism or self-devotion is lost, but all are seen in one source. CHAP. II.

47. The glorious view which is thus opened of the one life 'fulfilled in many ways' which animates mankind, potentially at least, does not exhaust the prospect which Christianity offers to the eye of faith. Glimpses are given of a yet wider harmony and a vaster change. Reference has been made already to the passages in which the apostolic writings notice the fellowship of nature in the blessings of Redemption (I. § 1). It is evident from our ignorance of the forces at work in the outer world, of which we can observe only some effects according to our limited powers of perception, that we are quite unable to form any notion of 'a new heaven and a new 'earth.' Yet the fact of the Resurrection of the body suggests more forcibly the literal truth of that 'restitution of all things' which was announced from the first by St Peter. The ennobling of our material organisation contains, as it were, the promise of a more complete transfiguration of Nature. It is possible that the change Acts iii. 21.

CHAP. II. lies nearer to us than we are apt to imagine. It may perhaps be the case that what appear to us to be imperfections and evils in the physical or animal world may derive the character which we attribute to them from the incompleteness of our own faculties; and that this transfiguration (relative to us) may lie within us and not without (comp. § 23)[1].

48. Whether this view is true or not it contains an important element of truth which is commonly neglected. What we call 'laws of 'nature' are, as has been seen (Intr. § 8), nothing more than laws of our present observation of nature. They are a resultant, so to speak, of some unknown force without and our own powers of sensation and thought. The permanence of the law depends on the permanence of these two elements: if either is changed the resultant is also changed. If then our bodily powers are transfigured, as we see in the Resurrection of the Lord, our powers of observation and the limitations (as of space or time and the like) according to which we class phenomena, will undergo a proportionate change. Thus for us the 'law' will be changed while the power whose working we notice and describe by it is itself unchanged. But still there is no abruptness, no arbitrary revolution, in this new aspect of Nature. The new law must be conceived as springing out of our new powers, just as the present law springs from our present powers, when they are turned to the objects which fall under them. If our present body is the germ of that which will be, so is the present law of that which will hereafter regulate our perceptions. Thus to the Christian the laws of Nature are not laws only, but prophecies. In the light of the Resurrection they are symbols of something broader and more glorious beyond them. They do not confine hope but guide it.

[1] This thought, I now find, has been admirably worked out by Mr Hinton, whose Life and Letters is full of illustrations of the argument which I have suggested.

49. The line of thought which has been just opened leads to the Christian solution—as far as a solution is possible—of the last question which arises out of the simplest views of life, our relation to the world; but the fuller discussion of this must be reserved for a separate section. Meanwhile we have gained some insight into the doctrinal significance of the Resurrection in relation to the fulness of our future personal existence and to our hope of restoration before GOD. It has been seen that our present self is essentially twofold; and that we cannot in any way

CHAP. II. conceive that we can remain the same if either of the elements of which it is made up wants its proper representative. The doctrine of the 'immortality of the soul' is therefore wholly insufficient to satisfy that desire for a life hereafter for which man naturally craves. In confirmation of this conclusion it has been shewn that Aristotle and Plato, while regarding the subject from very different points of view, equally indicate that no arguments of pure reason can establish the future personal existence of the soul, as a conscious continuance of our present existence. Aristotle denies the conclusion on the strength of a direct analysis: Plato clothes his instinctive hope in the form of a story, confessing, as it were, that his logical process fails him. Yet further, the arguments which point forward, point backward also, and thus fail to establish the conscious dependence of the future on the present. Introduce the belief in the Resurrection and each difficulty disappears. In the Person of the Lord we see how we can hereafter be the same and yet indefinitely ennobled: how our souls and bodies may be for ever united, so that the individual self remains, while the body is transformed by a glorious change.

50. In the next place it has been shewn that while the possibility of sin is necessarily included in the existence of a free finite will, actual sin is wholly alien from the perfection of man's nature: that in itself and in the individual sin is inherently and immutably bad, though it may give occasion to good by antagonism: and that while it is such it must bring with it suffering which has no virtue to remove sin or the consequences of sin, of which it is itself one. In the way of nature then we cannot see how the evil of which we are conscious can ever cease to work out torment, though at the same time we instinctively turn to GOD as a Father ready to forgive and also (but how we know not) wash away sin. Again in this aspect the Resurrection presents to us the fulfilment of man's triumph in Christ over the issues of sin, which culminate in death. But here the full significance of the Resurrection and our personal share in it is seen to be bound up with the Apostolic teaching on the Person of Christ as unfolded in His Life and Ascension, on which the Church was founded, and in which we find all our hopes fulfilled, in virtue of a fellowship potential for the race and actual by faith for the individual. 'In Christ' we can stand without fear in the very presence of GOD. CHAP. II.

51. Further we have been led to notice some CHAP. II. of the moral consequences of a belief in the Resurrection: how it reveals a majesty in the body which philosophers have denied, and the consequent importance of every human action: how it hallows with a new sanction the idea of society at the same time and in the same way as it raises the dignity of the individual: how it harmonizes, by the faith in the gathering together of all humanity in Christ, claims which before were thought to be contradictory in their origin and in their fulfilment: how finally it casts a light over the destiny of the world and helps us to understand how our perception of nature will be indefinitely raised, even if nature itself is unchanged, by the ennobling of our own faculties and the removal or proportionate transformation of those limitations by which they are at present confined.

It remains to consider more in detail some of these thoughts as illustrating what may be called the social aspects of the Resurrection, so far as it contains a revelation of our relation to the world around us, and of the character of that Church which is the divine witness and embodiment of its truth.

CHAPTER III.

THE RESURRECTION AND THE CHURCH.

Willst du ins Unendliche schreiten,
Geh nur im Endlichen nach allen Seiten.

GOETHE.

1. IN the preceding chapters the Resurrection has been viewed in two main aspects. At first it was contemplated as a fact, standing in the centre of the development of human life, and adding a new element to the sum of the records of human experience. It was then contemplated as an idea, harmonizing conflicting instincts of man's nature and lifting him into a real communion with a nobler order of beings by an abiding fellowship with the unseen. So far the Gospel of the Resurrection vindicates its claim to a true historic basis and a moral fitness for meeting the essential needs of men. But it has a yet wider application. It offers a new foundation for social union. It is not only a message of salvation to CHAP. III.

CHAP. III. the individual: it is also the pledge of a divine life to the Church. The promise of Redemption, symbolised by the deliverance from Egypt, prefigured by the types of the law, illustrated by the teaching of the Prophets, was the vital bond of the people of Israel; and no less the accomplishment of Redemption, shewn in the Resurrection, the Ascension, and the consequent Mission of the Comforter, is the spring of life in the Christian Body. In the Church the fact of the Resurrection, so to speak, is perpetuated; and the idea of the Resurrection is realised. On the one hand, the development of the Church witnesses to the consecration of every power of man to a divine use and marks the potential transfiguration of every variety of individual or national character, as parts of a sublimer whole; and on the other hand it claims the possession of this transforming energy in virtue of the working of a Risen Saviour through its outward institutions. Briefly it is inherently historical and sacramental; and the clue to the apprehension of its history and its sacraments lies in the Resurrection.

2. The detailed examination of the institutions of the Church in the light of the Resurrection is at present impossible (comp. I. § 61). It will be sufficient to consider how the fact and the idea of the Resurrection affect the general conception and working of the Christian Society. Nor can the consideration be regarded as superfluous at the present time. Some strange forgetfulness of truth must prevail when it can be possible for philosophical writers to stigmatize Christianity as 'selfish.' The very same Gospel which sets before the single believer the glorious issue of life at the same time and by the same message binds up his hope with that of every other believer, and more than that with the destiny of the whole world. It is only by neglecting the Resurrection that the Christian can be isolated (comp. i. § 1). CHAP. III.

3. The first announcement of the Gospel connects it with the establishment of a society. It is emphatically 'the Gospel of the Kingdom.' Matt. iv. 23.
'The Kingdom of heaven is at hand' was equally Matt. xi. 12; Luke xvii. 21.
the message of the Baptist and of Christ Himself at the beginning of His teaching. At one time this Kingdom is contemplated as still future, at another as already present. We are taught to pray for its 'coming,' and encouraged to press as it were by force and claim by violent effort a share in its immediate blessings. Its origin, its growth, Matt. xiii.
the manner of its reception, the perils to which it would be exposed, the variety of elements which

CHAP. III. it would include, are portrayed under a rich variety of parables. 'I appoint unto you that 'ye may eat and drink at my table in my King'dom' were among the last words which the Lord addressed to His disciples; and after His Resurrection, during the forty days, He spoke 'of the 'things pertaining to the Kingdom of GOD.' The idea which was thus prominent during the ministry of Christ was included in the groundwork of the Apostolic preaching. The first address of St Peter on the day of Pentecost declared 'Jesus to 'be the Lord and Christ' Whom GOD had promised 'to raise up to sit on the throne of David.' The first record of a mission beyond the limits of Judæa describes Philip 'preaching the things con'cerning the Kingdom of GOD.' The definite charge which was brought against St Paul when he first preached in Europe was that he did 'contrary to 'the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another 'King, one Jesus.'

Luke xxii. 29.

Acts xvii. 7. Comp. xvi. 21.

4. It is unnecessary to consider the various misconceptions to which this proclamation of Christ's 'Kingdom' was exposed. Even to the time of the last manifestation of the Lord on earth before the Ascension, the Apostles seem to have confounded 'the Kingdom of GOD' with that which was its figure, 'the Kingdom of Israel.' But there is not the least trace that the Christian idea of a heavenly kingdom was ever mixed up with direct political aims. The very bitterness with which the Jewish zealots at the time of their rising persecuted the Christians, is a sufficient proof that these 'children of the Kingdom' were as far as possible removed from schemes of temporal ambition. The Christian belief did away with the bitterness of civil bondage, and substituted a higher hope for the dreams of national enthusiasm. But none the less the Kingdom whose coming believers were charged to hasten, was regarded as a society truly answering to the name, though its establishment was referred to the action of Divine Providence, and not to human design. The kingdoms of the earth were types of this kingdom which should be on earth though not of the earth. In other words the glorious society in which the Gospel was to find its outward embodiment would have a Sovereign, of whose Personal Rule His subjects would be conscious and by Whose Will they would be guided, an organisation, by which the relative functions and duties and stations of those included within it would be defined and sustained, a common principle of action, and common rights of citizenship. This was the earliest form under which the establishment of a Christendom, at first militant

Acts i. 3, 6.

CHAP. III. and then triumphant (though this distinction was but faintly perceived), was realised. The old Kingdom of GOD whose history could be traced in the Old Testament furnished the language in which it was described, and the wide-felt presence of the Roman Empire gave distinctness to the broader traits of universal dominion and unity.

5. But the idea of a Kingdom was not the only one under which the Church—the whole Matt. xvi. 18. society of Christians—was regarded. 'Thou art 'Peter (Petros),' our Lord said, in answer to the confession which the great Apostle had made, 'and on this Rock (Petra, the living rock, from 'which the Petros is hewn or taken) I will build 'my Church.' This then is a second figure: the church is a building, or more specially a house or temple. And it is worthy of notice that St Peter, in his first Epistle, brings out this con-
1 Pet. ii. 4, 5, 8. ception into the clearest light. 'Ye,' he writes, 'coming to the Lord, a living stone,...as living 'stones are built up a spiritual house,' of which 'the stone which the builders disallowed is made 'the head of the corner.' And St Paul yet more in detail follows out the structure of this Christian sanctuary. Reckoning up the blessings of the Gentile converts, he tells them that they are
Eph. ii. 19—22. now 'fellow-citizens of the saints...since they have 'been built upon the foundation of the apostles CHAP. III.

'and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief 'corner-stone, in whom every part of the build- 'ing, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy 'temple in the Lord; in which ye also are builded 'together for an habitation of GOD in the Spirit.' It is however to be observed that the same image which is used of the society is used also of the individuals. We are 'Christ's house,' 'GOD's build- 'ing,' 'the temple of the living GOD,' where the words are used of the many to whom or in whose person the Apostle is speaking; and on the other hand he asks, 'Know ye not that your body is' (in each separate case; or better perhaps, according to another reading, 'your bodies are') 'a temple 'of the Holy Spirit which is in you?'

Heb. iii. 6; 1 Cor. iii. 9; 2 Cor. vi. 16.

6. This figure of a Temple has several points in common with that of a Kingdom, from which it is distinguished in its essential scope. In both there is the design of the whole to which the parts are subordinated, a variety of office and position in the constituent elements, a central power on which the stability of all depends. But there is no necessary connexion between the Temple and Him Who dwells within it, such as is implied in the reciprocal duties of governor and governed. The house may be defiled or desolated, while the CHAP. III. occupant seeks some other abode; but the King is such in virtue of his special sovereignty. Briefly the Temple prefigures the Church in its outward fabric, in its splendour, in the vastness of its plan, in the variety of materials of which it is con-

1 Cor. iii. 10 ff. structed, in the consecration of all which men have to GOD by men and so through GOD by His Presence. It is the material as contrasted with the moral type of the Christian society.

7. But there is yet another image under which St Paul presents the relation of the Church to GOD. It is not only His Kingdom, and the Temple of the Holy Spirit: it is also the Body of Christ. Our Lord indicated this vital connexion between Himself and His disciples in the parable of the Vine and the branches; and after His Death and Resurrection the truth thus signified grew plainer and more prominent. It was seen that Christians had not only severally works to do, but different works: they were felt to be not branches merely, but members of Him from whom they drew their life. So it is that this idea of the Church as the body of Christ includes in itself both the idea of the Kingdom and that of the Temple. Sovereignty and organisation are implied in the Headship of Christ, and in the mutual action and dependence of the members:

external structure and multiformity and consecration, in the framework of the body, and in the variety of its parts, and in the relation of the whole to the vital Spirit by which it is informed. But it also adds much to the ideas which it thus harmonises. The connexion of life is substituted for that of government or occupancy. We live in Christ, and He in us. We grow in Him; and He is seen more and more perfectly in the society of Christians. The government of a society shews something of the character of the ruler: the fabric of a building something of our conception of him for whom we rear it; but the body reveals in part the very person of him whose it is, and is the organism by which alone his acts can be manifested or fulfilled. CHAP. III.

8. We are not perhaps justified in pressing the details of these three images in an examination of the general characteristics of the Christian Church. The images indeed are by no means always kept distinct. Language borrowed from one is used in the development of another. 'Ye '...are built up a spiritual house...ye are a chosen 'generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a 'peculiar people.' The gifts which Christ has variously distributed among men are 'for the 'building up of His body.' 'Know ye not that

1 Pet. ii. 5, 9.

Eph. iv. 12.

1 Cor. vi. 15, 19.

CHAP. III. 'your bodies are members of Christ?...Know ye 'not that your body is (or bodies are) a temple of 'the Holy Spirit which is in you?' One relation runs into the other, just as in all other cases we stand in threefold connexion with Him who created, redeemed and sanctified us. But without insisting on the minute interpretation of the figures so much at least is evident, that they mark the Church as ruled by a personal Governor, possessed of an outward organisation, inspired by an immediate divine life. What light then, it may be asked, does the Resurrection throw upon the nature of this Kingdom of God, this Temple of the Holy Spirit, this Body of Christ, for it is with this subject only that we are immediately concerned.

John xviii. 36, 37. 9. 'My Kingdom,' our Lord said, in answer to Pilate, 'is not of this world.' And yet He added presently, 'Thou sayest [rightly] that I am King. 'For this purpose have I been born, and for this 'cause have I come into the world that I may 'bear witness to the Truth. Every one who is 'of the Truth heareth my voice.' The Resurrection was the passage to the proper realm of truth —of that which really is; and in the contemplation of the Resurrection the Christian learns something of things as they are in the sight of God.

The Resurrection is a new birth: to realise it as CHAP. III. an actual fact with the consequences which it involves, is to share in it; and thus we gain the full meaning of Christ's words to the Teacher who seemed to boast of the insight into spiritual things which his training had given him: 'Verily, verily, John iii. 3. 'I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he 'cannot see the kingdom of GOD'—he will have no faculties to apprehend that which it contains. Plato, in one of his grandest myths, has repre- Plat. Phædr. p. 247. sented the progress of unembodied spirits in the train of the gods in the face of all that is. When they fall to earth, as their powers fail them in their course, their destiny is determined by the clearness and extent of the impressions which they retain. These recollections form the basis of all that men know of truth. The Christian reverses the idea. He is going to a kingdom of absolute Truth, and is not fallen from one. The Resurrection is the bridge by which the passage to the unseen is effected. Resting on that he looks out to the heavenly state of which he is a citizen: he feels the constraining force of his allegiance to a spiritual King: he apprehends something of the divine hierarchy, to a fellowship with which he is admitted, and according to whose laws he works: he sees the enemies against whom he has to contend, 'principalities, and powers, and rulers of the Eph. vi. 12.

CHAP. III. 'darkness of the world, and spiritual wickedness 'in the heavenly realm.' The order, the scene, the persons, the objects of this spiritual kingdom, answer to what we see now on earth, but no more. A new heaven and a new earth await the manifestation of Christ, even as men themselves will be transfigured by His presence (II. §§ 47, 48).

10. It is obvious that there is great danger in dwelling exclusively on this royal aspect of the Church. It is likely that in such a case either the relations and duties of men on earth will be neglected and disparaged, or conflicts and differences here will be absolutely confounded with those which are essentially spiritual. History furnishes many examples of both errors. 'The kingdom of GOD' has been the watchword equally of those who have cast aside the restraints and claims of life, and of those who have sought to mould its form by the most merciless fanaticism. And it was perhaps in part due to their vivid anticipation of Christ's Return with kingly majesty that the early Christians took so little interest in civil affairs. Yet this cannot justly be turned to their reproach; for it must be remembered that in the Roman Empire politics, as we understand the word, had no place; and Christianity, as such, has no special relation to any one form of government. In the long run it tends to certain social results, but in virtue of its universality it is capable of the highest personal development under any outward circumstances. CHAP. III.

11. But the Church is not a Kingdom only. It is a structure complex and multiform. The society as a whole is a dwelling-place of the Holy Spirit. It is reared from age to age by the accumulated efforts of all who serve GOD. Each brings that which he has of special worth and it is built into the fabric. All work is not the same work, yet all which can bear the presence of GOD is equally employed in some part or other of the spiritual 'building.' If the notion of a Kingdom suggests the essential majesty of the Church, this of a Temple brings out the human interest of its progress. So it was with the structure which suggested the image of St Paul. 'Forty and six 'years was this Temple in building,' and it carried with its foundations the memories of ten centuries. So it is with our Christian Temples which combine and hallow the thoughts and gifts of successive ages. And the spiritual reality answers to the material figure. The Church is itself the record of its history: it is a monument and a shrine. Each race, each nation, each century, nay each faithful workman, has left

1 Cor. iii. 12.

John ii. 20.

CHAP. III. some mark upon it. Time gradually harmonises parts which once seemed incongruous. Additions which were at first thought to mar the symmetry of the plan are felt at a later period to increase its richness. One Spirit hallows all, and that Spirit is a gift consequent on the Resurrection. The local withdrawal of Christ from among men in the one limited form in which they had known Him, and the transfiguration of that form 'by the 'glory of the Father,' were the conditions through which they could realise His unseen presence through the Spirit. 'It is expedient for you that 'I go away,' the Lord said to His disciples on the eve of His Departure; 'for if I go not away, the 'Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, 'I will send Him unto you.' He first wakened their souls to the perception of His new Life, and then removed all which might still seem to confine its manifestation. 'Cling not to me,' was the loving reproof to her whose eyes He had opened by a familiar word, 'for I am not yet ascended 'to my Father.' No love, however true, which sought to keep Him as He was seen on earth, could know the fulness of Christ's majesty. The Ascension was the necessary completion of His work. So only could men trust in His abiding power ever testing, and receiving and consecrating the many offerings of every generation, and using all in due measure for the service of that society in which He was pleased to dwell. CHAP. III.

John xvi. 7.

John xx. 17.

Rom. vi. 4.

12. So far we have touched upon those aspects of the Church which represent its eternal constitution and its temporal growth. The Resurrection gives force and distinctness to both. But it is more especially in the last figure of the Church, as the Body of Christ, that it finds its peculiar application. The idea which this figure expresses springs indeed properly out of the belief in a Risen Saviour. Anticipations of the idea are found in the later discourses of Christ which have been already noticed; and elsewhere He spoke of His continual presence among men in the persons of the poor and of His ministers. But these and other intimations of like kind fall far short of the full grandeur of the conception which St Paul lays open. Nor can it be without significance that the revelation is made to us through him who was resolved not to know 'a Christ according 2 Cor. v. 16. 'to the flesh,' and to whom the Lord was first manifested in the majesty of His divine glory. The Church is (if we may so speak) the visible Body of the Risen Christ: it is through this that He still works, in this that He still lives.

13. Three principal relations are included in

CHAP. III. this conception of the Church as the Body of Christ. Christians as such are essentially united together in virtue of their relation to Christ, and that irrespective of any feeling or will of their own. Next they are bound to one another by the obligation of mutual offices, the fulfilment of which is necessary for the well-being of the whole. And lastly, all alike derive their life from their Head Who is in heaven. The Body is one: it is multiform; and it is quickened by a power which is not of itself but from above. Now this element in its constitution, now that, is brought into prominence, but none can be neglected if we wish to form an adequate notion of its power and functions. For the present it will be enough to consider a little more exactly the principle of unity, and that in which the unity consists, the principle of life. The multiformity of Christendom will be noticed sufficiently while we endeavour to establish its unity.

14. Before doing this however it may be well to notice how the fundamental idea of Christianity as the basis of a society is related to the corresponding ideas of Judaism and Paganism. It has been frequently argued that modern civilisation has lost some essential element of good which ancient civilisation possessed. It has been said that we are less self-reliant than the nations of CHAP. III.

classical antiquity: less conscious of a Divine Presence than the Jews. Without pausing to inquire whether this is so in fact or not we may be contented to ask whether there is anything in Christianity itself which tends to produce such a result: whether the evil or loss if it be actual is also necessary.

15. The noblest lesson of Paganism is without doubt the revelation which it makes to us of the inherent dignity of human nature: of the powers of endurance and self-denial and faith: of the perceptions of beauty and truth: by which the soul is at all times capable of asserting its divine relationship. The work of Paganism was, we are led to believe, the complete exhibition of these natural faculties, in their strength and in their weakness. The nobility of man as man and as standing apart from GOD is that portion of its teaching by which it still appeals most forcibly to the sympathies of our own time. There is a dark side to the picture which we are apt to forget, but still there is an abiding grace and manliness in classical life as it is seen in history and literature and art. Unaffected interest in every human feeling, manysided culture, stern and indomitable will, claim our respect and awaken in us respon-

CHAP. III. sive efforts. But so far as we admire Paganism there is nothing in Christianity antagonistic to it. Paganism closed its eyes to suffering and death. Christianity takes account of the whole nature of man, of its good and its evil, and justifies in the face of the contradictions of life the instinct which affirms its dignity. It looks death face to face not as an inevitable necessity but as a final consequence of sin, and yet realises even now more than a victory. It lays bare, what each one must feel for himself, our natural infirmity, and yet ratifies the bold words of the heathen poet that 'men are 'GOD'S offspring' and sets before believers as the aim of their faith a more complete 'fellowship in 'the divine nature.' It represents life as a struggle, and yet as a struggle only to realise the blessings which are already won for man and within his reach. It claims his entire homage, but at the same time it consecrates to its own service the natural exercise of every power which he possesses, and the fulfilment of every situation in which he is placed. It looks upon the world as suffering with him, but it regards it no less as destined to share his glorious future. It differs from Paganism as a whole differs from a part. It takes up into itself and harmonises with the rest of our experience the isolated truths to which Paganism bears witness.

Acts xvii. 28.
2 Pet. i. 4.

16. This is equally true of the relation in which Christianity stands to Judaism. If Paganism is a testimony to the self-assertion and independence of man, Judaism is the confession of his dependence. In the first we contemplate man in himself: in the other man as the creature of GOD. In Paganism, at least when it reached its full development, an appeal is made to a common conscience, or to necessary laws of thought, or to history: in Judaism the binding message is 'the Word of the Lord.' In the one men obey, because they recognise the essential justice of the command or submit to a stronger force: in the other the statutes of right are not primarily based on intuitions or suggested by experience, but embodied in a Law which is absolute, not in virtue of its inherent character but as coming from JEHOVAH. The one, if we look to the principle by which it lived, is a witness to human freedom: the other to Divine sovereignty. And as the principles which they respectively embody are eternal, so are the spirit of Paganism and the spirit of Judaism. The history of Christianity is little more than the history of the approximate harmonization of the two. Now the solution turns in this direction and now in that, according as the spirit of Greece or of Rome prevails—the theology of Athanasius or of Augustine—but apostolic Christianity recog- CHAP. III.

CHAP. III. nises and hallows both elements. The coming of the Lord invests humanity, even as it is, with a more awful majesty than man could have claimed for himself; and at the same time connects the realisation of that majesty with the direct revelation of the Divine Will. Paganism proclaims the grandeur of man: Judaism the supremacy of GOD. Christianity accepts the antithesis and vindicates by the message of the Resurrection the grandeur of man in and through GOD.

17. This then is the work of Christianity, first to establish the common dignity of men as men, and to place on a sure basis all purely human virtues; and next to connect the life of men with its source and consummation and bring it into fellowship with GOD. Both these results are grounded on the historic facts of the Gospel. The unity of the Christian Society, to which potentially all men belong, depends not on any personal feeling but on a common relation in which men as belonging to the society stand to GOD. And the reality of this divine fellowship is at once the seal of the nobility of man and the pledge of the possibility of its final perfection.

1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. 18. 'As the body is one,' St Paul writes, 'and hath many members, and all the members 'of the[1] body being many are one body: so also is CHAP. III.

'Christ. For in one Spirit we all were baptized 'into (i. e. by baptism incorporated in) one body, 'whether we be Jews or Greeks, whether we be 'bond or free; and were all made to drink[2] one 'Spirit.' Here the unity is seen to spring out of a definite outward act, and the participation in a spiritual blessing consequent upon it. No other conditions are added. Yet it must be observed that according to the formula which Christ Himself enjoined, baptism includes a profession of faith, such as has been connected with it in all ages, in which the historic facts of the Lord's Life are plainly set forth. Hence in another place St Paul says more fully: 'There is one body, and one Spirit, Eph. iv. 4.
'even as ye were called in one hope of your calling: 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism.' The act once done brings with it, in virtue of Christ's work, fellowship with Him, in which lies unity. 'Know ye Rom. vi. 3, 4.
'not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus 'Christ, were baptized into His death? Therefore 'we were buried with Him by baptism into death; 'that like as Christ was raised up from the dead 'by the glory of the Father, even so we also should 'walk in newness of life.' Here the issue is viewed from the human side. It is ours to realise in action the fulness of the heavenly life of which [1] Omit one. [2] Omit into.

CHAP. III. we are made partakers. Elsewhere it is viewed in relation to GOD, and in this aspect all is accomplished once for all. 'When we were dead in 'sins [GOD] quickened us together with Christ, 'and raised us up together [with Him] and made 'us sit together in the heavenly realm in Christ 'Jesus.' (Eph. ii. 5, 6.)

19. The participation in Christ's Death and Resurrection through Baptism is then the final condition of unity: to work out the Resurrection in life the means and measure of its preservation. For unity is not uniformity. Differences of race, class, social order obviously have no influence upon it. They are of earth only. But more than this, it is consistent with serious differences in the apprehension of the common faith on which it reposes. St Paul naturally insists on the removal of the partition between Jew and Gentile by the Death of Christ, whereby He 'made of 'twain one new man.' (Eph. ii. 15.) Primarily without doubt he regarded the contrast as it was before the Gospel; but it seems equally certain that he included within the scope of Christ's reconciliation those diversities of opinion by which the Jewish and Gentile Churches were separated. (Gal. ii. 7 ff.) The Apostles of the circumcision recognised in him the apostolate of the uncircumcision; and he gladly received from them 'the right hand of fellowship.' The divergences of practice between the teachers, and of belief to a certain extent between the disciples of the two schools, were not sufficient to destroy their true unity. Love still found its expression among them in acts of charity. It was only when the attempt was made to enforce one partial system as universal that the unity of the whole was endangered. The first serious effort to establish uniformity threatened to end (as it did after the time of the Apostles) in a schism.

CHAP. III.

Gal. ii. 10.

20. It may not indeed be a mere fancy to regard the manifold appearances of the Lord after His Resurrection as prefiguring in some way the varieties which should exist in after time in His Church. The unity of His Person was not in any way impaired, and yet He shewed Himself to His disciples in different 'forms.' And it may be still that the faithful eye can see a Body of Christ where His Presence is hidden from others. For even in the one body, there are many bodies; and as the whole Church is sometimes contemplated in its completeness as distinct from Christ, though most closely bound to Him, as His bride; so also is the same true of separate Churches. 'Ye 'are a body (not the body) of Christ, and members 'in particular' St Paul says to the Church of Mark xvi. 12.

Eph. v. 27.

Apoc. xxi. 2, 9.

1 Cor. xii. 27.

CHAP. III. Corinth. The definite article destroys the force of his argument. And so again in his second 2 Cor. xi. 2. Epistle: 'I espoused you'—the congregation to which he is writing—'to one husband, that I may 'present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.' Thus the whole is not only relatively complete but it is made up of parts (so to speak) similar to itself. And this is true if we regard even the ultimate members of which it is composed. The individual Christian—a temple of the Holy Spirit as well as a living stone of a more glorious Temple—is like the special Church of which he is a member, even as this is like that Universal Church in which it discharges some special function.

21. But while the Christian, the separate Churches, and the Universal Church have severally, in some sense, a completeness in themselves, yet their real life is solely in their connexion with 1 Cor. xi. 3. Eph. v. 23. Eph. iv. 16. Col. ii. 19. Christ 'the Head of the man,' and 'the Head of 'the Church.' From Him flows that energy by which every member is enabled to discharge its function effectually and in due proportion to the harmonious working of the whole: from Him, that power of love by which the several parts are fitted and knit together: from Him, that vital force by which the multiform body 'increaseth 'with the increase of GOD.' Each phase of this divine Life is distinctly marked. 'The bread'— CHAP. III.

the heavenly manna—'which I will give,' the John vi. 51.
Lord said, 'is my flesh, for the life of the world.' John xiv. 19.
—'Because I live, ye [my disciples] shall live John xi. 25.
'also'—'I am the Resurrection and the Life.'
'Ye died,' St Paul writes to the Colossians, 'and Col. iii. 3, 4.
'your life hath been hidden with Christ in GOD;
'but when Christ is manifested, our Life, then 'shall ye also be manifested with Him in glory.'
'It is no longer I who live,' he says in another Gal. ii. 20.
place, 'but Christ liveth in me.' 'He that hath 1 John v. 12.
'the Son hath life; but he that hath not the Son 'of GOD hath not life.'

22. It is then necessary to bear two things in mind in treating of the Unity of the Church. The Unity of the whole is consistent with a wide variety of parts, each having to a certain degree a corresponding unity in itself. And next, the essential bond of union is not external but spiritual: it consists not in one organisation but in a common principle of life. Its expression lies in a personal relation to Christ and not in any outward system. Of the life of the Church part is open, part is hidden. We can see divisions, differences, limitations; but all that is eternal and infinite in it, all that controls actions which perplex us and harmonizes discords which are un-

CHAP. III. resolved to our senses, is not to be perceived on earth but is with Christ in heaven.

23. It follows necessarily from what has been said that external, visible, unity is not required for the essential unity of the Church. To recur to the example which has been already used, the congregations of Jewish and Gentile Christians were no less One in Christ, though the outward fellowship between them was imperfect or wanting: their common life lay deeper than the controversies which tended to keep them apart. Their isolation was a proof of imperfection, but not of death. What errors are deadly, it does not fall to our part to attempt to determine. It is enough to observe that differences of opinion which were once thought by many to be fatal to unity were really consistent with it. The promise of Christ does not reach to the unity of the outward fold

John x. 16. at any time. 'Other sheep,' He said, 'I have, 'which are not of this fold: them also I must 'lead, and they shall hear my voice; and there 'shall become one flock, one shepherd'—one flock in however many folds it be gathered, because it listens to the voice of the One Shepherd.

24. If the true unity of the whole Church, which is derived from the participation in the Spirit of Christ, is compatible with the existence of outward divisions on earth, it is no less compatible also with the existence of independent centres of local and partial authority in its manifold organisation. Christ Himself is the One Head; and He left no single successor to represent in outward form the relation in which He stands to the Body. For a time indeed an idea seems to have prevailed in one province of Christendom that the office of Christ (if we may so speak) and not of the Apostles only was to be perpetuated. The Jewish Bishops of Jerusalem, who were taken as long as might be from the family of the Lord, were held by many to be (even though they did not claim the title themselves) His successors. They were, according to the title claimed for them, 'bishops of bishops.' Their authority as far as can be learnt now was supposed to extend over the whole world and not to be confined to a single diocese or district. They symbolised the idea of an earthly kingdom, which was characteristic of the party who professed to maintain their opinions. It would be idle to speculate on the form which this belief might have taken if Jerusalem had not been destroyed. As it is, it is impossible not to feel that the effect of the desolation of 'the Holy City' must have CHAP. III. been to chasten and purify (as soon as they could bear the discipline) those who had hoped to mould the Christian Church after the pattern of Judaism. The conception of unity based on a historic and divine succession in the religious centre of the world was proved to be no part of the true idea of the Church. The thoughts of men were turned with a deeper faith to that 'Jerusalem which is 'above,' to which from the first St Paul had directed them.

25. These considerations tend to remove a difficulty which has been often felt in dealing with the interpretation of the New Testament. The Apostles, it is urged, looked for an immediate 'end of the world,' and the event shews that they were in error. Yet to any one who really penetrates below the surface of the first age it will be equally evident that 'the end of the world' was expected and that it really came. It is possible that the Apostles themselves, like the prophets in earlier times, did not realise the mode in which their expectations would be fulfilled: it is certain that many who heard them affixed false and chimerical interpretations to their teaching; but in the light of Christian history their written words were fully accomplished. The destruction of Jerusalem is 'the meeting of the ages,' the death of the 'old world' and the birth of the 'new world.'

The Lord 'came' when the acknowledged centre of 'the people of GOD' was desolated. A spiritual and universal Presence was substituted for a material and local Presence. The lesson of the Resurrection replaced the lesson of the Law. A fresh 'age' (æon) began its course destined itself to culminate in another 'coming' of which the first was a living figure. In a religious aspect all things were essentially become new. Christianity had first vindicated its inheritance in the past, and then in due time it asserted its independence.

26. The outward unity which was aimed at in the early Jewish Church was based upon a religious idea. The outward unity which afterwards grew up round the Roman Church sprang from political influences. The two systems are essentially distinct in their origin, though finally they can be traced in theory to the same principles. The Roman system became in the end what the Jewish system was from the first, but with one remarkable difference. The priesthood which was in both cases the visible representative and instrument of the theocracy was limited in Judaism to a distinct family succession: in Romanism the succession was spiritual and effectually disconnected from hereditary ties. In the CHAP. III. Christian Church of Jerusalem the fleshly descent from a sacred stock was observed for several generations, but there is no trace of a similar custom at Rome. The idea of spiritual supremacy seems indeed absolutely to exclude it. But it must be enough to have indicated the external contrast between systems essentially similar. This is not the place to follow out the steps of their parallel but converse development. Nor can we dwell on the marvellous process by which the Roman Church was prepared for the preservation of Christianity on the dissolution of the Empire. It would be foreign to our purpose to trace the steps by which the bishop of the imperial city received one by one the prerogatives of sovereignty, and in due time seated himself on the vacant throne of the Cæsars. It would be equally out of place to attempt any estimate of the strength which the mediæval Church thus received for the execution of the work with which it was charged. The facts are of vast significance, and occupy so large a space in the history of Christendom that they may not lightly be passed over. They formed, as we may well believe, part of the providential scheme of the historical growth of the Church. But the unity to which they led was no necessary part of the constitution of the Church. It answered to the one Empire of the first age, and not to the many kingdoms of the maturer life of Europe. CHAP. III.

It supplied a bond between the disorganised nations till the states-system into which they were formed was firmly consolidated. Under its protection the Romanic and German elements were allowed to gather strength till they were ready to fulfil their independent office. But without dwelling upon this temporal function of the external unity of the Christian society we can at least see from the fall of its prototype after the Jewish Return (I. §§ 27 f.) that the spiritual unity of the Church is independent of it. The outward unity arose from historic causes: it was broken by historic causes. No external organisation can supersede the original relation in which the Society stands to its Founder. The gift of the Holy Spirit was the outward sign of the elevation of humanity to glory at the right hand of GOD: the sharing in that gift is the life of the Church: the absolute oneness of the source from which the gift flows is the ground of essential unity in the congregations of which the Church is composed.

27. But though the principle of the unity of the Christian Church is spiritual and not necessarily connected with uniformity of constitution or even with intercommunion, it by no means follows

CHAP. III. that the outward organisation of the whole of the constituent Churches is a matter of indifference. On the contrary the direct teaching of the Resurrection points to the inherent connexion between the outward and the spiritual, the organisation and the life. The range of variation in the constitution of the Christian societies must be limited by their fitness to embody the fundamental ideas of Christianity. Of this fitness history on a large scale gives the final judgment. Whatever may be the immediate result of controversy, however false may be the issues on which it is decided, however blinding the influences by which its progress has been modified, in the end it is seen in its true light, and the final judgment which is ratified by general practice or belief is commonly the true one. In this sense history is the arbiter not of truth but of the right embodiment of truth. The early records of the Church are little more than the records of conflicts which once seemed doubtful; but in each case that which had in it the element of permanence lived on, and Catholicity stood in full strength against the broken forms of partial and erroneous teachings.

28. It is possible perhaps to extend this view of a historic development of Christianity to later ages. It seems difficult to believe that the Greek and Latin Churches include the only two great aspects of Christian truth, so that it remains for us at present only to recur to the principles on which they were built, and to strive vainly to reproduce in another period a transcript of the past. The vast advances of civilisation, the further growth of national life, the wider range of knowledge, which brings with it the recognition of the importance of special views, seem to force upon us the conviction that the various Churches of modern times fulfil under the changed conditions of society the same functions as could be discharged in earlier times by a single Church. Even in the history of Judaism something of the same kind may be noticed. In no way, as we should judge, could the possibility of variation, and still more of division be excluded with greater certainty than by the institutions of the Jewish Church, and yet in that Church outward union was soon broken, and the rupture if not expressly sanctioned was in the end implicitly accepted by the divine prophets of Israel. Israel was 'made to sin,' and yet even so while their primal sin remained they were not abandoned by GOD. The Temple—the permanent (I. § 25) symbol of unity—was hardly completed, before a large part of the nation was shut out from the use of it. The political and religious schism of which Israel was a monument CHAP. III.

CHAP. III. was not passed over without rebuke, but in spite of that a distinct spiritual work was carried on in Israel, not less blessed by outward signs than that which was simultaneously accomplished in Judah. At a later time the office which was discharged by the Jews of the Dispersion, and specially by the Alexandrine Jews, in modifying and extending their traditional faith, was still more manifestly recognised by GOD in the providential office which He allowed it to fulfil for the spread of Christianity. Here as elsewhere it appears as if the sins and wilfulness of men gave occasion to the accomplishment of the Divine plans. These indeed were not dependent on such evils for their fulfilment; but yet it seems as if GOD were pleased to use our imperfections for the complete exhibition of His will. The rebellion of Israel, the schism of Alexandria, the permanent settlement of Jews throughout the East and West which involved a violation of large parts of the Mosaic law, were in themselves evils, and had their spring in selfishness and disobedience, but none the less they served to work out a vast counsel, which, as far as we can see, could not otherwise have been perfected. Thus in the history of that earlier kingdom of GOD, which was essentially outward, we are taught by special examples not to judge everything by our own standard of unity. And at least no argument can be drawn from the circumstances CHAP. III. which attend the rise of any great movement against the importance of the part which it may have to discharge in the furtherance of the purposes of GOD.

29. But it may be said that such a view sanctions sectarianism. If we are to suppose that the form of the Christian Church in each nation will (within certain limits) embody the common peculiarities of national character, just as on a larger scale the Greek Church is Orthodox and the Latin Church Catholic, differences will still exist in the body thus formed. Each nation will include men most widely at variance in their religious tendencies. Are they then to be held blameless if they seek to attach themselves to a communion which expresses most clearly their own views? The national character is not reflected in them; and the same general principle which justifies the formation of a separate national Church may be appealed to in support of an indefinite number of subordinate associations.

30. Disregarding for the present all considerations of ecclesiastical organisation, it may be sufficient for us to answer to such a line of reason-

CHAP. III. ing that it applies equally well to all social combinations. No one will deny that there is a tendency in every nation towards the establishment of the government best suited to it. This tendency which may be latent in the mass, though really there, will be developed most strongly in those who are the true leaders of popular thought. And though various obstacles may hinder or modify the embodiment of the idea which they represent, in the end it finds an adequate expression. But even then individuals in the state will find themselves at variance with the constitution. This divergence however will not release them from the duties of loyal obedience, nor yet deprive the government of its right to be regarded as the representative of the national feelings. The state though made up of individuals has an existence of its own. The individual will exercise his full influence in preparing for further changes, but meanwhile the whole claims a sacrifice of the part. It is so also in the case of a national Church. No general principles can be laid down to justify a schism or a revolution. The future alone can decide on the sufficiency of the alleged causes from which they arose. And in many cases the issue which is sanctioned by experience may have been occasioned though not caused by selfish motives.

31. In the history of the Church no less than in the history of nations we have to deal with humanity in which sin is active already. It would be easy to shew that among perfect men every blessing would arise naturally and completely without conflict or division, which in our present state is realised through these exceptional means in pain and at best partially. But as it is, conflict and sorrow are the means by which the powers of men, material and moral, are braced and purified. The existence of distinct nations with rival interests is practically necessary for the full development of those special powers in each which holds out the surest promise of a final union of men. And so the antagonism of separate societies of Christians serves not as the best, but as the most appropriate, discipline for bringing out the manifold applications and capacities of the one Gospel. CHAP. III.

32. History has in fact sanctioned divisions in the Christian Church whatever we may think of the events which first led to them, or of the actors by whom they were made. However deeply we may deplore the loss of that outward fellowship which would, if it could have been preserved, have increased a thousandfold the power of the Church upon the world; yet it is impossible not CHAP. III. to feel that GOD has revealed His purposes and furthered His work not only in spite of, but even through the separate societies which have severally appropriated this or that part of the whole truth as the characteristic object of their devout study. And even without regarding the lessons of the past it is hard to see how the fulness of Christianity could have been manifested among men otherwise than by antagonism and conflict. Antagonism is in our present imperfect condition the preliminary to our apprehension of anything which is not itself absolutely bounded by our finite powers. Every spiritual truth can be followed out to a final antithesis; and this antithesis finds its most complete expression in societies rather than in individuals.

33. The same law which holds in all other fields of human activity, holds also in the noblest. The condition of advance in the comprehension of the whole Gospel is the special mastery through the circumstances of life of its constituent parts. Progress implies a separate development of powers. The tendency to division grows as knowledge widens. There was a time when all nature seemed to lie within the range of one mind. Deeper inquiry has shewn that each fragment includes phenomena which may occupy a lifetime. And so it is in religion. The complexity of modern society, which is in part a creation of Christianity, lays before us endless problems of right and duty, and opens countless avenues for the entrance of truth into the manifold life of men which could not have been presented if all the conditions of existence had been similar. As a necessary consequence of this, each nation, each association, each man has, in proportion to the distinctness of character, a tendency to do one thing; and the tendency to do it springs (as a general rule and upon a large scale) from the fitness for doing it. There is thus, in virtue of the universality of Christianity, a constant approximation towards the complete manifestation of its power. And when each age and race and individual has fulfilled its proper function—and so far as it fulfils it—a glorious harmony must result, which is true Catholicity. CHAP. III.

34. The recognition of some such historic development of Christianity, varying according to the wants of particular ages or races, as belonging to its present form, restores to the divided Churches a true unity. One of the earliest images under which the unity of Christendom was described was that of many streams flowing from one source. The longer the streams flow, the greater will be

CHAP. III. their divergence; but the divergence is due to progress and does not in any way destroy the original unity of the waters which pass along the various courses. But the streams will not always be divided. They start from one source and they end in one ocean. They have been united outwardly, and they will again be united. Meanwhile the fashion of their currents is moulded by the country through which they pass, and this in turn furnishes the peculiar elements which they bear down to their common resting-place to form the foundations of a world to come.

35. There is indeed much of human selfishness in the present administration and conduct of Christian societies, even as there was in their establishment and organisation. It is not argued that the divisions as we see them are not deformed by much that is unchristian. They are a witness to human imperfection; but at the same time they shew how the failings of man are overruled to the furtherance of his highest destinies. They belong to an order of things in which sin is realised and not only possible (II. §§ 23 ff.); but they are made an occasion during this brief time of trial for the salutary discipline and fruitful development of powers which cannot yet be harmoniously concentrated on one end. On the whole a fictitious unity is more destructive of vital energy than partial dismemberment, for it tends to weaken the striving after essential unity. The disruption of the visible Church was a calamity which still impedes its action, though even thus, as by the fate of Jerusalem, we are taught to look above for the source of the one life by which its parts are seen to be inspired. The petty rivalries of the day are an evil, though they are an evil which may be borne. But the line of thought which has been opened leads to a trustful and reasonable view of Christendom. It enables us to regard the progress of the Church as we regard the progress of civil society (§ 38). It encourages us to extend our sympathies beyond the limits of our own communion: to look forth without despair upon a world, in part hardly reached by the very sound of Christ's message, in part divided as to the exact meaning of it. It teaches us to watch with patience the slow and painful and wavering advance of truth through long ages, as falling in with what we observe in nature of the enormous scale and gradual progress of the accomplishment of the operations of God (I. §§ 2, 3). The example of the Jewish Church, the legible chronicle of past centuries, shews that under circumstances similar to those which exist now, though simpler and narrower, He wrought out His work and used

CHAP. III. the fruits of man's wilfulness and one-sidedness for the accomplishment of His designs. So we trust it will be now, and in confidence we can fulfil the task which we find ready to our hands, without distrusting the means placed within our reach for furthering the coming of the Kingdom of Christ.

36. Some law of development Christianity must have. The Christianity of the first age, regarded as a whole, is not the Christianity of any later age; and no view of the Church can be complete or satisfactory which does not include and explain the principle of the change. It is impossible for a Christian of to-day to date the descent of his faith from any critical epoch in modern times, and neglect ten or fifteen centuries as a mere parenthesis in the history of the Catholic Church. All the past is included in the present. The Reformation was the fruit of ages gone by no less than the germ which should spring to maturity in ages to come. There can be no suspension in the fulfilment of the divine promise, however varied may be the forms under which it is accomplished. The leaven still works in the manifold mass: the seed advances stage by stage towards its ripe perfection: the tree grows under every change of season and climate, and offers shelter to all who repose beneath its branches. Each image under which we are taught to contemplate the function of the Church presents at once an element of permanence and an element of change. There is the essential life by which the whole body is quickened, absolutely one and immutable, and the organisation which the vital force moulds and by which it reveals itself, which is mutable and fashioned out of elements earthly and transitory. But even so the continuity of the organisation is necessary for the preservation of the complex life. CHAP. III.

37. The principle of life is one and immutable. In this there is no development. The faith which is written in the facts of the Gospel, and the immediate apostolic interpretation of them, admit of no necessary and authoritative additions. A dogmatic development of Christianity, in the sense of an increase of the fundamental doctrines of the faith, is foreign to the whole spirit of the apostolic writings, and is itself inconceivable without a new revelation. Such a development would only take place by the addition of new dogmas in virtue of the direct action of an adequate power, or by deductions from existing dogmas. But both methods are excluded by the nature of the case. Christianity rests essentially on facts. Its ele-

CHAP. III. mentary doctrines are presented to us in the shape of facts; and thus, even if any central power existed with absolute dogmatic power, new facts would be required for the basis of new doctrines, for the Apostles declare with unmistakeable distinctness the full significance of the Incarnation and the Mission of the Holy Spirit. And again, the truths which answer to the facts of the Gospel belong in themselves to a higher form of existence, and cannot be brought within the domain of our powers of reasoning. Every process which we pursue involves necessarily at each step limitations (as, for example, of time and space) to which the Divine Being is not subject. Every conclusion, therefore, which we form, so far as it is presented as an absolute truth, must have in it an element of error. Indeed, on reflection, it cannot but seem infinitely presumptuous that we should venture to speculate on that of which, even in its simplest form, we can give no positive conception. Nor is there any characteristic by which the apostolic writings are more clearly distinguished from the greatest writings of masters of theology than the absence in them of secondary deductions from the principles which they enforce. In this respect they differ equally from the metaphysical and speculative theology of the East, and from the moral and legal theology of the West.

They contain a record of facts, and an immediate application of the facts, but no more: life and not thought is the object to which they primarily minister, and so they minister (as no other writings ever could do) to thought through life. They set forth with simple distinctness that a fact or truth is, but not how it is or why it is. What there is more than this in later speculations, however beautiful and however precious it may be, is wholly different in kind. From the first the difference has been instinctively felt. The records of the most critical struggle for the truth in the history of the Church shew how widespread was the unwillingness to introduce into the historic creed of Catholic Christendom a single word which was not found in the Scriptures though it was the necessary exponent of their teaching in opposition to error: the language of the noblest champion of orthodoxy shews how far he was willing to dispense with the acceptance of a word when the fact which it imperfectly expressed was admitted.

38. But while the principle of life, the record of the facts of the Gospel, remains the same, the form in which it is embodied may change. Thus we naturally turn to history as shewing the conditions and ruling the mode of the development of Christianity. Here we can see on a large

CHAP. III. scale how the same truths are apprehended by different races, how they are embodied under different circumstances and according to different modes of thought, how they conquer, and array themselves in the spoils of the conquered. No one would deny that in successive ages special aspects or parts of Truth are brought out. The general outline of the history, including both the history of dogma and the history of practice, has a necessary connexion with that of civil and intellectual history. The one is, so to speak, a function of the other. And it follows that as we can trace in the general condition of man a constant advance towards a true fulfilment of the capabilities of his nature, so we may hope for a corresponding progress in the Church, towards that ideal which is held before us in Scripture as its proper consummation. Advance in the first case is not only consistent with wars, revolutions, isolated action, but (as far as we can judge) is even dependent on these which we are tempted to call hindrances in its way. And it may be so with Christianity. The divisions and rivalries and heresies and schisms by which the Church is torn may be means towards the fulfilment of its office. As we look back we can scarcely doubt that it is so. The storm no less than the sunshine is needed that the rainbow, the visible token of God's covenant with man, may be seen upon the cloud.

39. It is indeed impossible to regard the Church as a body without recognising the necessity of a constant change in its organisation. Growth itself is change; and in proportion as the life of the body is complex we may expect the forms in which it is clothed to be varied. There are times when the individual is forgotten in the society, and conversely when the society is forgotten in the individual. In the apostolic view of the future of Christianity there is a distinct recognition of a progressive work in both. The life of the Church is continuous even as the life of the man; but with this difference (as we have seen, § 20), that this life is manifested not in one outward embodiment, but in many, which are severally similar to the whole which they combine to form.

40. It is no part of our task to attempt to follow out in detail the various phases of the life of the Christian Churches. But it would not be difficult to shew that institutions or dogmas have wrought a most important work for the cause of Christ in one age, which in another have been converted into obstacles to the full apprehension

CHAP. III. of the Truth. There is always a great danger that that which has been found of critical use at one time will be pronounced necessary for all time. Mistaken gratitude changes the outward means of deliverance into an idol. The organisation through which the spirit once worked is reckoned holy, even when the spirit has left it. And thus that which once was a development of life becomes a corruption, not because it has (in every case) changed in itself, but because it stands in a different relation to the whole. The work of the mediæval Church (for example) required modes of operation which could not be retained now without a faithless neglect of the lesson which God has taught us in the last four centuries. The same phenomenon meets us at every step in the economy of individual life. The seed from which rises the fruit-bearing tree, to which the visible society of Christendom is likened, gives birth to a thousand successive organisations, from the seed-leaf to the flower, which fall away when their peculiar office is fulfilled. They perish, but their work remains, and remains because they perish.

41. This consideration brings with it the answer to a general objection which may be urged against the belief in a divine historical development of Christianity. It may be said that the development is due to the imperfection of man: that so far from carrying forward the perception of the Truth, he lowers the truth to his own level and confines it in a form borrowed from his own weakness. The objection is true if it be directed to any particular point of the development. The Truth itself is infinite, and it is simply because the powers of man are imperfect and finite that any development is necessary. He can only realise step by step, and by successive efforts, what is indeed from the beginning[1]. According to the position in which he finds himself, he takes now this, now that fragment of the whole, because it meets his wants. Every embodiment of the Truth must be wrought out in this way. And the nearest approximation which we can form to the complete truth is by the combination of the partial realisations of it which history records. The imperfection of each stage of the development is then only perilous when an attempt is made to transfer the forms of thought or practice of a particular period to another, without any regard to their bearing upon the whole life of the time. The interpretation of Ecclesiastical history, like the interpretation of Scripture, is based upon a proportion. Neither admits a rigid literalism. The [1] Augustine's enforcement of this truth in one of his most pregnant passages is full of interest: Enarr. in Psalm. xliv. 5.

CHAP. III. training of the child and of the man will be different, if both are according to the same law; but the man may learn still (if he reads them rightly) from the lessons of the child.

42. It is not denied that there will be a tendency in man not only to seize that element in the Truth which he himself needs, but also to exaggerate its importance, to array it in fancies of his own, to transmit his embodiment of it as an inviolable heritage to all who shall come after. If it were not so, superstition would have no vitality. But while we look to history for the record of the continuous growth of the Church, we carry the Holy Scriptures with us, as the test whereby to try the essential value of each development. The history of the Old Covenant is enacted afresh in the history of the New. The fulness of the apostolic writings has not yet been exhausted in the life of eighteen centuries. The providence of GOD is at every stage interpreted by His Word. The spirit of the Resurrection tries and transfigures each transitory embodiment of Truth.

43. The same test which is applied to the past history of the Church, can be applied to the present. The vast complexity of modern life, the various degrees of national culture, the broad CHAP. III. differences between class and class in the same nation, set before us simultaneously, so to speak, distinct periods of the simpler life of the ancient world. We live (and the statement is not a mere figure) in the presence of many ages. We cannot be surprised then if we see around us many Christian societies distinct, and subserving in virtue of their distinctness to distinct types of thought and feeling. Differences which once were found in the same external body are now seen embodied in separate societies. We lose something by the change, but the gain must not be neglected. We are led to look for the spiritual basis of unity instead of reposing in the fact of formal unity. And more than this. The full development of each part is best secured by independent action. Division (if we regard the imperfection of our nature) appears to be the preliminary of that noblest catholicity, which will issue from the separate Eph.iv.16. fulfilment by each part in due measure of its proper function towards the whole. Thus the material unity of Judaism is transformed into the moral unity of the Apocalypse. The unity which was at first spontaneous becomes at last conscious, tested in all its elements and made perfect by conflict.

CHAP. III. 44. It has been urged against this view which leads directly to the recognition of national Churches as a providential mean towards the complete exhibition of Christianity, that national Churches are 'contradictory to the nature of a religious body' and 'opposed to the genius of Christianity.' If Christianity were of this world only, a simple organisation for social and political discipline, the objections would be true. But they fail because the Church is a religious body, partially manifested on earth but drawing its life from an unseen source, and one because that source of its life is One. In this respect the idea of the Church may be compared with the idea of humanity with which it is potentially commensurate. The existence of separate and conflicting nations is not destructive of the moral unity of the whole body of mankind, but rather on a large view is seen to minister to its external realisation in the long succession of ages. And so with the Church, though in this case the unseen principle of unity is far more easily apprehended, the distinct embodiments of partial sections of it tend to bring about in the end that complete development which will answer to the fulness of its divine life. The separate Churches thus become as individual members in the larger body, and, like single men themselves, contribute by the most distinct preservation of their individuality to the perfection CHAP. III. of the whole. In the light of the Resurrection all the powers of man in their most free combinations are capable of transfiguration.

45. But it will be obvious that this division of Churches, like the division of nations, is only a transitional phase in the whole history of humanity (comp. § 26). It belongs not to the early but to the later stage of its development. Nay rather if the history of the ancient people of GOD may be taken as a type of the progress of the new 'world' it appears to be the latest stage in the evolution of 'the present age' and to precede a more immediate revelation of the Divine Presence. However this may be, the faint recognition of national Churches is not a mere 'resource in the face of 'overwhelming difficulties,' but a testimony to the power of Christianity to find for itself new organisations to meet new phases of society. Meanwhile we can be content to find in this diversity of operations scope for the most devoted energy and the firmest faith. It has been nobly said that 'nations redeem each other.' One supplies that which another lacks in moral character and purpose; and the existence of a deficiency in one place is not unfrequently the stimulus and the occasion for the display of the corresponding virtue

CHAP. III. in another. At least it is evident that we cannot understand how with our present powers the full grandeur of humanity could be exhibited or developed except by the coexistence of many peoples distinct and even antagonistic. And that which is true of humanity in a political or social aspect is true of it also in a religious aspect. Separate organisations appear to be as necessary for the complete manifestation of the many sides of Christian truth in relation to man, as they are confessedly for the manifestation of national life. But we do not rest in the contemplation of a divided humanity or of a divided Church. Under the varieties of race and character there exist tokens of an essential union which may yet be realised and towards which the current of events is ever turned. There are indications, faint it may be and often baffling, of a common life grander than the life of men and the life of nations, which is struggling to assert its sovereignty. And in the Church there is yet more than this, the certainty of the presence of a Holy Spirit who 'is able to 'subdue all things unto Himself.' But whether we look to nations or Churches, it is needful that we should pause before we claim to exercise the prerogatives of a knowledge which belongs to a higher sphere. As citizens and Christians we stand in varied relations to a universe of which we can see but the least part. This world is not all; CHAP. III.

and if we look confidently for a unity of the whole, we dare not attempt to construct it in imagination upon the little field which is open to us.

46. The forms which present divisions assume are, it is admitted, and must remain causes for the deepest sorrow. Nothing can be more grievous than the partial wilfulness with which Christian men and Christian societies exalt from time to time with an idolatrous devotion special fragments of truth, which tend to lose their essential character by being isolated. But such reflections as have been suggested, while they leave the special evils of a divided Christendom just as they are, yet enable the devout mind to regard them without despair: nay more to regard them, as it would regard the disorders of the physical world, with quiet confidence and faith. We cannot yet see how the whirlwind or the earthquake falls in with an infinitely benevolent system of nature; but we do not doubt that it does do so. In looking on human life we have even better grounds for faith. There we can see faint beginnings of a final harmony, converging tendencies towards a divine order, which will embrace all the varieties of thought and life in their richest fulness. When we see what the belief in Christ

CHAP. III. and the power of His Resurrection has done, how it has interpreted and made its own this and that instinctive feeling, how it has found an embodiment, natural if not complete, under every variety of external circumstances, how it includes in itself a principle of unity capable of combining whatever there is in these of permanent value, we can look out upon the conflict of sects without distrust, and look forward to that golden age to which and not from which the history of the Church advances.

47. Nothing is more paralysing than a sense of isolation: nothing is more cheering than a consciousness of fellowship in the combined action of a great nation or of a great society. Christendom is weak not only because it is divided but chiefly because each section is enfeebled by a sense of the littleness of its power as it measures the triumphs of Christianity by its own peculiar standard. Our strength will be indefinitely increased if we believe that GOD works not only through us or in our way and according to our notions, but uses us according to the measure of our capacities, and others with us in the accomplishment of the design of His Love. Every energy will be turned to its proper work as our thoughts rest on the glory of the Risen Saviour.

48. Wherever we look the first question CHAP. III. which arises is ever: To what purpose is this waste? On all sides we see a prodigal wealth of powers which to us appear to pass away without effect, of germs of life which never fulfil what we think to be their proper destiny, of beauty which gladdens no human eye. In the moral world the same mystery recurs. One man out of many, one family of many, one nation of many, one world of many (if our thoughts dare wander so far), are centres of blessings of which all are equally capable of sharing, and we cannot trace the law by which their influence gradually reaches to the furthest limits of being, while we see multitudes perish unconscious of their common heritage. All nature teaches the same lesson. 'We know in part.' It is enough. If Christ be risen, in that fact lies the pledge of 'the restitution of all things' towards Acts iii. 21. which men are encouraged to work.

APPENDIX I.

ASPECTS OF POSITIVISM IN RELATION TO CHRISTIANITY[1].

ὃ οὖν ἀγνοοῦντες εὐσεβεῖτε τοῦτο ἐγὼ καταγγέλλω ὑμῖν.
Acts xvii. 23.

Catéchisme Positiviste, ou Sommaire Exposition de la Religion Universelle. Par AUGUSTE COMTE. Paris. 1852.

Système de Politique Positive, ou Traité de Sociologie Instituant la Religion de l'Humanité. Par AUGUSTE COMTE. Paris. 1851—1854.

I.

NO religion can fail to be a fruitful subject of study: even the rudest reveals something of the natural feelings and wants of man which are awakened by the experience of life. And exactly as we believe Christianity to be the Truth, we shall confidently expect to find in it all that is true in the manifold expressions of human thought. Thus it has happened not unfrequently that independent speculations or instinctive aspirations have brought out elements in the Gospel which had been before overlooked or set

[1] This Essay originally appeared in the Contemporary Review.

APPENDIX I. aside. They were there, and even actively at work, but they were not consciously apprehended. And so it seems to be now. The religion of Positivism is offered as the final result of a profound analysis of society and man, and its unquestionable attractiveness to pure and vigorous minds indicates that it does meet with some peculiar force present phases of thought. Are there not then lessons which we may learn from it?

While I endeavour to answer this question, I shall be content to take Comte's own conclusions, without discussing the processes by which he obtains them. The strength of the Positivist philosophy lies in its method; the strength of the Positivist religion lies in its conception: and the Positivist alone is concerned with reconciling the two. That which is at best only a hypothesis for the Positivist may prove to be a reality for the Christian; and while I set aside the physiological basis of the Positive religion, it need scarcely be said that I do not propose to deal with the principles of Positivism as furnishing a method of philosophy. I desire simply to explain what Comte lays down as the essential bases of religion, from an exclusively human point of view, and to consider whether his exposition throws any light upon neglected aspects of Christianity.

But though this is not the place to discuss the philosophic aspect of Positivism, one remark is unavoidable. It seems to be generally assumed that there is some fundamental antagonism between the Positive method and Christianity. Nothing, I believe, can be more false. I should even venture to maintain that the spirit of Positivism is more in harmony with a historic religion than that of any other system of philosophy. It knows nothing of causes, and consequently decides nothing prior to observation. It refuses to recognise absolute laws, and consequently is always ready to take account of new facts. As against a metaphysical theism the arguments of Positivists may perhaps avail; but they are inherently powerless against a faith which is based, not on subjective theories, but on outward events, of which all personal experience and all social development furnish the adequate and only conceivable verification.

This being so, it is evident that a Positivist in philosophy may be a Christian in religion; and the religion constructed on Positivism may, as far as it goes, illustrate or confirm the doctrine and constitution in which the Church has embodied the facts of the Gospel. How far this is so is the subject with which we have now to deal. And with this problem before us, it would be superfluous to criticise the errors and misrepresentations—to use no harsher terms—with which Comte's religious writings are disfigured. He puts them forward so boldly and so frequently, that no one moderately conversant with Christianity can be misled by them[1]. It is equally unnecessary to exhibit his weaknesses. Others, who have dwelt on these with more than necessary detail, have paid the penalty of becoming blind to what there is really [1] Something has been said in a former paper on Comte's fundamental misconception of the idea of Christianity, Contemporary Review, VI. pp. 417 ff.

APPENDIX I. noble and just in his teaching. And it is with this that we are concerned. A system is formidable, not by what there is false in it, but by what there is true in it. If then it can be shewn that Christianity assures what Positivism promises—if it can be shewn that it includes in a fact what Positivism symbolises in a conception—if it can be shewn that it carries on to the unseen and eternal the ideas which Positivism limits to the seen and temporal—we may be sure that Positivism will have no lasting religious power, except as a transitional preparation for a fuller faith. Comte will be one more in the long line of witnesses who shew that the soul is naturally Christian[1].

II.

To some however it must seem strange to speak of any system as a religion which does not recognise the action of a Personal God. For us indeed the idea of religion is so naturally connected with that of theology, that it requires a serious effort to separate the two. APPENDIX I.

[1] In this unconscious prophecy of faith, Comte offers a singular parallel to the great poet of the Roman Republic. Both were bitterly hostile to the established faith of their countries. Both sought to lay in the study of nature the firm basis of human life and hope. Both were profoundly impressed with the sense of the unity of the world. But, in spite of the similarity of the moral position of the two teachers, we feel that they are separated by more than eighteen Christian centuries. Lucretius sought in the explanation of the origin of things that confidence which Comte looks for in the observation of their being. The one feels his way towards the intellectual conception of a harmony of nature; the other, towards the moral law of the discipline of life. Both, as it seems, were heralds of a crisis of thought. To both the Resurrection is the complete fulfilment of aspiration and teaching.

A perfect religion must indeed take account of three elements—the individual, the world, and GOD; but an imperfect religion can exist, if the individual recognises without him an infinite power, contemplated as personal, and such as to claim the complete devotion of the worshipper. The Great Being of Comte—the sum of all humanity, past present and future—practically satisfies the condition of infinity; and it satisfies the condition of personality by the concession which is made to each worshipper to represent it to himself under some definite historical or imaginary type. In fact, we may be driven to ask ourselves whether the Being which some Christians worship is less truly an abstraction than the idealised humanity of the Positivists.

But while we must never leave out of sight, in dealing with the Religion of Positivism, the fundamental defect which mars its completeness, it is necessary to remember that this is not the only form in which a religion can be founded upon a dualism, though it is that most repugnant to our instincts. Dr Newman, in a striking passage of his 'Apologia[1],' has sketched the permanent influence of evangelical teaching upon him, which consisted in 'confirming 'me,' he says, 'in my mistrust of the reality of 'material phenomena and making me rest in the 'thought of two, and two only, supreme and luminously 'self-evident beings—myself and my Creator.' Thus, as Comte leaves out the Deity from his elementary conceptions, another school leaves out the world. A little reflection will shew that a system based upon either dualism is irreparably though not equally imperfect. The one passes into Secularism, the other into Mysticism; while the fulness of Truth springs from the co-ordination of both.

[1] P. 59. It is however difficult to judge whether Dr Newman himself holds this to be the final analysis of the elements of religion.

APPENDIX I.

There can be no doubt that the quotation from Dr Newman expresses the popular view of the constituent elements of religion, though this personal antithesis is more truly characteristic of Protestantism than of Roman Catholicism. It is therefore easy to see in which direction the study of the Positive religion is likely to be fruitful to us. By dwelling on the relations of man to humanity and to the world, Comte has again vindicated for religion its social destination. Since the Reformation, the general tendency of religious influences has been to individualism; and thus a bold and exclusive enunciation of the complementary aspect cannot but contribute to the restoration of the true harmony between personal and social religion which Christianity, as we believe, alone contains.

III.

Having thus indicated the one vast lacuna in Comte's theory of religion, and the manner in which his system is likely to supplement other popular theories, we may proceed to trace the outlines of it as he has drawn them. 'Religion is,' he says, 'the 'complete harmony proper to human existence, indi-

APPENDIX I.

'vidual and collective, when all its parts are brought 'into due relation to one another[1].' It is for the soul, in other words, what health is for the body[2]; and as health is essentially one, though in all cases variously and imperfectly realised, so too religion is essentially one, though it is attained in various forms and in different degrees. Even to the last, it is an ideal to which each specific type is an approximation[3].

The object of religion, corresponding to this definition, is set forth as twofold. It is destined at once to discipline (régler) the individual, and to unite (rallier) the separate individuals in a harmonious whole. It aims at personal unity and social unity[4]. And the same influences which tend to correct the selfish instincts of each man, tend at the same time to bring all men into a true and lasting concord[5].

And as the aim of religion is twofold, so also is its base. It reposes on an objective and on a subjective foundation[6]. Without, there is the external order, in itself independent of us, which necessarily limits our thoughts and actions and feelings. Within, there is a principle of benevolent sympathy, which

[1] Politique Positive, II. 8. Compare Catéchisme, p. 2. '[Religion] indique l'état de complète unité qui distingue notre 'existence, à la fois personnelle et sociale, quand toutes ses 'parties, tant morales que physiques, convergent habituelle-'ment vers une destination commune.'

Thus Comte adopts the derivation from religare, and not from relegere, which Augustine also defends: De Vera Religione, 55; Retract. 13 (the whole of this revision is full of interest).

[2] Pol. Pos. l. c. [3] Pol. Pos. l. c. Cat. 3.

[4] Pol. Pos. II. 66. Cat. l. c.

[5] Pol. Pos. II. 10. [6] Pol. Pos. II. 12, 17, 25. Cat. 28.

APPENDIX I. prompts us to look beyond our own wants and wishes, and to seek in a wider harmony the satisfaction of the deepest instincts of our nature.

The same dualism is extended also to the composition of religion. It has an intellectual part and a moral part. The former includes the adequate conception of the general laws of physics, of life, of society, to which our feelings and our actions are subordinated. The latter, under the shape of discipline, regulates our conduct at once public and private, and, under the shape of worship, guides and intensifies our feelings. Briefly, the sphere of doctrine is thought, and its end is the True; the sphere of discipline is action, and its end is the Good; the sphere of worship is feeling, and its end is the Beautiful. And, as a whole, religion teaches us to know, to serve, and to love the great Being, in whom all that falls within the range of our power is summed up[1].

IV.

In this view of the character and scope of religion, which no one can deny to be grand and comprehensive, even while it lacks the Christian elements of infinity and personality which we necessarily crave, one point is of commanding importance. Religion, Comte tells us, is the bringing into harmony the order without us and the spirit within us; the last and perfect combination of faith and love[2]. This conception is the true key to his whole system. Our chief work, therefore, is to learn the character of the bases on which these final principles respectively repose. APPENDIX I.

[1] Pol. Pos. II. 19 ff. [2] Pol. Pos. II. 16.

On the one side then we have a vast external order, of which a fuller knowledge is gradually unfolded in the long course of ages, whereby we apprehend it as within certain limits at once fixed and variable. Step by step we are forced to contemplate the phenomena which it presents as falling into groups, and connected with one another by certain relations of sequence. The laws of observation which we thus form are extended gradually from physics to life, and from life to history, till we feel that not only are the ages permeated by 'an increasing pur-'pose,' but that all being also is united by one principle. The efforts of Reason—and the juxtaposition is important—naturally culminate in the nobler efforts of Faith[1].

This order is apprehended, as has been said, as being both fixed and variable; and in both respects it affects us beneficently. The fixity furnishes a solid basis for our thoughts and actions, and, by making foresight generally possible, saves us from idle speculation and from misdirected energy. At the same time it sets an impassable limit to personal caprice, and, by basing all life upon submission, prepares men for sympathetic effort as united in obedience to a

[1] Pol. Pos. II. 25 ff. p. 17. 'L'état religieux repose donc 'sur la combinaison permanente de deux conditions également 'fondamentales, aimer et croire, qui, quoique profondément 'distinctes, doivent naturellement concourir. Chacune d'elles, 'outre sa nécessité propre, ajoute à l'autre un complément 'indispensable à sa pleine efficacité.'

APPENDIX I. common supremacy[1]. Its variability, on the other hand, is the pledge of progress. It stimulates speculation by suggesting a series of problems of surpassing interest. It guides activity by opening fields for labour, and substituting fruitful obedience for passive resignation. It represses at once asceticism and mysticism by offering its greatest blessings not to personal, but to social labour[2].

Such according to Comte is the objective base of religion. On the other side, it is observed that there is an internal tendency in man, springing from benevolent affections, which carries him beyond himself in the search after his proper happiness and dignity[3]. Just as the laws of the external world are only slowly and partially made known, so this inner life is brought out by the gradual evolution of society. The love of the Family passes into the love of the State; and the love of the State rises into the all-embracing love of Humanity.

This tendency also, like the external order, is at once fixed and variable. In some shape or other, it will make itself felt in every man. It may be dwarfed and neutralised by atrophy, or strengthened and ennobled by exercise. But in its normal development Love spontaneously apprehends by moral intuition what Faith systematically constructs by intellectual processes; and at the last both coincide in their complete fulfilment. Faith sees the harmony of all things, which Love feels.

[1] Pol. Pos. II. 28 ff. [2] Pol. Pos. II. 37 ff. Cat. 16, 41.
[3] Pol. Pos. II. 14.

Nor may we forget that while the ultimate objective and subjective bases of religion are thus broadly distinguished, there is yet always a human element in our conception of the Cosmos, and a cosmical element in our feelings as men. The unity of the world is subjective[1]. The laws of phenomena are gained by the abstraction of the constant part from the variable. And conversely, the development of love is objective. It gains strength only as it is manifested according to the conditions of our existence. Man indeed is himself, according to the wise instinct of old philosophers, a microcosm, including in his own person the action of all the laws which we observe without us, and supplementing them by that higher law of love whereby he alone is capable of religion[2]. APPENDIX I.

According to this exposition, it is evident that religion is built upon knowledge, and the Positivist system of doctrine is simply the outline of the hierarchy of the sciences, which are severally subordinated one to another, and each regulated by its peculiar laws. In due succession the believer or the student—for the words become synonymous—learns to appreciate the universal laws of number, time, and space, by which all our definite conceptions are ruled; next he passes to those of physics, which are more complicated and less general; then to those of chemistry, which brings him to the verge of life. The investigation of the laws of life leads to that of the [1] Pol. Pos. II. 32 f. Cat. 36, 77.

[2] Cat. 95, 122.

APPENDIX I. laws of society; and the last and crowning science in this scheme is that of morals[1].

Such an encyclopædic review of the great departments of knowledge reveals two important principles. Each science is based upon those which precede it in the scale, so that in every case the nobler phenomena are subordinated to the lower. And, secondly, each science, as it increases in complexity, admits also of greater variations[2]. To these principles two corollaries may be added. First, that each series of laws produces its full effect in every instance, though the result may be modified by the action of new forces acting according to new laws. And, again, that the power of foresight, which measures the definiteness of the law, varies from absolute certainty in the case of combinations of number, and the like, to indefinite doubt when we speculate on the isolated action of individuals.

V.

One important conclusion follows from this mode of viewing the relations of religion and science, which has been commonly lost sight of by physicists no less than by theologians. If it be true, and it seems to be incontestable as far as it goes, a conflict between religion and science is impossible. Not only are the two subjects heterogeneous, but the results of science—

[1] The connexion of the sciences is clearly given, Pol. Pos. II. 58 ff. The most complete examination of their distribution and relations is in Pol. Pos. IV. 187 ff.

[2] Cat. 50, 70, 73. Thus many phenomena will never be brought under definite laws.—Cat. 52.

whether physical or human—are part of the data which it is the function of religion to co-ordinate.

Moreover, if we complete the great hierarchy of the sciences by the addition of theology above morals, it is obvious that the same principles will hold good. The new science, so far as it deals with facts, will never be independent of the action of the forces revealed by the lower sciences; but it is not itself shaped by them. In dealing with it, we shall have to take account of new forces manifested under new laws, which may modify in a manner wholly inconceivable before experience the laws and forces of the lower sciences; but theology is no more therefore inconsistent with them than the science of chemistry, for instance, is with the science of life. It is impossible to anticipate from the observation of an inferior science what will be the phenomena of another above it; and, conversely, the phenomena of every superior science will be subject to the laws of those below it, though they are not explicable by those alone. A problem in biology cannot be solved by the application of chemical laws, though these must be considered in dealing with it; and so also a question in morals cannot be dealt with solely by laws of life, or a question of theology by laws of ethics; though, in both cases, the subordinate laws underlie the final result.

Thus the Positive view of the dependence of religion on science errs by defect, and not in principle. It requires to be supplemented, and not overthrown. And when the whole cycle of human thought and experience, of consciousness as well as of obser-

APPENDIX I. vation, is brought within the range of scientific study, we are first capable of perceiving the full grandeur of the idea of religion. Its destiny is not only to discipline (régler) and to unite (rallier), but still more to reunite (rélier). It is the final harmony of man, the microcosm, not with the world alone, but with God.

It is of no moment in this respect what view we may take of nature (natura, werden). Every fact in science furnishes new material for religion, and at once enlarges its scope and tends to define its character. But, that it may do so, no fact must be looked at by itself. At present, science suffers at least as much as religion from partial and contracted views. The student of physics perpetrates as many solecisms as the student of theology. Every one would feel the absurdity of a geometrician denying a fact in morals because it is not deducible from his premisses; and yet it is not a rare thing to hear some explorer of inorganic nature gravely argue that nothing can be known of God, because his inquiries give no direct results as to His being or His attributes. Thus each partial observer of ethics, or history, or nature, is tempted to forget that there are other phenomena than those with which he deals, and so to use his fragmentary laws as measures of the universe. The degradation of science is the inevitable consequence. But when all observed facts are placed in their proper categories, whether they be facts in physics, or biology, or social science, or ethics, or theology, they will, as we believe, teach us something more of the will of God, which is made manifest to us, according to the nature of the subject-matter, in the several orders of being with which each of these departments of knowledge is respectively conversant.

We claim then, by our Christian faith, that the sphere of religion be recognised as co-extensive with the utmost bounds of human thought and knowledge, while at the same time it is dominated by a moral purpose which springs from sympathy or love. The personal object of religion—the reconciliation of man to GOD—is not likely ever to be absent from our minds; but there is at all times a tendency to omit, at least in popular exposition, this complementary view of the harmonization of man with humanity and nature. Scepticism at once occupies the ground which is abandoned. And in this lies one of the great lessons of Positivism, that by asserting religion to be the complete harmony of man and the Cosmos, it has forced again upon our notice aspects of Christian truth which have been more or less hidden since the teaching of the greatest Greek fathers was superseded in the West by the necessarily narrower system of Latin theology. Some conception of the great order at present we must have[1]; and if our religion is, as we believe, the highest expression which can be given to faith and love, it will embrace this also. We shall rise beyond the individual standing-point to some one higher and more commanding; and while we retain firmly our original sense of the inestimable worth of the individual soul, we shall feel also that each is part of a sublimer whole, extending through all time and space, and bound by sensible and indissoluble links to the sum of all being.

[1] Cat. 26.

VI.

It is not difficult to characterise the ideas which are brought into prominence by this extension of the religious field of life. The Positivist suggests the ideas of continuity, solidarity, and totality; the Christian, going yet further, adds the idea of infinity; and without the distinct recognition of these four ideas, it seems to be impossible to represent adequately the message of Christianity, as a historical and sacramental religion, to our own age.

A very little reflection will shew the profound influence which continuity exercises upon life. When it is once apprehended, no religion which claims to be universal can neglect it. Materially, intellectually, and morally, we are the children of the past, destined in turn to give birth to a new race which will inherit all that we possess. Whatever view we may take of the originative power of the individual, and we claim necessarily that the personal will shall be admitted to be an independent force, it is evident that the accumulations of wealth of every form which furnish the instruments of our action, the treasures of language which control the general tenour of our thoughts, the forms and habits of social and national intercourse which stimulate and guide our feelings, are incomparably stronger than any individual power which can be brought to bear upon them. If it were not so, in place of society we should have chaos. And all these are in their source and growth independent of us. We can watch how, in old times, the various results of labour and reflection and conflict were gathered up and perpetuated in abiding shapes; but we have no choice but to receive them. It is our privilege to modify, but not to begin. More and more as the ages go on, in Comte's striking phrase, we who live are ruled by the dead, though it is our prerogative to serve them with a free and willing service, and in our turn, when our work is done, to be joined with them in the sovereignty of the future[1].

Two important conclusions flow from this law of our earthly existence. The first is, to borrow again Comte's own phrase, that progress is the development of order[2]; and the second, that the thoughts or institutions of the past can be applied to the present only by a method of proportion.

As to the first, it is of no moment whether, like the Positivist, we regard the phenomena of society simply in themselves, without referring them to any higher cause, or whether we see in them (as we do) the manifestation of the will of God. No one looking back over the past can fail to detect a general advance of humanity, as a whole, in certain definite directions corresponding to what we observe in the fuller development of the man. The progress, on a large scale, exhibits the harmonious elevation of our whole complex being, even though periods of devastation and fiery trial are needed for the preparation of the future growth.

The second consequence, though it is really more obvious, is more commonly overlooked. Any expression of popular judgment, whether it be made by [1] Pol. Pos. II. 61. Cat. 32. The question of hereditary character deserves more attention from moralists than it has received. Cf. Cat. 102. [2] Cat. 108.

APPENDIX I. word or by act, is necessarily relative to the time and circumstances under which it is made. As circumstances change, it does not by any means follow that the changes in the acceptation of words or in the significance of acts will be made in the same direction, so that the relation between them will remain fixed. And therefore, if we would gain for ourselves the blessings which we can refer in past ages to certain institutions or formulas, it can only be by realising the relation in which they stood to the whole constitution of society then, and finding their proportional representatives now. To transfer a form of one age unaltered into another is in most cases to be faithless to that very principle of continuity by which we claim to be children of the first century, or the fourth, or the ninth, or the thirteenth. We are the children of the men who lived then; we cannot be the men themselves.

The doctrine of solidarity is not less fruitful of thought than that of continuity. It presents to us (if such an illustration is allowable) in a horizontal section a similar succession of varieties of society to that which we have considered before in a vertical section. Or, to take another mode of expression, it presents in the extension of space what continuity regards in the extension of time. In a family, or a city, or a nation, we can readily apprehend how the co-existing members are bound together so as to form a whole, of which each part is really, though remotely, united to the others by material and moral actions and reactions. Our observation of the subtle influences by which continuity is preserved helps us to extend this idea yet further. Nation is thus seen to be moved by nation, stock by stock, till the whole race, which is connected spiritually by a community of nature, is felt also to be connected actually by mutual, though often indirect, operations of each fragment upon the rest. APPENDIX I.

Whenever we seize, however tremblingly, as at best it must be, this vast conception of the Great Being in which all mankind is for the time united, it is evident that our views of the destiny, of the relations, and of the action of men will be greatly influenced. The thought which inspires hope, and assures patience, at the same time ennobles labour, and stimulates action. Hope and patience spring necessarily out of the application of the lessons of the past to the present. We can see how rivalries and conflicts, the rise and fall of principles and states, the very exhaustion of powers once beneficent and life-giving, have contributed to the whole progress of human life. We can believe then that phenomena of the same kind, when co-existent, are no less instrumental of good. And it is no objection to this faith that it is not in our experience converted into sight. Life would be indefinitely impoverished if the fruits of effort or suffering were not reserved in the richest measure for the future.

The present effect of the idea of solidarity upon labour and action is perhaps less frequently realised than the remoter effect which has been just noticed, but it is at least capable of being far more energetic. Briefly, it may be summed up in two principles. It consecrates the permanent variety of functions in life[1], and substitutes duties for rights[2].

[1] Cat. 109, 113.

[2] Cat. 289. The conception of salary as simply designed

APPENDIX I.

As long as we regard individuals as so many separate units, it is clear that we must regard complete equality as the ultimate ideal of their state. The object of reform must be to assimilate man to man. But this chimerical fancy loses all rational basis when the individual is seen to be the member of a body which itself is part of a greater whole, of which the final dimensions surpass all human imagination. Then it follows at once that complexity of office is the condition of health. The completeness of health depends on the completeness of the organism. Society, in every true sense, would cease to exist without an abiding distinction of classes. Humanity would be poorer if it were deprived of any national or specific types. There is no confusion in the multiplicity of service. There is no levelling, no disparagement, in the just subordination of distinct works. The essential variety, the actual combination, both belong to the characteristics of life.

And if we apply the principle to the separate work of each, it becomes, as it were, a revelation of the moral dignity of labour. No one in any society works for himself. Each worker is a servant of the body. He does really co-operate with all for the good of all. It is only required that he should feel the destination and the source of what he does and

'à remplacer chez chaque organe social les matériaux qu'il 'consomme toujours, comme provisions pour sa subsistance 'ou instruments pour sa function' (Cat. 116), is worthy of attention, as well as the principle on which it is based, that 'chaque service personnel ne comporte jamais d'autre récompense que la satisfaction de l'accomplir et la reconnaissance 'qu'il procure' (Cat. 117).

of what he receives. Then at last he would, as Comte admirably expresses the truth, know that 'to 'live for others' is but another aspect of 'living by 'others[1].' APPENDIX I.

At the same time the transference of our point of sight from the individual to the body brings out into clear light the second principle. If the individual be the centre, then he may have rights; but if the body be the centre, he can have only duties. It is possible that these complementary aspects may be reconciled, but there can be no doubt which we most frequently forget. And if we once add the Christian idea of what the body potentially is, all notion of personal claims vanishes in comparison with the infinite debt whereby we are bound, each in our measure, to fill up that which is lacking to the completeness of the whole.

The doctrine of what I have ventured to call the totality of life carries yet one step further the doctrines of its continuity and solidarity. It is not only that the successive generations of men are linked together by laws which they can only modify, and not abrogate, nor yet that each generation is interpenetrated and united by a common life; but the life of humanity is itself ruled, in a great measure, by the medium in which it is passed. The influence of physical powers upon man may have been exaggerated, but we cannot deny that it is real. Comte himself

[1] 'Vivre pour autrui devient chez chacun de nous le devoir 'continu qui résulte rigoureusement de ce fait irrécusable— 'vivre par autrui' (Cat. 266). To a Christian the words have a tenfold force.

APPENDIX I. does not overstate it. 'The world,' he writes, 'furnishes the materials, and man determines the form.' 'Man is not a result of the world, and yet he depends upon it[1].' The observed variations in the constancy of the relations of nature and man are not sufficient to disturb our confidence in the fixity of what we call natural laws. And, conversely, while the laws remain fixed, man is so far capable of modifying the elements through which their action is displayed, as to seriously alter their total effect. If again we regard only living forms, here the power of man is supreme. Some die away at his approach; others follow him; others are capable of receiving what we are forced to call the moral impress of his character.

To pursue in any detail the consequences which flow from this connexion of man with the physical world would be impossible here. It must be enough to notice the general lessons which it teaches as to the action of man and the destiny of creation. As to the first, it shews that the sovereignty of man is manifested, not in the direct exertion, but in the guidance of force[2]. The effect in each case depends not so much on power as on wisdom. In other words, our true strength lies in taking each discovered law as the rule according to which we may employ our energies, always remembering that the higher phenomena rest upon and include the lower, and are modifiable in direct proportion to their complexity.

On the other hand, as man is at present continually modifying all nature, both spontaneously and of purpose, it is necessary to regard the connexion thus established as in some sense permanent. We cannot wholly sever the fate of the lower and humbler companions of man, for example, from the fate of man himself. And perhaps there is nothing more characteristic of Comte than the almost importunate eagerness with which he claims for the animals, which habitually labour with man to secure his worthy objects, incorporation, according to their individual dignity and services, in the great being into which man himself passes[1].

[1] Cat. 42, 37. [2] Cat. 105 ff.

VII.

Now these grand and far-reaching ideas of the continuity, the solidarity, the totality of life, which answer equally to the laws of our being and the deepest aspirations of our souls, are not only reconcilable with Christianity, but they are essentially Christian. The Positivist theory, so far from advancing anything novel in such teaching, simply places us once again in the original Christian point of view of the Cosmos. Once again the divinity of the Gospel is vindicated by its power, when honestly interpreted, to stand abreast or in advance of the noblest generalisations of experience. And this is in virtue of its essential constitution, intellectually no less than spiritually. For, because it is contained primarily in facts, and not in words, it rises beyond the possible associations of a single age to a full harmony with universal life. And so, as our view of life becomes fuller and richer, our view of the Gospel,

[1] Cat. 31.

APPENDIX I. which is the transfiguration of life, becomes fuller and richer in the same degree. Doctrine which is based upon the Incarnation or the Resurrection must be progressive, organic, and total. These facts, however imperfectly interpreted, yet mark human existence by an advance in a definite direction, by relation to one centre, by approximation towards a perfect ideal. They contain a principle of continuous life, a principle of social unity, a prospect of 'the restoration of all 'things.' And this, too, was the case before history or science had laid open the general laws of human progress or the necessary connexion of man with the world.

Nor, while the facts in themselves are found to be thus pregnant, does the apostolic interpretation of the facts in any degree fall short of the meaning which has been assigned to them. 'It was the pur-'pose of GOD,' we read, 'that, in the dispensation of 'the fulness of times, He might sum up all things in 'Christ, the things in the heavens and the things upon 'the earth[1].'

Because of Christ's Incarnation and Passion, 'GOD 'also highly exalted Him, and gave unto Him the name 'which is above every name, that in the name of 'Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, 'and things on earth, and things under the earth[2].'

From Christ,—'which is the head,'—'all the body 'fitly framed and knit together through that which 'every joint supplieth, according to the working in due 'measure of each several part, maketh the increase of 'the body unto the building up of itself in love[3].'

[1] Eph. i. 10. [2] Phil. ii. 9, 10. [3] Eph. iv. 16.

'The earnest expectation of the creation waiteth 'for the revealing of the sons of GOD...groaning and 'travailing in pain together until now[1].'

Such language, in its assured confidence, passes our hope; and as we ponder on it, we may well doubt whether even to St Paul himself the infinite depths of wisdom which it contains were open as they are to us now. Here also it seems as if the lapse of ages and the slow widening of thought could alone adequately reveal the significance of prophecy[2].

But Christianity does not pause where Positivism pauses, in the visible order. It carries the unity of being yet further, and links all that is seen with that unseen which can only be figured to us in parables. An imperious instinct asserts that our individual existence is not closed by what falls here under our senses; and every indication of the intimate relationship of man with man, and of age with age, confirms the belief in the further extension of this law of dependence to an order of being beyond the present. If we further take account of the many tokens of a scheme begun and not completed here, which requires for the present the sacrifice of races, it may be, or of generations, the same conviction is deepened. Even in the constitution and advance of society, the effects of selfishness and sin are so open and great, that we are forced to look onward to some future resolution of the discords by which they interrupt the harmony of life.

From the nature of the case, it is impossible that we should have any distinct apprehension of this

[1] Rom. viii. 19, 22. [2] Comp. 1 Pet. i. 10—12.

APPENDIX I. unseen order. Our utmost resources of language only enable us to combine variously the phenomena with which we are already acquainted; and this to which we are looking is a new order, and not the transference of the old to a new sphere. But though our notions of the future must be vague, Christianity so treats it as to assure us of our personal hope, and at the same time to indicate the direction in which we may look for the solution of the mysteries of society.

In the first place, it accepts unequivocally the indivisibility of man[1]. The body is not a burden by which the soul is temporarily weighed down, but an essential condition of our personality, to be won[2] and disciplined, and in the end to be transfigured, but not destroyed. The central fact in which these truths are conveyed is absolutely unique, as is the combination of the truths themselves. Between the Resurrection and any of the other raisings from the dead there is no more resemblance than there is between the Incarnation and any of the fabled visits of the Greek gods to earth in human shapes. The same event which declares the essential permanence of our whole being shews that the conditions of its action and existence will be changed. In what way this change will be accomplished we cannot tell. We know only that we can draw no conclusions from the limitations of this world as to the character of the next, and, on the other hand, that nothing in us will be lost.

Corresponding reflections help us to see how that which appears to be lost or prematurely carried away here may have truly fulfilled its work. It is clear that performance is not a final test of character, nor external action of effect. We are conscious of subtle powers about us, which cannot be analysed or resisted. In another order, as we can believe, we may be allowed to see how these had their origin in silent, unnoticed, or forgotten souls, which will then be revealed in the plenitude of their true energy.

[1] Comp. Cat. 24. [2] Comp. 1 Thess. iv. 4 (κτᾶσθαι).

The mystery of evil, we allow, still remains; but even on this light is cast. It ceases, at least, to be triumphant or active.

'Then cometh the end when [Christ] shall deliver 'up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He 'shall have abolished all rule, and all authority and 'power. For He must reign till He hath put all 'His enemies under His feet. The last enemy that 'shall be abolished is death...Then shall the Son also 'Himself be subjected to Him that did subject all 'things unto Him, that God may be all in all[1].'

This sublime prospect lies before us, in which all the varied developments of life are crowned with their divine fulfilment. And though the contemplation of it may lie without the range of the personal teaching of Christianity which commonly limits our religious thought, yet it is a duty to strive, as occasion may arise, to grasp the full proportions of the hope which it brings to man and to the world. It is not always enough that each should feel in his own heart the power of the Gospel to meet individual wants. We must claim for it also to be recognised as a wisdom revealed and realised only in the advance of time, and embracing in one infinite fact all that men have aspired to for themselves and for the transitory order in which they are placed.

[1] 1 Cor. xv. 24 ff.

It is our lot to live in an age when this need is imperative. On all sides there is a restless striving after some solid construction of truth which may rise out of and above the results of negative criticism. Never before were the evils of dispersive study more apparent or more pressing. Never before were isolated views of truth more capable of being exhibited in their one-sidedness. Never before was anarchy of thought and life felt to be more at variance with the highest destiny of man. Never before was there a more passionate longing for spiritual unity among those whom the conditions of life have separated. Of all these facts the teaching of Positivism is an unlooked-for and unsuspected witness. At the same time it seems to point out how we may apply the apostolic message to combine, and supplement, and guide, and animate the scattered elements out of which the future may be worthily built. And while we thankfully receive the lessons which it gives, we owe to it also a new confirmation of our historic creed. For if anything external can re-assure faith, it must be that the widest interpretation of human progress, the subtlest analysis of human nature, is only a partial commentary on the Resurrection.

APPENDIX II.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST A NEW REVELATION[1].

I.

IT is greatly to be regretted that those who enter on the examination of religious questions do not in every case state distinctly the postulates which underlie their reasoning. As it is, serious misunderstanding arises from the use of words which carry with them wholly different associations, according as they are used on one side or the other; and discussions which profess to be impartial are conducted, it may be even unconsciously, in the interest of foregone conclusions. It is obvious, for example, that the idea of a 'sign' or 'miracle' is, under particular circumstances, natural or unnatural according as a man believes, or does not believe, in a Creator who is still in a living connexion with His creation. If, again, it is assumed that a revelation is impossible, the belief in a revelation must be a delusion, and the records which give an account of its delivery must be incredible. This being

APPENDIX II.

[1] This Essay originally appeared in the Contemporary Review, Nov. 1877.

APPENDIX II.

so, it is clear that the charge which is habitually urged against so-called 'apologists,' of being committed to the conclusion which they have to establish, applies more completely to the 'alogists,' who deny the possibility of revelation altogether. The 'apologist' is perfectly free to modify his view of the methods of revelation, to strive to gain a fuller conception of the unity of the Divine plan, to seek for a more comprehensive survey of 'nature,' as embracing the utmost potency of being which falls within the grasp of his powers; but the 'alogist' has barred his own progress by an absolute negation. 'This and 'this,' he ventures to say, 'cannot be: if it is ever 'said to have been, the statement is inherently false. 'All that remains for the critic is to explain as plausibly 'as he can how the statement gained currency.'

I propose, therefore, in the present paper to state as clearly as I can under what conditions the Christian enters on an examination of the evidence for the Resurrection, what is the Evangelic conception of the fact itself, how the fact thus interpreted illustrates the character of the Christian faith generally as a historical faith, how it bears upon our views of the world and upon studies of present interest. It is obviously impossible to do more than indicate lines of thought in these different directions. The examination of the details of evidence belongs to another place. But a general view of the Christian position, apart from other advantages, will shew that some of the attacks directed against it are based on misconceptions.

Three final assumptions are made everywhere throughout the Bible. It is assumed (1) that God is, and that He is righteous and loving; (2) that man was made in the image of God; and (3) that man has fallen. It is taken for granted that these statements correspond with man's constitution, and that he is directly conscious of their truth. They lie beyond the region of debate. It is indeed possible to shew not only that they fall in with what we can observe, but that the sum of experience illustrates and confirms them; still, if they be denied, argument is useless. No 'proof' can establish the existence of a Heavenly Father, the God of conscience, and not 'the 'Absolute Being' of ontology. No 'proof' can shew beyond contradiction that we can hold intercourse with Him, the finite with the Infinite. No 'proof' can demonstrate that that which is to lift us up must be outside us and above us. But we claim that these ultimate facts are given in germ, in consciousness. We claim that those who have attained to the maturity of self-knowledge under normal conditions recognise them as true. They form for us the presuppositions of all religious controversy[1]. APPENDIX II.

Assumptions of the same kind underlie all reasoning; they are not peculiar to theology. The belief in the external world, and the belief in our own personal responsibility, rest on grounds exactly similar to those which support the belief in a Heavenly Father. Each of these three ultimate beliefs is open to specious

[1] This is not the place to explain more at length or to defend these presuppositions. I wish simply to mark clearly the position which Christian critics occupy. It is evident that all examination of evidence involves some presuppositions.

APPENDIX II. objections; each belief is maintained by the requirements and the experience of living.

Several important conclusions follow immediately from these assumptions. If God is the Father of men, it becomes probable that He will under certain circumstances make His presence felt by peculiar 'signs,' and that these 'signs' will bear a definite relation both to the Divine lessons with which they are connected and to the persons to whom the lessons are addressed. It becomes probable, further, that, when the discipline of humanity is regarded on a large scale, these special manifestations of the Divine will appear to be analogous to crises in the development of the individual life, in which exceptional powers are active for a time and then subside, all being harmonious parts of one life. And again, to look at the subject from another point of sight, if we derive our being, it matters not through what descent, from a good Creator, each natural desire or instinct of man carries with it the promise of fulfilment. It is not conceivable that he should have been endowed with aspirations which must always remain unsatisfied. He may be unable beforehand to anticipate how they will be satisfied; he may even form false and confident anticipations; but after the event it must be discernible that the satisfaction is real. If we feel that the scheme of things in which we are placed is true, if we feel, that is, that the apparent signs of progress which it exhibits reveal its essential nature, we cannot doubt that the characteristic tendencies of human action and feeling and thought are also true, and turned towards that which we are made to attain to. It cannot, then, be in vain that we instinctively look forward to a nobler future, and a closer fellowship with God hereafter; and turn heavenward, as knowledge widens, for some fuller teaching as to these loftiest hopes. No doubt our instincts, both physical and moral, require to be disciplined and trained; but they are in a real sense prophetic. While they are not, in our present condition, authoritative, they are suggestive.

Thus revelation, which is only one form of the continuous intercourse of God and man, so far from being improbable, is seen from the actual circumstances of life to be a natural consequence of the Divine Fatherhood. It is in regard to the life of the society as natural as prayer in the life of the individual. Prayer in fact presupposes revelation, for it is man's answer to the voice of God. And the thoughts of revelation and prayer illustrate one another in other ways. The mode of revelation, for instance, may be expected to vary from age to age, just as the scope of prayer. As man advances in the knowledge of God, he will at each point in his progress fashion his thoughts of Him in harmony with the sum of all he knows.

Nor can it be fairly said that such a view of the living relation between God and man and the world as is assumed by the Christian introduces any confusion into his view of the order in which he is placed. It simply substitutes the conception of a rational order for the conception of a mechanical order. All action is based upon the supposition that man can himself, within certain limits, modify the medium in which he moves, and the personal influence of each man is absolutely incalculable, yet this indeterminate factor introduces no practical disharmony into the universe; and it is obviously impossible that this special action, which (it is assumed) answers to perfect wisdom, should do so. Alogists habitually discuss miracles as if they were supposed to be arbitrary manifestations of power, and not essentially connected with a moral purpose and adapted to the wants of those to whom they were granted. If they were arbitrary they would have no theological value. The 'signs' of God would cease to be 'signs' unless they illustrated what we can recognise as a divine law of progress[1].

APPENDIX II.

For nothing external, no 'sign,' has an absolute or irresistible force. Every alleged 'sign' must be carefully interpreted and brought to a spiritual test. As a 'sign' of God it must be consistent with all that we already know of Him; and the same power which enables us in the first instance to recognise God, enables us also to recognise further manifestations of His nature and will[2].

The order of the universe which the Christian

[1] Such a statement as that of Mr Macan (for example,) 'If 'miracles are possible, history is impossible' (p. 116, note), is only intelligible on an assumption which a Christian utterly denies. I should venture to say that Christianity alone gives a stable foundation to history, as shewing the law and end of life. Viewed in relation to the whole history of the Church or of the world, 'miracles' take an intelligible place in the development and interpretation of life.

[2] The full significance of these statements will appear, on a careful examination of the following typical passages:—Deut. xiii. 1 ff.; Ezek. xiv. 4 ff.; Matt. xxiv. 23 f.; 2 Thess. ii. 8 ff.; Apoc. xiii. 13 f.

maintains is therefore as real as that of the alogist, and as truly verifiable, while it is vaster. Both orders correspond with abstractions which are based upon observation; but the Christian order regards the seen as standing in a vital connexion with the unseen, and under the necessary limitations of our present human faculties presents potentially the completest synthesis of being which we can conceive. The occurrence of 'signs' causes no break in the continuity of history: on the contrary, they indicate something more as to the nature of the whole life which history expresses. Nor again, is any function of historical criticism dependent on the assumption that facts of a particular kind are impossible. The object of criticism is to test the records of a belief, and then comes the interpretation of the belief. The recorded instances of revelation are for the believer so many elements of which he takes due account in his view of the whole system of phenomena which is offered for his devout study. Little by little he is enabled to apprehend the course of things according to its true law, till the distinction of 'natural' and 'supernatural' is lost in the perception of the one will of God wrought out in many ways and parts throughout the whole range of creation which falls under our notice.

II.

These general remarks enable us to approach the consideration of the Resurrection from the true point of sight. For the believer the Resurrection is the crowning revelation of God, the sign of the continuity

APPENDIX II. of the fulness of human being through the seen into the unseen. Under this aspect it is not open to objection on the ground that it is 'contrary to expe-'rience,' for its significance is affirmed to consist in the fact that it is absolutely without parallel. It cannot be said to be even improbable, if it can be shewn to convey that teaching as to the future of creation which we are constituted to expect. The alogist utterly misunderstands the state of the case when he persistently represents the Resurrection of Christ as one of many raisings from the dead[1]. If it were no more than this, it could not form the foundation of a Gospel. The fact was, as we maintain, essentially unique; the teaching which it conveyed was essentially new.

A twofold difficulty stands in the way of a just estimate of the novelty of the teaching of the Resurrection. It is difficult to realise the absence of a great and familiar idea; it is difficult also to leave room, so to speak, for larger aspects of a fact which we seem to have felt already in all its grandeur. And thus it comes to pass that the revelation given us by Christ's rising is in one direction spoken of as 'commonplace,' and in another it is unconsciously neglected. Part of the truth signified by it has passed so completely into modern thought that we can hardly imagine that men were ever without the sure trust that death is the personal admission to the nearer Presence of God. Part of it again is only now at last dawning upon us; and we are in danger of refusing to recognise the new light, though in this respect it is not hard to see how the original apostolic message meets the latest results of time. APPENDIX II.

[1] E.g. Supernatural Religion, iii. 428 n.

Something at least has been gained by recent discussions. It is admitted on all sides that the first disciples believed that the Lord had been raised from the dead; it is admitted also that the eleven apostles and St Paul believed that they had seen Him after the Resurrection. Historical evidence, alone, can go no further than this. It cannot do more than establish the reality of the belief in a particular fact. The belief is itself the interpretation of phenomena which cannot be recalled, and, in every case, only one of several conceivable interpretations. It is obviously impossible to preserve completely the grounds on which the belief was embraced. These may, indeed, be indicated more or less completely, but it is easy to see that details, which find no record, may have been rightly decisive at the moment. Thus our judgment on the truth of a belief is to be decided mainly by the character of the belief and by the circumstances of those who first held it. In the case of the Resurrection the question at issue is simply, in one form or other, Is it more reasonable to suppose that the apostles were mistaken or that the Lord did rise? Or, to break the question into its parts, What was the character of the belief? And, Can the belief, with its results, be explained from the actual position of those who held it without the acceptance of the corresponding objective fact?

The general character of the apostolic belief in Christ's Resurrection may be best seen by regarding the Resurrection in connexion with other raisings

APPENDIX II. from the dead. Briefly it may be said that all the other raisings from the dead recorded in the Bible are instances of restoration to the conditions of earthly life: the Resurrection of Christ was the revelation of a new life[1]. The distinction is equally unquestionable and significant. There cannot be the least doubt that those whom the Lord is recorded to have called back to life were afterwards subject to the ordinary circumstances of our present existence. It is no less certain that all the notices of the Risen Lord represent Him as changed while still personally the same. The daughter of Jairus, the young man at Nain, and Lazarus, as far as we can see, resumed their former positions; but the connexion of the Lord with the disciples after the Resurrection was wholly altered. He was known only when He pleased to reveal Himself. He was surrounded with a mysterious awfulness. At the very time when He offered a material test of the reality of His presence He shewed that He was not bound by the laws of matter. There is evidently a 'law' by which the conditions of His appearances are determined. And these contrasted traits are preserved in the different narratives with perfect consistency, so that it is impossible to doubt that the disciples believed that the Lord lived again after the Passion, and yet under new and glorious conditions of life hitherto unrealised. For such a conception they had absolutely no precedent. To speak of it as a 'ruling idea' of their age, is to misrepresent facts. On the contrary it was to them a most difficult and strange idea. They thought at first that 'they saw a 'spirit,' and this impression had to be overcome. So far as they had any acquaintance with a rising again, their notions were directly at variance with the circumstances of the Lord's Resurrection. The language of Herod and of the people who identified the Lord with John the Baptist raised from the dead, or with one of the prophets, so far as it had any serious meaning, indicates no capacity for a belief in a Resurrection such as that by which the Church lived. And as a matter of experience the popular conceptions of a carnal Resurrection very speedily overpowered the teaching of the New Testament in the early Church[1].

[1] I do not enter on the discussion of Matt. xxvii. 52 f. The incident recorded there is wholly isolated.

From this point of sight the importance of the two chief 'moments' in the history of the Resurrection becomes obvious. The tomb in which the body of the Lord was laid was found empty. The Lord appeared and disappeared at pleasure. All that belonged to His humanity was preserved, and at the same time all was transfigured. This twofold conception presented with perfect simplicity and perfect distinctness by the Evangelists was entirely unparalleled; and it includes teaching which has not yet been popularly appropriated.

This being so, it will be seen that no misunderstanding of the Christian idea of the Resurrection can be more complete than that which is involved in the following dilemma:—

[1] Any one who will take the trouble to verify in detail the facts indicated summarily in this paragraph, will learn a valuable lesson on the historical characteristics of the Gospels.

APPENDIX II.

'One or other alternative must be adopted:—If Jesus possessed his own body after his resurrection and could eat and be handled, he could not vanish; if he vanished, he could not have been thus corporeal[1].'

The very point of the revelation lies in the reconciliation of these two aspects of the Lord's humanity. The one assures us in the only way in which, as far as we can see, the assurance could be given, that nothing is lost in the passage through death; the other that the limitations which belong to earthly existence are not to be extended to the future order.

The full power of this complex conception is gathered up in the fact of the Ascension, which is the natural or necessary sequel of the Resurrection according to the Christian view. The manifestations of the Risen Christ, as recorded in the Gospels, lead up to it. The history of the forty days shews a gradual preparation of the disciples for the realisation of a spiritual presence of Christ with His Church. So long He allowed them to feel that He was moving locally among them. Then He made it clear by a sensible sign that He had entered on a new state. Thus, the Resurrection rightly interpreted includes the Ascension; and conversely, the Ascension finally interprets the Resurrection for men and under the forms of common thought. That visible lifting from the earth marked the close of one epoch of revelation and the beginning of another. Henceforward the Lord was recognised as throned in glory on the right hand of God, near alike to all His people.

But it will be said that the view which has been given of the Resurrection is an 'inference' from the records. The statement is true; and true necessarily. It is only by inference, by interpretation, that we can obtain an adequate conception of a fact which belongs to two orders. The Risen Christ belongs to earth and to heaven. If His Resurrection and His raised manhood were of earth only, it might be possible, perhaps, to imagine how any single observer might have ascertained the fact by outward observation, though it is clear that he could not have transmitted his assurance to others. But as it is, no external tests could have established what is of the essence of the fact, the permanence of the old under new conditions not expressed by the 'laws' of this world. On the contrary, if external tests alone were satisfied, the very ground of our hope would be destroyed. That which is the strength of the Christian now would be taken away.

[1] S. R. iii. 462.

In this respect the Christian view of the Resurrection, as an interpretation of all the phenomena recorded, corresponds with the interpretation of every other divine sign. No external phenomenon in itself can prove the existence of an Almighty God. But if we believe that God is, then we can learn, through the world without, lessons as to His character and will. There will, however, always remain a way of evasion for the unbeliever. Even if he admits the accuracy of the original observation, and the completeness of the testimony to the observed facts, it will still be possible to refer whatever is exceptional in them to some unknown force simply sufficient to produce the given effect. In other words, the presuppositions of belief underlie the interpretations of belief.

APPENDIX II.

It is therefore quite true in one sense that the Resurrection 'proves' nothing. It has no constraining power to compel assent to any proposition; but it is the crowning 'sign' of the counsel of God for men. It comes to satisfy aspirations, to illuminate doubts, to confirm and define faith. That which St John observes of the effect of 'the beginning of signs' is fulfilled in this latest sign: Jesus manifested His glory, and His disciples believed on Him.

S. John ii. 11.

This consideration places the narratives of the Gospels in their proper light. They are addressed to those who believe the fact, and are not directly designed to create the belief. They are in this respect, as in all others, a record of a revelation. When this is once recognised, it will be seen how completely most of the criticism of the parallel narratives of the Resurrection falls to the ground. There is not the least reason to suppose that the Evangelists told us all that they knew, nor yet the least necessity that they should have done so. They recorded what was sufficient for their purpose. And there can be no doubt that the Gospels both severally and collectively bring before us the Risen Lord as the same and yet changed; as having entered with His perfect Manhood on a new form of existence; as having established in His glorified humanity a new connexion with mankind; as having led His disciples by His personal intercourse to grasp these novel conceptions as their abiding heritage.

Now whether this revelation be accepted or not, it cannot be doubted that it was original and pregnant with consequences. But it has been frequently said that the apostles lived in 'an atmosphere of miracles;' that they could not but have framed some explanation to remove the disappointment caused by their Master's death; and that 'it was inevitable that they should 'believe Him to have risen again in the body[1].' It might be sufficient to reply that there is, as we have already seen, no parallel to the Resurrection either in its character or in its effects, and that just so far as the idea could be shewn to be familiar it would be deprived of its efficacy. If the belief was 'inevitable' it would also have been powerless to change opinion and life. But, as far as evidence exists, the claim to work miracles was not common in the first age, unless the practice of exorcism be brought under this head. On the contrary, it is most remarkable that the miracles of Jewish history belong to critical periods of comparatively short duration, and to typical men. The age of the Maccabees is not marked by miracles. 'John wrought no miracle.' It is of course quite true that the Jews were acquainted with records of miracles in their Scriptures; quite true also that they could not feel all that is involved in a miracle as we do; but it appears from the Gospels that the works of Christ, though they were often veiled, created a profound impression as being wholly unprecedented. It is at any rate unquestionable that they overcame inveterate prejudices. All this tends to shew that we are unconsciously tempted to transfer to the whole period of Jewish history phenomena which belong to limited manifestations within it, and to use what

APPENDIX II.

S. John x. 41.

[1] Contemporary Review, November, 1876, p. 905.

APPENDIX II. sprang from Christianity to explain the origin of Christianity.

A similar remark applies to the alleged prevalence and power of Messianic expectations in the first century. There were indeed some Jews who were looking for the promised King when Christ came, or, perhaps more strictly speaking, for the Kingdom of God, or for the consolation of Israel. (S. Luke ii. 25, 38.) John the Baptist gave distinctness to expectation. But the teaching of John and the earlier teaching of the Lord excited questionings rather than satisfied them. It was only when the Lord's work was drawing to a close that He accepted the title of the Christ from Jews, and then under circumstances which shewed how far the confession was not only from popular feeling, but even from the feeling of the disciples. After the appearance of the Lord had called out the religious aspirations of the nation, false Christs arose; but the hopes which they embodied were rather due to Christ's action than originally contributory to His acceptance. He created the idea which He fulfilled in spite of current opinions, and in doing this He gave occasion to the characteristic embodiment of the ideas which He set aside. So far from 'answering the ideal' of His followers, He gave them a new one, which they were painfully slow to grasp. Men could not 'see' the Kingdom of God (S. John iii. 3.) which He proclaimed unless they were born again. There was practically nothing in the current thoughts which Christ encountered which was fitted to call out a spontaneous belief in the message of His Resurrection. The silence of the Old Testament, the 'bold 'guesses' and sad negations of Gentile philosophy, are equally instructive. The one shews how Divine wisdom was constrained to delay the revelation till it could be presented vitally: the other that reason, while baffled by the problem of the future, finds no rest in scepticism. When Christ came this only remained to men as the issue of ages of resolute and patient thought, that the instinct by which they clung to a continuous personality beyond the grave was at hopeless variance with such an analysis of their own being as they could make. APPENDIX II.

To reconcile this antagonism there was need of a new fact. And this fact was given, as we have seen, in a manner suited to the end. For that end it was enough to shew in a single example the fulness of life undiminished by death; to shew that what seems to be dissolution is transformation; that heaven lies about us, and that life eternal is not future but present; that whatever be the unknown glories and endowments of the after-life, nothing is cast off which rightly claims our affection and reverence in this.

But it may yet be said that the Evangelists at any rate write as if they were dealing with ordinary phenomena, that they shew no perception of the marvellous or contradictory character of the incidents which they relate. The Evangelists certainly write as members of a society in which the divine action was felt to be a present reality manifested in many ways. If they had recorded miracles calmly, and lived ordinary lives, there might be some force in the objection; but it is undeniable that their action corresponded with their words. If they wrote as men to whom the 'super-'natural' was familiar, they lived so too. Everything which the first Christians did, as well as everything which they said, so far as we know, shewed a supreme conviction that they were living in an unexampled crisis. Heaven (so they said, and their work answered to their words) was open about them, and the effects of their teaching corresponded with the conviction.

APPENDIX II.

For the belief in the Resurrection was from the first not a belief only, but a spring of energy. The disciples were not only assured that their Lord was living: they felt that He was with them, and their conduct answered to the reality of the feeling. It is not then sufficient to shew how a belief in the rising of Christ might have been created among men familiar with the idea of the Resurrection as we are. The problem to be solved is how a belief was created which, from the first even till now, has made believers act as knowing that it is literally true that when two or three are gathered together in Christ's name, there He is in the midst of them. This we may safely assert was a 'new idea introduced into human conscious-'ness,' and fruitful beyond all example[1]. Later visions, so far from explaining its origin, serve only as faint reflections to witness to its power.

The Resurrection, to set the matter in another light, was not an isolated event. It was and is an abiding fact. It was the beginning of a new and living relation between the Lord and His people. He came to them while He went. The idea may be expressed by saying that the apostolic conception of the Resurrection is rather 'the Lord lives,' than 'the Lord

[1] Mr Macan fails to apprehend the idea of the Resurrection when he denies this, p. 108.

APPENDIX II.

'was raised.' This important truth is entirely overlooked by critics who lay stress on the point that 'there was no eye-witness of the Resurrection[1].' It is impossible to see what we should have gained by the testimony of such a witness, or what he could have established which was not established by the intercourse of the living Lord with His disciples. That which had to be made clear as to Christ, was the reality of His new life. This was first established for the apostles by their complete experience of the continuity of His manifestation to them, and for the Church in all ages through the signs of His power. And it is here that the 'proof' of the Resurrection is to be found. Christ lives, for He works still.

I have spoken of the Resurrection as a revelation; it was a revelation in two main respects—as to the relation of Christ to men, and as to the relation of the present life to the future. In both these respects it is undeniable that the belief in the Resurrection completely changed the views of the disciples. Before the Passion they had been unable to endure the thought of any external separation from Christ; afterwards they lived in effectual fellowship with Him though He was invisible. His influence was felt to be confined within no local limits. An entirely new connexion was shewn in life to be established between One and all, between the Son of Man and men. The disciples looked for His return, but the mode in which they conceived of His being preserved them, though in many cases not their followers, from sensuous imaginings of its nature.

[1] S. R. pp. 449, 549; Macan, p. 28.

APPENDIX II.

For the apostles' view of the life of the Risen Christ was in close dependence on their view of the relation of believers to Him. His being was continuous with that which they had known; but it was become infinitely glorious, without being deprived of anything belonging to the perfection of humanity.

These two thoughts together opened a prospect of the future of individuals which is far larger than the popular conceptions of later times. Believers were to be transfigured, and at the same time their life was to continue in Christ. In other words, a glimpse was given of a 'personality' of a raised humanity, in which each member was included but not absorbed.

At the same time light was thrown upon the dark mysteries of sin and suffering. The uttermost sorrow was the preparation for the most complete triumph. Once for all, that dualism to which the phenomena of this world taken by themselves seem to point was shewn to be false.

Nor can we stop at man. The apostles felt that the Resurrection had a message in regard to all creation. Man was bound up with the whole visible order, and this, too, was, as they announced, to partake of his restoration, and to be included in the divine consummation of all things.

Such a final unity, to touch upon the last mystery of all, is referred to an archetypal unity. The Resurrection appears, in the New Testament, as the fulfilment through victory of a purpose involved in creation, but checked in its normal progress by the self-assertion of the finite[1].

[1] This truth is plainly expressed in Col. i. 15 ff., and does not remain to be 'excogitated,' Macan, p. 141.

Now such thoughts as these evidently reach to the last problems of life, and illuminate them. Such thoughts flow directly from the Resurrection if the fact be accepted simply as it is presented to us in the Gospels; and, as it is admitted, they were set forth by the apostles in virtue of their belief in it. Our contention is that nothing but the fact can explain their origin, and the power with which they were propagated. The reality of the Resurrection and the action of the Spirit of the Risen Christ is a sufficient cause for the announcement and for the spread of the Gospel, and no other has been brought forward.

But when stress is laid upon the correspondence of the Gospel of the Resurrection with man's nature, it is said that that very correspondence furnishes a presumption that man devised that which answered to his wishes. There is, however, a wide difference between recognising and creating. All pre-Christian experience is unfavourable to the theory that man had any tendency to find such a solution of his difficulties as the Resurrection offers. The whole discipline of the world prepared men to welcome the Gospel, but had no power to produce it. And this second correspondence of the Resurrection with the course of human progress, no less than with the constitution of man, forms another strong sign of its divine reality to every one who believes in a Providence. To such a one, it is not too much to say that the Resurrection, taken in connexion with the history of the race before and after, is antecedently more probable than any particular event in the life of any individual man. So far is it from being contrary to 'universal experience,'

APPENDIX II. that it is in a most true sense according to universal experience, for it is seen universally that aspirations, tendencies, instincts, are not left for ever unattained and unsatisfied [1].

If now we consider the direct evidence for the fact of the Resurrection from this position, it will be found to be overwhelming. It is, of course, idle to affect to discuss evidence for an event if it is laid down that the event 'is at once disposed of on abstract grounds [2],' or to insist on the testimony of documents which record miracles if 'a supernatural phenomenon is to 'be at once rejected;' for on this assumption they are already declared to be untrustworthy. But if the Resurrection and the testimony by which it is maintained are examined in the light of a belief in the Providential government of the world, of a belief, that is, that there is a purpose and a goal for man, and men, and nature, then it is difficult to see how the evidence could have been, according to the analogy of history, more complete. We have, in the Synoptic Gospels and the appendix to St Mark (to summarise results which appear to me to be unquestionable), a general view of the oral teaching of the Twelve, which was the original foundation of the Church: we have in the writings of St Paul, who must have been well acquainted with the earliest belief of Christians, an explicit statement of what he 'received' and taught with intense personal conviction won through experience: we have in the Gospel of St John the personal testimony of one who had actually seen and heard the Risen Lord; and these three distinct lines of evidence are in complete accordance as to the reality, the nature, and the effects of the Resurrection of Christ. It is utterly unhistorical to say that APPENDIX II.

[1] But for a strange misunderstanding of this sentence I should have thought it unnecessary to say that the Resurrection of Christ does seem to me to give the satisfaction which we need now in our present life, which is, as I have endeavoured to shew, completely transfigured by it in every region of thought and observation and work.

[2] S. R. III. 522.

'the whole of the evidence for the Resurrection reduces itself to an undefined belief on the part of a few persons, in a notoriously superstitious age, that after Jesus had died and been buried they had seen him alive[1].'

The belief of the original witnesses was so clear that it completely revolutionised their national expectations; so energetic that it changed their whole character; so vivid that it was from the very first expressed in rites which symbolise with most remarkable power the fundamental thought of life through death. It answers questions which men cannot but ask, and that in a way wholly unanticipated and coextensive with the utmost range of knowledge; it is supported, not only by specific testimony, which, from the nature of things, must be partial and fragmentary and capable of misinterpretation, but by that underlying trust in the reality of the divine government and the divine destiny of creation which is 'practically infinite.' For the direct voice of testimony is a very small part of the evidence by which the Resurrection is established. The Resurrection explains, as nothing else can explain, the acts and words of Christ before it,

[1] S. R. p. 519.

APPENDIX II. and of His apostles after it; it gives a sufficient reason for the spiritual power and insight of the first Christians, which is different in kind from all that went before; it explains the life of Christendom, for it is not a past event only, but a fact attested by its present efficacy, by the signs of an actual union of believers with the Son of Man operative in life. If, now, we give fair weight to all these considerations, upon the assumptions which have been laid down,—to the personal attestation of the fact by the apostles, to the circumstances under which St Paul was led to proclaim it, to its relation to Christ's whole work, to the transformation which it effected in the opinions and conduct of the first disciples, to its continuous efficiency in life, to its consilience with instinct, to its harmony with what we can see of the divine discipline of the world,—I find no reason to modify what I have said elsewhere, that, 'taking all the evidence together, 'there is no single historical incident better or more 'variously supported than the Resurrection of Christ.'

Let any one who thinks otherwise endeavour to frame for himself evidence for the whole fact—for the fact, that is, as belonging to two orders, the seen and the unseen, and uniting them—which he thinks would have been more satisfactory than that which we possess, and then candidly determine how far the modifications which he has introduced would have removed his difficulties, and how far they would have detracted from the significance of the fact as a 'sign,' a Divine Revelation.

III.

The view which has been given of the Resurrection as a Revelation will serve to shew in what sense Christianity is said to be 'a historical religion.' The phrase is ambiguous, and, as applied to Christianity, it is persistently misinterpreted by critics who speak of Buddhism or Mohammedanism as 'historical' in the same sense. It is true, no doubt, that these three religions are so far alike that they owe their origin to historical personages. It is possible to fix their beginning and progress with more or less completeness in connexion with definite circumstances. But it is not in this relation that Christianity is described as historical. Christianity is described as a historical religion because its teaching—in regard to its doctrines, its motives, its promises—is conveyed in facts.

In this respect the Gospel is absolutely unique. The Lord claimed to come, not as a prophet, but as One greater than prophet or temple, as 'the Truth 'and the Life.' And as such He was preached and accepted. What the apostles proclaimed was a Person who had died and risen again, by whose Death and Resurrection light, as they affirmed, was thrown upon the final mysteries of being. They very rarely quote His words, but everywhere speak of what He was and is, of His work, of His power, of His presence.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this unquestionable character of the apostolic message. Nothing can be more certain than that the apostles did not regard their Lord as one simply who had declared new truths or who had made old truths plainer. Every interpretation of the rise of Christianity must be fatally misleading which does not take Christ's Person, what He did, what befell Him, what He was therefore held to be, as the novel power by which men were moved.

APPENDIX II.

This historical foundation of Christianity is seen most strikingly in the writings of St Paul. Perhaps we might have expected from his intellectual constitution, and from the circumstances of his conversion, that he would have rested on abstract dogmas, on 'the Christ within;' but, in fact, Christ 'of the 'seed of David,' 'born of a woman, born under the 'Law,' is the centre of his faith. It has been said that it is 'a most striking and extraordinary fact that the 'life and teaching of Jesus have scarcely a place in the 'system of Paul [1].' If St Paul had regarded Christ as a prophet only, the remark would have been just: as it is, so far as it is true, it places in more conspicuous prominence the meaning which St Paul found in 'the 'blood of Christ,' in the historic person and human work of Him 'who died and rose again.' The facts of Christ's life, the facts which are recited in the earliest creeds, are the revelation of sin and righteousness which he unfolds; they are never absent from his mind: without them his teaching is unintelligible.

This truth may be exhibited in another way. In the Epistles of St Paul, no less than in the preaching recorded in the Acts, the facts of the Faith precede the dogmas. And the relation holds good always.

[1] S. R. III. 567.

The dogmas are the progressive and approximate interpretation of the facts. As the facts are more completely understood the dogmas become more and more fully defined. For this reason the apprehension of Christian truth can never be final, and it can never be exhausted. Each fresh acquisition of knowledge as to the relation of man to man and of man to the world throws light upon Christian work. Teaching necessarily reflects in some measure the modes of thought of the age to which it belongs, but the broad facts of a human life grow more luminous as life itself is more deeply studied. The Death and the Resurrection of the Son of Man are felt by us to mean far more than could have been grasped by an earlier generation.

It is undoubtedly true that at present we receive the facts and the dogmatic interpretation of the facts simultaneously; too often perhaps we are tempted to lose the facts in the dogmas. But this circumstance cannot alter the essential relation in which they stand to one another. At every crisis of thought it is our duty to turn again to the records of Christ's work, not in a spirit of superficial realism, but with a strenuous endeavour to follow out, as far as our powers will allow us[1], the consequences which are involved in that union of the divine and human, of the seen and the unseen, which we believe to have been fulfilled in the present order of life and to remain as the foundation and the goal of hope and faith and love.

[1] The unhappy boldness of later speculation on the state of the disembodied spirit, when compared with the silence of Scripture upon the subject, offers an instructive illustration of the neglect of this limitation. It is strange that this contrast should be misunderstood (Macan, pp. 154 ff.).

APPENDIX II.

This principle, which has an obvious application to our main subject, requires to be insisted upon, because it is frequently overlooked or misunderstood. The Christian Faith, as a system, is the interpretation of the facts of Christ's life in the light of the assumptions which, as we have seen, are everywhere made in the Bible. The interpretation may come in different ways. At one time it is through the inward voice of GOD, at another time through a better understanding of apostolic words, at another through the experience of life, at another through the investigation of the 'laws' of nature; but in every case the Person of Christ and the facts of His life are the final sum of the eternal Gospel, the abiding test by which every approximation to the fulness of truth is tried.

IV.

It follows from what has been said that the belief in Christ's Resurrection is not merely the belief in a past event, but in a present, or rather in an eternal, fact. It is sometimes said that Romanists are more consistent or more logical than 'Anglicans and Protestants,' in that they affirm the reality of a present revelation to which the latter make no pretence. The statement is, I venture to believe, a complete misconception. All Christians alike, as I suppose, believe equally in the unbroken intercourse between GOD and man, which is the essence of revelation; but the Romanist holds to the permanence of old forms in the mode of revelation, while others consider that the mode of revelation, as being a function of life, will vary with the progress of humanity. In one age, or at one period of popular growth, isolated 'signs' can be seen to be the most appropriate vehicle for conveying a divine message. In another age or at another period, corresponding lessons may come through the investigation of history or of nature which was impossible before. In each case GOD speaks to men as they can hear Him, and according to the knowledge which they have gained of Him.

APPENDIX II.

It is most untrue, therefore, to affirm that the frank acceptance of 'critical' methods in the investigation of the records of past revelation involves any abandonment of the 'supernatural.' The study of the Bible in such a spirit enables us undoubtedly to realise a completer harmony between the ordinary processes of thought and action and those which GOD has been pleased to use for the conveyance of His lessons, but none the less the facts, and the record and interpretation of the facts, retain their divine character wholly unimpaired. The question as to the record (for example) is whether we suppose that the guidance was given directly, or through character, experience, circumstances. In the latter case there is as much room for divine action as in the former; and if it appears that we can most rightly apprehend 'inspiration' in the past in this way, we are at once encouraged to look for some manifestations of the Divine will now, which will come also to us through the ordinary channels of life and thought. So far from

APPENDIX II. 'criticism' obscuring the work of GOD, it opens our eyes to see it going on about us.

This is not the occasion to pursue such reflections in detail; but certainly nothing is more remarkable than the way in which the apostolic writers bring out the eternal aspects of the facts which they proclaim, without admixture of anything which was local and temporal. They exhibit in different directions that universality of character which every historian must recognise in Christ. And it is important to notice that this characteristic is derived naturally from the message of the Resurrection which they announced. They felt and they expressed, what we have not yet come to understand, that the belief in the resurrection 'in Christ' carries with it a belief in the continuity, the solidarity, the totality (if I may so speak) of creation. The unity of being, of which science is slowly shaping a conception, was for them a unity of life tending to an issue of unimaginable glory.

The Resurrection, indeed, gives a permanent value to all human effort and achievement. As long as the earth was held to be the everlasting scene of man's dominion, each worker could look forward to an endless life in posterity; but we know now that the earth itself can exist only for a time, and a hope of immortality requires the assurance of life continued under new conditions. This, as we have seen, is exactly what the apostolic records are fitted to convey. They meet, unexpectedly as it might appear, a difficulty of the latest time; they receive illustration from researches supposed to be alien in scope and spirit.

In this respect, as in all points, the Gospel of the Resurrection answers to the whole sum of life. The fact of the Resurrection is as divinely original as the character of Christ. It adds the element of continuance, the possibility of consecration, to every earthly interest. It offers the fulness of truth, as against the one-sided materialism which will acknowledge nothing as real but the objects of sense, and the one-sided spiritualism which disparages the outward. It represents, like life itself, a combination of antitheses. But this superficial conflict of elements is inevitable as long as man is regarded in action. For the present we must speak, even as we must think, according to the limitations which are imposed upon us. But these limitations are shewn, in Christ, not to be inherent in our personality. Our individual personality is shewn to be contributory to some vaster 'personality.' The unity of which we are conscious becomes the figure of a unity of humanity, of a unity of creation.

CAMBRIDGE: PRINTED BY C. J. CLAY, M.A. & SONS, AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

MESSRS MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Just Ready. Globe 8vo. 6*s.*

ESSAYS ON THE HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IN THE WEST. By BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L., Lord Bishop of Durham, Honorary Fellow of Trinity and King's Colleges, Cambridge.

TIMES:—"Their scholarly execution, their graceful style, their devout temper, and their wealth of suggestion and instruction, should render these masterly essays as welcome as if they were new to all serious readers."

SCOTSMAN:—"Readers of all shades of opinion will recognise in the volume a work of high excellence, and find in it everywhere evidence of copious learning and sympathetic and penetrative insight."

8vo. Cloth.

THE EPISTLES OF ST JOHN. The Greek Text, with Notes. Second Edition. 12*s.* 6*d.*

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. The Greek Text, with Notes and Essays. 14*s.*

CLASSICAL REVIEW:—"It would be difficult to find in the whole range of exegetical literature a volume at the same time so comprehensive and so compact. It possesses characteristics which will command for it the permanent attention of scholars."

Crown 8vo. Cloth.

GENERAL SURVEY OF THE HISTORY OF THE CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT DURING THE FIRST FOUR CENTURIES. Sixth Edition. 10*s.* 6*d.*

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE FOUR GOSPELS. Seventh Edition. 10*s.* 6*d.*

THE GOSPEL OF THE RESURRECTION. Seventh Edition. 6*s.*

THE BIBLE IN THE CHURCH. Tenth Edition. 18mo. 4*s.* 6*d.*

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE, MANIFOLD AND ONE. 2*s.* 6*d.*

ON THE RELIGIOUS OFFICE OF THE UNIVERSITIES. Sermons. 4*s.* 6*d.*

THE HISTORIC FAITH. Third Edition. 6*s.*

THE REVELATION OF THE RISEN LORD. Fourth Edition. 6*s.*

THE REVELATION OF THE FATHER. 6*s.*

CHRISTUS CONSUMMATOR. Second Edition. 6*s.*

SOME THOUGHTS FROM THE ORDINAL. 1*s.* 6*d.*

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF CHRISTIANITY. 6*s.*

GIFTS FOR MINISTRY. Addresses to Candidates for Ordination. 1*s.* 6*d.*

THE VICTORY OF THE CROSS. Sermons preached during Holy Week, 1888, in Hereford Cathedral. 3*s.* 6*d.*

FROM STRENGTH TO STRENGTH. Three Sermons (in Memoriam J. B. D.). 2*s.*

ESSAYS. Globe 8vo.

WESTCOTT AND HORT'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

Crown 8vo.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN THE ORIGINAL GREEK. Revised Text. 2 vols. 10*s.* 6*d.* each. Vol. I. Text. Vol. II. The Introduction and Appendix.

18mo.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN THE ORIGINAL GREEK. An Edition for Schools. The Text revised by Bishop WESTCOTT and Dr HORT. 4*s.* 6*d.*; roan, 5*s.* 6*d.*; morocco, 6*s.* 6*d.*

MACMILLAN AND CO., LONDON.

MESSRS MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

BY THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

St Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Dissertations. 10th Edition. 8vo. 12*s.*

St Paul's Epistle to the Philippians. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes and Dissertations. 9th Edition. 8vo. 12*s.*

St Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes and Dissertations. 9th Edition. 8vo. 12*s.*

Primary Charge. Two Addresses, delivered to the Clergy of the Diocese of Durham, 1882. 8vo. 2*s.*

The Apostolic Fathers. Part I. St Clement of Rome. A Revised Text, with Introductions, Notes, Dissertations, and Translations. 2 vols., 8vo. 32*s.*

The Apostolic Fathers. Part II. St Ignatius to St Polycarp. Revised Texts, with Introductions, Notes, Dissertations, and Translations. 3 vols. 2nd Edition. Demy 8vo. 48*s.*

A Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Diocese of Durham, Nov. 25th, 1886. Demy 8vo. 2*s.*

Essays on the Work entitled "Supernatural Religion." 8vo. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Apostolic Fathers. Abridged Edition. With short Introductions, Greek Text, and English Translation. 8vo.

Uniform Edition of

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S SERMONS.

Crown 8vo., Cloth. 6*s.* each.

Leaders in the Northern Church. New Edition.

Ordination Addresses and Counsels to Clergy. New Edition.

Cambridge Sermons.

Sermons preached in St Paul's Cathedral.

Sermons on Special Occasions.

MACMILLAN AND CO., LONDON.

94

University of California
SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY
405 Hilgard Avenue, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1388
Return this material to the library from which it was borrowed.

REC'D LD-URL
QL JAN 23 1995
NOV 27 1994

3 1158 00306 8144

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

A 000 105 539 1

lifornia
onal
lity

(1)

LIFE OF FAITH

By

H. H. Pope Shenouda III

COPTIC ORTHODOX PATRIARCHATE

See of St. Mark

LIFE OF FAITH

BY
H. H. POPE SHENOUDA III

Title : Life of Faith
Author : H. H. Pope Shenouda Ill.
Press : Dar El Tebaa El Kawmia.
Edition : August 1989 - First edition.
Legal Deposit No.: 5606/1989
Revised : COEPA 1997

H.H. Pope Shenouda III, 117th Pope of Alexandria and the See of St. Mark

CONTENTS

Introduction

Chapter 1:
How Great Faith Is

Chapter 2:
What is Faith? Conviction of Unseen Realities

Chapter 3:
Degrees and Kinds of Faith

Chapter 4:
The Relationship of Faith with Peace and Fearlessness

Chapter 5:
The Relationship of Faith with Purity of the Heart

Chapter 6:
Simplicity of Faith

Chapter 7:
Obedience of Faith or a Life of Submission
Not knowing where to go to

Chapter 8:
What Strengthens the Faith

Chapter 9:
What Weakens the Faith

Chapter 10:
The Test of Faith (Are you in faith?)

In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit One God. Amen.

INTRODUCTION

Faith is not merely adopting a set of beliefs that you may say in the "Creed", but a way of life or adherence to that which leads to life.

To what benefit is believing in God without having a relationship with him, obeying and loving Him?

In addition, what is the benefit of believing in eternity and in life after death if one does not prepare for it by repentance, spiritual vigil, and loving God?

And to what benefit is believing in virtues if one does not live them? Therefore there is a big difference between theoretical faith which does not save the soul, and practical faith, the fruits of which are evident in one's life.

This book was written to explain to you the meaning of faith, its stages and types and its importance in our lives and its greatness.

St. Paul wrote, "Examine yourselves as to whether you are in the faith. Test yourselves. Do you not know yourselves" (2 Cor. 13:5).

Not everyone who says he believes has faith, but is measured according to God's saying "You will know them by their fruits" (Matt. 7:16).

There are those who claim to have faith, but have neither the heart nor the life of a believer. So what then is the life of a believer?

The life of faith is linked with peace, tranquillity and lack of fear, for when you become afraid, then the Lord will say to you "O you of little faith, why did you doubt?" (Matt. 14:31).

The life of a believer is also associated with purity of behaviour, for the believer feels the presence of God, who sees, hears and records all that he does. For this reason the believer feels ashamed and afraid of wrong doing in front of God.

The life of a believer is a life of submission to the will of God. Having faith that God is the maker of all things, and all that He permits to happen is for our own good. In this way, God's children live in peace, happiness and satisfaction with all that God grants them.

The life of faith does not believe anything is impossible for the Lord, who said, "All things are possible to him who believes" (Mark 9:23).

Therefore the believer does not quiver in times of distress, but believes wholeheartedly that God has many solutions, and will interfere to fulfil His will.

The believer does not enter into an argument with God about His doing, but accepts all things and confidence in God's wisdom and love.

The believer concentrates on the unseen than the visible things, “For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal” (2 Cor. 4:18).

The heroes of faith are not only those who defended their faith, but also those who lived a fruitful life of faith that worked in love.

This book before you, gives you a clarified ideas on the life of faith, how it acquired, and how to test if you are really in faith or not.

Pope Shenouda III

CHAPTER 1

HOW GREAT IS FAITH

The importance of faith is clearly seen in the apostle's words about the Lord, "But without faith it is impossible to please Him" (Heb. 11:6).

The importance of faith also shows in the apostle's description as one of the three great virtues "faith, hope and love" (1 Cor. 13:13) and the life of righteousness "Now the just shall live by faith" (Heb. 10:38).

Faith is the beginning of the road which leads to God, for how can you be united with God and God in you, to walk with Him and keep His commandments, if first, you do not believe in His existence, His divinity or in His book the Bible and all that it contains?

Thus, faith is the beginning of the road to God and an elementary necessity for salvation according to the Lord Himself "He who believes and is baptised will be saved" (Mark 16:16). "That whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). "He who believes in Him is not condemned; but he who does not believe is condemned already" (John 3:18). He also reprimanded the Jews by saying, "You will die in your sins; for if you do not believe that I am He" (John 8:24).

Salvation is available to every one through the blood of our Lord Jesus, but it can not save without faith. As St. Paul and Silas said to the Jail keeper “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved, you and your household” (Acts 16:31).

Through this faith, the gospels were written and preached by the apostles.

John, the evangelist inspired by the Holy Spirit, wrote “But these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing you may have life in His name” (John 20:31).

Faith is the beginning of a life with God. Faith is also our companion throughout our lives, and the importance of faith in its relationship with righteousness.

Thus spoke the apostle about righteousness that was credited to faith “By his faith he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness that comes by faith” (Heb. 11:7). And about faith that was credited to righteousness, “And it was credited to him as righteousness” (James 2:23). The Bible also speaks of justification by faith, “Therefore, having been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom.5:1).

Faith is a necessity to miracles and their acceptance. How great is our Lord's saying to the blind man of Jericho when He said, “Your faith has healed you” (Luke 18:42, Mark 10:52). And His saying to the man with leprosy, “Your faith has made you well” (Luke 17:19). To the sick woman He said, “Take heart daughter, your faith has healed you” (Matt. 9:22). When He heard the two blind men shouting “Have mercy on us, Son of David“ (Matt. 9:29), He said to them, “According to your faith will it be done to you” and their sight was restored.

On the other hand, we see the Lord in His home town that “He did not do many miracles there because of their lack of faith” (Matt. 13:58).

The power of God can do miracles for you, but it awaits your faith. He will grant you according to your faith. For this reason, miracles happen to some and not to others although the power of God is the same.

What about he, who is weak in faith? He has to pray as did the boy's father who said, “Lord, I believe; help my unbelief!” (Mark 9:24). Here we see that God performs miracles in general according to faith, but on other occasions, He performs miracle that we may believe. In both cases faith is coupled with the miracle, either it comes before or is caused of it.

Faith, regardless of type, is a source of power.

It is sufficient that a person believes in an idea, so you see him working with Christ's power to carry it through. Faith gives him perseverance, might and courage which he would not have otherwise.

Thus, where there is faith there is power. A prayer in faith is a strong prayer. He who believes in prayer and its effect prays with warmth, assurance and power. A sermon preached by a person who believes in every word, makes a strong sermon, and through it, his faith is transmitted to the hearts of his listeners.

The importance of faith lies in its association with many virtues. The fruits of faith are strength, peace, courage, tranquillity and restfulness. Its fruits are a life of purity and righteousness, a life of submission and devotion to God, a life of prayer and many other virtues.

A few questions then come into mind:

-What is faith?
-What is faith, the basis of salvation and redemption?
-What is faith, the basis of all these virtues?
-What is faith, the basis of miracles and God's words who said, "Everything is possible for him who believes" (Mark 9:23)?

CHAPTER 2

WHAT IS FAITH?

Any worshipper of God can use the word 'faith' if when he does not believe in the Truth. He may have the name of a believer, but does not have the heart of one.

Faith does not automatically make you a believer if you are born a family which believes in the existence of God. But faith has a much deeper than this, it encompasses the whole spiritual life, performs miracles.

At one occasion, the disciples of the Lord were unable to heal a epileptic boy from the demon, so they asked the Lord for the reason and He answered them "Because of your unbelief" (Matt. 17:20) and rebuked them by saying "O faithless and perverse generation" (Matt 17:17).

A generation be unbelievers, which God came for, but where they really unbelievers? How alarming! Here the Lord says to His disciples "I say to you, if you have faith as a mustard seed, you will say to this mountain, `Move from here to there,' and it will move" (Matt. 17:20). Truly, what is this faith of a seed which can move a mountain? As the apostle says "Examine yourselves as to whether you are in the faith. Test yourselves" (2 Cor. 13:5).

The Bible tells us of something strange, more dangerous... what is it? It is the state of a human being who seems to be believing in God, he prays and performs miracles but he does not believe in Truth! and even not accepted in the eyes of God! Here is what the Lord Himself said “Not everyone who says to Me, `Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven” (Matt 7:21). The Lord continues “Many will say to Me in that day, `Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Your name, cast out demons in Your name, and done many wonders in Your name?' And then I will declare to them, `I never knew you; depart from Me, you who practice lawlessness!' (Matt.7:22-23).

What shall we call those who say 'Lord, Lord... in your name we did this and that'? Are they really believers? Maybe it's only an apparent faith, or faith by name, or only mental faith, but it's not the real faith accepted by God.

What then is the real faith which is accepted in the eyes of the Lord? We ask Him and He answers “Not everyone who says to Me, `Lord, Lord,' … but he who does the will of My Father in heaven “ (Matt. 7:21). This also reminds us of the story of the five virgins who also used the expression 'Lord, Lord,...' and they stood behind the closed door saying “Lord, Lord open the door for us”, and they heard from the Lord the clear and terrifying answer “I tell you the truth, I don't know you”.

The expression 'Lord, Lord' does not necessarily help if you are awaiting the bridegroom with a lamp without oil, or if you arrive after the door is closed.

Therefore what is faith? and what is its connection to oil which signifies the Holy Spirit? and what is its connection with the will of God who is in heaven?

This faith is alive and is accepted by God as we'll see later... Faith is not simply a belief but also a life.

You can test it by its fruits in your life... as the Lord said "You will know them by their fruits….every good tree bears good fruit, but a bad tree bears bad fruit. Therefore by their fruits you will know them" (Matt. 7:16-20).

This is how you can test yourself: Does your faith bear fruit? Because 'by their fruits you will recognise them'.

This is what John the evangelist teaches us "Now by this we know that we know Him" how? "If we keep His commandments. He who says, "I know Him," and does not keep His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him " (1 John 2:3-4). Faith is tested through a life of obedience to God's commandments, and he who does not have this obedience is not considered a believer of Truth, and can not claim to know God.

The apostle Paul lists in his letter to the Hebrews (Heb. 11) wonderful examples of faithful men. They show practical faith in their private lives. Enoch for example; the bible did not say that he defended his belief like other heroes of faith. But Enoch was a hero of faith because he "He pleased God." (Heb. 11:5) and "Walked with God" (Gen. 5:22,24).

You may not be as spiritually knowledgeable as were the apostles, but no doubt you can also lead the same life as our father Enoch, who walked with God. You can live like other men of faith who St. Paul mentioned "They were strangers and pilgrims on the earth… they desire a better, that is, a heavenly country." (Heb 11: 13,16).

Our father Abraham was a man of faith who "Obeyed when he was called to go out " (Heb. 11: 8), and went out after God "Not knowing where he was going." He was a man of faith in accepting God's timing and even when he was to sacrifice his only son, confident that God can raise the dead (Heb. 11:17-19).

His wife Sarah is also considered a hero of faith because she believed the Lord for "She judged Him faithful who had promised." (Heb 11:11).

Heroes of faith are not only those who defended their belief, but are also those who believed in the Lord, walked with Him, who were righteous and pleased Him (Heb. 11:33). Also those who "Were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." and those who "Had trial of mockings and scourgings, yes, and of chains and imprisonment. .. of whom the world was not worthy " (Heb. 11:35-38) "And all these, having obtained a good testimony through faith" (Heb. 11:39). In all these examples, the bible gives us a wide spectrum of the meaning of faith.

Paul tells us that faith "Is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. 11:1).

You hope for many things after death. You hope for eternal life with angels and the saints, to see the Lord in Paradise and resurrect from the dead into a spiritual body. You desire eternal peace after the general resurrection. Faith is without any doubt, complete confidence that these matters exist without having seen them.

Faith Is Beyond The Level Of Our Senses

Faith does not contradict but beyond our senses. Faith is a higher power than our limited senses. Our senses are only capable of detecting physical or materialistic things, but there are other matters, which are beyond the material sense. The senses are also limited in what they can physically detect.

Instruments are often used to sense details and gain information which the senses alone can not accomplish. How much more is it for the non-physical, which the apostle called “invisible things”. Faith is not what is seen by the human eye (2 Cor. 5:7). The soul can not be seen or felt by the senses. The fact that the senses do not feel the soul does not mean that it does not exist but rather, unable to detect it. The senses are limited in scope and the level of the soul.

Faith Is Beyond The Level Of The Intellect

The intellect may guide you to the beginning of the way but faith continues with you on the way to the end. Faith does not contradict the intellect, but leads it to a higher level the mind alone cannot reach.

What the mind cannot understand is called unattainable. We often describe God as infinite because He has no limit. The human mind is limited, and can only understand the limited matters. The mind can bring you to know God and some of His qualities but of faith, “God has revealed… to us through His Spirit.” (1 Cor. 2:10). God shows Himself to the believer to what they can bear to comprehend.

The mind may not grasp many things but must accept them. By nature, the mind does not refuse all that it does not understand. There are for example in our physical world, many inventions only experts can understand. In spite of this, the normal mind can accept and deal with these things without knowing how they work. The mind accepts death, and speaks about it, but does not understand it.

If the mind accepts many things in our world without understanding them, then clearly nothing should deprive the mind from accepting other matters not of this world.

The mind does not understand how miracles happen, but it accepts them and finds joy in them.

A miracle is called a miracle because the mind fails to grasp it and cannot explain it. But the mind accepts it by faith... faith, with infinite power, greater than that of the mind, can perform things the mind fails to understand. This power is the power of God the almighty.

We respect the mind, and at the same time we know its limits. We can not accept the proud mind which desires to understand all things, refusing that some are beyond comprehension.

The mind should be humble to know its limitation “For I say, through the grace given to me, to everyone who is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, as God has dealt to each one a measure of faith“ (Rom. 12.3). The mind should submit matters beyond its level of understanding to faith.

If the mind wanted to nullify all that it does not understand it would end up destroying itself, lose the element of faith and put itself in a very narrow circle of very limited range of understanding.

Believers are moderate, they esteem the mind and use it in religious and spiritual affairs. There are philosophers and people of high intellect among the believers, who do not depend on the mind in pride or trust in its ability to understand all things. However, in simplicity and humility they confess that their minds are limited and are unable to understand all this associated with God. With faith, their hearts and minds accept all that is beyond the level of the mind.

The simple and humble mind accepts faith and miracles.

We mean humble in the sense that the mind is not proud of its own understanding or destroys all that is does not understand. But does not complicate matters or insist on placing everything within its own limits. We will refer to this point later when we speak about the simplicity of faith.

Faith is not only a prayer said, but a life we live. If you are living a life of faith, the fruits of faith apparent in your practical life. Examine your faith against the virtues which are clear in the believer's life and these are many. As the apostle says, “Examine yourselves as to whether you are in the faith” (2 Cor. 13:5).

Conviction Of The Unseen

The apostle said about faith: “Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Heb. 11:1). We want to know what this verse means:

Conviction: is certainty, confidence and belief without doubt. It is not simply an idea, opinion or knowledge gained from reading or hearing about it, but certainty that unseen matters exist.

Here is a clear difference between believers and men of science. The things that are not seen are not in the working field of the researchers. If they are not sure of something, they investigate it thoroughly with their instruments and apparatus. The same also applies to men of material beliefs.

Believers are not like this, they follow God's saying “Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed” (John 20:29).

The believer accepts the creation from nothing. The scientist's research refuses this matter, and refuses that five loaves of bread fed five thousand men (excluding the women and children) and that twelve baskets full of bread where left over. The believer accepts all this.

The believer accepts firstly that God is powerful. He also accepts everything in a certain range of this unlimited power.

The believer frees himself from the doubts of the researches and the investigations of the unbeliever. Not only does he accept the unseen, but moreover, he lives according to and focuses his mind and affection on the unseen according to what the apostle's words. "While we do not look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal." (2 Cor. 4:18).

You will ask, how can I see the hidden? And I tell you by faith. What are then those unseen matters? The first is probably God Himself, His qualities, His works, and all things pertaining to Him.

1- God, His Qualities And Works

God is unseen, as John the evangelist said "No one has seen God" (John 1:18). Actually who can see the divinity? No one! However, in spite of this, you believe in Him with all your heart, and with all certainty. This faith does not at all rely on your physical senses. You may say you see Him with your trained spiritual senses (Heb.5:14). This non-physical senses were trained to see the unseen, and we have the following examples from the Bible:

David said "I have set the Lord always before me; Because He is at my right hand I shall not be moved." (Ps 16:8). So how did he see the Lord in front of him and at his right hand all times? No doubt he saw Him with an eye of faith. In some of the translations it is written "I have seen the Lord...." that means that he is continuously seeing the unseen and focusing on Him with mind and feeling.

With the same meaning Elijah said "As the Lord of hosts lives, before whom I stand"(1 Kin 18:15). How was he able to feel that he stands before God? And how was he able to always see the Lord in front of him? Not through the bodily senses since they can not arouse a believer's heart. But it is by faith that the Lord is before him. It is faith that sees the unseen.

If you are in faith, you will have confidence that God is always before you and will act according to this belief, that God sees you and hears you...

If you live in faith, you are sure that God is in the midst of His people, according to His promise "...I am there in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20) and "I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt.28:20). You do not see Him with the eye of your body, but you believe that He is in our midst. You do not need to see Him physically to believe. You believe without seeing, or you perceive the unseen.

What is a spiritual life my brothers and sisters? It is not simply a shift from what is felt and visible to the unseen.

We live the unseen with confidence that He is in front of us. This becomes the difference between the believer and the non-believer.

The non-believer desires to see everything with his eyes, or else he can not believe. The believer does not allow his eyes, senses, or external happenings shape his beliefs. But his heart believes in the existence of unseen matters. On one occasion, God rebuked His disciple Thomas who would not believe without seeing when God said to him "Do not be unbelieving, but believing", "Because you have seen Me, you have believed. Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed" (John 20:27,29).

We mentioned earlier, faith in God is among the conviction of unseen matters. Not only faith in the existence of God but also faith in His attributes and in His works.

You believe in His goodness and choices for your good, the almighty who has dominion over all things. You believe that He is able to do everything, for "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God" (Luke 18:27), and you believe in God's love for you and for others.

You may not see all these qualities physically, but you believe in them. You believe that God takes care of the universe, and preserves its beauty. You believe that He labours and takes care of every individual. You will either see His work or the results of His work or you will not see anything at all.

2- The Timing Of God

The following were described as men of faith "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off were assured of them, embraced them and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. “ (Heb. 11:13), these people waited for the things promised in faith, and believed in what the Lord said to them.

And things promised “Which God has prepared for those who love Him” were all unseen matters, as explained by the apostle as “Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, Nor have entered into the heart of man” (1 Cor. 2:9).

God’s warnings are also unseen things. Noah believed the Lord when He said that He will flood the whole world even though floods were unknown to Noah. No flood had ever happened before in his days or the days of his ancestors. However, he believed that this which never happened before, would happen. He laboured to complete the ark, enduring the mockery from others, these were years of faith.

Noah heeded to the warning of God, and was therefore considered a man of faith. Through faith he had seen the flood before it happened. Through faith, he entered the ark with his wife, his sons and his son’s wives. Our teacher Saint Paul teaches us, “By faith Noah, being divinely warned of things not yet seen, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark for the saving of his household “ (Heb. 11:7). The others, who did not heed God’s warning, and had no faith in God’s truth were destroyed.

Lot and the city of Sidom also experienced God's warning before it happened. As this was the first time that fire came down from heaven, it was also the first time that a flood happened in the time of Noah.

The people of Sidom who did not accept the warning of God were destroyed as were who also did not believe it in the days of Noah.

God’s warning in regard to eternity and judgement lies ever before us. Inspite of this, many are still immersed in evil and sin as if God had not warned them. They do not fear God in their hearts or judgement in eternity.

We spoke about God, His attributes and works, His promises and warmings as unseen matters, we should also add that:

3- Dwelling Of The Spirit And His Work In Us Are Unseen Matters

Samuel anointed David with oil and the spirit of the Lord came upon him (2 Sam. 16:13). No one saw the unseen Spirit of the lord, but it happened.

No one was able to see the Holy Spirit descend on the new believers when the disciples place their hands on them (Acts 8:17). The Holy Spirit also came on those anointed (1 John 2:20,27). No one saw the Holy Spirit but its fruits showed in their life.

You may be aware that there is an inner power working in you and for you, without your seeing it. It is what the Lord said “But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you” (Acts 1:8). This power, the power of the Holy Spirit, guides you to do good, helps you and protects you from sin.

Here we say that our whole life becomes in fellowship with the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 13:14).

What is this fellowship? How does it take place? How can we be in fellowship with the Godly nature, this an unseen nature? We believe in God's active spirit working in the church, we do not see it but we believe in it.

The apostle said, "Do you not know that you are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwells in you?"(1 Cor.3:16), "Do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God?" (1 Cor. 6:19).

We do not see the Spirit, but we see its fruits.

The Lord said that through the fruits of the holy spirit, we can stand before governors and kings, "For it is not you who speak, but the Spirit of your Father who speaks in you" (Matt. 10:20). How does the Spirit of the Father Spirit speak through us? All these things are unseen matters.

4- The Grace Of God In Us Are Things Unseen.

We attain visits of grace, which fill us with God's love. We do not see it but we feel it. Grace working in us, is without doubt is the work of the unseen things.

Saint John the evangelist said "Grace and truth came through Jesus." (John 1: 17). What is this grace working in us? And the grace that Saint John enjoyed. He said "But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me was not in vain." (1 Cor. 15: 10), and he also says about us “For sin shall not have dominion over you, for you are not under law but under grace.” (Rom. 6:14), and urges Timothy to “Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.” (2 Tim. 2: 1).

We do not see this grace with our physical eye, it is amongst the unseen matters, but we feel its presence in our lives. The grace of God in us is beyond our senses as we accept this grace from God. The church grants grace every time it repeats Saint Paul’s words “The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all.” (2 Cor. 13:14).

Here we move to another point, the element of blessings

5- Blessing Are Unseen

A blessing can be directly from God, from parents, from the church through the priest and all these are unseen matters.

God said to Abram father of fathers “I will make you a great nation; I will bless you And make your name great; And you shall be a blessing. I will bless those who bless you … And in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed“ (Gen. 12:2,3). Abram saw the fruits of this unseen blessings in his life. Isaac blessed his son Jacob and he became blessed. Esau lamented because he lost this blessing (Gen.27). Jacob blessed Ephraim and Manasseh by saying “The Angel who has redeemed me from all evil, Bless the lads” (Gen. 48:16). Ephraim became exceedingly blessed, more than his brother when Jacob placed his right hand on Ephraim's head (Gen. 48:17-20).

What is this blessing? How was it passed from the hands of Isaac and Jacob? How was it given through the apostles, and from the hands of the men of faith?

All these unseen matters we believe in and in its blessings although we do not see them. We ask for the blessings of our mothers, fathers, from priests and men of God. Abram was a blessing to the world according to the Lord's promise to him. Joseph was also a blessing in the house of his master and to all Egypt, as was the blessings of Elijah.

Through all the above examples, we would still be unable to give a precise meaning to the word blessings, for it has wider meaning than our limited vocabulary can describe. An unseen matter, which we can only see its fruits. However, a blessing itself, who can see it and define it?

How was Jesus Christ able to bless through His hands the five loaves of bread and the two fish? This food given out was enough to feed thousands of people, and despite this, twelve full baskets were left over? How did this happen? What was the cause and its effect?. All these things are unseen matters.

6-Faith In The Presence Of Angels And Their Works

We believe in the existence of angels, and the unseen spirits. We may not have seen an angel in our whole life, but despite of this, we believe they close to us "The angel of the Lord encamps all around those who fear Him, And delivers them. " (Ps 34:7). We believe that the angels fill the church, and have confidence that they are with us in all that we do “Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for those who will inherit salvation?” (Heb. 1:14).

Many are glad if they see the Virgin Mary or the saints in a revelation.

It is far greater to believe that they are around you without seeing them. It is not necessary that God sends you a white dove during your evening church meetings, but you believe without seeing that the church is full of the spirits of angels. And the wings of the saints flutter upon it, the saints that God sent to serve humanity.

Gehazi the disciple of Elisha was afraid when he saw the enemies surrounding the city, but Elisha, the man with opened eyes saw the angels defending the it against the enemy. He comforted his disciple by saying “Do not fear, for those who are with us are more than those who are with them” (2 Kin 6:16). Elisha prayed that God would open the eyes of Gehazi to see and the conviction in unseen matters.

7- Belief In The Spirit And The Other World

We can not see the spirit, but presume its existence. When a person dies, we say that his spirit, which we have not seen, has left his body.

Faith is concerned with the destiny of this spirit, if it will go to heaven or to hell. Likewise, with the return of this spirit to the body in the general resurrection, and the destiny of the resurrected person in eternity after the last judgment.

All these matters, the spirit, resurrection, eternity, judgment, heaven, grace, hell, are all unseen matters and through faith we have a conviction in those things. Actually, no one can speak about the eternal life, and all things associated with it, except by faith. Likewise, he who believes in the second life believes in unseen matters.

8- People Believed In The Coming Of Christ Without Seeing Him

Even the Samaritan woman said to the Lord "I know that Messiah is coming" (who is called Christ). "When He comes, He will tell us all things" (John 4:25).

Thus, everyone knew, according to God's promise that the Messiah was coming. They were eagerly awaiting for Him. They understood what had Isaiah said, "Behold, the virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and shall call His name Immanuel" (Isaiah 7:14). They believed nevertheless, although they never saw the Virgin.

The wait by the Old Testament people through faith for the Messiah is like our wait for the Second Coming of Christ in the New Testament. Waiting for Christ's Second Coming on the clouds according to the Lord's promise (Mat. 24:25) and the two angels who appeared to the disciples (Acts 1: 11).

We probably have not seen the Lord on the clouds in the glory of His Father and His saints. And through faith, we believe in His Second Coming in this form although we have never seen it.

9-Redemption Is Also From The Unseen Matters

Jesus redeemed us by taking away all our sins and dying for us through His love "All we like sheep have gone astray; We have turned, every one, to his own way; And the Lord has laid on Him the iniquity of us all." (Isaiah 53:6). John the Baptist also said about Him "Behold! The Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world!" (John 1:29). John the evangelist said "And He Himself is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the whole world." (1 John 2:2). St. Paul said "Having wiped out the handwriting of requirements that was against us." (Col.2:14), and "having made peace through the blood of His cross" (Col. 1:20).

We only see the cross; some may see it superficially! But, all gifts the cross has from love, redemption, forgiveness, cancelling of the written code, taking away the sins of the world, and also what the cross carries from peace, all these are unseen matters. We see them through faith.

Peter - before believing in all this - saw the cross as loss and as shame! Therefore he said "Never, Lord" (John 16:22). The Lord rebuked him because Peter did not see the unseen matters...

The cross represents the goodness of God to us. The rulers at that time did not see this because their eyes were blinded, "For had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.” (1 Cor. 2:8).

10- The Hidden Benevolences Of God

We only thank God for the benevolences we see and know. However, there are also unseen things we should thank Him for. When we enter the life of faith we automatically enter in a life of perpetual appreciation, as the apostle said “Giving thanks always for all things to God the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Eph. 5:20).

In our life, we also have to thank for the temptations, because we feel that they have hidden benevolences in them from God that we do not see. And if we saw them we'll no doubt be singing with James “Count it all joy when you fall into various trials” (James 1:2).

From this, we see that faith gives a spiritual meaning to suffering, pains that God allows for the special grace that is in them. All from unseen matters, but we accept them in faith having confidence in God's love who does good. We also have confidence in what the Bible says “We know that all things work together for good to those who love God.” (Rom. 8:28).

11-The Existence Of God In Our Lives And His Power Working In Us.

How beautiful is the Lord's saying to Jacob “I am with you and will keep you wherever you go, and will bring you back to this land.” (Gen. 28: 15). The Lord was with him and watched over him wherever he went although he has not seen the Lord physically. It is very comfortable for the soul to feel that the Lord is with us and to believe it. This allows us to live in serenity and joy.

The above was not only a blessing to Jacob but the Lord says “I am with you always, even to the end of the age.” (Matt. 28:20).

Our feeling that God is with us, gives us a feeling that a Godly power is walking with us and protecting us.

This power is working in you and is with you from the moment you receive the Holy Spirit and He then accompanies you for the rest of your life. In the time of the first church the people saw the kingdom of God being established in power (Mark 9: 1), “And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they spoke the word of God with boldness.” (Acts 4:31). It was said that St. Stephen was “Full of faith and power, did great wonders and signs” (Acts 6:8), and that he stood before the synagogue “And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spoke” (Acts 6: 10). That is the power in faith. He who believes but is afraid to show his faith is a person with weak faith, he does not believe in the power of God working with him.

The woman who was bleeding for twelve years felt that if she could just touched the edge of the cloak of Jesus a power would come out of Him to heal her, and that is what happened (Matt. 9:22, Lk 8:46).

If you believe in the power of God and hold steadfastly to it, you will surely obtain it.

Let it be that you have this faith and this feeling in all aspects of your life: in your service, prayer and works.

Even in your fall, believe that there is a power to save you. If you are weaker than the devils then believe that God who loves you is stronger, and that He is able to save you from sin. And in strong faith pray to God to grant you the power you need to succeed in your spiritual life, ask Him who "always leads us in triumph in Christ" (2 Cor. 2:14).

Even if you have been waiting long time, just believe that the power of God will reach you and save you. This power of God is unseen, but it exists, and is ready to work with those who ask for it by faith. You need to experience this power which is accompanying you, not only in the life of repentance but in all aspects of your spiritual life so that when you speek, others will feel the strength and the effect of the words you are saying.

The believer is a strong person believing in the power of God working in him.

Paul said, "To this end I also labour, striving according to His working which works in me mightily." (Col. 1:29) and he says about God "To Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that works in us." (Eph. 3:20).

It is faith in the unseen power of God that prompted Saint Paul to claim confidently, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me." (Phil. 4:13).

We ask ourselves: is this phrase only applies to Saints like Paul? The Lord answers "If you can believe, all things are possible to him who believes." (Mark 9:23).

Perhaps this power is a test for our spiritual lives. Are we in faith? Is it a power we are glad of and live in serenity with?

In the church, we rejoice in the many unseen things.

12-What Happens In The Baptism

Saint Paul says "For as many of you as were baptised into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3:27). How great is this sacrament! Who has seen its promise? Ananias told Saul, "And now why are you waiting? Arise and be baptised, and wash away your sins." (Acts 22:16). Who saw these sins being washed away? These are unseen matters, which we accept by faith, as the apostle about Christ, "He saved us, through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit" (Tit. 3: 5). The salvation we obtain by rebirth is an unseen matter, but we believe in it according to the Lord's saying, "He who believes and is baptised will be saved." (Mark 16:16).

What is the meaning of a second birth? Moreover, what does it mean to be born from above, from God, and to be born from water and spirit? The Lord spoke about it in (John 3:3-6). They are all unseen matters; the rebirth from God is an unseen sacrament. We see a person immersed in the baptism font but we do not see how he is reborn from the spirit. Blessed are those who believe without seeing. This, the church calls a sacrament.

The apostle says "Buried with Him in baptism, in which you also were raised with Him through faith ... forgiven you all trespass" (Col. 2:12). He gives the same meaning in his letter to the Romans, and he adds that the old person was crucified with Christ, that we may live with Him (Rom. 6:3-6). Who has seen this death, burial, resurrection, forgiveness of sins, the new life, crucifixion of the old self... these are all unseen matters, but we believe in them.

13-The Sacrament Of The Holy Eucharist

You see in faith the bread and wine in front of you transform into the body and the blood of the Lord. Here you can not rely on your senses to judge, because the bodily senses see only the visible matters. But the spiritual senses heed to what the Lord says "This is my body... This is my blood" (Matt. 26:26,28), "Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, you have no life in you… My flesh is food indeed, and My blood is drink indeed. He who eats My flesh and drinks My blood abides in Me, and I in him." (John 6:53-56).

I do not dispute what the Lord said but I accept it in faith.

In faith we are sure of what we do not see for what is seen is bread and wine. This is what Saint Paul says "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" (1 Cor. 10:16), and he also says "Therefore whoever eats this bread or drinks this cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. For he who eats and drinks in an unworthy manner eats and drinks judgment to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." (1 Cor. 11:27,29).

How can we know if this is the body of the Lord, so as not to gain judgment upon ourselves? Here, by faith, we go beyond the level of the senses, and the level of the intellect.

Our minds make us tired when we accept the sacraments of the church. Our senses do also tire us. We need the simplicity of faith to believe all what Jesus Christ and the apostles said without discussion.

14-To Accept The Sacraments Of Christianity

To accept the laying of hands that Barnabas and Saul obtained from the disciples, so that they could go on to service (Acts 13:2,3), and also the laying of Saint Paul's hands on Timothy (2 Tim. 1:6). We believe that this is a sacrament.

We accept the power the Lord gave in His saying "If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven them; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained " (John 20:23) "Whatever you bind on earth will be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth will be loosed in heaven." (Matt. 18:18).

This honour is unseen but we see it through faith. It is not for everyone and no one can take it by himself, but he who is called by God just like Aaron was (Heb. 5:4).

Seeing the unseen is the real spiritual sight: maybe it is what the Lord meant in His saying to his disciples “But blessed are your eyes for they see " (Matt. 13:16). What do they see? It sees Jesus Christ and His miracles. It sees the unseen just like the revelation, which Saint John saw. Further, how Saint Paul saw the third heaven and many other signs (2 Cor.12: 2,7).

The Lord rebuked those who did not have this spiritual sense by saying “And their eyes they have closed, Lest they should see with their eyes " (Matt. 13: 15) the disciple also wrote the same thing about them (Acts 28:27). The expression they closed their eyes could mean that they did not train themselves to see the spiritualities or that they refused to see the spiritualities because of their interest in material things.

Gehazi did not see what his teacher Elisha saw (2 Kin 6:17). The companions of Saul did not see anything during the Godly vision he saw, the Bible said that they “Stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no one.” (Acts 9:7).

CHAPTER 3

DEGREES AND KINDS OF FAITH

Degrees Of Faith

People differentiate from one another in the kind of faith and the degree of faith they have “As God has dealt to each one a measure of faith” (Rom. 12:3).

Some may exaggerate by saying that a person with little faith is not at all a believer. This judgment is against the teachings of the Holy Bible, as we will see later. Some may mix between the word 'believer' and 'the chosen one', as if these two words mean the same thing. Let us then meditate on the different kinds of faith and its degrees.

1. There is the newly converted believer and the apostle ordered not to swell the believer up with pride or else he will “fall into the same condemnation as the devil.” (1 Titus. 3:6).

2. There are those with little or weak faith, following are examples from Bible about this kind:

a) Those who complain about God's care in food or clothes. The Lord gave them an example of the lilies of the field, and that not even Solomon in all his splendour was dressed like one of these. The Lord then rebuked them by saying “Now if God so clothes the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is thrown into the oven, will He not much more clothe you, O you of little faith?” (Matt. 6:28-30, Luke 12:28).

b) The Lord also rebuked the disciples, when they thought that they did not take bread with them by saying “O you of little faith” (Matt. 14:31).

c) The Lord rebuked Saint Peter when he became afraid after walking with Him on the water and began to sink, the Lord rebuked him and said “O you of little faith, why did you doubt” (Matt. 14:31).

d) Similarly, when the disciples got frightened when the waves covered the ship during the Lord's sleep, then the Lord said to them “Why are you fearful, O you of little faith?” (Matt. 8:26).

Thus fear and doubt in the help of the Lord are evidences of little faith.

e) The apostle gave an example of a person of weak faith who eats only vegetables, the apostle also ordered that one should not judge or mock such a person and said “To his own master he stands or falls. Indeed, he will be made to stand, for God is able to make him stand.” (Rom. 14:1-4).

Here I admire the father of the boy with an evil spirit, when the Lord asked him "do you believe?" so as to heal his son, the father answered "Lord, I believe; help my unbelief!" (Mark 9:24).

The person with weak faith needs those who pray for him, so that the Lord may help him. We should not mock him for God is able to make him firm in faith.

3. There Is A Third Kind Of Faith And That Is The Limited Faith

We mean by that the person who believes in the Lord but in certain limits, and his faith does not exceed these limits. An example of this kind of faith are Mary and Martha, who believed that the Lord is able to heal their brother from sickness so as not to die. If he dies however, then their faith was not yet that far that his being risen from the dead was possible.

Therefore, each one of them said to the Lord "If You had been here, my brother would not have died." (John 11:21,32). When the Lord said to Martha "your brother will rise again" she answered Him "I know that he will rise again in the resurrection at the last day " (John 11:24) and when the Lord went to the tomb and said "take away the stone" Martha said "Lord, by this time there is a stench, for he has been dead four days" (John 11:39).

God did not refuse this limited faith but He gave it a chance to grow.

That's why He said to Martha "He who believes in Me, though he may die, he shall live." and He rebuked her at the tomb by saying "Did I not say to you that if you would believe you would see the glory of God?" (John 11:25,40). He gave her the chance to see the glory of God in rising her brother Lazarus from the dead, so that she believes and also the Jews, who saw the miracle, would also believe.

Here faith came after the miracle and not before it.

May be it happened like that because this miracle was the first of its kind, namely rising a dead after four days of being dead and stinking.

4. A fourth kind, from the weak faith, is the slow heart in faith. Maybe it comes from a slow understanding, or from no comprehension, so the person's faith does not come quickly. This was the kind of faith the disciples of Emmaus had in respect to the resurrection of the Lord. The Lord rebuked them by saying "O foolish ones, and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not the Christ to have suffered these things" (Luke 24:25-26). He then began to explain to them what was written in all the Scriptures concerning Christ. so that they believed, or so that he cures this tardiness in their faith resulting from their little knowledge or little understanding.

In this example we could also say that it is sound to rectify the misunderstandings concerning the faith. It is much better that way than to despise and to mock such persons, it won't bring any good results and it won't read to the real faith.

5. There Is A Dangerous Case Of Faith And That Is The Dead Faith.

Saint James the apostle said, "Faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead." (James 2:17,20). He also said that this kind of faith can not save the person (James 2:14) and he saw that the living faith should have works or deeds to show it, "I will show you my faith by my works." (James 2:18).

6. There Is Also Faith Which Is Not Firm

An example of that is Jesus Christ before being arrested, said to His disciple Peter "Satan has asked for you, that he may sift you as wheat. But I have prayed for you, that your faith should not fail" (Luke 22:31,32). At this time Peter's faith failed but he turned back again to his first power.

7. There Are Other Cases The Bible Describes As Deviating From The True Faith:

a) Saint Paul the apostle said "But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever." (1 Tim. 5:8).

b) He said about the young widows when their sensual desires overcame their dedication to Christ "They desire to marry, having condemnation because they have cast off their first faith." (1 Tim. 5:11,12).

c) He also said "For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil, for which some have strayed from the faith in their greediness, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows " (1 Tim. 6: 10).

d) He said "Guard what was committed to your trust, avoiding the profane and idle babblings and contradictions of what is falsely called knowledge by professing it some have strayed concerning the faith" (1 Tim. 6:20,21).

In all these examples, can we deny the relationship between faith and deeds?

With a false deed it is said that a person denied the faith, or refused it, or went astray from it, or deviated from it. May be with these examples as measures we can examine ourselves, doing what the apostle said: "Examine yourselves as to whether you are in the faith." (2 Cor. 13: 5).

8. The Most Dangerous Case Is To Retreat From Faith

The apostle says "In latter times some will depart from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits and doctrines of demons" (1 Tim. 4: 1). The expression to retreat from faith means that they were in faith and then they retreated from it.

The apostle speaks about the great retreat that will happen before the coming of Christ "for that day will not come until the rebellion occurs" (2 Thes. 2:3).

This is from the general point of view but from the individual point of view the apostle says "Now the just shall live by faith; But if anyone draws back, My soul has no pleasure in him" (Heb. 10:38). Here he speaks about the retreat of a believer who was living in faith.

So long the believer can retreat so the believers are not the chosen ones, because the chosen ones stay in their faith all their lives until they meet the Lord.

The above are illustrations of negative kinds of faith, let us explain the positive ones.

9. To Grow In Faith

Saint Paul the apostle says to the Thessalonians "We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren,… because your faith grows exceedingly" (2 Thes. 1: 3) and he also said to the people of Corinth that their faith increases (2 Cor. 8:7).

Faith is a virtue like all the other virtues, one can grow in it.

10. To Keep The Faith And To Maintain It.

The apostle says about himself in his last days "I have finished the race, I have kept the faith. Finally, there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness" (2 Tim. 4:7-8).

He also says to the Colossians "to present you holy, and blameless in His sight if indeed you continue in the faith, grounded and steadfast, and are not moved away from the hope of the gospel" (Col. 1:23).

11. To Be Firm In Faith

Saint Peter the apostle says about the devil's wars "Resist him, steadfast in the faith " (1 Pet. 5:9).

12. To Be Rich With Faith

Saint James the apostle says "Has God not chosen the poor of this world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which He promised to those who love Him?"(James 2:5).

13. To Be Filled In Faith

It was said about Stephen "they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and the Holy Spirit…And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and signs among the people" (Acts 6:5,8).

The following qualities are said to be indispensable to faith.

14. Faith Working In With Love

Saint Paul the apostle says “For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision avails anything, but faith working through love.” (Gal. 5:6), may be he mentioned the expression 'working faith' because faith without deeds is dead (James 2:20). And the expression 'love' is connected with the whole law and the prophets (Matt.22: 40).

There is a great kind of faith:

15. Faith That Performs Miracles

The Lord spoke about “signs will follow those who believe:” (Mark 16:17), and Saint James the apostle said “And the prayer of faith will save the sick” (James 5:15).

The Peak of this matter is clear in the Lord's saying “All things are possible to him who believes” (Mark 9:23).

16. Faith Of Confidence And Believing

It is what the Lord used to ask for from those whom a miracle happened to them. And sometimes He asked “do you believe?”. He asked the blind men who asked Him to heal them “Do you believe that I am able to do this?” (Matt. 9:28).

The Lord blessed this kind of faith, as well as He said to the Canaanite woman “great is your faith! " (Matt. 15:28), and also to the centurion “I have not found such great faith, not even in Israel!“(Matt. 8: 10).

17. The Whole Faith

Saint Paul the apostle says “Though I have all faith, so that I could move mountains … " he considered that this faith that moves mountains is the whole faith, that is, its peak and nothing beyond it.

KINDS OF FAITH

There is a great difference between two kinds of faith: theoretical faith and practical faith.

1. The Theoretical Faith

It is an intellectual or philosophical faith. It is just the intellectual conviction in the existence of God and in the existence of unseen matters without their influence on life. There is a saying that proves that the devils have this kind of faith. Then Saint James says about the dead faith, which is with no deeds “You believe that there is one God. You do well. Even the demons believe--and tremble!” (James 2:19). The book of Job gives us an evidence to that point because the conversation between God and Satan proves this theoretical faith, then Satan says to the Lord “Does Job fear God for nothing? Have You not made a hedge around him, around his household, and around all that he has on every side? You have blessed the work of his hands, and his possessions have increased in the land. But now, stretch out Your hand and touch all that he has, and he will surely curse You to Your face!” (Job 1:9-11). When Satan took permission from God to act, he went to work against Job, and in the second time Satan told the Lord “Stretch out Your hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will surely curse You to Your face!” (Job 2:5).

Hence Satan believes theoretically that, that is God, and that He is the one who blessed the work of Job, and He is able to strike what he has, and to strike his flesh and bones. Every expression coming out of Job against God is considered a curse towards God. Never the less Satan was fighting the kingdom of God and God's children, and he still does.

The theoretical faith of Satan which Job spoke about is a dead faith according to what the apostle said “Faith without works is dead” (James 2:20). Thus if faith without deeds is dead, then what is the faith that is loaded with bad deeds opposing every goodness.

The theoretical faith is easy. How easy is it to prove the existence of God with the intellectual proofs and the many evidences, the most important is however the practical faith.

This leads us to the important kind of faith

The Practical Faith

It is the faith, which signs show in the practical life, the life of a believer believing that God is in front of him, he sees and feels Him, and he acts worthy of this faith.

He loves this God who he believes in His existence, His care, His protection, and he talks to this loving God through his prayers and his imploring, and he fears to do anything that may hurt His loving heart... and in tranquillity in His actions, he does not fear and does not trouble, but lives in perpetual peace, he yields his whole life to His wise disposal.

In this way, faith leads the believer to many uncountable virtues.

This kind of faith is the subject of this book, as we will as to describe how faith leads our whole life to become a life of faith.

This understanding takes us to another quality in the qualities of the true faith:

2. Perpetual Faith

We mean by that, that it does not have occasions. Our faith does not only appear when being in church, or in a spiritual meeting, or when praying, or when reading the Bible, or when having communion; but this faith is apparent at any time and in any place, outside the church as well as inside. God is always in front of us and is always on our minds with faith that does not change. He is not only the Lord of churches or the Lord of the Bible but He is the Lord of the heart and the mind together and the Lord of life.

3. Faith Without Seeing

This faith does not depend on the senses and is consistent with what the Lord said "Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed." (John 20:29). It is not like the scientists who do not believe in anything unless they get it in their laboratories and convince themselves of it with their eyes and instruments, and not like the Sadducees who denied the existence of the angels, the resurrection and the spirits (Acts 23:8), because they have not seen anything from all that...

4. Faith Of Confidence And Test

It is not faith in God what we read about in the theological books or in the religious institutions, or in the churches and in the Sunday schools with all their kinds.

But it is the faith in God that we test in our lives. We were in companionship with Him, we let Him enter in every detail of our lives, and practically tested what David said "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good" (Ps 34:8). We found that God is wonderful, to the most extent, beyond what the mind can imagine.

Our whole life is fellowship with Christ. We tasted His beauty, His love and His care, we also saw His power and His glory.

We saw how He enters into our problems and solves them in ways that could not have occurred to us before.

Because of our test we gained confidence not built on books, but on what we felt by our hands, that's why our faith is a true faith destined in our hearts.

5. A Strong Faith

It is faith that is able to do anything (Mark 9:23), it can overcome any obstacle, it does not see anything impossible. It was said about Zerubbabel "Who are you, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel you shall become a plain!" (Zech. 4:7).

It is faith that can place its foot in water so as to cross the Red Sea in the days of Moses (Ex. 14:22), and to cross the Jordan river in the days of Joshua (Joshua 3). It can walk inside the great sea or river with waters surrounding it like a gate on its right and on its left without any fear.

It is faith that can strike the rock and water comes out of it (Ex. 17:6). It is faith that walks in the desert without any food or guide collecting its food from the manna descending from heaven day by day (Ex. 16:21) guided by the cloud in the day time and by the fire rod at night (Num 9:15-23).

It is the strong faith which Elijah said through it "There shall not be dew nor rain these years, except at my word" (1 Kin 17: 1), and thus "it would not rain; and it did not rain on the land for three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain" (James 5: 17-18), and that is how he could close and open the sky.

There are many examples about this strong faith. There are many other examples of this kind but they appear in another form.

6. Faith Which Is Steady

It is a steady faith and is not at all affected by external circumstances; it believes in God's love either on mount Carmel or on Golgotha.

Abraham believed in the love of God that gave him descendants from Sarah in hopeless circumstances, exactly how he believed in the love of God as He said to him "Take now your son, your only son Isaac, whom you love, and go to the land of Moriah" (Gen. 22:2).

Abraham when he raised his hand with the knife to slay his son Isaac did not doubt in the love of God, nor in His timing. His faith was never shaken in God, and not even that he will have descendants from Isaac as many as the stars of the sky and the sand of the sea.

Steady faith does not change according to the external circumstances surrounding it, because its confidence is steady in God, and its peace of heart is not affected by the external circumstances but from God Himself, His love and the truth in His timings.

7. Faith As A Gift

There is normal faith and faith which is considered a gift from the Holy Spirit, and no doubt the latter has a higher degree which overcomes the normal faith.

Saint Paul the apostle, says in his speech about gifts "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. … But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to each one for the profit of all: for to one is given the word of wisdom through the Spirit, to another the word of knowledge through the same Spirit, to another faith by the same Spirit, to another gifts of healings by the same Spirit, " (1 Cor. 12:4-9).

Faith as being among the fruits of the Spirit is also seen in (Gal.5:22).

It becomes clear that we can not separate the faith from the works of the Holy Spirit; either from the fruits of the Spirit, or from the Spirit's gifts; and each of them has its degree.

8. The Sound Faith

How often do people believe in ideas or beliefs political or social, and their belief gives them a power to carry these ideas out and to transfer them to the minds of the people.

The sound faith that has a spiritual nature and has a deep relationship with God "exhorting you to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints." (Jude 3) this pure and virtuous faith. This lets us say that Faith is not just a belief but a life... or it is a life built on belief, or it is an experienced belief lived by the people and not just ideas in books.

What we want to speak about in this book is this life, the life of faith.

CHAPTER 4

THE RELATIONSHIP OF FAITH WITH PEACE AND FEARLESSNESS

From the qualities of the believer it is his heart that is full of peace and tranquillity. He does not trouble at all, does not agitate, and does not fear because he believes in God's protection. The believer keeps his inner peace whatever the external circumstances seem to be disturbing.

The person, who feels that he stands alone, fears. He who believes that God is with him does not fear.

1- David the prophet says, "Though an army may encamp against me, My heart shall not fear; Though war should rise against me, In this I will be confident." (Ps 27:3) and if you ask him about the reason in this attitude, then he answers in the same Psalm "The Lord is the strength of my life; Of whom shall I be afraid?" (Ps 27: 1). David experienced God, His help and His protection. When evil men advanced towards him to devour his flesh he said "When the wicked came against me …They stumbled and fell." (Ps 27:2).

He does not receive his tranquillity from the amelioration of the external circumstances surrounding him, but he receives his tranquillity from God's work in these circumstances and in him.

Consequently David says in the psalm of the shepherd "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; For You are with me" (Ps 23:4).

If you have this faith, that God is with you, you shall not fear even if an army besieges you, or if war breaks against you, and even if you walk in the valley of the shadow of death.

2- Perhaps We Could Also See This Peace And Fearlessness In The Meeting Of Elijah The Prophet With Ahab.

Ahab the king, was searching for Elijah the prophet everywhere so as to kill him, and in spite of that Elijah went to stand before Ahab. When Obadiah warned Elijah of the danger Elijah answered "As the Lord of hosts lives, before whom I stand, I will surely present myself to him today" (1 Kin 18: 15), and the meeting took place. Elijah met Ahab the king and was not afraid of him. Elijah even rebuked him for following the Baals (1 Kin 18:18). Elijah did not fear due to his belief of standing in front of the Lord of armies.

3-The Same Way, We See The Encounter Between David And The Mighty Goliath.

David, the young man, was from faith, full of peace and not fearing Goliath. He even spoke in confidence and told Saul the king "Let no man's heart fail because of him; your servant will go and fight with this Philistine" (1 Sam. 17:32). As for the king and his whole army they were afraid and very frightened, because they were not looking to God who is unseen, as David was... but were concentrating their eyes on what they saw in front of them "a champion " who was "Six cubits and a span. He had a bronze helmet on his head, and he was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of bronze." (1 Sam. 17:4-7).

David the man of faith, when he entered the field of war he let God enter with him, and he entered the spirit of faith and peace to the hearts of the men of war with his saying "Who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?… Let no man's heart fail because of him; your servant will go and fight with this Philistine" (1 Sam, 17:26,32), and he told the Philistine "You come to me with a sword, with a spear, and with a javelin. But I come to you in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel" (1 Sam. 17:45), that means: you come to me with seen matters and I come to you with who is unseen.

We will notice that the name of God did not part from David's tongue and it granted him peace.

With this faith, peace of heart and confidence, David advanced towards this Philistine and told him with total confidence in faith "This day the Lord will deliver you into my hand… for the battle is the Lord's" (1 Sam. 17:46,47).

Really the person who believes does not know any fear whatever the circumstances surrounding him were. His peace of heart does not leave him, but faith grants him courage and bravery.

4-In The Midst Of Distress, Whatever Kind It Is, We See Faith Giving Peace.

A distress can be solved in two ways: one is with faith and the other without. A non believer is troubled, afraid and worried, he imagines the worst results, and thinking disturbs him... but the believer accepts it with tranquillity and with a wonderful peace of heart. Some may ask him about his feelings regarding this distress and he answers “God will interfere in this problem and solve it and it will be for the good”. You may ask him how God will interfere, and how God is going to solve it, and he answers: I do not know, and I am not interested, but I know that we do not have to take care of our problems because God takes care of everything.

Really, I do not know how the problem will be solved but I know God who will solve it.

Thus, faith leads the believer to tranquillity. That's how the children of God always live in peace and even in joy, feeling that God is with them and that He takes care of all their matters, and He does for them what they can not do for themselves.

5-Jonah, Being In The Whale's Stomach, Did Not Lose Faith And Peace.

He even prayed to the Lord when he was in the whale's stomach, a prayer full of faith, and he said in confidence "I will look again toward Your holy temple." (Jon. 2:4). He made the Lord a vow and said "With the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay what I have vowed. Salvation is of the Lord" (Jon. 2:9).

Even from inside the whale, he saw the Lord's salvation, getting out of the whale, the holy temple and his sacrifice to the Lord and the fulfilling of his vows.

It is faith the source of all peace and ease, no fear in it and no trouble.

6-When Faith Decreases, Then The Person Fears.

Peter in his faith, could walk with the Lord on the water forgetting all the laws of gravitation. When he remembered them and became afraid, he began to sink. The Lord rebuked him saying "O you of little faith, why did you doubt?" (Matt. 14:31).

That way, the Lord related fear, doubt and little faith together. It is really a wonderful relation: doubt weakens the faith, a weak faith leads to fear, and fear causes the fall.

In the same manner we speak about the disciples when waves covered the ship they were on. Their sight of the agitated waves covering the ship while the Lord was asleep, made them doubt the Lord's care for them. Doubt weakened their faith and so they became frightened, that is why the Lord rebuked them saying "Why are you fearful, O you of little faith?" (Matt. 8:26).

Every time you are afraid, rebuke your self for your little faith. Tell yourself 'where is my faith that God exists and that He controls everyone and sees everything. And where is my faith in God's love, and in His interference in my problems, and in His ability to do everything, and where is my faith in that God does benevolences, and that no doubt He'll do me good?'

All these ideas strengthen your faith and grant you peace and confidence in God's work.

Faith rests the soul, because he who believes in the existence of God does not feel lonely, but has confidence that there is a power beside him.

He believes in the existence of this power that is able to do everything, which is all love and justice, and that can support him. This power works for the best of all and has mercy on all who are in distress. If the believer has confidence in this Godly power then his heart is filled with peace, would not fear and would not be troubled. The non believer on the other hand, tires and stands alone in his distress losing the peace because he does not have confidence in this unseen supporting power.

7-Saint Peter Was In Prison And He Had A Deep Sleep.

King Herod, so as to please the Jews, had James the brother of John, one from the twelve disciples, put to death. He seized Saint Peter also and put him in prison "delivered him to four squads of soldiers to keep him ", He intended to kill him after the Passover (Acts 12:1-4).

In spite of being in prison, with the strong guards, and the expectation of being killed... Peter slept, having confidence in the existence of a Godly guardian that guards him more than the soldiers around him. It was a deep sleep, even when the angel came to rescue him he struck Peter on the side to wake him up (Acts 12:7).

What kind of peace of heart is that, that lets a person sleep in such conditions when being imprisoned, and in that same night King Herod was intending to kill him.

It is faith in God's care if God wanted him to live, or faith in a happy eternity if God wanted him to die as a martyr.

In both cases the matter needs to be joyful. That is why peace was filling Peter's heart. He was sleeping calmly and the external matters did not bother him.

Maybe there was another reason for Peter's peace and that is "Peter was therefore kept in prison, but constant prayer was offered to God for him by the church." (Acts 12: 5).

The believer is he who can sleep in God's embrace and rest. He yields his life and all his troubles to God, and he says to God: as long as you have received these matters so I will not trouble myself with them. For me the matter is finished and is transferred into your hands and I have confidence that You will do the best out of it. I sleep and rest and You will give me sleep "He gives His beloved sleep he loves" (Ps 127:2).

8-Daniel The Prophet And The Three Young Men As An Example Of Faith Full Of Peace.

Daniel was awaiting to be thrown in the lions' den, and in spite of that he did not lose his peace and his courage. He kept his faith and he prayed to God the Lord, with strength and without fear.

In the lions' den, Daniel's heart was stronger than the hearts of all the lions that were with him, as if he were saying: what if they threw me in the den? Is not God also there, or is not His angel there who could close up the mouths of the lions?

Also the three young men they did not fear the fire.

No doubt, faith creates all courage and bravery in the heart and it takes away all fear.

9-The Same Were The Saints On Their Way To Martyrdom.

They were singing songs of joy and were praising God on their way to death. Neither death nor suffering did trouble them. Their faith was in the other life, in a happy eternity, and in fellowship with God in Paradise. All this filled them with peace and joy and were even looking forward to death, singing with Paul the apostle "refresh my heart in the Lord" (Phil. 20).

Death does not frighten the believer but delights him.

10-In Every Distress, Obstacle And Difficulty The Believer Does Not Fear And Does Not Lose His Peace.

A believer overcomes obstacles without fearing them. He feels that God will solve the problems that come across him and that God shall not leave him alone in the problems.

But for the non believer, the problems cause him reluctance and fear, and by his unbelief he becomes a coward. The non-believer may even imagine difficulties and intimidations that do not exist as if "There is a lion in the road! A fierce lion is in the streets!" (Prov. 26:13).

A believer does not fear at all whatever troubles and difficulties face him. He faces them with calmness and security having confidence in God's work with him.

11-With Faith, People Preached About Jesus In Countries Where Human Flesh Was Eaten And They Did Not Fear.

They entered unexplored Africa and in the jungles, and in dangerous areas from weather conditions, nature and habits of their people and they did not fear. Their belief in God the protector, gave them power and courage. Also their faith in the goodness and importance of their work; importance of bringing the words of God to the souls there, so that these souls won't perish in non faith. God gave them power and took away the fear from their hearts so they accomplished their work. They did not mind the emigration, nor the cruelty of the weather, nor the barbarity of the people, nor the venturous weather.

12-By Faith, Noah Took Animals With Him On The Ark Without Fear.

As God told Noah to take animals with him two by two so he did. God who gave the order kept Noah safe from them. They were with Noah as they were with Adam in Paradise, to live with them without fear and with peace in the heart, and so it was.

Noah had faith in God's word to him so he did not fear.

13-He Who Believes In An Idea, Faith In It Will Give Him Power To Carry It Out.

That was how the reformers were in all times and places. They believed in an idea so they endeavoured with all strength to carry it out. Because of their faith, they endured many troubles until they completed their work.

Gandhi for example, believed in the person's right in freedom, and he believed in a policy without violence. This faith gave him a wonderful power with which he liberated India, and gave rights to the opposers whereby they obtained equal rights. He was able to endure so that his followers would not face violence, and so that they don't accept violence. His faith in the idea gave him the power to carry it out. How greater it is then to believe in God!

14-Even Faith In Science Does Miracles, An Example To That Are The Astronauts.

I mean by that, what was being told to them about the non gravity area, and how a person can walk in this area without falling. Who has the courage to walk in the atmosphere without fearing? What made the astronauts carry it out was their faith in the scientists' research. Faith gives power and courage. How it is then to have faith in God!

The difference between the most courageous people and the most fearful is faith.

The courageous person, is he who has faith that no harm will happen to him, or that he believes in his work and its necessity whatever happened to him, or that he believes in the quality of courage and fearlessness. However, the coward is the total opposite of that.

15-Faith In Eternity Gives A Person Peace And Ease.

He has confidence that he will obtain his right if not on earth then in heaven, and that he will not be oppressed either here or there. This is also how he will obtain his full joy: what has not come true on earth will surely come true in the eternal paradise. That is how he lives at ease even if he was like poor Lazarus.

16-Faith In The Power And The Sign Of The Cross Prevents Fear.

He who believes in the cross, the sign of the cross, and the power of the cross feels tranquil as he protects himself behind the cross.

If he is faced with fear or danger and he made the sign of the cross his heart will be filled with peace. He will also feel that a power protects him and this power prevents fear from him. He feels that a power has entered his heart which was not there before. The sign of the cross became a weapon for him.

Another person has a great faith in the effectiveness of the psalms. He reads them at any time or in time of need and he feels that the psalm has a special power that eases his heart and grants him peace. If he was afraid and read Psalm 91 (he who dwells in the shelter of the Most High), or 23 (the Lord is my shepherd), or 27 (the Lord is my light and my salvation) ... he feels immediately peace inside him and that the psalm's power has descended upon him.

We know that the psalms were written through the Spirit (Matt. 22:43-44). As a book from the Bible David wrote them lead by the Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1:21). That is why it has without any doubt, power.

Others have faith in the spirits of the saints and the work of these spirits for them.

Accordingly, they feel peace when they ask for a prayer or help of a certain saint they love and they have confidence in the saints intercession with God.

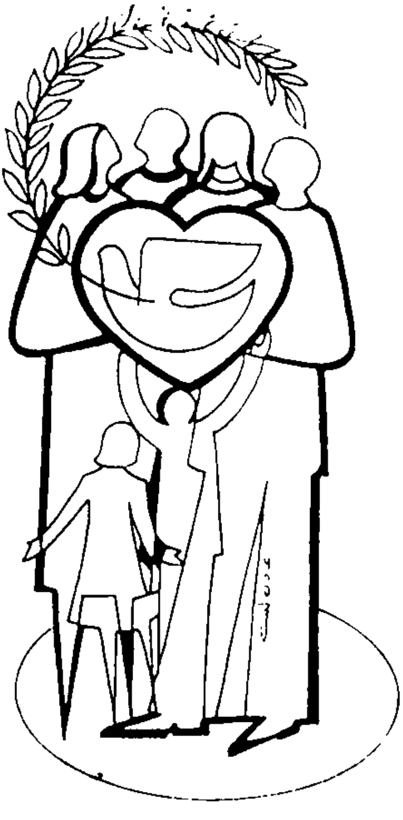
I remember, in this occasion, an Ethiopian monk who was living in a cave in Natroun valley. Once he got lost during the night as he was complaining of weakness in the eyes. Night and darkness fell upon him. So he drew a large circle on the desert land and surrounded it with the sign of the cross at all sides and he then slept inside it. In the morning, he saw traces of foxes and animals outside the circle; they could not enter the circle to harm him.

I remember some time ago, I was travelling on a ship. The waves became agitated and the passengers were afraid. I looked and I saw among the passengers, a very good person. I had much confidence in his holiness so my heart was rested. I said to myself “it is impossible that God allows the ship to sink and this good person, who loves God, is on board”. Yes, the ship was rescued and no harm happened.

It was just the existence of this person as a cause of peace and to strengthen the faith. Maybe, that was also the feeling of other passengers.

There are many uncountable experiences and stories that strengthen the faith but I do not have the capacity to mention them all here.

However what I have mentioned is sufficient for this chapter and now we may enter another sign of the signs of faith.



CHAPTER 5

THE RELATIONSHIP OF FAITH WITH PURITY OF THE HEART

No doubt you are ashamed to err in front of an innocent person you respect.

You may be very cautious in his presence and are ashamed to commit anything terrible in front of him. You don't like that he takes a bad impression about you, or that you fall lower in his eyes You even take care not to err in front of any of your servants or chiefs lest they contempt you, or even lessen their respect of you.

Consequently most of the sins are committed in secret either because of fear or shame. It was said about the sinners that they "loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil" (John 3:19). The Lord said about His enemies who conspired against Him "This is your hour, and the power of darkness" (Luke 22:53).

If you shame yourself or fear from a person who sees you, so how is it then in the presence of God?

If you completely believed that God is present in every place you are, He sees you, hears you and watches over you, no doubt you will be ashamed or afraid to commit anything wrong in front of God. That is why, when Joseph was offered the sin he refused it saying "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" (Gen.39: 9).

He considered it wrong against God to break His commandments and it is disrespectful to God, if he did evil in front of Him without bashfulness. Do you have these feelings? Do you place God in front of you in every sin you fight to do? Do you remember what the Lord said to each of the angels of the seven churches (Rev.)? He told each of them "I know your deeds" (Rev. 2:2,9,13,19 & Rev. 3:1,8, 1 5).

If you knew this you will be ashamed, afraid and will refrain from sin because the fear of God will always be in front of your eyes every time you try to do wrong.

You will even feel ashamed from the spirits of the angels and saints.

If you believe, from all your heart, that God's angels roam around us (Ps 34:7) and that we "made a spectacle to the world, both to angels and to men." (1 Cor. 4:9) then you will, no doubt, be ashamed of yourself from the angels around you. He will not bear to see your sins due to his holiness, so he will leave you... You no doubt will be ashamed of yourself from the spirits of the saints, your relationships and acquaintances... with this shame you will part from sin and approach the life of purity.

If you believe that God is holy, you will be apprehensive to show your uncleanliness in front of this unlimited holiness. Every time you say 'holy, holy, holy' in your prayers you will feel disgrace in your heart due to your past, and you will not venture to commit any sin in the future. When Isaiah the prophet, heard the seraphim glorify the Lord with this Hymn "Holy, holy, holy" he cried out "Woe is me, for I am undone! Because I am a man of unclean lips" (Is 6:2-5).

If you believe that God is the examiner of hearts and reader of minds and that He knows all that goes on in your mind and heart with respect to feelings, plans and plots, then you will be afraid of His knowing your inside. You will be ashamed from His Holiness and by leaving these ideas and feelings you will reach the life of purity.

May be you will say: I believe in all these; that God exists, that He sees and hears everything, that He examines hearts and reads minds... and in spite of that I am still in sin... And I answer you: may be you believe in all these theoretically but you don't live a life suitable to your faith!

He who lives this faith that God sees him, the angels see him, the spirits see him... If he practically puts this idea in his heart he will be ashamed, his soul will lessen in his own eyes, and he will not dare to continue committing sins. According to one of the fathers every sin is preceded by lust, negligence or forgetfulness.

Maybe the person, during sin, forgets God and His kingdom. Maybe he also forgets that he is created in the image and the likeness of God, if he really believed in that. Maybe he is also forgetful of all God's commandments and warnings although theoretically, he believes in all that but he does not live it. He, as we have already said, has the name of a believer but not the life of one.

Consequently, if you believe in eternity then put it in front of you so as not to err.

He who believes that the day of the Lord will come like a thief (1 Thes. 5:2), that God is just, that He'll give everyone according to what he has done (Rev. 22:12), and he who believes in life after death, judgment, repentance, punishment, standing before God in that day when the books will be opened, that ideas and wishes will be revealed, and the works of everyone will be declared in front of all... he who believes in all that, with a practical faith, it will be difficult for him to err but will find a restraint inside him which dissuades him, fearfully and shamefully... and you see him looking forward to meeting God on that day.

Why do I speak about Eternity, I could say from another point of view: If you believe in God's love you will be ashamed to hurt His love.

Many times you say, “God is love” (1 John 4:8,16). During sin you are not in a state of practical faith in His love, or may be this love is not at all in your mind. If you really believe that love is the holy bondage that binds you with God, how will you err? “Whoever has been born of God does not sin” (1 John 3:9).

You will not err if you believe in virtue as a way of life. Many speak about virtue. They invite others to it and glorify it a lot. But they do not live it. They do not practically believe that virtue can be their way of life. If they practically believed in that, then they would have lived a pure life and reproved themselves for their weaknesses.

He who also believes in the evanescence of the world will renounce it and will not err.

As David the prophet, said "I am a stranger in the earth; Do not hide Your commandments from me." (Ps 11 9:19), "For I am a stranger with You, A sojourner, as all my fathers were." (Ps 39:12). That's how the men of faith lived "they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. … they desire a better, that is, a heavenly country." (Heb. 11:13,16). They renounced everything in this world and obeyed the apostle's saying, "Do not love the world or the things in the world. And the world is passing away, and the lust of it" (1 John 2:15, 17).

With this faith, they lived in the world without that the world living in them.

They were those "And those who use this world as not misusing it." (1 Cor. 7:31). With this faith - on a larger scale - lived the monks, hermits, and he mountain inhabitants in devotion and seclusion "Of whom the world was not worthy. They wandered in deserts and mountains, in dens and caves of the earth." (Heb. 11:38).

This is how faith purifies the heart. As the apostle said "And this is the victory that has overcome the world--our falt ." (1 John 5:4). Our faith, that we live on earth "while we do not look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal." (2 Cor. 4:18). Yes, faith in the evanescence of the world lets us overcome it and to become purified from it and what it contains.

Faith in eternity gives the person wakefulness in his conscious. This is how the person will always have a living conscious: to judge every work, not only according to success or failure, or according to its results in our lives... but to judge the matters according to eternity... because every thing he does has an effect on his eternal destiny and may be on the destiny of others... every good he does is kept for him in Heaven, but he will have to give an account of every wrong he does to people or to himself on the judgment day.

Faith in the existence of God in front of us gives the heart humility.

It grants the person humility in the heart and in action, and it grants him fear and solemnity because he stands before God. As it was said about Saint Peter during fishing (after the resurrection of Christ) when he knew that the Lord came "He put on his outer garment for he had removed it" (John 21:7).

In the presence of the Lord, every person stands in solemnity. According to the person's feeling in the existence of God is his measure of solemnity. That is how people differ one from the other in their feelings during prayer, there are those who kneel and those who prostrate in front of God's unlimited greatness... but he who sits during prayer, what can I say about him?

The perpetual feeling that God exists - even not during prayer - makes the person humble because majesty is only to God alone haughtiness of a person is against faith.

Thus, we see angels in this perpetual solemnity.

The Bible says about the seraphim "each one had six wings: with two he covered his face, with two he covered his feet, and with two he flew." (Is 6:2). If the seraphim covers his face and feet in the presence of God due to His beautiful majesty, then what shall we say? And how shall we be solemn and humble in front of Him?

To this degree we see faith purifying the heart and granting it fear, bashfulness and humility.

He who believes in God's importance to him will fear to err wrong, because it is separation from God. How dangerous is it to a person to be separated from God.

As for he who does, not believe in the danger of sin, and the danger in its spiritual results, becomes lenient with it, falls, and loses his purity. See to what extent the feelings of David were concerning the danger of sin when he told the Lord "Against You, You only, have I sinned, And done this evil in Your sight" (Ps 51:4). See also Joseph, he believed that if he did anyone wrong then it was against God (Gen. 39:9).

All these spiritual feelings either they prevent the person from sin like Joseph, or they cause a contrite heart like that of David's. Both are signs of purity of heart.

✣✣✣

CHAPTER 6

SIMPLICITY OF FAITH

Simplicity of faith; many intellectuals seek it but do not find It. Once a philosopher passed by a simple peasant who was praying with strong ardour while kneeling down in solemnity. The peasant was talking to God with persistence and familiarity as if he was standing before Him. The philosopher then said; "I am ready to give up all my philosophy, in return that I acquire something of the faith of this simple man who talks with all this confidence to whom he does not see."

The philosopher felt that this simple man possessed something very precious that with all his philosophy he could not obtain.

Simplicity of faith "believes everything" concerning God and accepts it without investigation or argument, being the argument which the intellectuals are famous for.

This simplicity reminds us of the faith of children who believe in theological and spiritual facts. They have the confidence that does not doubt or lie and does not oppose the mind. Maybe that is one of the reasons that made Jesus tell His disciples "Unless you are converted and become as little children, you will by no means enter the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18:3). The faith of an adult may be deeper, but the faith of a child is more innocent, simple and sincere; true faith has no doubt in it. May your faith be strong like that of a child's.

I do not agree with those who say that children are non-believers. Paul the apostle, tells his disciple Timothy "From childhood you have known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make you wise for salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 3: 15). How great was the praise of Jesus to the child He set in the middle of the disciples (Matt. 18:2,3).

He who follows the simplicity of faith, lives far from the complications of the mind, and lives far from what the mind presents from doubts, thoughts, and may be even misleading. Really, the mind's balance is from God but it may err if separated from faith.

Faith is a kind of splendour God presents to the mind so as to enlighten it.

If the mind stands alone it troubles its owner with ideas. If David, the young man, depended only on his mind and thoughts, he would have feared Goliath. Saul and his army did, but David depended on the simple faith, according to what he told Goliath "This day the Lord will deliver you into my hand" (1 Sam. 17:46). However, how did God give them all in their hands? David did not think of that but left it to God Himself because war is to God (1 Sam. 17:46). This is faith. With it David won the war even more than those who used their minds as to balance the matters.

Simple faith is a matter of confidence and not a matter of thinking.

Even if the mind said that war searches for the balance of powers and how one side will overcome? The answer is simple: if God entered the battle He would change the human idea of the balance of power, and David with God's power will be much stronger than Goliath without this balance of power. Here we see that faith - with its simplicity - does not contradict the mind and its balances.

He who lives in simple faith lives without anxiety because anxiety usually comes because of much thinking or that a person thinks about problems in an intellectual way. But in the simplicity of faith the person does what he can and leaves the more important point to God Himself and is not anxious. His confidence that God works for him gives him peace of heart and does not allow anxiety to overcome his feelings.

He who has this simple faith is not anxious because he leaves God the control of his matters. If he has confidence in the good care of God in his life, so he won't worry about tomorrow, because the God of tomorrow will take care of it, and he will welcome everything that happens in his life with the expression "All things work together for good to those who love God" (Rom. 8:28).

But he who places his thinking in place of the Godly arrangement will tire a lot and carry his anxieties instead of letting God carry them for him.

The confidence of simple faith in granting prayers, takes away anxiety.

Maybe you all know the story of this village that suffered from dryness. The people of the village decided to set a prayer day so that God causes rain to fall. All went to pray and a young girl went carrying an umbrella. When they asked her about the reason, she said: “aren't we praying because of rain? What shall we then do when God hears our prayers and it starts to rain and we don't have any umbrellas?” She had faith that God will grant their prayer. And because of her faith it did rain.

This simple faith has its strength regarding miracles and visions. A miracle can happen to a person and not to another, because the former, in his simple faith, believes and accepts it. But for the latter, the difficulties that his mind presents, make him doubt inside himself about its ability to happen.

The same also happens concerning visions. Some see the Godly visions by their simple faith, and others do not owing to the complications of their minds. This is very clear as it happened during the appearance of the Virgin Mary in her church in Zeitoun, Cairo.

The mind tries to analyse everything scientifically or else it will not believe. As for faith, it needs belief, in simplicity, far from the complications of their minds.

That's why miracles and visions happen mostly to simple people. But for most intellectuals, who disapprove of them and who mock their believers, it rarely happens to them whether to bring them to faith or so that they are a witness of them (John 15:22).

Even the Jews did not believe the miracle of the man who was born blind and said that he who healed him was a sinner (John 9:24). The mind put the problem of healing on a Sabbath in front of them, so that they lost faith (John 9:16).

That is why Jesus said of those and praised the simple “I thank You, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that You have hidden these things from the wise and prudent and have revealed them to babes. " (Matt. 11:25). With the word babes, He meant the simple faith. But those wise and learned in this verse are those who are proud of their knowledge and understanding, and who only depend on their minds far from faith, even some of the spiritual men admitted in sorrow and said: “this is the fruit which Adam and Eve ate from”. they meant by that, the knowledge away from God.

One of the nights I was coming back after visiting one of the fathers in the mountain . Darkness was already spreading and it was told to me “don't come back alone to the monastery so that you don't get lost”. I knew the way quite well and I believed in God's guidance and in spite of that I said “If I get lost then I'll spend the night in the desert till morning.” I had faith in my depth in God's protection, especially that many bedouins spend the nights in the desert without fear, but it was told to me “you are more simple than usual, and you don't know the mountain. Because the mountain is full of insects, bears and there is also the danger of fierce animals and other weather conditions. The mind was always talking in my ears to remove what I had in my heart from simple faith. I came back at that same night to the monastery with one of the fathers. My mind did not give me at that time any chance to experience the work of God with those who walk at night in the desert. Or even, to experience the faith of the bedouin who spends each night there, and the care and protection of God is with him.

I thank God that He compensated me for that later on when I lived alone in the mountain.

The mind can imagine danger everywhere and at the same time does not give the thinking a chance in God's work. On the contrary, it causes the non believer to be afraid.

That does not mean that a person throws himself in jeopardy without wisdom. If a person was as cautious as can be and then found himself in a so called 'danger' then with all simplicity he will have confidence in God's protection and care, and sings with the prophet David "A thousand may fall at your side, And ten thousand at your right hand; But it shall not come near you. " (Ps 91:7).

Simple faith has confidence that God's hand will interfere to rescue and solve any problem.

The person believes totally that God, as a lover of human beings, and doer of benevolences, will no doubt interfere in the problem according to His promise to His children and He'll spread His hands to solve it.

But how does this happen? Simple faith does not ask that.

He accepts the work of grace in simplicity without investigating how it works.

How many times did we try to solve our problems with human methods and all these ways failed and did not have any results. The fingerprints of God were clear beyond all thinking.

Simple faith has confidence in God's work, by belief and experience.

Faith brings the person to trials. Tests deepen the faith and build it on firm basis and not on theoretical ones. Faith and trials strengthen one another until the person reaches conviction and simplicity of faith.

Simple faith has confidence that everything is possible and that nothing is impossible.

It has complete confidence that God can do all things and that no plan can be thwarted (Job 42:2), even if it was difficult to understand it happening. The person believes in the Lord's saying “All things are possible to him who believes.” (Mark 9:23).

That's why simple faith, is beyond all doubts.

It is a strong faith, stronger than any doubt, because doubts are the work of the mind, and the mind is proud of its measures. But the believer has overcome the stage of the mind and has lived in a higher and deeper level. Higher than the doubts is the simplicity of faith.

Some try to transfer the problem of religion to philosophy and to bring it out of the heart and the soul and restrict it only to the limit of the mind.

That was what Saint Paul the apostle fought with all his might, and said "Not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of no effect." (1 Cor. 1:17-20)

No doubt, the simple believer who treasures up his faith in himself, above the level of investigation, is stronger in faith than some theologians who acquire their faith from books. They think they have faith. It may be that faith that can be easily shaken by the opposite intellectual thoughts.

Train yourself to the life of simple faith, and make use of the experience that happens in your life or the life of others, and do not let much thinking keep you far from faith.

CHAPTER 7

OBEDIENCE OF FAITH OR A LIFE OF SUBMISSION

He who believes in God's love, His watching over him, His wisdom and handling of his life, and believes that God does benevolence for him, yields his life to God to plan it as God sees fit.

With that conviction, the person will always live in the obedience of faith.

He yields his life to God and he is tranquil and glad. But he who does not live the life of submission is troubled about his life and keeps on thinking: what am I? and how am I? and when am I? is it necessary that I change what I am doing? or shall I stay as I am? Thinking tires him and most probably he loses his peace, and continues in perpetual search and discusses the matters with himself without end. He neither thinks of rest nor leaves the matter to God like the man of faith.

The faithful person, when he yields his life to God does not set any conditions on God, does not ask Him for guarantees and does not observe God in His work with him.

He has full confidence in God, in His love, wisdom and ability. He has faith that God knows what is good for him more than he himself does. That is why he yields his life in His hands and forgets it there.

As long as he has faith in God's work with him, he won't be able to be anxious or interested, and won't tire himself with thinking. The believer lives at peace more than he who thinks for himself and his thinking tires him.

Many do not accept the submission to God unless their human ways fail!

Their principal way is the complete reliance on their human arms either on the esteem of their minds, abilities and tricks, or their getting used to this way, owing to their false belief, or their conviction that a person turns to God only in time of full disability and failure. Then, at that time they come to God because they have tried every trick and method and did not reach their aim, and because their minds have grown tired and exhausted without any use and there was no other way except through God.

This is not faith but it is the pressing necessity to God. Faith is that you seek God in the trivial as well as in big matters.

Jesus said "For without Me you can do nothing." (John 15: 5). That is because every power we have is from Him, even correct thinking, good will and the ability to work. The intelligence on what we depend on is also from Him. How true the saying of the apostle is "For it is God who works in you both to will and to do for His good pleasure." (Phil. 2:13).

Our work in reality is to participate with God in His work for us. This is our participation with the Godly nature, with the Holy Spirit participating with God at work. Just what Saint Paul the apostle, said about himself and his colleague Apollos "For we are God's fellow workers" (1 Cor. 3:9).

Every work in which God does not participate in is not a holy or a blessed work. The submission of our will and desire to Him is a kind of participation with Him. We are like tools between His hands doing His will. He conducts it as He wishes. It works with His thinking and wishing, or yielding our will with His will as a companionship of senses with the brain.

The most dangerous thing which can threaten the spiritual life is the person's independence of God.

This is the big sin that King Saul committed so God rejected him (1 Sam. 16). He used to work with his thinking and planning away from God's advice and companionship and didn't see that he is in need to let God participate with him at work, as if he was saying: as long as I can do this work I'll do it with all power and with all haste even without prayer because my will alone will carry it out without depending on God, and if I fail, then I will seek Him! God granted me a mind and will so why don't I use them? There are many like Saul.

God granted humanity the mind and will but not independent of Him

And not that it depends upon itself. The Bible says "And lean not on your own understanding" (Prov. 3:5). We remember that the sin of the first human was his attempt to obtain knowledge without God (Genesis 3).

When the human starts to say “I know and I can, so what is the use of God in this matter?” He then becomes separated from the faith of God and enters the faith of ego.

The believer is not only satisfied with the dependence on God but also yields everything to Him.

The believer tells Him: “My life is the work of Your hands and it is now between Your hands, do with it what You want.” Where You want me to go I will go and what You want me to be I will be. I don't have a special will, my only wish is that I do Your will and to be one with Your will to want what You want, You the doer of benevolence.

I don't mention anything that I know. Every human's wisdom is foolishness in God's eyes (1 Cor. 1:20). The real wisdom is from You God, alone. You are the wisdom (1 Cor. 1:24). You are “in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.”(Col.2:3).

I admit that I don't know so I submitted my life in Your hands.

You know good more than I do and You know the good for me more than I do for myself . I have confidence in Your wisdom and in Your planning of my life. Even if You wished me a test or a distress I will accept it from You, considering that it is true good from Your hands. Had it not been for your love for me,

You would not have accepted it for me. Really, in many cases we don't know where the good is!

The life of submission does not know any complaints or murmurs, but accepts everything with satisfaction and gladness.

As long as you have confidence in God's wisdom in His plans for you, then why do you complain, murmur or worry. If murmurs enter your life, this is a good indication which shows that your faith has weakened

He who lives a life of faith and submission lives always in joy and thankfulness.

The believer does not complain but gives thanks. The smile does not leave his lips, cheerfulness does not leave his face and joy does not leave his heart. He believes in God's wisdom and love. He also believes that God's will is always good and useful. He submits to God's will in joy.

He does not submit to God's will due to being obliged or compelled, as if his heart was saying to God “what can I do oh Lord? You are strong and I am weak. All what you do I accept. I am awaiting the end of this matter”. No doubt that these thoughts are of a person who is tired within. He speaks with complaining words in a yielding manner. Yielding is not at all like this.

What is then the meaning of “let Your will be done” in the life of faith and submission?

The believer says in complete satisfaction of heart: “God I submit to your will because I like Your will from the depths of my heart and I have confidence in You and in Your will. Your will has corrected my thoughts, my opinions in certain matters, and improved my way of life... how beautiful are your ways Lord “How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!” (Rom. 11:33). Your will is the most beautiful song on my tongue, and the most beautiful news in my ears. So let your will be done because there is no other will better than that. I feel ignorant beside any will that opposes it, either it is for me or for others.”

The life of submission is not submission to the actual matters without conviction!

It is not submission to the policy of a Godly pressure that imposes itself on you and you are obliged to submit to it either you want it or not

No my brothers and sisters, that is not the meaning of the expression “let Your will be done”. The life of submission teaches us to feel that God's will is the full benevolence, and that it is the best for us and it is a reason for our joy and cheerfulness. That is why David was singing about God's commands and tells the Lord “your commands are my lesson, Your commands are my pleasure. I meditate on your commands and I learn them” (Ps 119).

Submission to God should be real submission and not only be appearance. Some think that they yield themselves to God although they impose their plans on Him. Every time

God acts in his life he tries to stop God and says, “wait Lord so that I see what You do with me.” This matter is not good.

Do this and that so that I rest. This is how he tries to be a planner, he plans and God does!

No, submission is not like that, but it is that you leave God do what He does, and that you are satisfied with what He does, and that you don't resist God's plans with your actions, and don't resist His plans with what you do according to your wishes.

The believer leaves God the planning and does not accept that he plans for himself.

What was the sin of Adam except that he began to manage himself in obtaining knowledge? How to become like God? How to build himself... that is why he fell.

The sin of Satan was that he began to manage himself, to build and to enlarge as he likes.

“I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God… I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High.” (Is 14:13-14). They are plans that resemble daydreaming, Satan planned it for himself and he fell.

The same also happened to those who built the tower of Bable. They planned how to build themselves and they failed.

They said “Let us build ourselves a city, and a tower whose top is in the heavens; let us make a name for ourselves, lest we be scattered abroad over the face of the whole earth.” (Gen. 11:4). Their planning was against them. What they feared was what happened to them “The Lord scattered them abroad over the face of all the earth.” (Gen. 11:9).

The spiritual person does not do that but says in a life of submission “Unless the Lord builds the house, They labor in vain who build it.” (Ps 127: 1).

God is he who builds us and not ourselves, so let us yield ourselves to Him so that He builds us.

That is how we live in peace, having confidence in God's work in us and in His successful work. We stand and meditate and see miracles from His planning. Having confidence that He does benevolence whatever happens in front of us which seem to be strange, difficult or against what we hoped for.

It is not important if we understand what God does, but that we accept it with faith and submission.

The Bible is full of examples of submission in the lives of men of faith:

1-Our father Abraham, for example, whose story with God began with God saying to him “Get out of your country, From your family And from your father's house, To a land that I will show you.” (Gen. 12: 1).

Abraham neither asked why nor where but he just obeyed.

This is the life of submission that does not argue nor discuss, but accepts and obeys without reluctance. It puts the understanding to the side and concentrates itself on God.

2-That is also how Noah was in the arc, Jonah in the whale's stomach and Moses in the Red Sea a life of complete submission.

It is the obedience of faith. As long as God wants that then we do not discuss with Him. What is our limited and weak mind that we discuss with God the unlimited with full wisdom? Moses, at the beginning of his message, argued with God on how to go to Pharaoh (Ex. 3), but when he grew in faith and submission he did not argue about entering the Red Sea.

3-Saint Mary the Virgin, lived her life as an example of obedience and submission.

With her love of virginity, she was told to get engaged to a man and to live with him in one house and she obeyed. God sent her an angel telling her that she will be pregnant and give birth to a son and she told him "Behold the maidservant of the Lord! Let it be to me according to your word." (Luke 1:38) she gave birth to Jesus, and saw all the miracles that surrounded this birth, and was told to escape to Egypt and she accepted all that in obedience of faith. Also in submission she returned from Egypt and accepted to live in Nazareth (Matt. 2:23), about which it was written that nothing good comes from it (John 1:46).

Her motto in this life of submission was her famous saying “may it be to me as you have said”

4-Faith and submission also appear in the apostles' life in their spontaneous obedience to the Lord's saying “follow me”

This is what the Lord told Matthew (Levi) at the tax collector's booth (Mark 2:14). Matthew did not discuss but “He left all, rose up, and followed Him.” (Luke 5: 28) and did not think at all of his responsibilities and work.

The same also happened when the Lord called Peter, Andrew and the rest of the apostles. Peter summarises all the stories of calling in his saying to the Lord “We have left all and followed You” (Luke 18:28).

It is the obedience of faith that follows God wherever He goes without question, inquiry or thinking about the future. Everyone obeyed without knowing where he was going to (Heb. 11:8).

How many times are we called by God but we stay in our relaxed perception of our future?

That's why we ask many questions and try to get what we can from guarantees. With all this we get out of faith and become viewers. To the future we see by our own eyes and are relaxed about it, and not to the unknown future that we see through the eyes of faith, and accept it through a life of submission and obedience.

5-Jeremiah the prophet, is an example of a life of faith, submission and obedience.

He followed God, in faith, in ways he never thought he would go through and at the end, he summarised his experience about the life of submission in his deep saying "O Lord, I know the way of man is not in himself; It is not in man who walks to direct his own steps." (Jer. 10:23). Why doesn't he guide his steps? Because it is God who leads and guides these steps.

This is the life of submission that you walk after God and not after your mind.

You walk not according to your wishes and desires and not according to the wishes and/or advice of other people but after God Himself who leads your life. He puts your life at any place and position according to His wisdom. So ask yourself whether God leads your life, or that a certain desire leads it and which guides your actions and foot steps.

6-Joseph is a wonderful example of the life of submission.

God showed him in a vision that he will reign over his brothers, and that they will all bow to him (Gen. 37: 10). How was the promise fulfilled! His brothers took him and threw him in a well to kill him. They then sold him as a slave. The Midianites pulled him out from the well to sell him to the Ishamelites (Gen. 37:28), and then they sold him to Potiphar to serve in his house.

In all that, Joseph did not murmur against God but kept quiet, and submitted calmly to what God allowed to happen and followed in faithfulness and sincerity. He accepted life as a slave. He was content with misfortune but misfortune did not accept him! He was accused of a bad and false charge and was thus thrown in prison as a criminal.

It did not happen that Joseph asked God why and where are Your promises?

He kept quiet in a wonderful example of a life of submission and obedience of faith, and never murmured. The only time he strayed from the life of submission was after explaining a dream to the king's cupbearer he told him "When it is well with you, and please show kindness to me; make mention of me to Pharaoh, and get me out of this house." (Gen. 40:14) When he did that, the spiritual inspiration answered this demand by saying "Yet the chief butler did not remember Joseph, but forgot him. " (Gen. 40:23). God did not forget Joseph who stayed in prison in life of submission until He got him out in wonderful glory.

7-David the prophet is also an example who led a life of submission and obedience of faith.

David was taking care of the sheep in the wilderness. God sent Samuel the king, to anoint David a prophet. Samuel did it but did not hand him anything from the kingdom and David kept on caring for the sheep without murmuring. He was then chosen a servant of King Saul who was rejected from God as an evil spirit from the Lord tormented him (1 Sam. 16:14) and David did not reclaim.

He did not say I am the King chosen from God so how can I serve this rejected person? But in a life of submission he accepted this situation and he used to calm King Saul when the devils tormented him. Saul kept on going after David from wilderness to wilderness trying to kill him because he was envious and jealous of him. And it never did happen that David discussed with God or told Him 'where is Your timing? Where is the holy anointment for a great prophet?' He did not say 'what evil have I done so that I deserve all this?' But he waited in calmness and submission for the salvation of God and it happened.

8-The disciples of the Lord are also examples who led a life of submission.

The Lord called them for service as He said to Peter and Andrew "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men " (Matt. 4:19). Three years passed by and they were still following the Lord without being of service. They did not 'fish' anyone. Then the Lord was crucified and they feared and closed themselves in the upper room so that the Jews would not get them and in spite of all that they did not complain and remained in the life of faith and submission.

When the Holy Spirit ascended on them on Pentecost the Lord fulfilled His promise. In one day Peter could save three thousand souls due to his preaching and if he would have saved two souls a day he would not have come to this total number. The life of submission tells the apostle "Wait on the Lord; Be of good courage, And He shall strengthen your heart; Wait, I say, on the Lord!" (Ps 27:14).

Yes Lord I will wait for Your promise to save souls. But do I have three years to wait or more? It is like that but "it is not for you to know the times or dates the Father has set by His own authority" (Acts 1:8).

The life of faith does not question the Lord about the range of awaiting His timing.

It does not say to the Lord, why did you Lord make Peter wait more than three years to save souls? And why did you let Abraham wait twenty five years so that Your promise is fulfilled concerning the birth of Isaac? And why did You leave David to be humiliated by Saul ten years until Your promise of becoming a king was fulfilled?

The life of submission does not doubt and sees in a waiting the Godly wisdom.

David was a young boy when he was chosen. Waiting was useful for him till he grew older and mature and so that people's love for him grew day by day. Also, waiting was beneficial for Peter until he completed his discipleship to the Lord and until the Holy Spirit descended over him and the disciples so that they may all gain its power. Also the awaiting of Isaac's birth was beneficial so as to become son of the promised.

9-Of the most beautiful examples of the life of faith is Isaac being presented as a sacrifice.

Abraham was patient for twenty-five years until Isaac was born, his beloved son who took his time. Abraham was completely happy with him. Isaac grew older and then the Lord told Abraham "Take now your son, your only son Isaac, whom you love, and go to the land of Moriah."(Gen. 22:2). Whose heart can bear this? And whose mind can hear that without doubting?

Abraham who led a life of submission did not argue and did not hesitate in carrying it out. But he woke up early the next day and took Isaac to sacrifice him. He did not think to himself more tender than God. He did not doubt at all in God's love and judgement.

Obedience is not only in the simple matters, but appears in its glory in the matters that seem difficult to carry out.

The life of submission appears in entering through the narrow path and the road of agony.

As long as God agrees to this narrow door, so no doubt it will be the best door and we do not discuss it but are happy about it. We say that, through it you test the love of your children and the purity of their hearts and that you prepare crowns for them in Your kingdom.

The martyrs received all kinds of pains in joy with this faith. And all your children Lord "Count it all joy when you fall into various trials" (James 1:2).

NOT KNOWING WHERE TO GO TO

1-This is how our Father Abraham followed God to the unknown, not knowing where the road will lead him, but having confidence that God accompanies him through the way and guides his steps.

2-This is also what happened with the pure apostles when the Lord called them and they followed, and they did not know where. At that time, Jesus did not have a known residence and he did not even have a place to rest his head (Luke 9:58). He wandered through the cities and villages teaching and healing in despite not having an official profession in the Jewish society, not having a known income and when He called His disciples He even told them "Provide neither gold nor silver nor copper in your money belts, nor bag for your journey…" (Matt. 10:9,10, Mark 6:8).

If one asked one of the disciples at the time: What is your work? What is your future with Christ? He would have stood with a big question mark not knowing any answer, except that of a life of submission. It suffices him that he walks with Christ in spite that in his being with Him and in His presence he does not do anything. Jesus does everything and the disciples are just viewers.

3-Another example is of Saint Mark the apostle, when he entered Alexandria.

He entered it without knowing where to go to as there was no church where he could stay, he did not have people there nor residence. On the contrary, idolatry was everywhere and Judaism was opposing the faith. But Saint Mark came to Egypt with faith and God lead him to Anianos although he did not have this matter at all on his mind.

What happened to Saint Mark happened also to the rest of the apostles. The names and places may have been different but the heart of the subject is the same, as if every apostle was saying: if the service was a human work it would interest me to know the plan of my way; but if the service is a Godly work so I don't care where I go to as I am with God so I go wherever He guides me.

4-John the Baptist saw that his duty was to witness the truth. He witnessed the truth and rebuked King Herod saying “you are not justified” and was not interested where it will lead to prison or to death. The message of God was fulfilled in complete obedience of faith. Life and destiny are submitted to God to completion.

This was how Paul the apostle witnessed for the Lord not caring where he got into “trouble or hardship or persecution or famine or nakedness or danger or sword”, he says with confidence in the life of submission “In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us" (Rom. 8:35,37).

In all these matters, the children of God walked in the way of life, the life of submission.

All what interests them is that God leads them and they do not care where to. They have confidence in faith, that it will lead them to green pastures and to wells of living waters. Their experience with God makes them happy with His guidance, having confidence in His love.

5-Isaac, the son of Abraham carried wood and went after his father not knowing where they were heading. All what he learned in his life was submission and obedience, and Isaac went with them to the place of where he was to be sacrificed. Abraham tied him up and put him on the altar on top of the wood (Gen. 22) and raised his knife. All this and Isaac was in complete submission. He did not doubt in his father's love nor in the love of God and he always gained.

With his submission, he gained the obedience of faith, his life and God's promises.

6-The servant of Abraham, when he went out to search for a wife for Isaacs did not know where to go to.

He yielded his paths to God to guide him. God planned everything for him in a wonderful way that he stood astonished in front of it. Everything happened according to what Abraham asked him and that's why he said “Lord has prospered my way” (Gen 24:56).

As if he was saying “I did not know where I was going to, but I knew exactly that God would be with me”

The same nearly happened to Jacob on his journey to his uncle Laban. How beautiful is the Lord's saying to him “I am with you and will keep you wherever you go.” (Gen. 28:15).

7-the Israelites in the wilderness, did they know where they were going to?

They did not know anything. God used to guide them day by day. They would go or stay according to God's guidance. This guidance was in the form of a cloud during the day and a rod of fire in the night. The people were in complete submission to God's guidance not questioning

Moses did not have a plan for his journey nor a map to follow as if he was saying: it is enough Lord that Your cloud is above our heads and the rod of fire in front of us. We do not plan our way but Your good will does. We are happy to be under Your guidance. Wherever Your cloud goes we will also go and wherever it stays we will stay under it.

Let the meeting camp in the wilderness move towards the unknown. It is unknown to us but is in Your knowledge since the beginning of time. That suffices us so that we yield ourselves to this unknown, and we have complete confidence that we are on the way to Canaan.

8-Saint Antonious, father of monks, when he entered the desert did not know where he was going just like Saint Paul, the first traveller.

Also all the other travelling Saints and hermits when they entered the unknown wilderness, did not have a certain place in mind to go to. What was in front of them was the spiritual aim to be alone with God in a calm and peaceful life, yielding their lives totally to Him "lost in the pastures, mountains and the earth's cracks".

If you ask anyone of the hermits where they are staying, they would answer, "On a map I do not know where this place is that I live in but on the map of love I know that I am in the Father's embrace."

9-Some may ask: shouldn't every one make an estimation of the cost according to the Lord's commandment Himself (Luke 14:28)?

The life of faith is far from the science of mathematics so then what does Saint Luke mean by all this that everyone sits down and estimates the costs of outlays?

The cost of outlay are: Do we have enough faith?

Do you have enough faith that you yield the whole matter to God to manage it? You do what you can but this is the least wanted. The principal point is your faith in what God does and your yielding to Him in the whole matter.

This is our way when we wanted to build a church or any project for service or caring. The main question was not "from where do we pay the costs?" but the main question was, does God agree with this project or not? If He allows it then He will take care of the costs, we only have to start it and God's hand completes the work with us "Unless the Lord builds the house, They labour in vain who build it" (Ps 127:1).

Faith is that you close your eyes and look at God.

As long as you open your eyes you will walk with the bodily senses, but if you close this bodily eye you will walk with heart and soul.

If you are convinced with your spiritual senses that God will go with you on your path, walk in it even if it was through the valley of the shadow of death, having confidence that there you will not fear any evil because God is with you (Psalm 23).

10-This is the life of submission, where God chooses for us what we want without choosing ourselves, taking advice from the story of Lot and Abraham.

Lot chose for himself to live in Sodom where the valley was full of tar pits (Gen 14: 10-11) and he knew where he was going to. Abraham did not choose anything for himself, but God told him "Get out of your country, From your family And from your father's house, To a land that I will show you. " (Gen. 12: 1) and what was the result? Lot cursed when he was in Sodom and Abraham saved him (Gen. 14), all his money was burnt and he lost everything there.

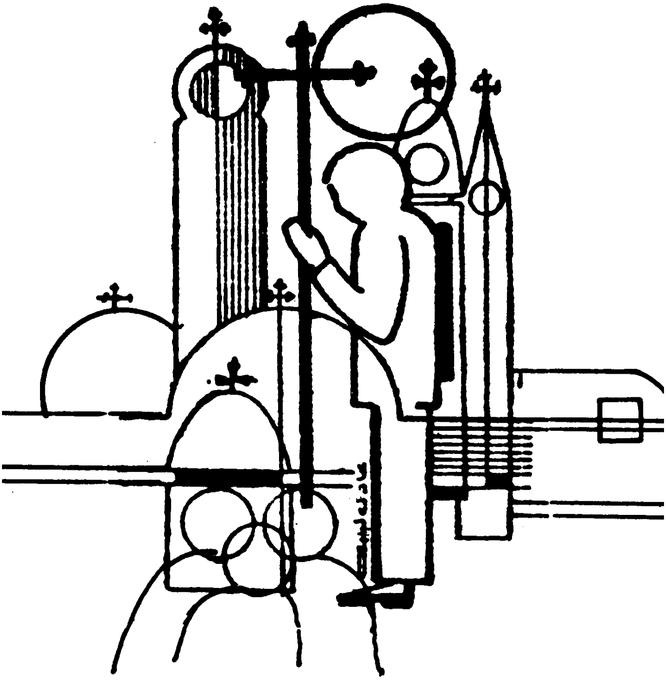
The life of submission of Abraham had a better result.



CHAPTER 8

WHAT STRENGTHENS THE FAITH?

Faith is a virtue like all other virtues; it can be strengthened and it can be weakened.

We do not have to only keep our faith, but to also follow all the means that make it grow and increase (2 Thess.1:3 & 2 Cor.8:7). What are the means that strengthen our faith? The means are:

1-Confidence In God's Qualities

a- Always put in your heart that God is a doer of benevolence, so that you can strengthen your faith with His care and protection. Always tell yourself "All things work together for good to those who love God." (Rom. 8:28). Have confidence that everything God does is benevolent, and that everything He allows to happen will no doubt lead to good whatever seems to be the matter. God showed benevolence to Joseph when he was sold as a slave and thrown into prison without any charges. All these distresses were in God's plan for the good of Joseph, and for the good of the whole region. This is what Joseph told his brothers who sold him "So now it was not you who sent me here, but God." (Gen. 45:8), "You meant evil against me; but God meant it for good, in order to bring it about as it is this day.” (Gen. 50:20).

b- Have confidence that God is a father and that He is the Living One. No doubt, He treats His children with tenderness and gives them good gifts. God said in His fatherly tenderness, that He engraved us on the palms of His hands (Is 49:16). Even if a mother forgot her child, He won't forget us (Is 49: 15). In His fatherhood He gives us all that we need without asking.

c- What also strengthens the faith is to have confidence in God's ability to do anything. He loves and wants benevolences for you. He has the ability to do all, in spite of the fact that the matter would seem difficult.

When our father Abraham raised his hand with the knife to sacrifice his only son Isaac, he had faith that God is loving and He inevitably wanted benevolence from all this. According to God's promise Abraham had full faith that he will have as many descendants from Isaac as the stars of the sky.

He even had faith that if Isaac died, then God was able to raise him from the dead and to fulfil His promise. “That God was able to raise him up, even from the dead.” (Heb. 11: 19). He is “A father of many nations in the presence of Him whom he believed--God, who gives life to the dead and calls those things which do not exist as though they did.” (Rom. 4:17).

Moses entered the Red Sea and crossed it having faith in God's ability to do anything and Joshua entered the Jordan river and also crossed it; each one of them with his people.

d- Have confidence in the God's judgment, and that all His planning is for good, even if you don't understand the depth of His judgment.

If you believe in God's judgment, you will live in peace and accept everything with satisfaction. But if your human mind doesn't have confidence in God's judgement you will live in murmur, complaints and psychological weakness. In all that happens to you say to Him; "I have confidence Lord in Your judgement and in Your good planning. And if my understanding is not paralysed, no doubt, I will know later what You meant, just as Joseph did." Have confidence, that God is a doer of benevolence, that He is a loving father, that He is wise in His planning, that He wants good for you and that He is able. All these things deepen your faith and grant you peace of heart.

2- Confidence in the sincerity of God's timing

God promised our father Abram that He will give him descendants, and He did grant him many descendants, although after a long time. He also promised him that his descendants will be as many as the stars of the sky and so it was, although his wife was barren and he was of old age. God also promised His people freedom from captivity and He did free them.

He promised Elijah to help him in the time of famine and He did aid him with a miracle (1 Kin 17:3-6).

God promised our mother Eve that her descendants will crush the head of the serpent (Gen. 3:15); this promise was fulfilled on the cross.

God also promised that He would pour out His Spirit on all people (Joel 2:28), and He did that day on Pentecost and we are still God's temple (1 Cor. 3:16).

All God's promises are sincere. We need them as much as those long ago in history did.

These are everlasting promises from God. These would comfort us when we live in them and in faith, for example, in His saying; "I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt. 28:20), "For where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there in the midst of them." (Matt. 18:20), "I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries will not be able to contradict or resist." (Luke 21:15), "Do not worry about how or what you should speak. For it will be given to you in that hour what you should speak; for it is not you who speak, but the Spirit of your Father who speaks in you." (Matt. 10:19-20), also His saying about the church that the gates of Hell will not overcome (Matt. 16:18).

May we live in these promises with all our hearts, so as to strengthen our faith.

How wonderful it would be if you, dear reader, collect all these promises and read them frequently and tell yourself. No doubt God is sincere in His promises, and consequently with no doubt I have to live happily with these Godly promises. The continuous remembrance of God's promises comforts the soul and strengthens the faith.

3- Look Unto God And Not Unto The Surrounding Circumstances

The surrounding circumstances were calling for hopelessness before crossing the Red Sea. But Moses called the people to look unto God and said to them "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which He will accomplish for you … The Lord will fight for you, and you shall hold your peace." (Ex 14:13-14).

The same also happened between David and the mighty Goliath. If David looked to the mighty and challenging Goliath he would have been at a loss. But through faith he looked unto God who will capture him in His hand (1 Sam. 17).

The same situation also happened in the miracle of the five loaves and the two fish. When the disciples saw the existing food and the thousands of people present they said "what is this food to these people?" But Jesus looked up and blessed the food. If the disciples also looked up with faith they would have rested and saw the power of God.

Martha looked at the tomb of her dead brother who died four days back, and said that he smells bad. But the Lord told her haven't I told you that if you believed, you would have seen the glory of God (John 11:39-40).

So we always have to look above so that faith enters our hearts.

We have to look up unto the loving God who is able to do anything, and not to concentrate our thoughts on the surrounding circumstances.

Don't look to the power of your enemies, but look unto God who will rescue you from them.

Don't look at the sin which "has cast down many wounded, And all who were slain by her were strong men.. " (Prov. 7:26), but look unto the Lord Jesus who "Will save His people from their sins." (Matt. 1:21).

4-The stories of faith and companionship with men of faith.

That's why when God wanted to give lessons about faith He said "Consider the lilies of the field… even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." (Matt. 6:28-29). So if the grass of the field. God clothed it like that, will He not much more clothe you, O you of little faith?

He also said, "look at the birds of the sky" Once I did what the Lord ordered and I looked at a bird in the garden of the monastery with many grains in front of her. She only picked up two or three and left all the rest and flew "She did not store them in a barn" according to what the Lord said. She had confidence that any place she flies to, the Lord will grant her food, so why should she then store grains? Why should she leave the high and the wide sky to stay near the grains to store them just like what the ant does.

The Lord gave us a similar example in the story of the manna and its collecting.

The people used to collect it according to their needs day by day without storing it and those who didn't obey and stored it, the manna became contaminated with "worms and stank." (Ex. 16:20).

Whenever a person reads stories about faith, about the confidence in God and miracles happened with His Saints, his heart will be filled with faith and he will come to love this life full of faith. Also when he associates with men of faith, he will learn to imitate their lives of faith. God's works in their lives will excite him and he will take them as an example. That is why one of the fathers said, "the news of the saints are appetising".

For this reason, the Bible has registered many stories of faith for us to be affected and to learn from them. It will also strengthen our faith, as we see practical examples of the life of faith we desire. We see in front of us the way the men of faith went along, and how God treated them and how they dealt with Him.

If reading affects a person then there is no doubt, their association with someone of faith will have a deeper affect.

So associate with those who have faith and absorb the faith from them, the person acquires faith by submission more than by learning. Look how they live, how faith appears in their lives, how they deal with God, and how they react towards certain circumstances. If you want to strengthen your faith then no doubt you need this quality.

5-Humility Of Heart And Mind.

The humble person accepts all what comes from God with satisfaction. But the mind that is proud of itself discusses, argues and refuses what doesn't please it. So it won't reach the faith the humble person reaches.

The humble person admits that his mind is limited and that his abilities are limited and that he cannot absorb God the unlimited, and does not perceive the depth of His wisdom and qualities. Thus he accepts in faith and does not doubt. If the mind presses down upon him, he would then lay down before God and say: “Your wishes O Lord are above my understanding and Your works are above my knowledge. Who am I in front of You? All my knowledge is ignorance in front of You”.

I take from You via submission and not via inspection. Give me O Lord the faith of children and not that of philosophers and wise men (Luke 10:21).

Should we put the story of the three young men in the fire without being burnt (Dan. 3:25) in our limited understanding or should we accept it in faith, with a humble mind that bows down before the miracle? The miracle is the work of God who is able to do anything.

Faith needs the humility of the mind and the simplicity of the heart and it also needs:-

6-The Experience With God

Throw yourself in the circle of God, live with Him and test Him, try to rely on Him, at that time you will see His miracles working with you. If however you limit yourself, all your life, in the circle of the mind's abilities, the human wisdom, the experiences of society, the people's advice away from God, you eat everyday from the tree of knowledge... so how will you then reach faith? Therefore, test practically the existence of God in your life. Associate with Him so that you know who He is, and as David the prophet said "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good." (Ps 34:8). Maybe someone will ask: how can we experience God and I say:

7 - See God In Every Matter

People's faith does not grow stronger when they live in a world they separated from God. They give reasons to things that happen in this world without mentioning the name of God, as if the world rotates without God.

a- An example: man can destroy the atom, use nuclear energy, build space-crafts, reach the moon, rotate around the universe and deal with electronics... People then speak out: how great the human mind is! How great is the nation that invented all those things! They fait to mention God's name at all !

But the believer says: Glory be to You God the creator of this human mind. You granted him all the possibilities, and You revealed to him all the power You put in nature. If Your believers know all this, so how is it then with You? You who are unlimited, who can do anything? What strengthens the faith of the believer is that he relates every power and every miracle to God.

b- Another example: a person gets sick with a dangerous illness, and a doctor can save him from death and is healed. The sick person and his family admire the cleverness of the doctor, so they thank him in the newspapers and praise him, and consider him the cause for the healing. The name of God is never uttered on their lips.

But the believer says: we thank God that He healed the sick person, His hand was the doctor's hand.

c- A third example: a person is subjected to an accident that would have costed him his life, had there not been a driver who stopped the car a few centimetres apart from him. The people shout and say: how skilful the driver is, but the believer says: God granted this person a new life.

How beautiful it would be if you search for God's hand in every incident so as to strengthen your faith.

Search for God's judgement and work this in your daily life. At that time you will find God everyday, you touch and deal with Him, and you feel His presence in all what happens to you; small or big. In this way your faith will increase day by day.

d- A fourth example: if a believer passes by a garden and sees a flower it would not be suffice to enjoy it's shape and smell as the intellectual does, but will stand overwhelmed in front of it and will say: what is this beauty O Lord that you created? What are these wonderful colours that the most clever artists cannot create. No doubt the artificial flowers are accurate and beautiful but are not in this arrangement, besides that they are lifeless without ripeness or smell. It is dead beauty.

Really, contemplating about nature in this manner strengthens the faith.

People of the world admire nature as one; they separated it from God. However, he, who wants to strengthen his faith, sees God in nature. Isn't it His creation? This is how David the prophet says "The heavens declare the glory of God; And the firmament shows His handiwork." (Ps 19:1). Do you admire a moony night without glorifying God the creator of the moon? Remember God in this way so that He becomes a practical reality to you and not just an intellectual reality to be proved with evidences ... in this way you will everyday live with God .

If you desire to strengthen your faith then don't separate God's creations from Him.

Do not be overwhelmed by the nature and forget God. Don't be overwhelmed by the human mind and it’s dealing with the matter, but say: You are wonderful Lord! How did you create the material world like this with its qualities and effects so that the mind can use for all these aims. Do we wonder about a doctor who extracts a medicine from a certain material, whereas that we forget God who put this quality in this material so that it can serve the doctor's aim!

Another matter can strengthen your faith:

8-Take The Lord As Your Friend:

If you did this, it would strengthen your faith because you will build a relationship with God and talk with Him without fear.

Many look unto the Lord as God or master. But did you look unto Him as a loving friend, having confidence in Him and in His loyalty. He knocks at your door and asks you to open the door as a friend. He win enter and eat with you and you with Him (Rev. 3:20). If you accepted God's friendship and love, you will enter the real faith... you will look forward to seeing Him as a friend, to tell Him your secrets, and enjoy His companionship and love... you will take care as a friend not to hurt His feelings or make Him angry. He, Himself, will reveal His secrets to you as He did with Abraham (Gen. 18:17).

God wants you like this because He said “No longer do I call you servants… but I have called you friends." (John 15:15) so take Him then as a friend or Father, and believe in His sovereignty and power, and share your secrets with Him, and He will share His with you.

From the stories of friendship and truth with God is the anointment of Elijah to Elisha as a prophet.

One day the Lord told Elijah, the great prophet, “anoint Jehu the son of Nimshi as king over Israel. And Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel Meholah you shall anoint as prophet in your place.” (1 Kin 19:16).

Elijah did not say well, Lord I will anoint Jehua a king, but how can I anoint a prophet in my place? Are you not in need of my services? Does this happen now after my great efforts for your sake, and after standing before King Ahab and his wife Jezebel, and after freeing the land from all the Baal prophets? Did Your love for me change?

Elijah did not say anything of the sort, and did not doubt in God's love, but did what God ordered, having confidence in God's love and wisdom. Elijah considered it familiarity and friendship with God. God made Elijah participate with Him in carrying out the Godly plan, even if he had to anoint a prophet in his place. This does not mean that the friendship between him and God is finished or reduced.

The proof is that God raised him, later on, in glory to Him in heaven (2 Kin 2:1 1). Further evidence that He appeared talking with him on mount Carmel. It is love that God made clear to him even in the matters concerning him. The anointment of a prophet in his place was the beginning of his promotion to a better state greater than being a prophet.

9-Prayer For The Sake Of Faith

Pray for your faith that it may grow and increase.

Tell Him: Give me O Lord, that I believe in You with full faith. Give me that I love and have confidence in You in everything, and to believe that You do me benevolences even if the world was dark in front of me. Let me feel that my mind is much smaller to understand Your wisdom and judgment. I know that You are a doer of benevolences, that You are loving, that You see everything and that You are capable of doing everything, and in spite of that my faith often weakens... so help my weak faith.

CHAPTER 9

WHAT WEAKENS THE FAITH

The devil labours continuously with all his efforts to weaken the believers' faith. He and his companions try to deceive even the elect (Matt. 24:24). It does not suffice them only to weaken the faith, but even to turn their victim into an apostate. This is how in the end of days many will abandon the faith "Giving heed to deceiving spirits and doctrines of demons" (1 Tim. 4: 1). How dangerous is the Bible's saying about the Second Coming of Christ "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man comes, will He really find faith on the earth" (Luke 18:8).

What are the demon's tricks to weaken the faith? There are many: some are terrible, and some are calm that nobody can feel.

1- The Self

The self often opposes and refuses God because He is against its sinful desires.

The self feels that God limits its freedom. It desires things God does not agree upon, to enjoy this (liberty) or this negligence, it thus separates itself from God, as the lost son did. He left his father's house (Luke 15:11-14), to spend his share of the money as he wishes ... or to refuse God. The apostates are examples of those who refuse God and their motto becomes:

It is good that God does not exist, so that I can exist.

These people have misunderstood the real meaning of existence and the real meaning of freedom. Liberty is not doing what one wishes, ones wishes may be wrong, but the true liberty is to be freed from all what assails the self... to be freed from bad habits that enslave him, and from the sinful desires that defiles him, and to be freed from the domination of material things on him. All that prevents the self from souring towards God and from being in God's companionship; which is the real existence.

From the hindrances of the self towards faith is the desire of man to feel himself, in power, greatness and pride and here God sees a rival.

Herod the king found that the new born in Bethlehem will share with him the reign, thus he refused to have faith in Him and tried to get rid of Him by killing Him. The Pharisees are also examples like Herod, who saw Jesus taking their place and familiarity as a teacher. They said one to another "You see that you are accomplishing nothing. Look, the world has gone after Him!" (John 12:19). Many refused the faith in Jesus Christ's resurrection because of their self, so as it won't be evidence against them being guilty of this man's blood (Acts 5:28) ... The self is the greatest hindrance towards faith. Accordingly, the Lord said: "If anyone desires to come after Me, let him deny himself... " (Matt. 16:24).

He also said “He who finds his life will lose it, and he who loses his life for My sake will find it.” (Matt. 10:39). Thus, Saint Peter the apostle says relating to faith "… Nor do I count my life dear to myself, so that I may finish my race “ (Acts 20:24), “I also count all things loss for the excellence of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and count them as rubbish, that I may gain Christ and be found in Him.” (Phil. 3:8-9). Are you like that? or...

Is your faith hindered due to your self? due to your wishes, desires, ideas and passions?

Is there opposition between God and your self? If it so then deny your self, resist it, overcome it, because better is a man who controls his soul than one who controls a city (Prov. 16:32).

The Pharisees, scribes, and priests took much care of their selves. In each self, there were faults. Jesus used to discover these faults without having to speak about them, just by comparison it was revealed. For this reason they hated Him and didn't believe in Him because He was the light that endangered their darkness. Their selves were obstacles on their way of faith.

Not to forget that the devil's self was a reason for losing his faith.

When he thought of how to magnify his soul. How to ascend to Heaven and to sour up above the planets of God, and become like the Most High (Is 14:14), so the (greatness) of his self opposed his faith in God. As for the virtuous angels, they kept their places because, in their faith in God, they considered themselves "His hosts, You ministers of His, who do His pleasure." (Ps 103:21).

Many find their selves beautiful in their eyes, their selves are their idols.

What prevents them from the life of faith: the self love, self esteem, the desire to magnify the self, to fulfil the self's passions, and to run away from everything that reveals this self and reveal it disadvantages ... thus they want their selves to live in an atmosphere of coquetry, courtesy and praise. They are annoyed from every sincere word, every reproach and every punishment. So how can they live in faith?

If you were like this, try to improve yourself so that you humble yourself before God and live in faith.

From the matters that also weaken the faith:

2-Domination Of The Senses.

This is what happened to Saint Thomas the apostle, when he refused to believe in the resurrection of the Lord and said "Unless I see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and put my hand into His side, I will not believe." (John 20:25). God condescended with the weakness of Thomas's faith and permitted him to become sure through his senses by saying "stop doubting and believe" and he rebuked him saying "Because you have seen Me, you have believed. Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed” (John 20:27,29). What the person sees we call observation and not faith, but it may lead to faith.

Is this faith weak? There is even worse: he who sees and still does not believe.

As an example of those are the priests who saw the empty tomb and did not believe in the resurrection. The Pharisees who saw the miracles of Jesus, like the healing of the born blind, and the raising from the dead, and did not even believe. Those refused faith due to reasons in their hearts. What our father Abraham said to Lazarus applies to them “Neither will they be persuaded though one rise from the dead.” (Luke 16:31).

3-Submitting Faith To The Mind

The mind has limits which can not be overcome and that faith is at a higher level than that. But there are people who want their minds to perceive the unlimited, the miracles, and what is beyond their understanding or else, they refuse all this!

They want theology to be submitted to scientific research and this is logically impossible. It is not reasonable that the mind, which is limited, subdues to the unlimited.

Maybe as an example of this, is what is known today as the 'New Theology', in some of the institutes, where they want to submit the soul and miracle to pure scientific research or to symbolic explanations. Thus they deny many of the miracles and many stories told in the Bible and mix it with Mythology! Really, the mind is lost if it tries to think highly of itself more than it ought to (Rom. 12:3), and thus it strays away from faith and tries to lead others in the same obliquity.

4- Associating With Doubtful People:

Just as associating with men of faith strengthens the faith, also associating with doubtful people plants doubt in minds and hearts. If it was persisting, or if, it has a deep effect or if the level submitting knowledge to doubts is lower than the mind, or if it was not deep enough in the faith.

For this reason the Bible prevents the association with apostates.

Saint John, the apostle, says "If anyone comes to you and does not bring this doctrine, do not receive him into your house nor greet him; for he who greets him shares in his evil deeds.. " (2 John 1:10). That is why the church prevented the association with the heretics and the banished.

How many people associate with non Christian groups like the Jehovah witnesses for example, and the result is that they lose their directions. How many church members associated with strange groups or heretics and their beliefs where deeply affected.

Considering behaviour and spiritualities, the association with doubtful people weakens the faith:

You may be faced with a test or a problem and you accept it in faith, and you submit the matter to God thanking Him for everything. Then, a person with little faith visits you, and he keeps on explaining how dangerous the matter is and frightens you of its results, until you lose your peace of heart. It also weakens your faith in God's care and you get worried.

Be careful with whom you associate and with whom you mix your ideas.

This leads us to another point which also weakens the faith:

5- Yielding And Having A Weak Personality:

Mary Magdalene is as an example of those: she saw the empty tomb, heard the angel's good news, even saw the Lord Jesus after His resurrection, held on His feet, heard His voice, and He gave her a message... but after all that she said three times "They have taken away the Lord out of the tomb, and we do not know where they have laid Him." (John 20:2,3,13, 1 5), and in this she denied the resurrection. What is the reason of this transfer? and how did her faith weaken after seeing Jesus and speaking with Him (Mark 16:9, Matt. 28:9)?

Mary Magdalene was young in age. Her personality weakened due to the rumours which the Jewish priests spread against the resurrection. She also weakened due to the disciples' non belief in the resurrection (Mark 16:11,13,14). Doubts and suspicions entered her heart, and she repeated it with her own mouth the rumours she had heard.

The faith of Mary Magdalene could not oppose the rumours and the people's talk.

She was inwardly moved due to the outer pressure and she yielded to it.

Many people are inwardly moved. They retreat. from their first faith, belief or behaviour, due to people's mockery and due to that their personality is being weaker than the opposition.

God wants your personalities to be strong. As the apostle says, "Always be ready to give a defense to everyone who asks you a reason for the hope that is in you." (1 Peter 3: 1 5). The children of God are not weak. They should be like those whose faith or rather spiritualities are moved, and yield to any outer ideas, but apply what the apostle says "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, immovable... " (1 Cor. 15:58).

Our mother Eve is also an example of the kind who deviated from faith due to yielding. She deviated from faith as she heard what the snake said and it resulted in her being sent out of Paradise.

How many go after rumours and believe them. How many utter words about the Second Coming and people believe them. They say the Anti Christ is born, is in an American State, and that he is now 17 years of age!! And also that the world will come to an end this year or another! How many dates did the Jehova's Witnesses fix about the second coming, and nothing has happened...

The faith of some may weaken and they would follow those who claim they saw visions and dreams.

They think that those who claim having visions and dreams are true and that they come from God! They are cheated by what he says, even if it was against their beliefs and spiritual principles. God warned against those people since the days of Moses the prophet, and said:

“If there arises among you a prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and he gives you a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder comes to pass, of which he spoke to you, saying, `Let us go after other gods'--which you have not known--`and let us serve them, you shall not listen to the words of that prophet or that dreamer of dreams, for the Lord your God is testing you to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart."
(Deut. 13:1-3).

Yielding is one of the reasons that weakens the faith. Another reasons is:

6-Fear

Fear weakens the faith and a weak faith leads to fear. Saint Peter, the great apostle, denied Jesus, when he feared. He insulted, cursed and swore that he didn't know the man (Matt 26:74), and thus his faith weakened. Jesus told him before that “I have prayed for you, that your faith should not fail.” (Luke 22:32).

Many lose their faith due to fear. That is why Revelation puts the cowards at the top of the list of perishers, and said “But the cowardly, unbelieving, abominable… shall have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone.” (Rev. 21:8). The placement of the cowardly before the non-believers can mean that the cowardly, due to their fear, became non-believers.

Pontius Pilate believed, deep within, that Jesus of Nazareth was innocent of the charges set against Him by the Jews. He was confident that the Jews handed Him due to envy. He tried to set Him free and said about Him "this Holy person"... but finally he submitted to his weakness, and presented Jesus to be crucified because he was afraid the people would say about him that he was against Caesar...

As for the spiritual person, he doesn't lose his faith at all because he doesn't fear...

From the matters that also weaken the faith is:

7-Lust

Many lost their faith due to lust. As an example of those is Demas who was Paul's helper in preaching. Saint Paul wrote about him "Demas has forsaken me, having loved this present world." (2 Tim. 4:10). Love of the world weakens the faith because it is hatred against God (James 4:4).

Also from the examples of those who lost their faith, due to lust, was the rich young man ... He left Christ "Sorrowful, for he had great possessions." (Matt. 19:22). Thus, the lust for money may weaken the faith.

How many left Jesus for the sake of a woman or a position... Solomon, the wisest on earth, lost his faith due to his lust for women .

He “Loved many foreign women " (1 Kin 11: 1). “When Solomon was old, that his wives turned his heart after other gods; and his heart was not loyal to the Lord his God, as was the heart of his father David. For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites. Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord." (1 Kin 11:4-6).

This great wise man fell, however we believe that he repented in his last days. The book of Ecclesiasts is evidence to his repentance.

Ananias and Sapphira lost their faith for lust of money, so they perished.

They both “lied to God” (Acts 5:4) and also “tested the Spirit of the Lord” (Acts 5:9). They both died perishing.

Balaam lost his faith due to his lust for money. He was a prophet and had beautiful prophecies about Jesus. Finally, he fell in darkness due to “Wages of unrighteousness.” (2 Pet. 2:15). He thus caused people to fall and taught Balak the way of sin (Rev. 2:14)... he and others perished.

The lust for greatness and overcoming others lead to the loss of faith of many:

Maybe one of those was Diotrephes who "who loves to have the preeminence among them". Thus, he opposed Saint John and drove away many brothers out of church (3 John 1:10)

The lust for Godliness lead the great Cherubim to lose his faith and became a devil. He was earlier an angel of light with greatness and beauty.

Indeed, lusts are from the matters that weaken and stop the faith. From the reasons that also weaken the faith are distresses and the pressure of outer circumstances.

8- External Circumstances

As an example of such cases is Gideon. When his faith weakened concerning the care of God, the angel told him "The Lord is with you, you mighty man of valor!" Gideon said to Him, "O my lord, if the Lord is with us, why then has all this happened to us? And where are all His miracles which our fathers told us about, saying, `Did not the Lord bring us up from Egypt?' But now the Lord has forsaken us and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites"? (Judges 6:12-13).

In this way, the faith may weaken if the distress lasted long or if it became stronger.

The faith of the disciples weakened and they doubted when the waves of the sea broke over the boat. They told the Lord "Do You not care that we are perishing?" (Mark 4:38-40).

When the Israelites stayed long in the service of Pharaoh they were discouraged and their faith in salvation weakened (Ex. 4:1).

There is another dangerous reason that weakens the faith:

9-The Devil's Deceptions.

Among these misleading are the false visions. Satan -so as to teach the people- "transforms himself into an angel of light." (2 Cor. 11:14). He can even perform false miracles as it was said about the lawless one at the end of time "According to the working of Satan, with all power, signs, and lying wonders, and with all unrighteous deception among those who perish." (2 Thes. 2:9, 10). The prophet said that this will cause the great rebellion before the coming of Christ (2 Thes. 2:3). Namely the loss of faith due to these Satanic misleading which deceive the people.

Satan may deceive people with dreams and false prophecies, with ideas, misleading and innovations so as to destroy the faith in their hearts... he may even send them "false prophets will rise and show great signs and wonders ." (Matt. 24:24). He may tell them "here is the Christ". The Lord warned "If anyone says to you, `Look, here is the Christ!' or `There!' do not believe it." (Matt. 24:23).

All this needs setting apart, as the prophet said "Do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets have gone out into the world.” (1 John 4:1).

One of the main factors that weakens the faith is 10-Doubt:

Doubt weakens the faith and a weak faith produces doubt... This is exactly what we said about fear. Each of them causes the other or results from the other.

a- Doubt was one of the wars the devil fought against our first parents to lose their faith. He told them “Has God indeed said … you will surely not die? ” (Gen. 3:1-4).

If you are faced with doubts concerning the existence of God or other principle beliefs then do not fear. These are from the enemy's wars and not your denial of faith, and especially, if your heart was refusing it. In such circumstances, you have to pray so that God lifts up these wars from you, and that you change your way of thinking, and occupy yourself with another subject. But if the doubts are from you and you are convinced with them so you have to treat them with a pure spiritual understanding by asking the specialists in theology, and by reading useful books in your subject.

There are other wars against doubt lighter than this, we mention the following:

b- Doubt in God's aid or in that God has abandoned you.

The Lord rebukes this kind of doubt by saying "O you of little faith, why did you doubt?" (Matt. 14:31). Here He relates between doubt and little faith, because the person with a strong faith would never doubt in God's love and care.

They many perpetual distresses may sometimes press on the heart and one would say, "Why do You stand afar off, O Lord? Why do You hide in times of trouble?" (Ps 10:1).

This is blame and not weakness in the faith. It seems to the psalmist that the Lord is standing afar, but the Lord keeps guard with all love and care the security of His children, like the eagle that teaches its youngsters to fly, and like the father who teaches his son to swim. He leaves him for a while to train and gain experience. He watches him with all care. If He sees danger surrounding him, He will hurry to rescue him.

There is also the example of the mother who teaches her son to walk. She leaves him to fall down and stand up again to strengthen his bones and muscles and to learn. However, if she hurried to carry him in her arms after each cry, that will harm him, because he will not learn and his bones will not be strong enough.

The distresses are a school to train us to pray and to hold onto God. We are also trained in faith and we see how God works, and with which strength. For sure, God works, in spite that we do not see Him and do not feel His work.

The person may doubt if he only looked to troubles and not to God. That is how we see Peter doubt when he looked to the water beneath his feet and did not see Jesus who held his hand. As the faith of Peter decreased so did he start to sink and then the Lord rescued him.

The children of God may be like “lambs among wolves” but they do not doubt or fear. As long as the good shepherd is among the lambs so the wolves and not even the lions will endanger them.

Our father Abram did not doubt in God's love and care, in spite of the difficulty of the matter of giving his son Isaac as a sacrifice, as if he were saying:

My heart is not tenderer than the heart of God on my son Isaac, and I can't manage the future of Isaac as God does.

As long as God agrees on something then, no doubt, I have also to agree upon it, because I do not have God's wisdom or love. So let it be His will.

He who does not doubt lives always in tranquillity and peace.

He always lives in security and the outer circumstances will not tire him. He does not impose on God certain solutions, and if God does not carry them out, he will be angry. Nevertheless, he agrees on any solution coming from God according to His Godly wisdom.

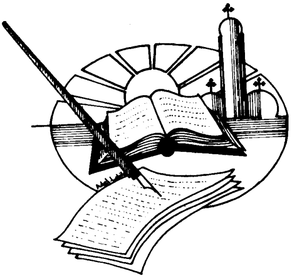
How many troubles does doubt cause in the heart and the mind... like doubt, fear, disturbance and little love. Doubt in itself is tiredness, a burning fire.

Doubt is heated by confidence and love. He who loves a person doesn't doubt in him. That is why we are with God and we do not doubt in Him because we love Him and have confidence in Him. Our faith in Him doesn't allow us to doubt in His Godly and Fatherly deeds with us.

Holy is He in all what He does.

Faith kids fear and doubt. Fear and doubt on the other side kill the faith.

Hold on to your faith because it is a strong and victorious element. You will then live in joy, peace, tranquillity, without fear, and without any doubt all the days of your life.



CHAPTER 10

THE TEST OF FAITH

Are You in the Faith?

There are many ways to test the faith. They could be all deduced from the preceding chapters. We want to say here that the apostle - in the life of faith - does not speak merely about faith, ie. to confine in the name of the Lord, but he specifically mentions:

1-Faith Expressing Itself Through Love (Gal. 5:6):

Test your faith in love according to what the apostle explained in (1 Cor. 13) "Love suffers long and is kind; love does not envy; love does not parade itself, is not puffed up; does not behave rudely, does not seek its own, is not provoked, thinks no evil; does not rejoice in iniquity, but rejoices in the truth; bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things." (1 Cor. 13:4-7).

Do you have all these qualities so as to have a sound faith? The apostle said "And though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing." (1 Cor 13:2). With this love, you can examine your faith... Yet in general, you can examine your faith through your deeds.

2-To Examine Faith Through Deeds

This is because the apostle says "I will show you my faith by my works." (James 2:18). Through deeds you can examine your faith if it is alive or dead because "Faith without works is dead." (James 2:20), and a dead faith can not save anyone (James 2:14).

Saint Paul the apostle, spoke a great deal about the importance of faith. We see him say: "They profess to know God, but in works they deny Him " (Titus 1: 16). In his first letter to Timothy he stresses upon this point and says, "But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever" (1 Tim. 5:8). The young widows overcame their dedication to Christ because "they have cast off their first faith." (1 Tim. 5: 12). Those who love money "have strayed from the faith " (1 Tim. 6:10), and those who are interested in impure and false chatter "strayed concerning the faith." (1 Tim. 6:21).

Therefore, the person's behaviour may be a test of his faith. Saint John the apostle, said "I know Him, and does not keep His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. " (1 John 2:4), "He who says he abides in Him ought himself also to walk just as He walked." (1 John 2:6), and thus we say:

3-Examination Of Faith Through The Purity Of Heart

He who believes that God is in front of him, that God is holy and hates sin, that He is just and rewards everyone according to his deeds, fears to err in front of God, is ashamed to do any wrong, and is ashamed to hurt the heart of the loving God; if he does believe in God's love!.

Here the apostle says "Whoever sins has neither seen Him nor known Him " (1 John 3:6). For sure, he who sins doesn't have in mind that God sees, hears and records everything during his sin committing... and for sure he who does wrong doesn't completely believe that there is a God who "Gives freedom to the prisoners." (Ps 146:7) hence, if one says to the oppressor "God is present" then he fears and trembles.

For sure, the arrogant or the inflated with pride does not feel at all that he is standing in front of God. When Herod spoke to the people they praised him saying "This is the voice of a God, and not of man". Herod was glad to hear this praise. He didn't have faith that God is in front of him, and for this reason, "An angel of the Lord struck him, … And he was eaten by worms and died.".(Acts 12:21-23).

The real believer can be tested through religious devotion without envying the worldly matters. The believers are content with whatever the circumstances are (Phil. 4:1 1).

Another point in the life of faith is:

4-Faith Is Tested Through The Power It Grants That All Things Are Possible:

Do you have the power of faith that you feel that everything is possible?

As the Lord said “All things are possible to him who believes” (Mark 9:23). Do you feel that something is hard or impossible? or that your faith doesn't believe in God doing it? Do you doubt the matters that need miracles? Can you say what Saint Paul the Apostle said “I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me. " (Phil. 4:13). Are you moved by obstacles and difficulties that you say “its not possible”. Does despair fight you?

Despair is against faith and against hope in all directions.

No doubt those who commit suicide have lost their faith and their hope. They felt that there is no solution. They also lost faith in life after death in eternity and their destiny in it.

Also those, who submitted themselves to the present situation, to external pressures or to sin, didn't have any, faith at all that there is power that can support and deliver them.

Faith is a power for those who can use it in confidence and without any doubt.

I fear that faith in the hand of some is used like the staff of Elisha in Gehazi's hand (2 Kin 4:3 1). I also fear the same thing concerning people who carry the cross on their hands: they care to carry it and to perform its sign without having faith in it. They carry the cross but do not have the power that is concealed in it and in its deeds...

Do you think that Moses's stick separated the Red sea? Or is it the faith of Moses carrying and using it in the name of the Lord?

Do you have the power of faith that Moses had when he stretched his hand over the Red Sea?

You often pray, but does your prayer have faith that it gives it strength? How wonderful is the Bible's saying about Elijah “he prayed earnestly” (James 5: 17). This prayer was not ordinary as the prayers of rest of the people, because it could stop the heavens from giving rain and another time it did.

Test your faith through the power you have as a result of your relationship with God.

5-Test Of Faith During Distresses.

Trials face every man. There is a big difference between the believer and the non-believer's souls that accepts this trial. If the trial disturbs your peace then know that your faith is weak.

The believer accepts trials believing that they are for the good and that God will solve them. He is not disturbed or troubled and his heart is not burdened with sadness and pain.

He faces it with three verses, “All things work together for good to those who love God.” (Rom 8:28), “Count it all joy when you fall into various trials ” (James 2: 1), and also “All things are possible to him who believes.” (Mark 9:23). With this faith, his heart rejoices in the trial and people are comforted through his happiness.

The believer places God between him and the trial; the trial disappears and God appears. He remembers God's hand with the saints in all their trial “The Angel of His Presence saved them." (Is 63:9). He remembers what happened to Moses, Joseph, David, Job, Daniel and the three young men. All these increase his faith in God and increase his confidence in God's interference and in His word. Thus he is not shaken in trial, he doesn't doubt, doesn't feel sad and doesn't feel anxious... but says with the psalmist “Our soul has escaped as a bird from the snare of the fowlers; The snare is broken, and we have escaped.…Our help is in the name of the Lord, Who made heaven and earth.” (Ps 124).

He tells the Lord: as long as You accept the trial then I am happy with it.

I do not only accept it or approve of it, but I am happy that the Lord gave me the blessing of this trial... It is lovely what was said about the apostles after being whipped “So they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name.” (Acts 5:41).

The believer sees the door of God open in spite that all other doors seem to be closed.

He believes in God who has the keys of Heaven and earth “He who opens and no one shuts.” (Rev. 3:7). The believer chants with Saint John saying “After these things I looked, and behold, a door standing open in heaven." (Rev. 4: 1). To test the faith is to see all doors open in front of you, and every time you see a closed door in front of you, you say: This is not the door God wants me to go through. God has many other doors open.

There are doors that are now closed but God will open them later on with this faith you can calm down.

6-To Test The Faith According To Some Commandments:

a- From the means to test the faith: the tithes and giving's in general, and especially if this believer was in need, or if he was asked to give from his belongings. The meek in faith say, “if the whole salary or the whole income doesn't suffice, then how is it if reduced by a tenth?” The believer says if I give my tithe, this will bless the rest will be suffice and will even increase.

The tithe is a spiritual test the Lord gave in Malchi: “Bring all the tithes into the storehouse, That there may be food in My house, And try Me now in this, Says the Lord of hosts, If I will not open for you the windows of heaven And pour out for you such blessing That there will not be room enough to receive it. ' (Mal. 3: 10). If the person - in spite of this Godly promise - doesn't pay, so no doubt his faith is weak concerning God's promise and blessing, and even previously the doubt in His commandment.

If this was His the feelings about tithes then what about His commandments: give to the one who asks you (Matt. 5:42), and what about the commandment “Go, sell what you have and give to the poor.” (Matt. 19:21), and what about “Sell what you have and give alms.” (Luke 12:33)?

In this way, your faith is tested: Is God capable of supporting you after you pay your share to the poor? Is He capable to support you without storing up treasures on earth (Matt. 6:19)?

b- Among The Commandments To Test The Faith: Keep The Lord's Day:

Do you rejoice in the Lord's day so that you can spend it with Him? Or do you prefer other several occupations than the Lord? Are material matters more important in your eyes? It's a test for your faith.

c- Also From The Important Tests: To What Extent Do You Love Prayer:

Do you forget it and some times time passes where you don't pray? Does it happen that when you stand up for prayer that you think how it will finish so as to occupy yourself with more interesting matters? Does it happen during prayer that you meander away in your thoughts and forget that you are standing in front of god talking to Him? If you are like that then your faith is not at all strong in God, in His companionship and in the pleasure of speaking with Him.

Thus if we put the remaining praying matters and the remaining clauses of the spiritual works, there will be a field for testing your faith.

7- Test Your Faith In The Extent Of Caring About Your Eternity:

Do you concentrate your mind and heart upon this world and how successful you are and how you enjoy yourself in it?

Are you interested in your eternity and your destiny in the other world, and how you prepare yourself for it, as the Lord says "Let your waist be girded and your lamps burning; and you yourselves be like men who wait for their master, when he will return from the wedding, that when he comes and knocks they may open to him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the master, when he comes, will find watching" (Luke 12:35-37).

The spiritual wakefulness is a deep test of faith.

Where is the faith of those who neglect their eternity, where is their faith? Where is their faith in the other life, and their preparation for it with repentance and good deeds, with love and companionship with God, and with oil in their lamps?

8-Test Your Faith In The Correctness Of Belief

Is it a sound faith without contrivances, false beliefs, and particular understandings? Is it the faith that was once entrusted to the saints (Jude 3) and was entrusted to reliable men who were also qualified to teach others (2 Tim. 2:12). Is it in accordance with the teachings of the Bible, or do you follow people spreading their own teachings? With this, you can test your faith .I say this because belief has a practical effect on the spiritual life.

9-Test Your Faith With The Sound Qualities It Has

Is your faith a practical one? Is it firm that no outer circumstances can shake it? Does it weaken or does it have doubt? Is it filled with peace and doesn't fear? Do you know the life of submission and the obedience of faith? Is your faith a living and prosperous one? Does it grow and increase?

I don't want to mention the rest of the qualities of faith so that you can test yourself.

But if you want more measures, you can read this book again from the beginning.

IN THIS BOOK

In the Name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit
One God, Amen

Are you in the faith?

Do you lead a life of true faith? And do you have the practical, alive and fruitful faith that grows within your heast day after day...?

What is faith then?

What is its importance and what are its kinds?

What is simple faith?

Where does fiath stand compared to the intellect and the senses..?

What is the relation between faith and virtues?

What is life of submission?

What things do strengthen faith? and what weaken it?

All these topics and others as well are treated in this books openly...

This book is one of a series about "Faith, Hope and Love" (1 Cor. 13:13) which will be published successively.

Pope Shenouda III

8311852

Lipscomb, William Lowndes

THE ARMENIAN APOCRYPHAL ADAM LITERATURE

Columbia University PH.D. 1983

University
Microfilms
International 300 N. Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor, MI 48106

Copyright 1983
by
Lipscomb, William Lowndes
All Rights Reserved

This material is presented solely for non-commercial educational/research purposes.

THE ARMENIAN APOCRYPHAL ADAM LITERATURE

William Lowndes Lipscomb

Submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
1983

ABSTRACT

THE ARMENIAN APOCRYPHAL ADAM LITERATURE

WILLIAM LOWNDES LIPSCOMB

Speculation about Adam and other antediluvian figures occupied a prominent position in the literature of post-biblical Judaism and early Christianity. This speculation took the form of aggadah in Jewish apocryphal literature and later rabbinic works, while in Christianity, the New Testament and early church fathers were concerned primarily with the theological significance of Adam's sin. Medieval Christianity maintained an interest in both theology and aggadah, preserving Jewish midrashic materials and creating its own such compositions using Jewish sources. Among these medieval Christian compositions is a collection of Armenian Adam books.

Among these Armenian works, the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works is a single literary work which tells in four chapters the biblical story of the creation through the flood in expanded form. The work exists in two recensions. A critical text of recension I, a superior text form, is presented with a translation, and the text of a single manuscript of recension II is given in an appendix with a translation. The work is a Christian monastic composition, written originally in Armenian between the eighth and fourteenth centuries. It is a composite work, drawing on the Armenian text of Genesis and on literary traditions which it inherited either directly or indirectly from much older Jewish and Christian sources.

The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve is similar to the Armenian Adam Cycle in scope and content, although it opens after the expulsion from the garden and gives much less attention to Seth and Noah. The work is known from only a single manuscript, the text of which is given with a translation. It is a Christian work, composed in Armenian between the eighth and fourteenth centuries. Repentance has drawn on three literary sources, the Armenian versions of Genesis and Ap. Mos. and an earlier form or source of the Armenian Adam Cycle, and has also inherited elements of tradition known from much older Jewish and Christian texts.

Nothing can be said of the date and provenance of The Words of Adam to Seth, but the story of Enoch's garden it contains bears significant affinities with similar traditions in the Armenian Adam Cycle and the Descendants of Adam.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.................................... i

Chapter

INTRODUCTION.................................... 1

A. Adam in Judaism and Early Christianity........ 1

B. The Armenian Apocryphal Adam Books............ 6

1. THE BACKGROUND AND CHARACTER OF THE DOCUMENTS...... 13

A. The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works......... 13

B. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve.............................. 35

C. The Words of Adam to Seth..................... 40

2. LITERARY RELATIONSHIPS.......................... 42

A. The Seven Punishments of Cain................. 42

B. The Annunciation of the Birth of Seth......... 51

C. The Murder of Abel............................ 57

D. Enoch's/Enosh's Garden........................ 62

3. SOURCES AND TRADITIONS.......................... 69

A. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve.............................. 70

B. The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works......... 82

C. Selected Traditions........................... 86

4. TEXT, APPARATUS, TRANSLATION AND NOTES.............102

A. The History of the Creation and Transgression of Adam.......................108

Page

B. The History of the Expulsion of Adam from the Garden.....................128

C. This Is the History of Abel and Cain the Sons of Adam.......................142

D. Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth, to Which We Ought to Give Ear...............172

E. The Words of Adam to Seth.....................206

F. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve, the First Created Ones, and How They Did It.............................221

BIBLIOGRAPHY...234

APPENDIX: THE ARMENIAN ADAM CYCLE OF FOUR WORKS, RECENSION II.................................238

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work would never have come to be without the kind cooperation of many organizations and individuals, only a few of which can be mentioned here. I am most grateful for the generous grants I received from the Whiting Foundation, the National Foundation for Jewish Culture, and Columbia University, which enabled me to travel and to purchase manuscript microfilms. I am also indebted to H. P. Kraus Rare Books and Manuscripts in New York for its kind permission to cite readings from MS B which is in its possession, and to the Anahid Association in London for the use of an Armenian typewriter.

There are many individuals who have given me invaluable advice and encouragement along the way. Most especially, I am indebted to Professor Michael E. Stone of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem for the countless hours he has given to me as my teacher, and for his friendship. Professors Robert A. Kraft of the University of Pennsylvania, James A. Sanders of Claremont Graduate School, and Krikor Maksoudian have also given generously of their time, for which I am grateful. In addition, Professor Robert Somerville of Columbia University helped me through many roadblocks which otherwise could have made this project impossible.

For the determination to see this project through to to its end, I give special thanks to my friend Elisha A. Manning III.

W. Lowndes Lipscomb

London, 1982

DEDICATION

To my beloved father

DABNEY LIPSCOMB

1908-1980

And

To my beloved sister

DABNEY SCOTT LIPSCOMB RADER

1941-1976

INTRODUCTION

I. Adam in Judaism and Early Christianity

Outside of the accounts of primordial history in Genesis 1-11, the figure of the first man Adam held little or no importance for the authors of the Hebrew Bible.[1] In the literature of post-biblical Judaism and early Christianity, on the other hand, speculation about Adam and other ante-diluvian figures became widespread and highly elaborate.[2] The earliest indications of this fascination

---

[1]Adam is mentioned by name only in Genesis and in a genealogy in 1 Chr. 1.1.

[2]The recent interest in traditions about ante-diluvian figures is reflected in the work of the Society of Biblical Literature's Pseudepigrapha group, which has devoted itself to a study of traditions about Seth and Enoch in 1977-78. For the results of their work on Seth traditions, see P. Achtemeier, ed., Society of Biblical Literature 1977 Seminar Papers (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1977), vol. 2, pp. 1-43, and for their work on Enoch, see P. Achtemeier, ed., Society of Biblical Literature 1978 Seminar Papers (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1978), vol. 1. Other important recent studies of Seth traditions include A. F. J. Klijn, Seth in Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic Literature (Leiden: Brill, 1977), and materials relating to the Sethian gnostics in B. Layton, ed., The Rediscovery of Gnosticism (Leiden: Brill, 1980-82), 2 vols., and the works of W. Adler, "Materials Relating to Seth in an Anonymous Chronographer ("Pseudo-Malalas") and in the Chronography of George Syncellus," and D. Berman, "Seth in Rabbinic Literature: Translations and Notes," (Philadelphia: Dept. of Religious Studies, University of Pennsylvania, 1977). These materials should be supplemented by E. C.

with the ante-diluvians are found in Jewish apocryphal works dating from as early as the third pre-Christian century and into the first two centuries of the common era.[3] Such works as the Book of Jubilees, Pseudo-Philo, the Life of Adam and Eve, and the Apocalypse of Moses employed the techniques of midrash to expand the legends of Genesis and to provide new insights about Adam and his earliest descendants. Extra-biblical details such as the names of the many sons and daughters of Adam and Eve, their manner of life after their expulsion from the garden, the ways in which they repented of their disobedience to God, and the specifics of the protoplasts' death and burial are recounted at great length to serve purposes of religious instruction.[4] In the midrashic literature of the rabbis, this growth of interest in Adam continues. Adam is commonly described in grandiose

---

Quinn, The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Life (Chicago: Univ. of Chicago, 1962), which includes a thorough treatment of medieval sources. V. Aptowitzer, Kain und Abel in der Agada, den Apokryphen, der hellenistischen, christlichen, und muhammedanischer Literatur (Wein und Leipzig: R. Löwit, 1922), remains the definitive study of traditions about Cain and Abel. For an extensive survey of legends about all the ante-diluvian figures in Jewish and early Christian sources, see L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1909, 1939), vols. 1 and 5.

[3]For a discussion of apocryphal works relating to Adam, see A. M. Denis, Introduction aux Pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament (Leiden: Brill, 1970), pp. 3-14, and M. R. James, The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament (London: SPCK, 1913).

[4]For a discussion of the nature and function of midrash and an up-to-date bibliography, see M. P. Miller, "Midrash," The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible Supplementary Volume, ed. K. Crim (Nashville: Abingdon, 1976), pp. 593-597.

terms as a man of physical and intellectual perfection, but whose fall brought untold disaster to humanity. Additional non-biblical details are introduced in works which served primarily homiletical purposes.[5]

While the importance of Adam in Jewish apocryphal and rabbinic works is reflected primarily in the growth of extra-biblical legendary materials, the early Christian community found Adam to be the focal point for theological discussions about Christ. In the New Testament, Paul identified Christ as the last Adam who made possible for mankind the salvation which the first Adam had forfeited through disobedience.[6] These notions of Adam's fall and his relation to Christ are taken up in the Greek and Latin fathers, where they serve as the point of departure for discussions of original sin and the nature of Christ in the christological controversies of the first five centuries.[7] [5]For a discussion of rabbinic traditions about Adam, see Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 1, pp. 49-102, vol. 5, pp. 63-131. On rabbinic haggadic method and literature, see J. Theodore, "Midrash Haggadah," The Jewish Encyclopedia (New York: Funk and Wagnalls, 1904), vol. 8, pp. 550-569.

---

[6]On Adam in the New Testament, see esp. W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (London: SPCK, 1970, ed[3]), pp. 36-57, and R. Scroggs, The Last Adam (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1966).

[7]On the role of Adam in the early church, see esp. G. T. Armstrong, Die Genesis in der Alten Kirche (Tübingen: J. B. C. Mohr, 1962) and J. Gross, Entstehungsgeschichte des Erbsündendogmas (München: Ernst Reinhardt, 1960), 2 vols. Adam was also an important figure in gnostic speculation, where his role is quite different from his role in the literature of the church fathers. See E. Peterson, "La liberation d'Adam de l'Ἀνάγκη," RB 55 (1948), pp. 199-

Although these theological emphases were central to the early church's understanding of Adam, it is also to the early and medieval church that we are indebted for the preservation of the earliest midrashic materials about the ante-diluvians contained in Jewish apocryphal texts. Much of this material is believed to have been written in Hebrew and Aramaic by Jewish communities, but for reasons which are not entirely clear it was abandoned by on-going rabbinic Judaism. It was the early Christian communities which translated and transmitted these works; thus most of the books of the Apocrypha owe their survival to their appearance in the Old Greek collection of Jewish scriptures, which became the official Christian version (Old Testament), and most of the books of the pseudepigrapha have survived only in Christian translations and in Christian forms. The Life of Adam and Eve, for example, is frequently thought to be a Jewish work originating in a semitic language in about the first century C. E.[8] The work is known to us, however, in Latin, Slavonic, and Greek recensions, and all the surviving manuscripts contain clear signs of Christian editing.[9] The same may be said of Jubilees, which was 214, and the references to the myth of creation in the various gnostic systems presented by H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion (Boston: Beacon Press, 1963, ed2).

---

[8]See J. H. Charlesworth, The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1976), p. 74, and Denis, Introduction, pp. 6-7.

[9]The Greek recension is entitled The Apocalypse of composed in Hebrew but which survives in full only in Ethiopic,[10] and of Pseudo-Philo, most likely composed in Hebrew, but surviving in full only in Latin translation.[11]

The early Christians did not act simply as translators and interpolators in preserving Jewish apocryphal traditions about Adam and his progeny. It is also clear that they produced haggadic compositions of their own while drawing heavily on Jewish sources. The Cave of Treasures, composed in Syriac perhaps as early as the fourth century and surviving also in Arabic, Ethiopic, and Georgian, claims to contain mysteries which Jesus committed to his disciples and discusses the typological relationship between Adam and Christ at length. But these materials are accompanied by Adam traditions bearing close affinities with much older Jewish sources.[12] The Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve attempts to survey the course of human history from the first Adam until the coming of the second Adam Christ and is Christian

---

Moses, of which there is also an Armenian version. On the recensions, see Denis, Introduction, pp. 3-6. Cf. also the related Penitence of Adam, which survives in Armenian and Georgian.

[10]Fragments of Jubilees have been preserved in a number of languages, and most extensively in Latin and Greek. For a discussion of the surviving Jubilees materials, see Denis, Introduction, pp. 150-162.

[11]The surviving Hebrew portions in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel are most likely retroversions from the Latin. See D. J. Harrington, The Hebrew Fragments of Pseudo-Philo (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1974), pp. 1-5.

[12]On the date and versions of the Cave of Treasures, see Charlesworth, Pseudepigrapha, pp. 91-92, and Denis, Introduction, pp. 8-9.

throughout, but again draws on traditions known to be of Jewish origin in recounting the earliest history of humanity.[13] Similar haggadic materials were preserved in the Armenian and Georgian churches and became widespread in Christian medieval literature.[14] Writing in a different genre and with different purposes, Byzantine Christian historians sought to catalogue the annals of human history beginning from the creation, and drew heavily upon Jewish and earlier Christian texts to reconstruct the history of biblical times.[15] Although most of these Christian Adam books are medieval compositions and do not derive directly from earliest Christianity, their great importance lies in the antiquity of some of the traditions they contain, the uniqueness of some of their exegetical points of view, and their larger contribution to the development and understanding of Adam materials and of medieval Christianity.

II. The Armenian Adam Books

The present work is devoted to a collection of short Armenian Adam books[16] which bear significant affinities with [13]The work exists also in Arabic, and dates from the eleventh century according to Denis, Introduction, p. 9.

---

[14]An exemplary study of the widespread use of Jewish traditions about Seth and the oil of life in medieval times may be found in Quinn, Quest.

[15]The texts are found in W. Dindorf, ed., Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae (Bonn: Weber, 1828-1897), 50 vols.

[16]These books represent only a portion of the Adam materials preserved by the Armenian church. For other the broad range of Jewish and early Christian Adam materials surveyed above. The books, entitled The History of the Creation and Transgression of Adam, The History of the Expulsion of Adam from the Garden, The History of Abel and Cain the Sons of Adam, Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth, The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve, The Words of Adam to Seth, and The Death of Adam,[17] were first published by S. Yovsepeanc'[18] in 1896 in a collection of Old Testament apocryphal texts preserved in the Armenian manuscripts of the Mechitarist monastery in Venice. The Yovsepeanc' edition was based on a single copy of each of those works,[19] and with one exception,[20] has remained the sole basis for works, see H. Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitut'yun (Erevan: Academy of Sciences, 1956), vol. 1, pp. 236-250 [in Armenian] and M. E. Stone, "Report on Seth Traditions in the Armenian Adam Books," in Layton, Rediscovery, vol. 2, pp. 462-464.

---

[17]The text and translation of The Death of Adam are not included in the present work since a critical edition has been published elsewhere; see note 20. Hereafter, the Adam books will be referred to by the abbreviated titles Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, Tidings, Repentance, Words, and Death.

[18]S. Yovsepeanc', Ankanon Girk Hin Ktakaranac (Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1896), pp. 24-26, 307-322 [in Armenian].

[19]Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings were found in consecutive order appended to a copy of the Armenian version of the Apocalypse of Moses in Venice MS 729, in which MS Death was also found. Words appeared in a separate Venice MS (57), while Repentance was published from a copy of an Etchmiadzin MS (914=Erevan Matenadaran 1521) presented to the Mechitarists by F. C. Conybeare in 1893.

[20]An edition of The Death of Adam based on five all subsequent translations and studies. The books have since been translated into English and German,[21] and have become the subject of limited scholarly discussion.

Discussion of these Armenian Adam books has centered primarily around their possible gnostic character, an idea first suggested by E. Preuschen.[22] Preuschen treated these works, along with the Armenian version of the Apocalypse of Moses, as a product of Sethian gnostic circles. He argued that (1) the exaltation of Seth to the status of Messiah parallels what is known of the Sethians, (2) the ascetic tendencies of the Adam books reflect Epiphanius' report that the Sethians were ascetics and abstained from sex and drinking wine, (3) the view of man's losing the light through Adam and regaining it through Seth/Christ in the Adam books corresponds to the gnostic belief that one must seek to regain the light lost in the material world, and (4) the manuscripts as well as collations from an additional manuscript of Abel and Cain has been published by M. E. Stone, Armenian Apocrypha Relating to Patriarchs and Prophets (Jerusalem: Israel Academy of Sciences, 1982).

---

[21]Yovsepeanc' was translated into English in full by Jaques Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament (Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1934, ed2). The English translation of Death in Stone, Armenian Apocrypha, supercedes his earlier translation of the Yovsepeanc' text of Death in "The Death of Adam--An Armenian Adam Book," HTR 59 (1966), pp. 283-291.For the German translation, see E. Preuschen, "Die apocryphen gnostischen Adamschriften aus dem armenischen übersetzt und untersucht," Festgruss Bernhard Stade, ed. W. Diehl, et al. (Giessen: J. Richer'sche, 1900), pp. 163-252.

[22]Preuschen, "Adamschriften."

identification of Jerusalem as the city of the fallen angels (Transgression 9) is characteristic of the anti-Jewish strain in Sethian gnosticism.

Immediate responses to Preuschen's hypothesis were almost entirely negative.[23] It has been argued that fundamental gnostic views are absent from the Armenian Adam books, and the views the books do contain bear no specifically gnostic character.[24] The role of Seth, for example, is no more exalted here than in other Jewish and early Christian writings which are not gnostic,[25] and nowhere do we actually find Seth identified with Christ.[26] Neither

---

[23]A. Götze, Die Schatzhöhle. Überlieferung und Quellen. Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosophisch-historisch Klasse 13/4 (Heidelberg: Carl Winter, 1922), pp. 43-44, however, accepted Preuschen's view. He claimed that the parallels between the Armenian Adam books and the Cave of Treasures point to an earlier Sethian Adam book as a common source, of which the Armenian collection is a later redaction.

[24]J.-B. Frey, "Adam (Livres apocryphes sous son nom)," Supplément au Dictionnaire de la Bible (Paris: Letouzey et Ané, 1928) I, p. 131; E. Schürer, review of Preuschen, "Adamschriften," Theologische Literaturzeitung 26 (1901), p. 173, and Geschichte des Jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Hildesheim: Georg Olms, 1964, repr. of Leipzig, 1909, ed3) 3, p. 398; O. Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1962, repr. of 1913 ed.) I, p. 354; R. Kabisch, "Die Entstehungszeit der Apokalypse Mose," ZNW 6 (1905), pp. 131-132. R. Liechtenhan, "Die pseudepigraphe Litteratur der Gnostiker," ZNW 3 (1902), p. 223, adds, e.g., that the concern with original sin in the Armenian Adam books shows no gnostic coloring.

[25]Frey, "Adam," p. 131; Liechtenhan, "Pseudepigraphe Litteratur," p. 223; Kabisch, "Entstehungszeit," pp. 115, 120-124. Stone, "Seth Traditions," pp. 465-470, finds this true of the Cycle and Repentance, but not of Words and Death.

[26]Frey, "Adam," p. 131; Kabisch, "Entstehungszeit," does one find anything to distinguish the so-called ascetic tendency of the works from non-gnostic forms of early Christian asceticism.[27] The light of which the protoplasts are stripped is also not peculiarly gnostic.[28] While the gnostics may have read these works and found some of their views reflected in them, it was held, they are not gnostic compositions.[29]

More recent research has led to a resurgence of the gnostic hypothesis, although in modified form. G. R. Cardona[30] has pointed to features which the Armenian Adam books share with the Coptic Apocalypse of Adam, and suggested a common gnostic origin for the works. Although he finds no clear gnostic elements in the Armenian Adam books in their present form, he suggests these elements may have been stripped away in an attempt to make the texts conform to orthodoxy. In the Apocalypse of Adam, on the other hand, we find these gnostic elements retained and

---

pp. 120-124.

[27]Frey, "Adam," p. 131; Liechtenhan, "Pseudepigraphe Litteratur," p. 223.

[28]Frey, "Adam," p. 131; Liechtenhan, "Pseudepigraphe Litteratur," p. 223.

[29]Liechtenhan, "Pseudepigraphe Litteratur," p. 223; Kabisch, "Entstehungszeit," pp. 131-132; Schürer, review of Preuschen, p. 173.

[30]G. R. Cardona, "Sur le gnosticisme in Arménie: les livre d'Adam," Le origini dello gnosticismo: Colloquio di Messina, 13-18 aprile 1966, ed. U. Bianchi (Leiden: Brill, 1967), pp. 645-648.

embellished. An example of one such degnosticized tradition may have been discovered by G. Stroumsa.[31] Stroumsa has shown that the name of Seth's sister in The Death of Adam, Esterah, may ultimately derive from Sethian gnostic circles where she was first given this name as well as an important role in the transmission of Seth's pure seed. If such initial probings are to continue, they are most likely to bear fruit in the analysis of such works as The Death of Adam and The Words of Adam to Seth where the role of Seth is most prominent.[32]

Apart from treatments of the gnostic affinities of the Armenian Adam books, attention to these works has been limited and sporadic. Although additional copies of the works have been discovered in various manuscript collections of the Soviet Union, Europe, the United States and the Middle East[33] and their existence in Georgian translation has been suggested,[34] a critical edition remains a desideratum. A thorough examination of the literary relationships

---

[31] G. G. Stroumsa, Another Seed: Studies in Sethian Gnosticism (Harvard University doctoral thesis, 1978).

[32] Stone, "Seth Traditions," p. 469, points to an additional parallel between Apoc. Adam and Death and to Seth's role as a recipient of revelation in Words.

[33] For a list of known MSS, see Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitutʻyun I, pp. 236-250, and Stone, "Seth Traditions," pp. 460-462. MSS B and D in the edition below were unknown prior to the present study.

[34] W. Lüdtke, "Georgische Adam-Bücher," ZAW 38 (1919), pp. 155-168.

between the various texts has not been carried out, although initial probings have indicated the importance of such a study.[35] It has been observed that the Armenian Adam books contain traditions which bear significant affinities with a broad spectrum of Jewish and Christian Adam materials, but no comprehensive search for the sources of these texts has been undertaken.[36] Finally, questions of the role of this literature in the Armenian church have not been addressed. It is hoped that the present work may make some contribution to our knowledge of these relatively unexplored areas.

---

[35] See the preliminary suggestions of M. Stone in "Seth Traditions," pp. 464-465, which are treated below.

[36] Some of these affinities were observed in passing by Frye, "Adam," pp. 125-132 and Götze, Schatzhöhle, pp. 41-44, 49-50, 59. Stone, "Death of Adam," has pointed to parallel traditions in his commentary on that text, and W. L. Lipscomb, "Foreign Influences on the Armenian Adam Books," Proceedings of the First Dr. H. Markarian Conference on Classical Armenian Culture: Influences and Creativity (Chico, Ca.: Scholars Press, forthcoming), has addressed the question of the origin of a select group of Armenian Adam traditions.

Chapter 1

THE BACKGROUND AND CHARACTER OF THE DOCUMENTS

A. The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works

Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings will be shown below to be component parts of a single document, The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works. Taken as a unit, they present an expanded version of the biblical account of the primordial history recorded in Genesis 1-11. Rather than reporting details of the lives of the antediluvians known from the Bible, the Adam Cycle is almost totally devoted to relating incidents in the lives of Adam, Eve, and their descendants which are non-biblical and which serve to flesh out the sketchy scenario provided in Genesis. The Adam Cycle tells in great detail the story of Adam and Eve's life in the Garden of Eden, and the sequence of events which led to their fall, their expulsion from the garden, and their consequent captivity to Satan. Thereafter the focus is directed to Adam and Eve's offspring. The reader is told of the birth and early life of Abel and Cain, Cain's murder of Abel, Cain's ensuing punishment and Seth's birth as a replacement for Abel. The generations of Seth and Cain live in separation by divine command. When that command is finally disobeyed, the scene is set for the story of the flood and the resettlement of Noah's children.

1. The Manuscripts

The manuscript evidence for The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works is as follows:[1]

Recension I

Y. Venice, Mechitarist Monastery of San Lazarro, Old MS 729, undated. The MS was not made available for the present work, but a printed copy of the text was published by Yovsepeanc', Ankanon Girk, pp. 307-324 (=Yov.). Yov. is the source of all readings attributed to Y in the present work. Y contains the complete text of the Adam Cycle, and includes extensive homiletical discourses at the end of each of the four works in the Adam Cycle expounding on the preceding work. Yov. omits the homilies, but gives an incipit from each in the footnotes. No title is given for Transgression in Y, but titles are supplied for each of the remaining three works. Issaverdens attributes the MS to the 16th or 17th centuries.[2]

---

[1]These manuscripts are mentioned in Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitutʻyun I, pp. 239-241, with the exception of MSS B and D, which were unknown prior to the present study.

[2]Issaverdens, Uncanonical Writings, p. 22.

A. Erevan, Matenadaran, MS 682, fols. 96v-101r, undated. Contains the complete text of Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings, but does not include Transgression. Includes homilies at the end of each of the works in the Adam Cycle which are very similar to those found in Y and B. The existence of a homily before Expulsion in the MS which is very similar to that following Transgression in Y and B suggests that Transgression may have been included in the MS originally. Gives titles to each of the three works. Attributed to the 17th century on paleographical grounds.

B. New York, New York, H. P. Kraus Rare Books and Manuscripts, MS VT915, fols. 4v-23v, dated 1662. Approximately the first one-third of Transgression is missing from the MS, which begins at vs. 16, and the title and opening words of Abel and Cain are also missing. The remainder of the Adam Cycle is preserved in toto, with the addition in Tidings of an extended passage relating to Noah's building the ark (vs. 38a-k). Includes homilies at the end of each work in the Adam Cycle very similar to those found in Y and A with the exception of Expulsion, after which some leaves are missing. Distinct titles are given to Expulsion and Tidings.

C. Erevan, Matenadaran, MS 2126, fols. 81r-83r, dated 1697. Contains only the final four-fifths of Abel and Cain, beginning at vs. 11 and continuing to the end. The text is not accompanied by a homily.

D. London, British Museum, MS BM Harl. Or. 5459, fols. 2r-12v, dated 1698. Contains the full text of the Adam Cycle with no accompanying homilies. Includes in Tidings an extended passage on Noah and the ark (vs. 38a-k) also found in B, but in a somewhat different form. Contains a single title (Պատմութիւն Ադամայ ի Դրախտէն Ելանելու) for the full Adam Cycle, but the opening words of Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings are physically distinguished in the MS.

All the above MSS of recension I have been incorporated into the edition in chapter four below. Additional manuscript evidence unavailable to the author includes the following:[3]

F. Venice, Mechitarist Monastery of San Lazarro, MS 262, fols. 163v-167v. Contains only Abel and Cain.

G. Erevan, Matenadaran, MS 4618, fols. 138r-141v, dated 16th-18th centuries. Contains only Abel and Cain and Tidings, possibly with intervening commentary.

---

[3]The information is taken from Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitut'yun I, pp. 239-241.

Recension II

In addition to the textual witnesses to what we have called recension I, the Adam Cycle also exists in a quite different form which shows clear signs of rearrangement and editing of an older, more original text.

Z. The text was first published in a work called Սկիզբն զրոցս որ կոչի ժողովածու, Constantinople, 1717 (fols. 1-42), and was subsequently reprinted three times in Constantinople (1730, fols. 1-39; 1747, fols. 1-36; 1793, fols. 1-35). Presented in an appendix below is the text and translation of the 1730 edition (=Erevan, Matenadaran MS 273). The work contains a complete text of the Adam Cycle with commentary after each work similar to that contained in MSS Y, A, and B of recension I.

T. Tiflis, Institute of Manuscripts, MS 47, fols. 7r ff. Unavailable to the author, but according to Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitutyun I, pp. 240-241, this text corresponds to that found in Z above. Does not include Transgression, but contains the remaining three works of the Adam Cycle.

2. A Single Literary Work

Although Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings are presented in all the manuscripts as distinct works, it has been suggested that they are in fact four consecutive portions of a single literary work. M. Stone has claimed on the basis of a study of MS Y that the four texts follow a single narrative line, each text beginning with a section designed to overlap with the end of the preceding.[4] He refers to these texts as The Cycle of Four Works. It is necessary to examine his view in some detail.

On the whole, the broader manuscript evidence stands in support of Stone's view. In MSS Y, B, and A of recension I and MS Z (and perhaps T) of recension II, Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings appear consecutively in that order, although each work is given a separate title and the individual works themselves are separated by intervening homiletical materials cast in the form of a commentary on the preceding portion of the story.[5] In MS D the four works are in consecutive order without separate titles or intervening homilies, but the beginning of each work is physically distinguished in the manuscript.[6] Abel

---

[4]Stone, "Seth Traditions," p. 465.

[5]Note that the title for Transgression is missing in Y and the titles for Transgression and Abel and Cain are lost in B. The full text of Transgression is lacking in A, but since the homily preceding Expulsion in A is very similar to that following Transgression in Y and B, it is probable that A originally included Transgression. Recension II MS T was not available to the author, but the description in Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitut‘yun I, pp. 239-241, indicates that T lacks Transgression and contains Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings in consecutive order with distinct titles for each. It is uncertain if the intervening commentary is present in T.

[6]D gives only one title at the beginning of the four works, which reads Պատմութիւն Ադամայ ի դրախտէն ելանելու (The History of Adam's Expulsion from the Garden). A floral design in the margin marks the beginning of each of the four and Cain, on the other hand, is known to have had an independent existence. It appears by itself in MSS C and F, and it appears with Tidings alone, which it directly precedes, in MS G.[7]

The order in which these four works are found in the manuscripts is logical from the standpoint of content. Taken together, they present a coherent and expanded account of Genesis 1-11, relating the history of humanity from the creation through the flood. There are no significant contradictions in the development of the story, nor are there repetitions apart from those at the beginning and end of each work or "chapter" in the Adam Cycle, which will be dealt with below. The organization and development of the four chapters of the Adam Cycle may be best presented in the following outline.

I. Transgression
   A. Introduction: Creation and revolt of the evil angels (1-4)
   B. Fall (5-31)
      1. Adam and Eve created (5-7)
      2. Adam and Eve charged not to eat the fruit (8-9)
      3. Satan deceives Adam and Eve, they eat the fruit (10-31) works, the final line of each work is concluded with a dotted line, and the opening words of each work are written in a different color of ink.

---

[7]In C, Abel and Cain begins with Abel's prayer which accompanies his sacrifice, and there is no accompanying commentary. No further information about F and G was available to the author, although Anasyan, Haykakan Matenagitutʻyun I, pp. 240-241, indicates there is no commentary between Abel and Cain and Tidings in G.

C. Punishment (32-45)
  1. God confronts Adam and Eve (30-42)
  2. God curses Adam, Eve, and the serpent, expels Adam and Eve from the garden (41-45)

D. Deliverance (46-49)
  1. Adam and Eve mourn in darkness (46)
  2. God takes pity and sends an angel who leads them to the light (47-49)

II. Expulsion

A. Introduction: Adam and Eve grieve when darkness returns (1-2)

B. Fall (3-21)
  1. Satan deceives Adam and Eve, offers them light (3-15)
  2. Adam gives promissory note to Satan (16-21)

C. Punishment: Contained within the promissory note (16-21). Adam and all his offspring are in captivity to Satan.

D. Deliverance (22-28)
  1. Adam and Eve mourn their deception (22)
  2. God takes pity and sends an angel who promises deliverance through Christ (23-28)

III. Abel and Cain

A. Introduction: Adam learns to farm, Abel and Cain are born (1-4)

B. Fall (5-33)
  1. Cain and Abel's offerings (5-13)
  2. Cain kills Abel (14-33)

C. Punishment (34-51)
  1. God punishes Cain (34-47)
  2. Lamech kills Cain (48-51)

D. Deliverance (52-59)
  1. Adam and Eve mourn their children (52-58)
  2. God takes pity and sends the good news of Seth's birth (59)

IV. Tidings

A. Introduction (1-16)
  1. Seth's birth announced (1-9)
  2. Enoch's orchard (10-16)

B. Fall (17-23)
  1. Sethites retire to monastic life (17)
  2. Cainites seduce Sethites (18-23)

C. Punishment (24-44)
  1. Angel announces the flood to Noah (24-36)
  2. Noah builds the ark, the flood comes (37-44)

D. Deliverance (45-59)
  1. Noah and the animals leave the ark (45-50)
  2. God makes a covenant of reconciliation with Noah (51-54)
  3. Settlements of Noah's descendants (55-59)

As the above outline makes clear, the division of the Adam Cycle into four chapters occurs on the basis of content; each chapter tells its own story of a fall, a resulting divine punishment, and concludes with a divine intervention and deliverance. Thus the first chapter tells how Satan tricks Adam and Eve into eating the forbidden fruit and relates God's curse upon them, but concludes when God takes pity on Adam and Eve and sends an angel who leads them from darkness into light. In the second chapter, Adam and Eve fall again when Satan gives them light in exchange for a promissory note binding their descendants in captivity to Satan. Although no distinct punishment is given here, it is implicit in the servitude to Satan which Adam and Eve promise and over which they mourn on recognizing Satan's deceit. The chapter concludes when God again relents and sends an angel to promise them deliverance through Christ. Similarly in chapter three, the fall occurs when Cain kills Abel, for which he receives seven punishments and is finally killed by Lamech. Again God is moved by Adam and Eve's plight and sends the good news of Seth's birth. Following the same pattern in chapter four, the Sethites fall to the seductive Cainites for which they are punished by a flood, after which God reconciles himself with Noah through a covenant. Thus the story of the ante-diluvians is told in four parts or chapters, each chapter reporting the drama of a fall of mankind followed by a cathartic "happy ending," to which a homily is appended.

If we are to understand Transgression, Expulsion, Abel and Cain, and Tidings as four chapters of a single literary work, the repetition of materials at the beginning of each successive chapter must be explained since these repetitions disrupt the flow of the narrative line. At the conclusion of Transgression (46-49), for example, Adam and Eve are expelled from the garden and go to a dark and gloomy place. After six days God sends an angel who takes them out of the darkness and into the world, and Adam and Eve rejoice over the light even though it is inferior to the light of the garden. In the first verse of Expulsion, this information is repeated in very brief form; we learn that Adam and Eve fell from the garden into this world and rejoiced over the light until evening. The story line is resumed in vs. 2, when the sun sets and Adam and Eve again become afraid, setting the stage for a second deception by Satan. Expulsion 1 may be taken to contradict the conclusion to Transgression, where Adam and Eve leave the garden for an intermediate location before entering this world. But Expulsion 4-5 makes clear that the view of Adam and Eve's descent from the garden in Expulsion is identical with that in Transgression. Speaking to Satan disguised as an angel, Adam says he was expelled from the garden into darkness for an unspecified time until an angel took him to the light of the world, for which he rejoiced. The final verses of Transgression (46-49) must be regarded as the cathartic conclusion to chapter one of the cycle, after which a homily follows in most manuscripts. The story resumes in Expulsion 1 with a brief summary statement designed to remind the reader of where the story left off, after which the story line resumes. There are no contradictions in the overlapping material, and if Expulsion 1 is excised from the text, vs. 2 continues the narrative uninterrupted from the conclusion of Transgression.

The transition from Expulsion to Abel and Cain may be similarly explained. Expulsion concludes when Adam and Eve recognize they have been deceived again by Satan and observe the fast later called Aradjavor, after which God relents and sends an angel who tells them of their deliverance from Satan through the incarnate Christ. The opening verse of Abel and Cain repeats all the elements of that conclusion in briefer form, but with one apparent contradiction. In Expulsion Adam and Eve are said to fast for seven days, while the length of the fast is five days in Abel and Cain. That information is not consistent in the manuscripts, however, suggesting the possibility of corruption.[8] Following the short summary of the conclusion to Expulsion in Abel and Cain 1, the story line is resumed in vs. 2; Adam and Eve's life in the world begins and they are taught how to farm. But the excision of Abel and Cain 1 does not result in a smooth flow of the story from the final verse of Expulsion to Abel and Cain 2; Abel and Cain in its present form begins with a necessary and coherent introduction.

[8]Recension II Expulsion 22 says Adam and Eve fasted five days, and specifies no duration for the fast in Abel and Cain. The confusion of five and seven days may be traced to a ե / է confusion in the manuscripts.

In contrast to the above pattern, it is the introduction to Tidings rather than the conclusion to Abel and Cain which contains the more complete and detailed account. In the introduction to Tidings (1-3), an angel visits Adam and tells him to know his wife, but Adam responds with reluctance, fearing the birth of a new child might bring him greater grief than the birth of his first two sons. The angel responds that Seth will be a consolation for Adam's past grief, setting the stage for Seth's birth and the separation of his family from the Cainites. In contrast, following a summary of the preceding portions of Abel and Cain in which Cain's afflictions are described (vs. 57a), Abel and Cain 57b-59 contains the same information found in the introduction to Tidings, but the dialogue between Adam and the angel is reduced to a brief narrative summary. No unique material is found in the conclusion to Abel and Cain. The introduction to Tidings cannot be excised without creating a major disruption, since the angel's speech continues into vs. 4 where allusions to the remainder of the text of Tidings are found.[9] The conclusion to Abel and Cain, on the other hand, appears secondary. Vs. 56 provides a satisfactory conclusion to Abel and Cain when Abel's corpse is finally allowed to enter its grave after Adam's death, a point of departure from which the introduction to Tidings follows naturally. The text of Abel and Cain continues in vs. 57, however, where Cain moans over his affliction and Adam and Eve mourn over seeing Cain wounded with punishments. This verse is not only repetitive, since we were already told of Cain's punishments in vss. 38-47, but it also gives a false picture insofar as Cain has already been killed (i.e. he does not live in bitter affliction). The reason for the addition of vss. 57-59 can be readily explained. It is likely that Abel and Cain and Tidings were part of a single continuous narrative, and that when they were separated into distinct chapters, Abel and Cain required a conclusion which would make it conform to the pattern of fall, punishment, and deliverance characteristic of the other chapters in the Adam Cycle. That was accomplished by appending a narrative summary of the annunciation of Seth's birth found in the introduction to Tidings.

---

[9]The theme of the separation of the seed of Seth and Cain is introduced in vs. 4, and is developed in 5-9, 17-23.

In summary, the manuscript evidence, the development of the story line, and the nature of the overlapping materials at the beginning and end of each work suggest the four texts are four chapters of a single literary work. The original Adam Cycle appears to have read as a continuous narrative, but was later broken up into four chapters, each reflecting a pattern of fall, punishment, and deliverance, after which a homily was appended. As the text stands now, each chapter begins with a brief section designed to remind the reader of where he left off, after which the story continues. The original form of the continuous narrative cannot be reconstructed since the method used in dividing the work into chapters was more complex than a simple interpolation of summary material.

3. The Setting of the Work

Although the Adam Cycle is a collection of stories about the ante-diluvians, there are a number of explicit Christian elements which make the work identifiably Christian. In Expulsion 17-20, after Satan has deceived Adam a second time, Satan forces Adam to take an oath promising he and his descendants will be servants to Satan. The statement of the duration of that servitude, i.e. "until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies" (vs. 19), sets the stage for the promise of Christ's coming which Adam receives in vss. 23-26. An angel informs Adam he will be freed from captivity to Satan when God's son takes human form from a perfect virgin. The entire story of this second deception, to which the full text of Expulsion is devoted, is governed by the oath of servitude and the promise of release from it. Hence the Christian elements in Expulsion may not be explained as a product of interpolation or reworking, rather they are intrinsic to this second chapter of the Adam Cycle. In Abel and Cain 1, where the conclusion to Expulsion is summarized, one finds again a reference to the angel's tidings about the incarnation of God.

In addition to the Christian references in the Adam Cycle, there are points at which the history of the ante-diluvians has received a uniquely Armenian stamp. In both Expulsion 24 and Abel and Cain 1 where the conclusion to Expulsion is summarized, the period during which Adam and Eve fasted after recognizing they had been deceived a second time is identified with the Armenian fast of Aradjavor.[10] This identification appears as a parenthetical intrusion into the text which can be excised without disrupting the flow of the story. One also finds Armenian place names in the conclusion to the Adam Cycle (Tidings 55-59). Following the description of the flood, one reads that Noah went down from the mountain and dwelt in Agori, after which his descendants settled in Naxiǰewan, the site of Noah's tomb. Both are known locations at the foot of Mt. Masis in Armenia.[11]

Evidence for the background of the Adam Cycle may also be ascertained from the picture it gives of the righteous heroes from ante-diluvian times. Especially in the fourth chapter, Tidings, the heroes of the story are presented as the embodiment of virtues of the monastic life, practicing such forms of abstinence as virginity, fasting, and purity of life in isolation from wicked humanity. The righteous Abel, for example, is said to have died a virgin martyr (կոյս նահատակեցաւ , Tidings 7). We learn that the generation of Seth did not intermingle with the wicked Cainites, but rather lived in purity (սրբութիւն , Tidings 9, 19). This generation of Seth consisted of 520 virgins and anchorites (ճգնաւոր , Tidings 20). The term ճգնաւոր is particularly significant here, since it is the term normally used to designate ascetics living in solitary. The description of Enoch is further illuminating. We read that Enoch did not marry (Tidings 13), and that he planted an orchard in imitation of the Garden of Eden, but abstained from eating its fruit as Adam and Eve had failed to do (Tidings 14-15). For this behavior, Enoch was rewarded by being taken up bodily into paradise (Tidings 17). His exemplary life was in turn emulated by the righteous Sethites, who "practiced abstinence (հրաժարեմ), retired to the mountains, <and> subdued their passions (ճգնիմ) through virginity" (Tidings 17). Again the choice of vocabulary is significant; both հրաժարեմ and ճգնիմ are commonly used in monastic contexts to refer to abstinence, self-mortification, and devotion to the ascetic life.[12]

---

[10]The Fast of the Forerunner, a pre-Lenten preparatory fast observed during the tenth week before Easter.

[11]Agori, on the north foot of Mt. Masis, is first mentioned in Lazar of Pharpe's History of the Armenians (5th century), and was destroyed by an earthquake in 1840. Although Naxčavan is known from as early as Faustos of Byzantium's History of the Armenians (5th century), the form of the name preserved here is from the tenth century. So H. Hübschmann, Die Altarmenischen Ortsnamen (Amsterdam: Oriental Press, 1969, repr. Strassburg, 1904), pp. 395, 455.

---

[12] հրաժարեմ may also mean "to enter a convent."

The flood comes only after the Sethites relinquish their purity and are corrupted by the Cainites, who lead them into adultery and incest (Tidings 21-24). Noah, the only Sethite to remain a virgin, is spared the fate awaiting the rest of humanity. He even resists God's command to marry and propagate the human race, not wanting to corrupt his virginity on account of a transitory dream. He accedes only when given a pure virgin to marry (Tidings 25-36). This tendency to identify the righteous heroes of antiquity such as Abel, Seth, Enoch, and Noah as embodiments of monastic virtue may provide a clue to the Sitz im Leben of the Adam Cycle.

The language of the Adam Cycle in its present form is classical Armenian. Although classical forms predominate in the manuscripts, there are numerous forms which are incorrect in classical Armenian but which are common in Middle Armenian and Cilician texts. For the reader's convenience, the more common Middle Armenian forms encountered in the Adam Cycle are listed below.

Verbs

առուին	Transgression 4	3rd pl. aorist for classical եառուն, Karst, p. 333.[13]
լսեց	Transgression 31	3rd sg. aorist for classical լուաւ, Karst, p. 319.

---

[13]Page references are to the grammar of Cilician Armenian by J. Karst, Historische Grammatik des Kilikisch-Armenischen (Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner, 1901).

լսեցեր	Transgression 41	2nd sg. aorist for classical լուար, Karst, p. 319.
տրտմինք	Expulsion 4	1st pl. present for classical տրտմիմք, Karst, p. 309.
էառ	Expulsion 23	3rd sg. aorist for classical առ, Karst, p. 321.
անէր	Abel and Cain 7	3rd sg. impf. for classical առնէր, Karst, p. 267, n. 2.
սպանեց	Tidings 7	3rd sg. aorist for classical սպանեաց, Karst, p. 331.
դրին	Tidings 21	3rd pl. aorist for classical եդին, Karst, p. 317.

3rd pl. impf. ending in էին for classical եին, Karst, p. 312.

օրհնէին	Transgression 2
գովէին	Transgression 2
բարեբանէին	Transgression 2
փառաբանէին	Transgression 2
շրջէին	Transgression 13, Abel and Cain 15, Tidings 18
գիտէին	Transgression 32, Expulsion 2
կարէին	Transgression 32
էին	Transgression 33 (2x), Tidings 23, 48 (2x)
հայէին	Expulsion 14
տեսանէին	Expulsion 14, Tidings 38b
ուտէին	Abel and Cain 15
ըմպէին	Abel and Cain 15
թաղէին	Abel and Cain 53
մխիթարէին	Tidings 8
խառնակէին	Tidings 9
հալածէին	Tidings 9
ճգնէին	Tidings 17
խլէին	Tidings 18
կռուէին	Tidings 18
կարմրացուցանէին	Tidings 21
սպիտակացուցանէին	Tidings 21
լսէին	Tidings 38b
ասէին	Tidings 38b, i
տնազէին	Tidings 38c,i (B)
առնէին	Tidings 38c,i (D)
դառնէին	Tidings 38c (D)
փոքրէին	Tidings 38f (D)

Infinitives in իլ , Karst, pp. 342-343.

մեռանիլ	Transgression 28	փորձիլ	Abel and Cain 18
բաժանիլ	Transgression 28	զօտամարտիլ	Abel and Cain 18
որոշիլ	Transgression 28	արձակիլ	Abel and Cain 21
ապրիլ	Transgression 30 Tidings 28

Nouns

Declension: There are numerous examples of the tendency towards laxity in the use of declensional endings, such that nouns of one declension take the endings of another (Karst, pp. 141-142). Only two examples will be given here:

խաղողի Abel and Cain 19, should receive ո type endings in classical Armenian.

մատնեաւ Abel and Cain 20, classical instrumental should end in ամբ .

Use of the infix եր to designate the plural (Karst, p. 169).

ծառերոյղ	Transgression 8
ձեռներովն	Abel and Cain 23
ծառերոյն	Tidings 15
գէշերուն	Tidings 45

Other

Use of the particle կու before the imperfect of the verb (Karst, p. 301), կու ծնանէր Abel and Cain 4 and before the present as a subjunctive expression of time or to express continuing action in the present (Karst, p. 299).

կու տեսանեմ	Tidings 2
կու գայ	Tidings 37 (A), 38a,b,c,f (B), 38b (D),39.
կու վարի	Tidings 38i (B) (վարէ D)
կու տնկէ	Tidings 38i (B)

Use of որ as a subordinate conjunction for զի (Karst, p. 257).

Transgression 13, 31
Expulsion 6, 22, 23
Abel and Cain 35
Tidings 38f (B)

Use of որ as an undeclined relative adverb (Karst, pp. 399-401).

Tidings 11

Use of մէկ for classical մի (Karst, p. 217).

Abel and Cain 38
Tidings 39

There is internal evidence which suggests that Armenian is the original language of the Adam Cycle. It will be shown in detail in chapter three below that although the story presented in the Adam Cycle is intended to supplement the biblical account, there are several points in Transgression which coincide with the story in the biblical Genesis. At these points in the description of the creation of woman, God's warning to Adam and Eve not to eat the forbidden fruit, God's confrontation with Adam and Eve after they eat the fruit, and God's curse on Adam, Eve, and the serpent, the text of Transgression is dependent upon the Armenian text of Genesis. In some instances the Armenian text of Genesis is taken verbatim, while in other cases, a modified rendition of the biblical text is used which nevertheless draws heavily on the Armenian vocabulary of the Genesis account. The identification of this Armenian literary source for the Adam Cycle makes it highly likely that the work itself was composed in Armenian.[14]

Little precision can be established in fixing the date of the Adam Cycle. Since the work was composed in Armenian and used the Armenian Bible as a source, it can date from no earlier than the fifth century. Furthermore, although the presence of isolated Middle Armenian forms in the text does not necessarily provide firm evidence for dating, the fact that these forms are widespread in all surviving manuscripts of the Adam Cycle suggests the work was written no earlier than the eighth century, before which time such forms are not known. The fact that Repentance has used an earlier form of the Adam Cycle as a literary source[15] allows us to establish a terminus ad quem of 1404, the date of the only surviving manuscript of Repentance. Pending further manuscript discoveries or the identification of quotations from the Adam Cycle in datable works, the Adam Cycle may be assigned only to the period between the eighth and fourteenth centuries.

The study of sources in chapter three below shows the Adam Cycle to be a composite work. Although the [14]There is limited evidence for a second Armenian source for the Adam Cycle. A detailed study in chapter two below of incidents related in parallel forms in the Adam Cycle and in Repentance shows that either the Adam Cycle and Repentance are dependent upon a common Armenian literary source or that Repentance is dependent upon an earlier form of the Armenian Adam Cycle. The latter possibility is more likely. The Adam Cycle is also shown below to be independent of Ap. Mos.

---

[15]See chapter two below.

Armenian text of Genesis is the only identifiable literary source for the Adam Cycle, the Adam Cycle has inherited a wealth of elements of tradition which were widespread in Jewish and Christian literature from pre-Christian times into the Middle Ages. These elements of tradition are found in such works as Jewish apocryphal texts, early versions of the Bible, rabbinic midrashim, oriental Christian apocryphal works, the church fathers, and Byzantine chronographic writers. The means by which these elements of tradition found their way into Armenia in general or into the Adam Cycle in particular remain obscure. That many or most of these elements of tradition originated in Judaism and occur most consistently in Jewish and eastern Christian sources suggests a flow of traditions from Jewish circles into eastern churches and on to Armenia, perhaps via Syria.[16] More precise identification of the sources for the Adam Cycle and the method of its composition remain subjects for further exploration.

The story of the ante-diluvians preserved in the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works, then, must be viewed as a composite work, produced in the monasteries of medieval Armenia, which drew either directly or indirectly on ancient Jewish and Christian sources to provide an edifying recasting of early biblical history.

---

[16]Indeed the bulk of Jewish and Christian literature translated into Armenian came from Greek and Syriac sources.

B. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve

Like the Adam Cycle, Repentance is also devoted to the story of the ante-diluvians and serves as a supplement to the primordial history in Genesis 1-11. In structure and content, however, Repentance is quite different from the Adam Cycle. The story of Adam and Eve's sin in the garden is omitted from Repentance, which begins after the expulsion from the garden, and apart from the story of Cain and Abel and Seth's quest for the oil of life, there is little concern in this work for figures other than Adam and Eve. The role of Seth is much less significant in Repentance, the descendants of Seth and Cain are not mentioned, and Noah is mentioned only briefly for his role in the tradition of Adam and Eve's burial. The story of Adam and Eve preserved in Repentance may be divided into four parts. First, the story opens with Adam and Eve longing for the pleasures of the garden from which they have been removed. Adam laments at length over his expulsion from the garden, and converses with Eve over their plight (1-26). After this lament, the text relates the story of Abel and Cain; their birth, Cain's murder of Abel, and his consequent punishment (27-60). The third section contains another lengthy lament in which Adam and Eve bemoan both the fate of their children and their expulsion (61-78). The closing section is concerned with the tradition of Adam and Eve's death and burial (79-104).

1. The Manuscripts

Repentance is known through only a single manuscript, here designated E, Erevan, Matenadaran, MS 1521, fols. 66r-69r, dated 1404. A copy of the manuscript made by F. C. Conybeare was presented to the Mechitarists at San Lazarro in Venice in 1893 for inclusion in Yovsepeanc', Ankanon Girk. A comparison of this published edition with the original manuscript reveals two significant omissions in the text published by Yovsepeanc'. First, at the point where a lacuna is indicated in Yovsepeanc', p. 326, an entire folio of the original manuscript has been left out. The missing folio has been restored in the edition below, corresponding to vs. 7 վասն որոյ -- vs. 30 եկն. A second lacuna is indicated in Yovsepeanc', p. 330, where a full line of text has been left out. The line omitted, corresponding to vs. 99 առեալ -- զի, is also restored below.

2. Background of the Work

Like the Adam Cycle, Repentance is a composite Christian work written originally in Armenian. The specifically Christian portions of the text are found only in its closing verses (102-104). In reporting the story of Adam and Eve's death and burial, Repentance preserves the tradition that Eve's bones were buried at Bethlehem under the spot where Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, while Adam's were buried at Golgotha under the site of Christ's crucifixion.

In chapters two and three below, Repentance is shown to have drawn directly on three identifiable Armenian sources, as well as on pre-existing elements of tradition known from a variety of Jewish and Christian sources. First, Repentance has used Ap. Mos. as a literary source. The story of the quest for the oil from the tree of life, the account of Eve's dream about the murder of Abel, and the report of the conversation between Adam and Eve while Adam is on his deathbed are taken from Ap. Mos. An examination of the language used in the latter two of these stories shows Repentance used the Armenian version of Ap. Mos., since at points where the Greek and Armenian versions of Ap. Mos. differ, Repentance consistently follows the Armenian.

Second, Repentance has drawn materials from an earlier form or source of the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works. In reporting the seven punishments of Cain, Repentance has inherited a known list of these punishments which it modified and supplemented with additional material from an earlier form or source of the Adam Cycle written in Armenian. The story of the annunciation of Seth's birth appears to be an expanded version of material taken from the Adam Cycle, while the story of Abel's murder may be an abbreviated version of material taken from the Adam Cycle and inserted into a more lengthy story about Cain and Abel taken from Ap. Mos.

Third, Repentance has used the Armenian text of Genesis as a source. The similarity of Armenian vocabulary employed in Repentance and Armenian Genesis to describe the confrontatation between God and Cain after Abel's murder and Cain's consequent punishment make it apparent that the Armenian text of Genesis was used by the author of Repentance, either directly or through an Armenian intermediary.

The identification of three Armenian literary sources for Repentance allows us to conclude that Armenian was the original language of composition.[17] In date Repentance must be considered later than the Adam Cycle, which it uses as a source, and prior to 1404, the date of the only surviving manuscript. Hence like the Adam Cycle, it must be placed sometime between the eighth and fourteenth centuries.

In addition to materials inherited from the three sources identified above, there are elements of tradition in Repentance the source of which cannot be named, but which are known to have originated in Jewish and early Christian circles and which are widespread in Jewish and Christian literature dating from pre-Christian times and into the Middle Ages. At present, there is no precise means of ascertaining how these materials came into Armenia or into the text of Repentance. The work remains a testimony to the popularity and wide diffusion of ancient haggadic traditions in medieval Christianity.

---

[17]Another indigenous element in the text may be found in the reference to Šamadun in vs. 101 as the land of Adam and Eve's burial. Syria in its historic sense is called Šam/Šamadun in Armenian manuscript colophons dating from the early fifteenth century. See A. K. Sanjian, Colophons of Armenian Manuscripts, 1301-1480 (Cambridge: Harvard, 1969), p. 420.

As in the Adam Cycle, one finds a number of Middle Armenian forms and grammatical usages in a text in which classical forms predominate. These forms are less frequent in Repentance than in the Adam Cycle. A list of the more common Middle Armenian forms is given below:

Verbs

եսպան	vs. 36	3rd sg. aorist for classical սպան (Karst, p. 321).[18]
էած	vs. 50	3rd sg. aorist for classical ած (Karst, p. 321).
գիտենայր	vs. 57	3rd sg. impf. for classical գիտէր (Karst, pp. 284-285)

Imperfect endings in էի / էիր / էիք / էին for classical եի/ եիր /եիք /եին (Karst, p. 312).

տառապէին	vs. 1	քաղէին	vs. 81
էին	vss. 3, 79	էիր	vs. 89
տագնապէին	vs. 3	էիք	vs. 90
յիշէին	vs. 6	պա՞էիք	vs. 90
թագաւորէի	vs. 15	աղօթէին	vs. 92
էի	vss. 20, 90	պատուէին	vs. 98

Infinitives in իլ , Karst, pp. 342-343.

մերձաւորիլ vs. 28

Other

Loss of ւ in declined nouns whose stems end in ի (Karst, p. 152).

որդովք	vs. 80 for classical	որդւովք
որդոց	vs. 98 for classical	որդւոց

---

[18] Karst, Grammatik.

Use of որ as a subordinate conjunction for զի (Karst, p. 257), vss. 31, 32, 47, 57, 73.

C. The Words of Adam to Seth

The Words of Adam to Seth is a very brief text which contains no title in the manuscript. In the opening portion of the text, Adam tells Seth the story of his sin in the garden, for which Seth fasts and prays and is consequently rewarded with a life giving branch from the garden and the promise of Christ (1-11). Seth then tells the same story of Adam's fall to his son, called Enosh in vs. 12 and Enoch in vs. 14. Like Seth, Enoch responds with a penitent act, fasting and planting a garden, for which he is rewarded with translation (12-16). The reference to Christ, the giver of life, makes the story Christian in its present form.

Of primary interest in this text is the story of Enoch's garden it shares in common with the Adam Cycle and another Armenian work, The Descendants of Adam. A comparison of the three versions of the story in chapter two below shows the three works are independent of one another, and inherited the story of Enoch's garden from a common oral tradition which took quite distinct forms when committed to writing. The story is known only in Armenian, but can be understood as a reflection upon a composite of traditions about Enoch known from biblical and apocryphal sources.

Nothing can be said with any certainty about the date or Sitz im Leben of the work.

The work is known only from a single manuscript, here called Y_1, found in the Mechitarist Monastery at San Lazarro in Venice, Old MS 57=New MS 240, fols. 183v-185r, and no information is available on its date. The manuscript was not made available for the present work, but a copy of the text was published by Yovsepeanc', Ankanon Girk, pp. 331-332, and is reprinted here.

Chapter 2

LITERARY RELATIONSHIPS

Some of the stories about the ante-diluvians in the Armenian Adam books examined here are related in parallel forms in two or more of the documents. Three of these stories or traditions, the seven punishments of Cain, the annunciation of the birth of Seth, and the murder of Abel, occur in very similar form in both the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works and The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve. A fourth story, that of Enoch's or Enosh's garden, occurs in both the Adam Cycle and The Words of Adam to Seth. A comparison of the language and form of parallel versions of the same story may shed some light on whether any of these works draws upon another as a literary source, or whether these works draw upon common written or oral source materials. Such discoveries may in turn provide further insights into the date or original language of the Adam books.

A. The Seven Punishments of Cain

There are two lists of the seven punishments of Cain in the Armenian Adam books. One version of the list (henceforth A) occurs in Repentance 43-60. After its description of the murder of Abel, this work deals first with the fate of Adam and Eve after they discover Abel's body, i.e. they attempt to bury him and learn of the birth of Seth, and then deals with the fate of the murderer Cain, who is apportioned seven punishments. The list of punishments is followed by a list of ten reasons why the mourning of Adam and Eve became more intense, all of which are concerned with their expulsion from paradise or Abel's murder.

A second list of the seven punishments of Cain (henceforth B) occurs in Abel and Cain 34-47. This work describes the sacrifices of Cain and Abel, Cain's enmity toward Abel, the murder, the seven punishments of Cain, and the death of Cain. Thus in both texts the lists fit logically into the narrative sequence.

The texts and translations of the two lists of the seven punishments of Cain are given in parallel columns below.

A

43. Եւ ի սպանանելն Կայենի զՀաբել, եկն Գաբրիէլ առ Ադամ եւ ասաց նմա. Դուք մի հարցանէք զԿային վասն Հաբելի. այլ Աստուած հարցանէ զնա եւ պատժէ: 44. Որպէս եւ արարն իսկ: 45. Վասն զի եհարց Աստուած զԿային, թէ ո՛ր է Աբէլ եղբայրն քո: 46. Եւ նա ստեաց Աստուծոյ եւ ասաց. Ոչ գիտեմ: 47. Եւ Աստուած վասն այն եհարց զԿային, որ զղջանայր եւ մեղայ ասէր: 48. Իսկ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց. Ոչ գիտեմ. մի թէ պահապան իցեմ եղբաւրն իմոյ: 49. Եւ ասաց նմա Աստուած.

B

34. Իբրեւ սպանեաց զեղբայրն ուրախութեամբ երթայր. երեւեցաւ Տէրն ի ճանապարհին յիսուն կանգնաչափ բարձր, ասաց Կայենի. Ո՛ր է եղբայր քո:

35. Եւ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց. Ով ետ ինձ պահ որ խնդրես յինէն: 36. Վասն այն հարցանէր Աստուած թերեւս մեղայ ասիցէ: 37. Իբրեւ ետես Տէրն որ այնպէս ասաց Կայէն, բարկացաւ ի վերայ Կայենի եւ եօթն պատուհաս ետ Կայենի:

38. ա. Մէկ պատուհասն այն է, որ երկու կոտօշ բուսաւ ի վերայ գլխոյն:

A

Պահապան չես, սպանաւղ ընդէր եղեր: 50. Եւ եաւթն պատիժ էած ի վերայ նորա: 51. Նախ զի ասաց թէ Անիծեալ լիջիր:
52. Երկրորդ ի վերայ երկրի
ուր հեղեր զարիւն եղբաւր քոյ:
53. Երրորդ Գործել զերկիր
վաստակաւք եւ աշխատանաւք:
54. Չորրորդ եւ երկիր ոչ տայ քեզ զպտուղ իւր, զի արեամբ արդարոյ ներկեր զնա:
55. Հինգերորդ երերեալ լիցիս
որպէս զծառ ի հողմոց:
56. Վեցերորդ տատանեալ լիցիս
իբրեւ զծով որ ծփի յալեաց:
57. Եաւթներորդ զի նշան եդ ի վերայ նորա Աստուած որ ամենայն ոք զիտենայր զնա, եւ նշանն պիսակն էր: 58. Այլ եւ եղջեւր բուսաւ ի ճակատն. զի ընդ որ գնայր, եղջեւրն գոչէր եւ աղաղակէր, թէ զայ Կային եղբայրասպանն:
59. Եւ այնպէս եկեաց մնաց
ամս ութ հարիւր: 60. Դողդոջէր միշտ, եւ երերալի շրջէր ի վերայ երկրի անդադար զցայգ եւ զցերեկ:

43. And when Cain had killed Abel, Gabriel came to Adam and said to him, "Do not ask Cain about Abel; rather God will ask him and punish him," 44. as indeed he did. 45. Because God asked Cain, "Where is Abel your brother?" 46. And he lied to God and said, "I don't know." 47. And because of this God asked Cain, so that he might be sorry and repent. 48. But he said impudently, "I don't know. Should I be my brother's keeper?" 49. And God said to him, "You are not

B

39. բ. Երկրորդ պատուհասն
այն էր, որ կոտոշն ծայնէր եւ ասէր բարձր բարբառով. թէ, Կայէն եղբայրասպան է: 40. Սար
եւ քար եւ ծոր ծայնէր եւ ասէր.
Կայէն եղբայրասպան է:
41. գ. Երրորդ պատուհասն
այն է, որ ոտիւք եւ ձեռօքն եւ ամենայն բոլոր անդամօքն
<դողայր> իբրեւ զուռ:
42. դ. Չորրորդ պատուհասն
այն էր, <որ քանի> ուտէր ոչ լիանայր:
43. ե. Հինգերորդն
պատուհասն այն էր, որ ինչ սիրտն ուզէր եւ ուտել չկարէր, եւ իբր թէ ուտէր, ի վայր
հեղոյր:
44. զ. Վեցերորդն պատուհասն
այն էր, որ քուն չունէր ոչ զիշերն եւ ոչ ցերեկն:
45. է. Եօթներորդն
պատուհասն այն էր, որ Աստուած նմա մահ ոչ հրամայեաց, այլ ասաց Տէրն. Ով որ սպանիցէ զԿայէն, նա նորա պատուհասն ի վերայ սպանողին անկանիցի:
46. Եւ այնպէս մնաց մինչեւ
ութ հարիւր եւ վաթսուն ամի.
յետ անճար մնաց, մահուն փափաք
ունէր, եւ ոչ մեռանէր:
47. Իսկ <մորթ> մի <վայրենի>
էած եւ ծածկեաց զինքն:

34. When he killed his brother, he went away cheerfully. The Lord appeared on the way, fifty cubits above, <and > said to Cain, "Where is your brother?"

35. And he said impudently, "Who made me his guardian, that you should ask it of me?"
36. Because of this God asked him; perhaps he might repent.
37. When the Lord saw that Cain spoke thus, he became angry at Cain and gave Cain seven punishments.

38. (1) The first punishment was this; that two horns his keeper; why did you become his murderer?" 50. And he brought seven punishments upon him. 51. First, he said, "May you be cursed." 52. Second, "Upon the ground where you shed your brother's blood." 53. Third, "To till the ground in toil and fatigue." 54. Fourth, "And the earth will not give you its fruit, for with the blood of the righteous you have colored it." 55. Fifth, "May you shake like a tree in the winds." 56. Sixth, "May you be tossed like the sea which is agitated by the waves." 57. Seventh, God put a sign upon him so that everyone recognized him, and the sign was a mark. 58. Moreover, a horn sprouted on his forehead, such that wherever he went, the horn cried out and exclaimed, "Cain the brother-murderer is coming."

A

59. And thus he remained for eight hundred years. 60. He shuddered continually, and he walked upon the earth shaking incessantly, night and day.

B

sprouted upon his head.

39. (2) The second punishment was this; that the one horn cried out and said in a loud voice, "Cain is a brother-murderer." 40.< Then > mountain and rock and valley cried out and said, "Cain is a brother-murderer."

41. (3) The third punishment was this; that with his feet and hands and every single limb he shuddered like a yew-tree.

42. (4) The fourth punishment was this; that no matter how much he ate, he was not satisfied.

43. (5) The fifth punishment was this; that his heart would desire something, but he could not eat it, and when he tried to eat it, it would fall to the ground.

44. (6) The sixth punishment was this; that he could not sleep, either at night or during the day.

45. (7) The seventh punishment was this; that God did not allow him to die, rather the Lord said, "Whoever kills Cain, his punishment will fall upon the murderer."

46. And thus he remained for eight hundred and sixty years. Afterwards he remained incurable, and he wished to die, but he did not die. 47. Then he brought a skin of a wild animal and covered himself.

For the purpose of comparing the two versions, it is convenient to divide the account of the seven punishments of Cain into three parts; (1) the confrontation between God and Cain, (2) the list of seven punishments, and (3) the epilogue.

1. The confrontation between God and Cain

a. Some of the similarities between A and B may be explained by the fact that both draw on the story of Cain and Abel in Genesis 4. Both versions follow Gn 4:9 in noting that God asks Cain where his brother is and that Cain responds by asking if he is his brother's keeper. However, the wording in A is very close to Arm. Gn 4:9 whereas the wording in B is quite different from any biblical version.

b. Other similarities cannot be explained on the basis of the biblical account. First, Cain's response ("am I my brother's keeper") is delivered impudently. Note the similarity in wording:

A (48) իսկ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց

But he said impudently

B (35) եւ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց

And he said impudently

Secondly, it is stated in both texts that God asks Cain where his brother is in order to give him an opportunity to repent. Again the similarity of wording is noteworthy:

A (47) եւ Աստուած վասն այն եհարց զԿային որ զղջանայր եւ մեղայ ասէր

And because of this God asked Cain, so that he might be sorry and repent.

B (36) վասն այն հարցանէր Աստուած թերեւս մեղայ ասիցէ

Because of this God asked him;
perhaps he might repent.

Finally, it must be noted that all this non-biblical material common to A and B occurs in an inclusio in A. Thus in A God asks Cain where his brother is, Cain responds "I don't know," the above cited material appears, and then "I don't know" is repeated. The significance of this phenomenon will be discussed below.

c. There are no contradictions between A and B, but both contain unique materials. Gabriel's announcement to Adam that God will punish Cain, the statement that Cain lied to God, and repetition of Cain's remark "I don't know," and God's statement "You are not his guardian, why did you become his murderer?" are all unique to A. The notions that Cain went away cheerfully after killing his brother, that God appeared fifty cubits above Cain, and that God became angry at Cain are unique to B.

2. The list of seven punishments

a. Both A and B reflect a tradition that God apportioned Cain seven punishments.

b. One of Cain's punishments recorded in both texts is that Cain was made to shake like a tree. But the texts may be distinguished on several points. First, this punishment is fifth in A's list but third in B's list. Second, in A Cain is made to shake like a tree in the wind, whereas in B he is made to shake like a yew-tree and there is no mention of the wind. Third, B further specifies that Cain's shuddering is in his feet, hands, and every limb.

c. A and B agree that a horn sprouted from Cain's head which announced that Cain was a brother-murderer (եղբայրասպան),[1] but again the accounts may be distinguished on several points. First, this punishment is appended to the seventh punishment in A's list but comprises the first two punishments in B's list. Second, in A, the horn cries "Cain the brother-murderer is coming," whereas in B, the horn cries "Cain is a brother-murderer," and the cry is repeated by mountain, rock, and valley. Third, A contradicts B in that A reports that one horn sprang from Cain's head while B mentions two horns.

d. In addition to the distinctions noted above, A and B contain divergent understandings of the text of Gn 4:15, which reads:

ויאמר לו יהוה לכן כל הרג קין שבעתים יקם וישם יהוה
לקין אות לבלתי הכות אותו כל מצאו

In A, God puts a sign on Cain (following Gn 4:15) so that everyone would recognize him, whereas in B, we read that God did not allow Cain to die, but said that Cain's murderer would receive Cain's punishment. Thus in A we are given a different reason for the sign than that of Gn 4:15, and there is no mention of God's protecting Cain from murder or of his promise to punish Cain's murderer. B, on the other hand, does not mention the sign, and God's promise to punish Cain's murderer is not intended to protect Cain but to ensure that Cain will not die.

---

[1] Note the verbal hendiadys in A and B:
A: the horn "called out and shouted"
B: the horn "cried out and said in a loud voice"

e. Punishments one, two, three, four, and six in A are not found in B, while punishments four, five, and six in B's list are not found in A. This difference is due to the fact that A and B derive the list of punishments by different means. Having inherited the tradition that Cain received seven punishments, A lists these punishments by simply dividing the biblical account of Cain's punishment (Gn 4:11-15) into seven parts. The text of A follows closely and is dependent on the Armenian version of Gn 4:11-15 which it expands with additional material. Only the horn which grows from Cain's head is non-biblical, and this is suspect since it is appended to the seventh punishment with which it has no intrinsic relation. By contrast, only two of the punishments in B may be derived from Gn 4; the other five show no relationship to the biblical text.

3. Epilogue

a. A and B agree that Cain remained plagued with his punishments for a length of time. They contradict each other insofar as A specifies a period of eight hundred years, while B says eight hundred and sixty years.

b. Both accounts contain unique materials. A, repeating the idea of punishments four and five, notes that Cain shuddered continually and walked the earth shaking incessantly, night and day. The word for shudder (դողդոջամ) is not found in A's discussion of this punishment, but is virtually identical with the word used in B's punishment three (դողամ /in MSS AY, դողդողամ). B adds that Cain remained incurable and wished to die, but did not, and that Cain covered himself with an animal skin.

Before discussing the precise relationship of A and B, it is necessary to note that some of the more obvious similarities between them may be better explained by their dependence on the biblical text and widespread subsequent interpretation of the text rather than by dependence upon one another or a common source. As will be shown in detail below, the notion that Cain received seven punishments is found in early translations of Gn 4:15 and may be derived from both the Hebrew text and versions of Gn 4:24. That view is also commonplace in post-biblical Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic literature.[2] The idea that Cain was punished by being made to shake is also found in MT, the versions, and Jewish and Christian interpretation of Gn 4:12.[3] These ideas common to A and B, therefore, may not be used to establish a relationship between A and B. When this observation is coupled with the observations discussed above that 1) A's list closely follows the Armenian biblical account of Cain's punishment in Gn 4 while B shows a marked independence from the biblical story, and 2) A and B contain more unique material than common material, it becomes manifest that A and B are independent lists of the seven punishments of Cain. It can be demonstrated on several grounds that the remaining material common to A and B was inserted into A by a compiler or redactor who used an Armenian text of an earlier form or source of B. First, the non-biblical material common to A and B in the account of the confrontation between God and Cain is found in an inclusio in A. The Armenian wording of this material in A is very similar to that in B. Second, the mention of the horn which grew from Cain's head in A is not listed as one of the seven punishments, but is appended to the seventh punishment, with which it has no intrinsic connection. Third, A's epilogue contains an unnecessary repetition of the idea that Cain was made to shudder, and the word used (դողդողչամ) is distinct from those used earlier in the text of A to describe this punishment, but is virtually identical to the word found in B (դողամ).[4] On the other hand, 1) the differences in wording in the material in A borrowed from B, 2) the fact that the number of horns and the words spoken by the horn differ in A and B, and 3) the fact that much of the material in B was not inserted into A, make it probable that the borrowed material in A came from an earlier form or source of B. The similarity in the Armenian wording of the borrowed material implies that A's source was an Armenian written work.

---

[2]See below, pp. 86-88.

[3]See below, p.90.

B. The Annunciation of the Birth of Seth

The Armenian Adam books under discussion contain four versions of the annunciation of the birth of Seth. The longest version (henceforth A) is found in Tidings 1-4a, where it serves as the introduction to the fourth chapter in the Adam Cycle, and is followed by the story of the separation of the seed of Seth and Cain. A second version of intermediate length (henceforth B) is found in Abel and Cain 57b-59. It has already been shown in chapter one that B is a secondary narrative summary of A which was composed when the Adam Cycle was divided into chapters. Two shorter versions of the annunciation appear in Repentance. The first version (30b-31, henceforth C_1) occurs after a brief reference to the birth of Abel and Cain and to Abel's murder. Following the annunciation, Repentance gives a full account of Abel's murder followed by a second account of the annunciation (40-42, henceforth C_2). The texts and translations of the four annunciation accounts are presented in parallel columns below.

[4]There is no such repetition in the epilogue of B.

A

1. Եւ քաղցրացաւ Տէրն ի
վերայ Ադամայ, եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր առ Ադամ, եւ ասէ.
Մերձեցիր ի կին քո, զի լինի քեզ որդի փոխանակ Աբելի:
2. Ասաց Ադամ. Չկարեմ
մերձենալ կնոջս. զի երկու անգամ մերձեցայ ի կինս, այն մեծ պատուհաս էր ինձ, քան զդրախտէն ի դուրս ելանելն իմ զի զԱբէլ արեամբ տեսանեմ սիրաս այրէ եւ կսկծայ. զայն թողի եւ զԿայենի պատուհասն կու տեսանեմ, արտասուք կու թափեմ. զի թէ այլ մերձենամ ի կինս, լինի ինձ կրկին նեղութիւն եւ տրտմութիւն:
3. Ասէ հրեշտակն. Մի
երկնչիր Ադամ. քանզի տալոց է

B

57բ. Իսկ ծնօղքն Ադամ եւ
Եւայ, տեսանէին զԱբէլ արեամբ շաղախեալ եւ Կայէն պատուհասիւ վիրաւորեալ. իսկ Ադամ եւ Եւայ լային եւ ողբային վասն զաւակացն իւրեանց: 58. Մինչեւ երկերիւր տարի Ադամ ոչ մերձեցաւ ի կինն, ասէր թէ վախեմ թէ այլ չարագոյն զաւակ <ծնցի> իւրեանց կոծօք: 59. Իսկ ողորմեցաւ Տէր, եւ առաքեաց <աւետիս> վասն Սեթայ <ծննդեանն, եւ Սէթ> մխիթարեաց զԱդամ եւ զկինն իւր զԵւայ:

A

քեզ Աստուած որդի, եւ կոչեսցես զանուն նորա Սէթ, որ թարգմանի մխիթարանք. նա եղիցի զաւակ օրհնեալ եւ գլուխ նահապետաց, եւ մխիթարիս ի նմանէ. զի որչափ տրտմեցար վասն չարութեան Կայենին, նոյնչափ մխիթարիս ի Սեթայ: 4. Եւ բազմանայ զաւակ քո եւ զաւակ Սէթայ, եւ նոքօք լցցին աշխարհս.

C_1

30բ. եւ դարձեալ սուգ առին Ադամ եւ Եւայ ի վերայ մահուն Հաբելի զամս հարիւր եւ քսան. եւ ապա հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ եկն առ Ադամ հրեշտակապետն Գաբրիէլ, եւ ասաց նմա մերձենալ յԵւա վասն որդեծնութեան:
31. Եւ ետ Ադամայ Ճեւղ մի ի ծառոց դրախտին, եւ ասաց. Այդ քեզ նշան, որ ծնանի քեզ Եւայ որդի մխիթարութեան. եւ կոչեսցես զանուն նորա Սէթ, փոխանակ Հաբելի զոր սպան Կային:

C_2

40. Յայնժամ կալաւ անհնարին եւ սաստիկ տրտմութիւն զԱդամ եւ զԵւայ, վասն Հաբելի որդւոյն իւրեանց: 41. Եւ յերկար սգով կացին ի տրտմութեան ամս հարիւր եւ քսան: 42. Մինչ որ հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ ծնան զՍէթ որդի մխիթարութեան:

A

1. Now the Lord relented toward Adam, and sent his angel to Adam and said, "Know your wife so that you may have a son in place of Abel." 2. Adam said, "I cannot know my wife, for I knew my wife twice, <and> that was a punishment greater to me than my expulsion from the garden. Because I see Abel bloody, my heart burns and grieves. I left him, and whenever I see Cain's punishment, I shed tears. For if I know my wife again, I will have double grief and sorrow."

B

57b. Now <Cain's> parents, Adam and Eve, saw Abel smeared with blood and Cain wounded with punishment. So Adam and Eve wept and groaned on account of their sons. 58. For two hundred years Adam did not know his wife; he said he feared lest another more wicked son might be born through their mourning.
59. But the Lord had compassion and sent good news concerning Seth's <birth, and Seth> comforted Adam and his wife Eve.

A

3. The angel said, "Do not fear, Adam, because God will give you a son, and you shall call his name Seth, which is translated 'consolations.' He will be a blessed seed and the head of patriarchs, and you will be consoled by him. Because in the same measure that you were grieved on account of Cain's wickedness, you will be consoled by Seth. 4. And your seed and Seth's seed will multiply, and the lands will be filled with them."

C_1

30b. And Adam and Eve lamented again over the death of Abel, for a hundred and twenty years. And then, by the command of God, the archangel Gabriel came to Adam and told him to know Eve for the sake of procreation. 31. And he gave Adam a branch from the trees of the garden and said, "This is a sign to you that Eve will bear to you a son of consolation. And you shall call his name Seth, in place of Abel, whom Cain killed."

C_2

40. Then a terrible and grievous sorrow siezed Adam and Eve on account of Abel their son. 41. And for a long time they mourned sorrowfully, a hundred and twenty years, 42. until by the command of God they begat Seth, son of consolation.

In addition to the relationship already established between A and B, it can similarly be shown that C_2 is a narrative summary of C_1 and is entirely dependent upon it. The first portion of C_2 (40-42a) is identical in content with the opening words of C_1 (30b); both observe that Adam and Eve mourned over their son Abel for one hundred and twenty years until they received a command from God. Whereas C_1 continues by describing Gabriel's visit to Adam in which the angel tells Adam to know Eve and gives him a sign she will bear a son of consolation, C_2 reports in brief narrative summary form that Seth, the son of consolation, was born. There are no unique or contradictory materials in C_2. The appearance of this tradition in two loci in Repentance can be explained with reference to the structure of the document. Repentance opens with a brief mention of Adam and Eve's expulsion from the garden (1a) followed by a lengthy description of their longing for the garden and their fast (1b-26). The angel Gabriel brings them comfort and tells them to marry (27-28a), after which the birth of Cain and Abel and the fact of Abel's murder are related in two brief sentences (28b-30a). Then the more detailed account of the annunciation occurs (C_1). The story continues in disjointed fashion in vs. 32, however, where we revert back suddenly to the time before Abel's death. One reads of Eve's vision of Abel's death, followed by the text's first actual description of the murder. Again finding an appropriate setting for the annunciation, the author apparently chose to report it a second time in abbreviated form. The disjointed character of the story may suggest that the author was working from two or more sources which related the story of Abel's death in different ways, or that the work was redacted.

The relationship between the full forms of the annunciation in the Adam Cycle (A) and Repentance (C_1) is more complex. A and C_1 are in basic agreement as regards their general content. Both agree that Adam and Eve were grief-stricken following Abel's death; this idea serves as a foil to enhance the comfort which follows when Adam and Eve are told they will have another son. Both texts agree that God sends an angel who commands Adam to know Eve, and both record the dialogue between Adam and the angel in which the angel promises Adam and Eve a son as a replacement for Abel and commands that he be named Seth. A states that Seth is translated "consolations," while C_1 agrees in calling Seth a "son of consolation."

Beyond this similarity in general outline, however, both texts contain unique materials. Only in A do we find Adam's objection to fulfilling God's command; seeing Abel bloody and Cain punished are reminders to him of what another son might bring. This extended reason for Adam and Eve's mourning is not present in C_1, where we learn only that they mourned "over the death of Abel."[5] The notion that Adam and Eve's mourning was accompanied by sexual restraint is explicit only in A. In addition, the exalted promises about Seth delivered by the angel are present only in A; Seth is described as a blessed seed, as the head of patriarchs, and as one whose seed will fill the lands. In

---

[5]The reason for this discrepancy is a difference between the accounts of the fate of Abel's body in Repentance and Abel and Cain. In Repentance 39, Adam and Eve are unable to find Abel's body because the angels have buried it and its blood has been absorbed into the ground, whereas according to Abel and Cain 52-53, whenever Adam and Eve tried to bury Abel, his body came out upon the face of the ground and his blood never dried.

C_1, the command to know Eve is given by Gabriel the archangel (հրեշտակապետ), while in A God sends an unnamed angel (հրեշտակ). The angel's giving Adam a branch from the trees of the garden is also unique to C_1. In addition to these unique materials in both accounts, the Adam Cycle and Repentance contain one contradiction. In B, the duration of Adam and Eve's mourning is two hundred years, while in C_1 and C_2, that period is one hundred and twenty years. Since we have shown that B is a secondary addition to the original text of the Adam Cycle, that contradiction does not preclude a relationship between the accounts of the annunciation in Repentance and the Adam Cycle.

The elements of distinction and unique traditions in A and C_1 outlined above make it unlikely that either of these accounts served as a source for the other. Similarities in structure and detail, however, suggest the possibility of a common source for A and C_1. Taking into account our study of the seven punishments of Cain in which it was determined that Repentance is dependent upon an earlier form or source of the Adam Cycle, it is highly likely that C_1 drew upon that same source, in addition to other unidentified source materials, in composing its account of the annunciation.

C. The Murder of Abel

The story of Abel's murder occurs in two versions in the Armenian Adam books. A very short version (henceforth A) occurs in Repentance 36. Following a brief reference to Cain's murder of Abel and the first account of the annunciation of the birth of Seth (C_1 above), Eve relates a dream to Adam in which Cain kills Abel. After Adam investigates Eve's dream and discovers Abel's body follows the account of the murder, Adam's burial of Abel, and the second account of the annunciation of Seth's birth (C_2 above). The account of Abel's murder appears to be an awkward insertion into the narrative sequence, perhaps a product of either compilation or redaction, for two reasons. First, the account of the murder is a parenthetical explanation of what is mentioned but not described in the preceding narrative and is out of place. Thus after Adam finds that Abel has been slain and Cain has left the scene, the text reads abruptly, "And how he killed him, and in what way, I shall explain." If the account of the murder is removed, the text flows more logically. Second, if the account of the murder is removed, the resulting sequence a) Eve's dream, b) Adam's investigation, and c) the annunciation of the birth of Seth, is identical to the sequence found in _Ap_. _Mos_. 2:1-3:3.[6]

Abel and Cain 16-33 contains perhaps the lengthiest description of the murder of Abel extant in Jewish and Christian literature. This story of the murder (henceforth B) is incorporated into a much more coherent and continuous narrative which describes in logical sequence the sacrifices of Cain and Abel, Cain's animosity towards his brother, the murder, and the resulting punishment of Cain.

---

[6]For a discussion of the relationship between _Repentance_ and _Ap_. _Mos_., see chapter three below.

The text and translation of the two versions of the murder of Abel are presented in parallel columns below.

A

36. Եւ թէ որպէս եսպան, եւ կամ զինչ աւրինակաւ, այս է զոր ասեմս. Տարեալ Կային զՀաբէլ յիւրատունկ դրախտն, եւ կալեալ կապեաց զնա ձեռս յետս ընդ ծառով միոյ. եւ առեալ քար մի զայլախազ, եւ այնքան քարազոհն արար զանմեղ պատանին, մինչ որ աւանդեաց զհոգին:

B

16. Իսկ ի միում աւուր ասէ Կայէն ցեղբայր իւր. Գնասցուք ի դաշտն շրջեսցուք: 17. Եւ ելեալ գնացին ի դաշտն, եւ կամէր Կայէն կապել զեղբայրն իւր. բայց Աբէլ ժիր էր աւելի քան զԿայէն, վասն այնորիկ ոչ յայտնել կարէր Կայէն զխորհուրդն իւր: 18. Սկիզբն արար խաղալ ընդ եղբօրն իւր եւ արար զօտամարտիլ, եւ կշտի բռնել փորձիլ, զի տեսցէ յուժն իւր յաղթել կարէ զնա. քանզի որ կշտի <բռնեաց> վայր անկաւ եւ ոչ կարաց յաղթել զԱբէլ: 19. Եւ ելեալ Կայէն հայեցաւ աստ եւ անդ, եւ ետես մատն խաղողի բազում երկայն. իսկ Կայէն ասէր. Եկ եղբայր մատնաւ <խաղասցուք> :

20. Ասէ Աբէլ. Որպէս <խաղասցուք> մատնեաւ:

21. Ասէ Կայէն. Դու <գրկեա> զծառս, եւ ես երեք մատնովս պատեմ զքեզ, տեսանեմ թէ կարես կտրել զնա եւ արձակիլ. ապա ես գրկեմ զծառդ, եւ դու պատեա մատներաւդ ի վերայ իմ, տեսցուք զի ով կարէ կտրել զնա:

22. Եւ նա ուժով էր, այնու փորձեաց թէ ում ուժն աւելի <է> : 23. Իբրեւ գնաց Աբէլ ի ծառն Կայէն առեալ զուռն որթի եւ պատէր երեք պատ ձեռներովն եւ քամակովն, եւ ապա իմացաւ Աբէլ զչարութիւն եղբօրն. աղաչէր եւ ասէր. Եղբայր, արձակեա զիս ի կապէն: 24. Եւ Կայէն ոչ արձակէր, այլ պնդագոյն կապէր այնչափ ուռով որթիւ պատեաց զնա ծառովն ոտից մինչեւ ցգլուխն: 25. Լայր Աբէլ եւ ասէր. Եղբայր, արձակեա զիս. այս անցաւոր աշխարհիս համար մի հեղուր զարիւնն իմ. ես քեզ ի՞նչ չարութիւն <արարի> , ընդէ՞ր բարկանաս ինձ աշխարհս ամէն քեզ լինի:

26. Իսկ Կայէն աստ եւ անդ շրջէր թէ իբր մի գտցէ եւ այնով սպանանիցէ զեղբայրն, եւ ոչ գիտէր թէ որոյ տեղ է սպանելոյ: 27. Իսկ չարն Սատանայ իբրեւ եղեւ երեկոյն, սեւ զայլաքարաւ եւ քարածեծուքար մի կայր, սուր իբրեւ ածելի, այնով սպանին մինն զմիւսն, եւ զսուր քարն ի վայր ձգեաց: 28. Եւ Կայէն ուսեալ ի նմանէ եւ առեալ զսուր քարն, եւ եկեալ առ Աբել. Իսկ Աբէլ լայր, եւ ասէր. Ո՞չ ողորմիս մեր ծնօղացն: 29. Իսկ Կայէն ոչ ողորմեցաւ նմա: 30. Իբրեւ եկն ի սպանումն լալով ասաց Աբէլ. Եղբայր, բեր զերեսդ համբուրեմ <զի> կարօտ չմնայ ի սրտիս. դու գիտես դատաստանն Աստուծոյ: 31. Իբրեւ քարիւն կտրէր <զխոչակն> եղբօրն, յայնժամ եղբայրն ասաց. իմ մօրս ասես զի զկաթն իւր հալալ արասցէ ինձ: 32. Քանզի քարն փոքր էր,

B

<դժուարին մորթեաց մինչ ի ժամ մի քռանց> մորթեաց։
33. Դարձեալ ի ժամ մորթելոյ ասէր եղբայրն. Ես գնացին յաշխարհէս եւ դու շահեա զսիրտ ծնօղաց մերոց։

A	B
36. And how he killed him, and in what way, I shall explain. Cain led Abel into the garden which he himself had planted, and he seized him and tied him to a tree with his hands behind him. And he took a stone--a flint --and in such a way he stoned the innocent lad until he gave up the ghost.	16. But one day Cain said to his brother, "Let us go take a walk in the field." 17. So they arose and went into the field, and Cain wished to bind his brother. But Abel was stronger than Cain; because of this Cain could not reveal his plan. 18. He began to play with his brother and to wrestle, and he tried to grab him from the side to see if by his strength he could overcome him. <But> because he grabbed him from the side, he fell down and could not overcome Abel. 19. And Cain got up and looked here and there, and he saw a very long grapevine. Then Cain said, "Come, brother, <let us play> with a vine."

20. Abel said, "How <shall we play> with a vine?"

21. Cain said, "You <embrace> this tree, and I will bind you three times around with this vine and see if you can break it and become untied. Then I will embrace the tree, and you tie me up with the vines, <and> we will see who can break it.

22. And he was strong, <but> by this he tried <to find out> who was stronger. 23. When Abel went to the tree, Cain took the vine branch and tied three times around his hands and body. And then Abel perceived his brother's wickedness. He implored and said, "Brother, untie me from the bond." 24. And Cain did not untie him, but bound him more firmly. In such a way he bound him to the tree with a vine branch from his feet to his head. 25. Abel wept and said, "Brother, untie me. Do not shed my blood on account of this perishable world. What evil have I done to you; why are you angry at me? All this world is yours."

26. Now Cain was walking here and there in order to find something and kill his brother with it, but he did not know which is the place of killing. 27. But Satan the wicked, when the evening came, with a black flintstone...and there was a grinding stone, sharp as a razor, with which the one killed the other, and he threw down the sharp stone. 28. And Cain learned from him and took the sharp stone and came toward Abel. Then Abel wept and said, "Do you not have compassion on our parents?" 29. But Cain did not pity him. 30. When he came for the kill, Abel said weeping, "Come, brother, let me kiss your face, <lest> want remain in my heart. You know the judgment of God." 31. While he was cutting his brother's wind-pipe with the stone, his brother said, "Tell my mother that she should make her milk as nourishment for me." 32. Because the stone was small he killed him with difficulty; for one hour he slaughtered him violently. 33. Again while he was slaughtering <him>, his brother said, "I have gone out of this world, but you gain the heart of our parents."

A comparison of the two accounts of the murder reveals three common details which are not found in the biblical story of Cain and Abel: 1) Cain binds Abel to a tree, 2) Abel's hands are tied, and 3) the instrument of murder is a flintstone. The two accounts are distinguished by two contradictions. First, in A, Cain holds Abel and binds him to a tree, whereas in B, since Cain cannot overcome Abel physically, he tricks Abel into allowing himself to be tied as part of a game. Second, the murder takes place in Cain's garden in A (դրախտ), but according to B they are in a field (դաշտ). B contains unique materials; the wrestling between Cain and Abel, Abel's superior strength, and the extensive dialogue between Cain and Abel are not reflected in A. The similarities in the contents of A and B, the two contradictions between them, and the unique elements in B suggest that while neither account in its present form serves as a source for the other, A and B may draw upon a common source. Although the lack of more explicit parallels in language and detail and the brevity of A prohibit a more precise definition of the source, it is possible to view A as a brief summary of the source used by

B. Since we have determined that A is an awkward and perhaps later insertion into the narrative of Repentance, it is reasonable to assume that Repentance was either written by a compiler of sources or was redacted by a scribe who abbreviated and inserted B's source. That is entirely consistent with our view of the seven punishments of Cain, where an independent list of the punishments in Repentance was modified by material which served as a source for the Adam Cycle.

D. Enoch's/Enosh's Garden

Two parallel accounts of the planting of a garden attributed to Enoch or Enosh occur in the Armenian Adam books treated here. The account of Enoch's garden (henceforth A) in Tidings 10-16 is preceded by the story of the seed of Seth and their life in separation from the seed of Cain in accordance with the command of an angel to Adam. The virtue of the seed of Seth is described, the story of Enoch's garden is inserted abruptly, and then the impiety of the seed of Cain is contrasted with the virtue of the seed of Seth. Immediately following the story of Enoch's garden, but preceding the discussion of the impiety of Cain's seed, is a paragraph which ties the Enoch insert to the main theme; Enoch's pious life in the garden was a motivation for Seth's seed to retire and devote itself to purity and mortification. The placement of the insertion in the text is dependent upon the identification of Enoch as the son of Seth and the brief dialogue between Seth and Enoch which it contains.

In The Words of Adam to Seth, the protagonist of the garden story is Enosh in vs. 12 and Enoch in vs. 14.[7] According to this brief text, Adam explains to Seth why he was cast out of paradise, and Seth brings him a branch from the forbidden tree given him by an angel. Seth explains this branch to be a sign of both death and life, and Adam dies. The account of the garden (henceforth B, vss. 12-16) is appended to this story because of its similar content; both stories describe an act of one of Adam's living descendents evoked by the story of the expulsion from the garden.

The texts and translations of the two accounts of Enoch's/Enosh's garden are presented in parallel columns below.

A	B
10. Իսկ Սեթայ որդին քարի պտուղն Ենովք, եհարց ի հօրէն թէ պապն մեր Ադամ ընդէր տրտում <է>: 11. Ասէ Սէթ. Վասն ճաշակելոյ պտղոյն, որ ելաւ ի դրախտէն, վասն այն տրտում է: 12. Իսկ Ենովք ասէ ցհայրն. Հօր պարտքն պիտի որդին <վճարել>: 13. Վասն այն ոչ ամուսնացաւ	12. Եւ յետ ժամանակաց անցելոց, Սէթ զբանն ընդ Ենովս խօսեցաւ եւ ասէ. Այսպէս ասէր հայրն իմ Ադամ, թէ ոչ էր այս բնակութիւնս մեր, այլ այս բնակութիւնս գազանաց էր եւ այլ ստեղծուածոցն, եւ մեր բնակութիւնն յԵդեմ ընդ արեւելս էր: 13. Եւ յորժամ ստեղծ Աստուած զհայրն մեր եւ եդ զնա ի դրախտին, եւ պատուէր ետ նմա

[7] Thus Enosh is told the story of the expulsion, but Enoch makes the response. Note that in A, Enoch is incorrectly called the son of Seth. In B, the author knows that Seth should be speaking to his son Enosh (although the word որդի is not found in B), but associates the garden story with Enoch. Thus the appearance of Enosh in B may imply that B inherited and corrected the tradition contained in A, but may also be the product of a scribal error.

A

Ենովք: 14. Տնկեաց այգի մեծ լի ամենայն բարութեամբ. վաթսունեւչորս տարի սպասաւորեաց այգւոյն:
15. Ամենայն մարդ ճաշակէր ի պտղոյն. իսկ ինքն Ենովք ոչ ճաշակեաց ամենեւին. այլ երկաթի սաղաւարտ ի գլուխն եդեալ, զի մի բարձր հայեսցի ի պտուղն ծառերոյն. քանզի վաթսունեւչորս տարի այգեգործ եղեւ եւ ոչ ճաշակեաց ի նմանէ: 16. Իսկ Աստուած հրամայեաց հրեշտակին իւրոյ զի զնա մարմնով վերացուցին եւ եդին ի մէջ դրախտին, եւ է մինչեւ ցայսօր:

B

յորոյ ուտել ի պտղոյն եւ յորոյ չուտել. իսկ նորա ոչ պահեալ զպատուիրանն, մերկացեալ յաստուածային լուսոյն եւ արտաքս անկեալ ի դրախտէն եւ հաւասար եղեալ անասնոց անբանից:

14. Եւ Ենովք զբանս զայս ի միտ էառ, եւ զքառասուն տիւ եւ զքառասուն զիշեր ամենեւին ոչ ճաշակեաց: 15. Եւ յետ այնորիկ տնկեաց դրախտ վայելուչ, եւ զամենայն պտղաբեր տնկեաց ի նմա: 16. Եւ կացեալ ի դրախտին այնմիկ հինգհարիւր եւ քառասունեւերկու ամ, եւ (յ)ետ այնորիկ մարմնով յերկինս համբարձաւ, եւ աստուածային փառացն եւ լուսոյն արժանաւորեցաւ:

10. And Seth's son Enoch, the good fruit, asked his father, "Why < is > Adam, our grandfather, sad?"

11. Seth said, "He is sad because he tasted of the fruit, for which he went out of the garden."

12. Then Enoch said to his father, "The son must <pay> the debts of the father."

13. Because of this Enoch did not marry. 14. He planted a large orchard filled with every good thing. For sixty-four years he tended the orchard. 15. Every man tasted of the fruit, but Enoch himself did not taste at all. Rather he put an iron helmet on his head so that he would not look up at the fruit of the trees. Although he was an orchard worker for sixty-four years, he did not taste of it. 16. Then God commanded his angel so that he took him up bodily and placed him in

12. And after some time had passed, Seth spoke that discourse to Enosh and said, "Thus my father Adam said, 'This was not our home, rather this was the home of wild beasts and the other creatures, but our home was in Eden towards the east.' 13. And when God created our father, he also put him in the garden, and he commanded him from which fruit to eat and from which fruit not to eat. But he did not keep the commandment, stripped himself of the divine light, and was expelled from the garden and became equal to the irrational animals."

14. And Enoch considered this thing, and for forty days and forty nights he tasted nothing at all. 15. And after that he planted a comely garden, and he planted in it every fruit-bearing tree.
16. And he lived in that garden 542 years, and (af)ter

A	B
the midst of Paradise, and he is there until today.	that he ascended bodily into heaven, and became worthy of the divine glory and light.

1. In both versions, Seth tells Enoch/Enosh that Adam was expelled from the garden for having tasted of the forbidden fruit, but the two accounts differ significantly in their particulars. The identification of Enoch as the son of Seth and as "the good fruit" in A is not found in B. In A, Seth's explanation of the expulsion is a response to Enoch's inquiry about Adam's grief,[8] whereas the question is absent in B. B contains a much fuller account of the expulsion than A and includes unique materials.

2. In both versions, Enoch/Enosh responds to the story of the expulsion by planting a garden of fruits where he remains until he is translated, but again the accounts differ in their particulars. In A, Enoch plants a garden but does not eat its fruit, whereas in B, Enoch/Enosh fasts for forty days and then plants a garden. A reports that angels took Enoch to paradise, but in B we read only that Enoch ascended bodily into heaven. There are also unique materials in A and B as well as a contradiction between them. A contains a fuller account of Enoch's activity in the garden; although other men tasted of the fruit of the garden, Enoch dressed its vines, but wore an iron helmet to prevent him from looking at the fruits. A adds that Enoch still remains in paradise where he was translated. In B, Enoch/Enosh receives the divine glory and light after being translated. A and B contradict each other in reporting the duration of Enoch's/Enosh's stay in the garden.[9] [9]An additional fragmentary text, The Descendants of Adam, lines 12-16, 19-22 (in Stone, Armenian Apocrypha) shows interesting affinities with the story of Enoch's/Enosh's garden. A text and translation of the relevant lines is given below.

---

[8]Cf. Life of Adam and Eve 31:3, where Adam's explanation of the expulsion to Seth is similarly motivated.

---

եւ հաճոյ եղեւ Ենովք Աստուծոյ. եւ ապրեցաւ հինգհարիւրեւքսան տարի. եւ ծառոյ [...] միս ոչ կերաւ: Եւ կտաւ քաշեաց ի վերայ երեսացն. եւ յերկինքն ոչ հայեցաւ վասն Ադամայ մեղացն ոչ յիշխեմ նայել յերկինս. որ ողորմի Ա[ստուած] Ենովքայ եւ յանմահութիւն փոխեաց զնայ:

And Enoch was pleasing to God, and he lived 520 years. And of the tree...meat he did not eat. And he drew linen over his face, and did not look at the heavens, on account of the sin of Adam...And I, on account of the sin of Adam, I dare not look at the heavens, that G[od] may have mercy upon Adam. And God had mercy upon Enoch and transferred him to immortality.

A comparison of the text of The Descendants of Adam (henceforth C) with A and B yields the following results.

1) Both A and C occur in the context of a discussion of the relation of the seed of Seth and Cain. However, in A, the story of Enoch's garden follows a discussion of the life of the seed of Seth and Cain in separation and is followed by a description of the impiety of the seed of Cain, the virtue of the seed of Seth, and the seduction of the latter by the former. In C, the Enoch material follows the seduction scene.

2) In A, B, and C, the protagonist refrains from eating. We have noted that in A, Enoch abstains from eating the fruit of his garden while in B Enosh fasts before planting the garden. Although the text of C is fragmentary, lines 13-14 suggest that Enoch's abstinence was connected both with the fruit of a tree and with meat. But there is no mention of Enoch's planting or tending a garden in C.

3) In both A and C, Enoch covers himself and does not look up. This action is directly related to Adam's sin in both texts. However, in A, Enoch covers his head with an iron helmet in order to avoid looking at the fruit of the trees, whereas in C, Enoch draws linen over his face in order to avoid looking at the heavens.

Our comparison of the texts yields the following results. First, although A and B are similar in structure and general content, there is little agreement between them in their details, and one contradiction is present. Second, there are no compelling linguistic parallels between A and B. Third, a comparison of A, B, and a third Armenian account of the story in The Descendants of Adam (C) indicates that common ideas or motifs are used quite differently in the three texts. Fourth, a common tradition about the planting of a garden has been associated with two distinct figures; Enoch and Enosh. These observations indicate that there is no literary relationship between A and B. The fluidity of the protagonist of the story and of the specific details related to common motifs in A, B, and C suggest that the three texts have drawn from a common oral tradition which was widely differentiated when committed to writing.

In summary, two conclusions may be drawn about the literary relationships between the Armenian Adam books. First, The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve appears

---

4) After the preceding events, A and B note that Enoch was translated, and in C we learn that God transferred Enoch to immortality.

These correspondences of detail between A, B, and C, and especially between A and C, indicate some relationship between the texts. In addition to the striking differences noted above, it must be observed that the general content of C is quite different from that of A and B. In A and B, Enoch/ Enosh responds to Seth's explanation of Adam's expulsion from the garden by planting a garden and fasting. But C contains no explanation of Adam's expulsion and there is no mention of Enoch's planting a garden. The vocabulary of C also shows no affinities with that of A and B.

to have used an earlier form or source of the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works. In reporting the seven punishments of Cain, Repentance has supplemented an independent list of punishments with additional material from an earlier form or source of the Adam Cycle. Repentance may also have drawn material from that same source in reporting the annunciation of Seth's birth and the murder of Abel. Second, The Words of Adam to Seth and the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works appear to be independent of one another and to have drawn upon a common oral tradition about Enoch's garden.

Chapter 3

SOURCES AND TRADITIONS

It has been shown in chapter two that The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve drew upon an earlier form or source of the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works as a literary source. Comparison of the Armenian Adam books with other works containing stories about the ante-diluvians allows us to identify additional literary sources for some of these books, and to point to elements of tradition shared by the Adam books and a variety of ancient Jewish and Christian works although no precise literary source for the Armenian materials may be identified. The first part of this chapter will investigate the possibility that the Apocalypse of Moses and the Armenian text of Genesis may have served as sources for both Repentance and the Adam Cycle. The second part will examine the history of selected traditions from the Armenian Adam books. The search for affinities between the stories of the seven punishments of Cain, the annunciation of the birth of Seth, the murder of Abel, and Enoch's garden treated in chapter two and parallel Jewish and Christian texts will provide further insight into the background of the Adam books and the means by which these materials came into Armenia.

A. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve

In addition to the isolated elements of tradition common to Repentance and Ap. Mos. which will be treated below, there are several more extended parallels between the two works which must be explained. The stories of the quest for the oil from the tree of life, Eve's vision of Abel's murder, and Eve's dialogue with Adam at his deathbed in Repentance and Ap. Mos. are similar not only in general outline, but also in the details of the stories and in the actual wording. One narrative sequence common to the two works will also be discussed.

The story of the quest for the oil from the tree of life is found in Repentance 86-93. Following the story of Abel's murder and Cain's punishment (36-60), Adam and Eve mourn at length over their expulsion from the garden and long to return there (61-78a). Adam becomes severely ill and his wife and children gather at his bedside (78b-85), but Adam seeks a reprieve. He sends Eve and Seth to the garden of Eden to procure some healing oil from its trees. The mission fails, and Eve and Seth return to find Adam dead. The work concludes with Eve's death and a description of the burial of the protoplasts (94-104). A similar story of the quest for the oil appears in Ap. Mos. 9:3-14:1 surrounded by two similar accounts of the fall from the garden. After the birth of Seth, Adam becomes ill and gathers his children at his deathbed (4:1-5:2). Adam discusses his illness with Seth and recounts his fall (5:3-9:2), after which he sends Eve and Seth on their quest for the oil. When they return unsuccessful, Eve recounts the fall to her children at great length (14:2-30:1), and only then does Adam die (31:1-32:4).

The texts and translations of the parallel stories are given below.

Repentance 86-93

86. Բայց դու այժմ երթ աղաչեա զՏէր, զի թերեւս տացէ ի ծառոյն աւծմանէ, որ այնու աւծանէք զանձն իմ, զի դիւրանամ ի ցաւոցս:

87. Եւ յարուցեալ Եւայ առ զՍէթ, եւ գնաց աղաչել զՏէր, տալ պտուղ իւղընծիւղ ի ծառոց դրախտին, վասն առողջութեանն Ադամայ: 88. Եւ հանդիպեալ նոցա անհազին գազանն Բեհմովթ. յարձակեցաւ ի վերայ Սեթայ եւ կամէր ուտել զնա: 89. Յայնժամ Միչ բարձեալ Եւայ, աղաղակեաց ընդդէմ գազանին եւ ասաց. Սանձեա զբերան քո եւ մի իշխեսցես մերձենալ ի ծառայդ Աստուծոյ. յիշեա զի ընդ մերով իշխանութեամբ էիր, եւ մի համարձակիր վնասել զորդիդ իմ: 90. Յայնժամ եթող գազանն զՍէթ զոր կալեալ ուտէր եւ ասաց Եւայի. Զեզ հնազանդ յայնժամ էի, որքան դուք հնազանդ Աստուծոյ էիք, եւ զպատուիրանս նորա պահէիք. իսկ ի յանցանելն

Ap. Mos. 9:3-14:1[1]

9:3 εἶπεν δε Ἀδὰμ τῇ Εὕα ἀνάστα καὶ πορεύου μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ ἡμῶν Σὴθ πλησίον τοῦ παραδείσου, και ἐπίθετε γῆν ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς ὑμῶν καὶ κλαύσατε δεόμενοι τοῦ θεοῦ ὅπως σπλαγχνισθῇ ἐπ᾽ ἐμέ, καὶ ἀποστείλῃ τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν παράδεισον καὶ δώσῃ μοι ἐκ τοῦ δένδρου ἐν ᾧ ῥέει τὸ ἔλαιον ἐξ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐνέγκῃς μοι, και ἀλείψομαι καὶ ἀναπαύσομαι, καὶ δηλώσω σοι τὸν τρόπον ἐν ᾧ ἠπατήθημεν τὸ πρότερον.

10:1 Ἐπορεύθη δὲ Σὴθ καὶ ἡ Εὕα εἰς τὰ μέρη τοῦ παραδείσου. καὶ πορευομένων αὐτῶν εἶδεν Εὕα τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς καὶ θηρίον πολεμοῦντα αὐτόν...3 ἐβόησεν δὲ ἡ Εὕα πρὸς τὸ θηρίον λέγουσα ὦ σὺ θηρίον πονηρόν, οὐ φοβήσει τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ θεοῦ πολεμῆσαι; πῶς ἠνοίγη τὸ στόμα σου; πῶς ἐνίσχυσαν οἱ ὀδόντες σου; πῶς οὐκ ἐμνήσθης τῆς ὑποταγῆς σου,

[1]The Greek text is taken from K. von Tischendorf, "Apocalypsis Mosis," Apocalypses Apocryphae Mosis, Esdrae, Pauli, Ioannis, item Mariae dormitio: Additis Evangeliorum et actuum apocryphorum supplementis (Leipzig: Herm. Mendelssohn, 1866), pp. 4-7. Portions of the text not paralleled in Repentance are omitted from the Greek and are summarized in brackets in the translation.

Repentance 86-93

ծերում զհրաման արարչին, յարձակիմք ի վերայ ձեր եւ խստանամք, եւ ընդդէմ դառնամք ձեզ: 91. Զայս հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ խաւսեցաւ գազանն եւ ասաց ընդ Եւայ մարդկային բարբառով, խոժոռ խոլոր եւ անհարկու դիմաւք. եւ ապա թողեալ զնոսա գանց արար եւ գնաց:
92. Եւ մինչ դեռ մայրն եւ
որդին, Եւայ եւ Սէթ, աղօթէին յանդիման դրախտին, եկն առ նոսա հրեշտակապետն Գաբրիէլ եւ ասաց. Արիք եւ գնացէք զի մեռաւ Ադամ յերեկոյին ժամուն ընդ մտանել արեւուն: 93. Եւ նոքա ելեալ գնացին լալով եւ հառաչանաւք, եւ տեսին զԱդամ մեռեալ, եւ արարին կոծ մեծ ի վերայ նորա:

Ap. Mos. 9:3-14:1

ὅτι πρότερον ὑπετάγης τῇ εἰκόνι τοῦ θεοῦ; 11:1 Τότε τὸ θηρίον ἐβόησε λέγον ὦ Εὔα, οὐ πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἡ πλεονεξία σου οὔτε ὁ κλαυθμός σου, ἀλλὰ πρὸς σέ ἐπειδὴ ἡ ἀρχὴ τῶν θηρίων ἐκ σοῦ ἐγένετο. 2 πῶς ἠνοίγη τὸ στόμα σου φαγεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου περὶ οὗ ενετείλατό σοι ὁ θεὸς μὴ φαγεῖν ἐξ αὐτοῦ; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμῖν ἡ φύσις μετηλλάγη. νῦν οὖν οὐ δυνήσει ὑπενεγκεῖν, ἐὰν ἀπάρξομαι ἐλέγχειν σε...12:2... καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν αὐτοῦ.

13:1 Ἐπορεύθη δὲ Σὴθ μετὰ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτοῦ Εὔας πλησίον τοῦ παραδείσου και ἔκλαυσαν ἐκεῖ, δεόμενοι τοῦ θεοῦ ὅπως ἀποστείλῃ τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ καὶ δώσει αὐτοῖς τὸ ἔλαιον τοῦ ἐλέου. 2 καὶ ἀπέστειλεν ὁ θεὸς πρὸς αὐτοὺς Μιχαὴλ τὸν ἀρχάγγελον, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς τοὺς λόγους τούτους Σὴθ, ἄνθρωπε τοῦ θεοῦ, μὴ κάμῃς εὐχόμενος ἐπὶ τῇ ἱκεσίᾳ ταύτῃ περὶ τοῦ ξύλου ἐν ᾧ ῥέει τὸ ἔλαιον, ἀλεῖψαι τὸν πατέρα σου Ἀδάμ οὐ γὰρ γενήσεταί σοι νῦν ...6 σὺ πάλιν πορεούου πρὸς τὸν πατέρα σου, ἐπειδὴ ἐπληρώθη τὸ μέτρον τῆς ζωῆς αὐτοῦ, ἴσον τριῶν ἡμερῶν. ἐξερχομένης δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ μέλλεις θεάσασθαι τὴν ἄνοδον αὐτῆς φοβεράν.

14:1 Εἰπὼν δὲ ταῦτα ὁ ἄγγελος ἀπῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτῶν. ἦλθεν Σὴθ καὶ ἡ Εὔα εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν ὅπου ἔκειτο ὁ Ἀδάμ.

86. "But go now and beg the Lord, for perhaps he will give you some of the oil from the tree with which you will annoint me, so that I will be relieved of these pains."

87. And Eve rose up and took Seth, and she went to beg the Lord to give her the 9:3 But Adam said to Eve, "Rise up and go with our son Seth near to paradise, and put earth upon your heads and weep, asking God to have compassion on me and send his angel into paradise, and give to me of the tree from which the oil flows, and bring it to me, and I will oil-producing fruit from the trees of the garden for the sake of curing Adam. 88. And the hideous beast Behemoth met them; he pounced upon Seth and wished to eat him. 89. Then Eve shrieked, shouted at the beast and said, "Bridle your mouth, and do not dare to approach the servant of God. Remember that you were under our dominion, and do not dare to harm my son." 90. Then the beast released Seth whom he had seized and was about to eat, and he said to Eve, "I was obedient to you as long as you were obedient to God and kept his commandments. But because you have transgressed against the command of the creator, we fall upon you, treat you mercilessly, and turn against you." 91. The beast spoke this by the command of God, and he talked to Eve in a human voice, with a stern, harsh, and frightful countenance. Then he left them, passed by and went away.

Repentance 86-93

92. And while the mother and son, Eve and Seth, were praying before the garden, the archangel Gabriel came to them and said, "Arise and go, for Adam died in the evening at sunset." 93. And they left and went back weeping and groaning, and they saw Adam dead, and made a great lamentation over him.

Ap. Mos. 9:3-14:1

annoint myself and have rest, and I will show you the way in which we were deceived earlier.

10:1 Then Seth and Eve went toward the regions of paradise. And while they were going, Eve saw her son, and a beast fighting him...[Eve bemoans her transgressions] 3 And Eve shouted at the beast saying, "You wicked beast, are you not afraid to fight the image of God? How was your mouth opened? How were your teeth made strong? How did you not remember your subjection, because formerly you were made subject to the image of God?" 11:1 Then the beast cried out saying, "O Eve, neither your greed nor your weeping are toward us, but toward yourself, because the rule of the beasts came from you. 2 How was your mouth opened to eat from the tree concerning which God commanded you not to eat of it? Because of that our nature also was transformed. 3 Therefore now you cannot endure it if I reprove you."...[Seth commands the beast to be silent]...and he went to his dwelling.

13:1 And Seth went with his mother Eve near to paradise, and they wept there, asking God to send his angel and give them the oil of mercy. 2 And God sent Michael the archangel to them, and he said these words to them, "Seth, man of God, do not distress yourself longing in this prayer for the tree in which the oil flows, to annoint your father Adam, for it will not be yours now...[The resurrection of humanity is promised] 6 You go back to your father, because the measure of his life has been fulfilled, after three days. But when his spirit leaves, you will see its frightful passing."

Ap. Mos. 9:3-14:1

14:1 After the angel spoke these things, he departed from them. Seth and Eve went to the tent where Adam lay...

It is apparent that the two versions of the quest agree not only in general outline, but also in some details. In both texts, Adam tells Eve to go and ask God for oil from the tree in the garden with which he can be annointed and relieved. Eve and Seth go together and encounter a beast which attacks Seth. Eve chides the beast, warns it not to attack God's servant/image, and reminds the beast of its initial subjection. The beast replies that Eve's disobedience to God freed him from that subjection, and then withdraws. Eve and Seth pray near the garden and are visited by an archangel who informs them of Adam's death and tells them to depart, after which they return to Adam. This extended parallel suggests that Repentance may be dependent upon Ap. Mos. The differences between the two versions are also noteworthy. Adam's command to Eve and Seth to mourn outside the garden, Eve's bemoaning her transgression, Seth's silencing of the beast, and the promise of the resurrection by Michael are all unique to Ap. Mos., while the specific mention of Behemoth, his intention to eat Seth, and the description of his countenance are unique to Repentance. The two texts disagree insofar as in Repentance, Eve and Seth are met by Gabriel, not Michael, and they return to Adam who is already dead, whereas in Ap. Mos. Adam has three days of life remaining. The two accounts are also distinct in their wording of common materials. Repentance contains a shorter form of the story, and appears to be a free and abbreviated adaptation of the material in Ap. Mos. Although the story of the quest in Repentance shows no clearer affinities with the Armenian version of Ap. Mos. than with the Greek, the same cannot be said of two other extended parallels between the two works.

The first of those parallels is the account of Eve's dream about the murder of Abel. In Repentance, Eve's dream (32-33) is placed between two accounts of the annunciation of the birth of Seth. Following the death of Abel which is only briefly reported (30a), Adam and Eve are comforted with the promise of Seth's birth (30b-31). The story then reverts back to the time before Abel's death and Eve relates her dream to Adam. The murder is recounted a second time (36) and Adam discovers the body (37-39), after which the second annunciation of Seth's birth takes place (40-42). Ap. Mos. opens with the story of the birth of Abel and Cain (1:1-3), after which the story of Eve's dream follows directly (2:1-3). In a sequence which may be related to that in Repentance, Adam and Eve discover Abel's body (2:4-3:1), after which Seth's birth is announced.

The texts and translations of the two accounts of Eve's dream are given below. Ap. Mos. 2:2-3[2] is taken from the Armenian version[3] for reasons which will be shown below.

Repentance 32-33, 35

32...յաւուր միում տեսիլս պատմեաց Եւայ Ադամայ եւ ասաց թէ Տեսի զիշերս յերազի, որ զարիւնն Աբելի Կային ի բերանն առեալ ըմպէր: 33. Եւ Հաբէլ աղաչէր զնա թէ թող յարենէդ եւ նա ոչ լսէր, եւ ոչ մնայր ի փորն, այլ փսխէր ի դուրս զարիւնն Հաբելի...35. Եւ գնացեալ Ադամ փութանակի եւ ետես զի սպանեալ էր Կային զԱբէլ զեղբայր իւր...

32...on a certain day, Eve related this vision to Adam and said, "I saw in a dream last night that Cain took Abel's blood into his mouth and drank it. 33 And Abel begged him, 'Leave some of that blood!', but he did not listen, and it did not remain in his belly, rather he vomited out Abel's blood."...35 Therefore Adam went quickly and saw that Cain had killed Abel his brother...

Ap. Mos. 2:2-3, 3:1

2:2 ետես Եւա տեսիլ. յայնժամ զարթոյց զԱդամ եւ զտեսիլն պատմէր նմա, եւ ասէր այսպէս. Տէր իմ, տեսանէի ի տեսլեան գիշերիս, զի արիւն որդւոյն մերում Հաբելի լցեալ լինէր ի բերան Կայենի եղբօր իւրում. եւ նա ըմբէր զարիւն եղբօր իւրում. իսկ Հաբէլ աղաչէր զնա թողուլ նմա սակաւիկ մի յարենէ անտի, 2:3 եւ նա ոչ լինէր նմա ունկնդիր այլ վաղվաղակի ըմպէր զամենայն, եւ ոչ մնայր արիւն ի փորի նորա այլ արտաքս փսխէր զամենայն...3:1 Եւ գնացին գտին զի սպանեալ էր Հաբէլ ի ձեռաց եղբօր իւրոյ Կայենի.

2:2...Eve saw a vision. Then she awoke Adam, and she related the vision to him and said thus, "My lord, I saw in a vision tonight that the blood of our son Abel had filled the mouth of Cain his brother, and he was drinking his brother's blood. But Abel begged him to leave a little of the blood for him. 2:3 But he did not pay attention to him, rather he drank it all quickly; and the blood did not remain in his belly, rather he vomited out all of it...3:1 And they went and found that Abel had been killed by the hands of his brother Cain.

---

[2] 2:1 and 4 are omitted here because they are not paralleled in Repentance.

[3] A published Armenian text of Ap. Mos. based on three Venice manuscripts, is found in Yovsepeanc', Ankanon Girk, pp. 1-23.

These two accounts tell the same story, and report it in similar detail using similar language. In both texts, Eve relates a dream to Adam in which she sees Cain take Abel's blood into his mouth and drink it. Abel begs Cain to leave some of the blood, but Cain ignores him. Both texts report that the blood did not stay in Cain's stomach, but he vomited it out. There are no contradictions between the two accounts, and although the account in Ap. Mos. is longer, all of its essential elements are recounted in Repentance. There are no unique materials in Repentance. As the underlining in the Armenian texts shows, the Armenian vocabulary employed is notably similar in the two accounts, an observation which suggests that Repentance is dependent upon the Armenian version of Ap. Mos. This suggestion is verified by the fact that at points where the Greek and Armenian versions of Ap. Mos. differ, Repentance follows the Armenian.[4]

A third parallel story yields results similar to

---

[4]There are four instances where Repentance follows Armenian Ap. Mos. as opposed to the Greek version. 1) In Repentance 32, we read that Eve related her vision to Adam (տեսիլս պատմեաց Եւայ Ադամայ եւ ասաց). These words are not present in the Greek, but are found in Armenian Ap. Mos. 2:2 (զտեսիլն պատմէր նմա եւ ասէր). 2) Greek Ap. Mos. 2:2 refers to the blood τοῦ υἱοῦ μου Ἀμιλαβὲς τοῦ ἐπιλεγομένου Ἄβελ, whereas both the Armenian and Repentance 32 refer simply to the blood of Abel. 3) When Abel asks Cain to leave some of the blood, Greek does not use the word for blood, but simply the pronoun (ἐξ αὐτοῦ, "some of it"). Armenian and Repentance both use the word for blood (յարենէ). 4) To describe Cain's ejecting Abel's blood, Greek uses the word ἐξῆλθεν, while Armenian and Repentance 33 both use the more specific term փսխէր . There are no points at which Repentance agrees with Greek against Armenian.

those derived above. Both Repentance and Ap. Mos. report that while Adam is on his deathbed, he and Eve discuss the time of her death and their place of burial. In Repentance, the story (82-85) follows an extended lament by Adam and Eve over their expulsion (61-78a), after which Adam becomes ill and his wife and children gather around him (78b-81). The discussion between Adam and Eve appears, and then follows the story of the quest for the oil of life examined above. In Ap. Mos., the discussion between Adam and Eve (31:1-3) follows Eve's lengthy account of her fall (15:1-30:1), and is in the same context of Adam's being sick on his deathbed. Then follows Eve's repentance (32:1-4) and her vision of Adam's resurrection (33:1ff.).

The texts and translations of the two accounts in Repentance and the Armenian version of Ap. Mos. are presented below.

Repentance 82-85

82. Իսկ Եւայ եւ ամենայն
ծնունդք նորա լային եւ ողբային զԱդամ. եւ Ադամ կայր առաջի նոցա չարաչար տանջեալ ի հիւանդութենէ իւրմէ։
83. Յայնժամ ասէ Եւայ ցԱդամ.
Տէր իմ, ասա զժամանակ իմ թէ յամեմ ես յաշխարհիս, թէ շուտով մեռանիմ։ 84. Զինչ առնեմ զկնի քո, զի ես ոչ ինչ իմանամ։ 85. Ասէ Ադամ, Ոչ յամես, այլ ի միասին մեռանիմք եւ դիցեն զիս եւ
քեզ ի մին տեղի.

82. Now Eve and all her children wept and lamented

Ap. Mos. 31:1-3

31:1...եւ Ադամ կայր առաջի
նոցա, եղեալ ի ցաւս հիւանդութեան իւրում. իսկ Եւա եւ որդիք իւր սկսան լալ եւ ողբալ. եւ յորժամ լռեցին, զարթեաւ Ադամ ի քնոյ իւրմէ եւ ասէ ցնա Եւա։ 2. Ընդէ՞ր մեռանիս դու եւ ես կամ կենդանի, տէր
իմ. եւ կամ քանի ժամանակ զամ զհետ վախճանելոյդ քում ծանո ինձ զճշմարիտն։ 3. Ասէ Ադամ ցԵւա. Ոչ ինչ փոյթ է քեզ հարցանել վասն այնդոցիկ, վասն զի մի յապաղեսցես դու զալ զկնի իմ, այլ հաւասար մեռանիցիմք ի միասին, եւ դիցեն զքեզ մերձ առ իս ի նմին տեղւոջ։

31:1...and Adam lay before them in the pains of his

Repentance 82-85	Ap. Mos. 31:1-3
over Adam, and Adam lay before them, greatly tormented by his illness. 83. Then Eve said to Adam, "My lord, tell me the time of my death; shall I tarry on this earth, or shall I die quickly? 84. What shall I do after you, for I perceive nothing?" 85. Adam said, "You shall not tarry, rather we shall die together, and they will put me and you in the same place."	illness. Now Eve and her children began to weep and lament. And when they became silent, Adam awoke from his sleep, and Eve said to him, 2 "Why do you die, but I remain living, my lord? And how long after your death will I come; tell me the truth?" 3 Adam said to Eve, "Do not be anxious to ask about this, for you shall not delay in coming after me, rather we shall both die together, and they will put you near me in the same place."

Both of these brief accounts report that while Adam lies very ill surrounded by Eve and his children, Eve asks him how long she will live after he dies. To this query Adam responds that they will die and be buried together. Ap. Mos. contains the longer account and some unique material,[5] while there is nothing unique in Repentance, and the two accounts at no point contradict each other. Although the wording of the two accounts is distinct, there are again noticeable similarities in the Armenian vocabulary employed at points where the two accounts correspond. In addition, Repentance consistently agrees with Armenian Ap. Mos. against the Greek where the two accounts coincide. Thus in Repentance 82 Adam's children weep and lament over him before Eve speaks. This view is not present in Greek Ap. Mos., but it is found in the [5]Ap. Mos. reports that Adam awoke from his sleep, that Eve questions why Adam should die and she live, and that Adam tries to calm Eve from her anxiety.

Armenian, where the same vocabulary is employed (լամ, ողբամ). Also in Repentance 82, we learn that Adam lay before his children tormented by his illness. The phrase used is similar to that found in Armenian Ap. Mos., whereas the Greek reports only that Adam lay ill. Only in Repentance 83 and Armenian Ap. Mos. does Eve address Adam as "my lord." Finally, Repentance 85 and Armenian Ap. Mos. read "they will put" (դիցեն) where Greek is corrupt (αὐτὴ τεθήσει), and the two Armenian accounts read "in the same place" against Greek εἰς τὸν τόπον τὸν ἐμόν.[6]

The evidence presented above shows that Repentance drew upon the Armenian version of Ap. Mos. as one of its sources. Apart from the materials presented, however, the two works coincide only on brief and isolated occasions.

---

[6]Another interesting parallel between Repentance and Ap. Mos. involves a shared sequence of events surrounding the murder of Abel reported in the two works. In Ap. Mos., 1) Eve's dream about Abel's death (2:1-3) is followed by 2) the story of Adam and Eve's investigation of the dream and their discovery of Abel's body (2:4-31), after which 3) the birth of Seth is announced by an angel (3:2-3). The same sequence is also found in Repentance: 1) Eve's dream (32-34), 2) Adam investigates (35, 37-39), 3) annunciation of the birth of Seth (40-42). Although that sequence in Repentance is disrupted by the account of Abel's murder in vs. 36, we have already shown (see p.   ) that verse to be an intrusion into the text which disrupts its continuity; the manner of Abel's murder is described after his death is reported. Furthermore, the annunciation of the birth of Seth which appears in 40-42 has already been reported at greater length in 30b-31. It is possible that the motivation for repeating the annunciation story in 40-42 may have been a desire to conform to the sequence of events related in Ap. Mos. Apart from the parallels in the story of Eve's dream discussed above, there are no additional significant parallels beyond the agreement in sequence.

Ap. Mos. can be used to account for only a relatively small portion of the material found in Repentance.

It can also be shown that Repentance is dependent upon the Armenian version of Genesis. Although Repentance is a free elaboration of the Genesis story of the antediluvians and diverges widely from the biblical account, there are points at which Repentance and the biblical text closely coincide. An analysis of those coincidences allows us to identify another source used by Repentance.

The only significant coincidences between Repentance and Genesis occur in the story of Cain and Abel.[7] After Abel is murdered and the birth of Seth is announced (Repentance 32-42), God confronts the murderer Cain and asks, "Where is Abel your brother?" Note the virtual identity with Arm Gn 4:9.

Repentance 45 ո՞ւր է Աբէլ եղբայրն քո

Gn 4:9 ո՞ւր է Հաբէլ եղբայր քո

The identical wording continues in Cain's response, "I don't know. Should I be my brother's keeper?"

---

[7]There are two minor points at which Repentance and Genesis coincide, but little can be ascertained from them. The first occurs at Repentance 5, where God threatens Adam and Eve with death if they eat the forbidden fruit. The text reads մահու մեռանիցիք , which is identical to Arm Gn 2:17. LXX reads θανάτῳ ἀποθανεῖσθε. A second coincidence occurs at Repentance 28 where Eve, after bearing Cain, says "I have brought forth a man through God." The text reads ծնայ մարդ Աստուծով , cf. Arm Gn 4:1 ստացայ մարդ Աստուծով corresponding to LXX ἐκτησάμην ἄνθρωπον διὰ τοῦ θεοῦ. Some LXX minuscules read ἐκτισάμην.

Repentance 48: Ոչ զիտեմ մի թէ պահապան իցեմ եղբաւրն իմոյ

Gn 4:9: Չգիտեմ մի թէ պահապան իցեմ եղբաւրն իմոյ

After God confronts Cain, he lays seven punishments upon him. Although no such list is found in Arm Genesis, it is evident that the list in Repentance is derived by dividing the biblical account of Cain's punishment into seven parts. Again the similarity in wording to Arm Genesis is noteworthy.

1. Rep. 51: անիծեալ լինիր... Gn 4:11: անիծեալ լինիր դու
2. Rep. 52: ի վերայ երկրի... Gn 4:11: ի վերայ երկրի, որ եբաց զբերան իւր ընդունել զարիւն եղբօր քո ի ձեռաց քոց
3. Rep. 53: գործել զերկիր... Gn 4:12: Զի գործեսցես զերկիր
4. Rep. 54: եւ երկիր ոչ տայ քեզ զպտուղ իւր... Gn 4:12: եւ ոչ յաւելցէ տալ քեզ զզօրհութիւն իւր
5. Rep. 55: երերեալ Gn 4:12: երերեալ եւ
6. Rep. 56: տատանեալ... Gn 4:12: տատանեալ եղիցիս ի վերայ երկրի
7. Rep. 57: նշան եդ ի վերայ նորա Աստուած... ամենայն ոք գիտենայր զնա Gn 4:15: եդ Տէր Աստուած նշան ի Կային չսպանանել զնա ամենայն որ գտանիցէ զնա

Since it is highly unlikely that two independent translations of the biblical text would coincide to this degree in choice of Armenian vocabulary, it must be concluded that Repentance is dependent on the Armenian text of Genesis, either directly or through an Armenian intermediary.

B. The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works

Although it can be shown that isolated elements of tradition found in Ap. Mos. appear also in the Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works,[8] there are no extended parallels between the two works which give any evidence that the Adam Cycle is directly dependent upon Ap. Mos. The same cannot be said of the relationship between the Adam Cycle and the text of Genesis. While the final three chapters of the Adam Cycle coincide with the biblical text only in general outline and share no verbal parallels, the parallels between the first chapter (Transgression) and Gn 2-3 are frequent and on occasion precise. Parallels between the Adam Cycle and Genesis in reporting the creation of woman (Transgression 6-7 // Gn 2:21, 23), God's warning to the protoplasts not to eat the forbidden fruit (Transgression 8b // Gn 2:16-17), God's confrontation with Adam and Eve after they eat the fruit (Transgression 33b-40 // Gn 3:9b-13), and God's curse on Adam, Eve, and the serpent (Transgression 41-43 // Gn 3:14-20) demonstrate clearly that the Adam Cycle has drawn upon the Armenian text of Genesis.

At some points the Adam Cycle is identical in wording to the Armenian biblical text. Compare, for example, the two accounts of the creation of Eve.

Transgression 6	Gn 2:21
եւ արկ Տէր Աստուած թմբրութիւն ի վերայ Ադամայ,եւ առ զմի ի կողիցն նորա եւ ելից ընդ այնր մարմին	եւ արկ Տէր Աստուած թմբրութիւն ի վերայ Ադամայ եւ ննջեաց. եւ առ մի ի կողից նորա եւ ելից ընդ այնր մարմին

[8]Selected examples are treated in part C below.

Transgression 6	Gn 2:21
And the Lord brought a deep sleep upon Adam, and he took one of his ribs, and he filled in flesh in place of it.	And the Lord brought a deep sleep upon Adam, and he slept. And he took one of his ribs, and he filled in flesh in place of it.

At other points the Adam Cycle provides a free and modified version of the biblical text. In the account of God's curse on Adam, Eve, and the serpent, Transgression not only abbreviates and paraphrases the biblical text, but also reverses the order of the curses.[9]

Transgression 41-43	Gn 3:17-19, 16, 14-15
41...փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ, ոչ լուար խրատոյ իմոյ, այլ փութապէս լսեցեր զխրատոյ կնոջ քո. փոխանակ անմահ տնկոյս փուշ բուսանի քեզ. քրտամբ երեսաց քոց կերիցես զհաց քո. զի հող էիր եւ ի հող դարձցիս:	3:17 փոխանակ զի լուար ձայնի կնոջդ քո, եւ կերար ի ծառոյ անտի յորմէ պատուիրեցի քեզ անտի միայն չուտել, եւ կերար ի նմանէ, անիծեալ լիցի երկիր ի գործս քո. տրտմութեամբ կերիցես զնա զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց: 18. փուշ եւ տատասկ բուսուսցէ քեզ, եւ կերիցես զբանջար վայրի: 19. Քրտամբք երեսաց քոց կերիցես զհաց քո, մինչեւ դարձցիս յերկիր ուստի առար. զի հող էիր եւ ի հող դարձցիս:
42...փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ, բազմացուցանելով բազմացուցից զտրտմութիւն քո, ծնունդ քո մահու չափ եղիցի, եւ ցաւօք կերիցես զաշխարհս, եւ եղիցի քեզ տրտմութիւն զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց.	3:16 Բազմացուցանելով բազմացուցից զտրտմութիւն քո եւ հեծութիւն քո. տրտմութեամբ ծնցես որդիս, եւ առ այր քո դարձ քո, եւ նա տիրեսցէ քեզ.
43...Անիծեալ լիցիս յամենայն կենդանեաց մէջ, ի վերայ լանջաց եւ որովայնի քում սողասցիս, եւ հող կերիցես	3:14...անիծեալ լիջիր դու յամենայն գազանաց երկրի. ի վերայ լանջաց եւ որովայնի քո գնասցես, եւ հող կերիցես

[9] In the biblical text, God curses the serpent first, then Eve and then Adam. Transgression reverses the order so that Adam is cursed first, followed by Eve and the serpent. In the parallel given below, the order of the curses in Genesis has been rearranged to facilitate comparison.

Transgression 41-43

զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց. եդից զթշնամութիւն ի մէջ քո եւ ի մէջ կնոջ եւ ի մէջ զաւակի քո եւ ի մէջ զաւակի դորա, նա սպասեսցէ քում գլխոյ եւ դու սպասեսցես նորա գարշապարի.

41..."Because you have done this, and you did not listen to my counsel, but hastily listened to your wife's counsel, thorns will spring forth to you in place of this immortal plant. By the sweat of your brow shall you eat your bread, for you were dust, and you shall return to dust."

42..."Because you have done this, I will greatly multiply your affliction; childbearing will be the measure of your death, in suffering shall you eat the fruit of this earth, and you shall have sorrow all the days of your life."

43..."Cursed are you among all beasts; upon your breast and belly shall you crawl, and you shall eat dust all the days of your life. I shall put enmity between you and the woman and between your seed and her seed. She shall watch for your head, and you shall watch for her heel."

Gn 3:17-19, 16, 14-15

զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց: 15. Եւ եդից թշնամութիւն ի մէջ քո եւ ի մէջ կնոջդ, եւ ի մէջ զաւակի քո եւ ի մէջ զաւակի դորա. նա սպասեսցէ քում գլխոյ եւ դու սպասեսցես նորա գարշապարի

3:17 "Because you listened to the voice of your wife and you ate from the tree from which alone I commanded you not to eat, but you ate of it, cursed shall be the ground in your labors. In toil shall you eat it all the days of your life. 18. Thorns and thistles will spring forth to you, and you shall eat the herbs of the field. 19. By the sweat of your brow shall you eat your bread until you return to the ground from which you were taken. For you were dust, and you shall return to dust."

3:16 "I will greatly multiply your affliction and your lamentation. In sorrow shall you bear children, and to your husband shall you return, and he will rule over you."

3:14 "Cursed are you among all animals and wild beasts of the earth. Upon your breast and belly shall you go, and you shall eat dust all the days of your life. 15. And I shall put enmity between you and the woman, and between your seed and her seed. She shall watch for your head, and you shall watch for her heel."

In spite of the freedom which the author of Transgression has used in reporting the biblical story,[10]

---

[10]Transgression shows no affinities with the other biblical versions at points where it departs from Armenian.

the close agreement in the Armenian wording of the two accounts is unlikely to have been derived by independent translations from another biblical version or versions. This observation allows us to identify an Armenian literary source for the Adam Cycle.

C. Selected Traditions

While literary sources for much of the material contained in the Armenian Adam books cannot be identified, it may be shown that these Armenian materials bear significant affinities with a broad range of Jewish and Christian literary traditions dating from as early as pre-Christian times and extending into the Middle Ages. This point will be illustrated through a study of four selected traditions taken from the Armenian Adam books. The reader is referred to chapter two for texts and translations of the Armenian materials.

1. The Seven Punishments of Cain

Both Repentance 43-60 and Abel and Cain 34-47 report that Cain received seven punishments from God for murdering Abel and supply a list of those punishments. The notion that Cain received seven punishments is found in early translations of Gn 4:15 and may be derived from both the Hebrew text and versions of Gn 4:24. MT Gn 4:15 reads כל הרג קין שבעתים יקם, stating unambiguously that Cain's murderer will be avenged seven-fold. LXX, however, reads ὁ ἀποκτείνας Καὶν ἐπτὰ ἐκδούμενα παραλύσει, which may be translated a) "he who kills Cain will pay seven penalties" or b) "he who kills

Cain will loose seven penalties."[11] The ambiguity of LXX is lost in Arm, which reads եօթն վրէժս լուծցէ ("he will loose seven punishments").[12]

The meaning of the Hebrew text of Gn 4:24 is unclear:

כי שבעתים יקם קין ולמך שבעים ושבעה

MT treats יקם as a Pual, rendering the translation "Cain will be avenged seven-fold," but if the verb is taken to be active, we may read "he will avenge Cain seven-fold." The ambiguity is retained in LXX: ὅτι ἑπτάκις ἐκδεδίκηται ἐκ Καίν. ʼΕκ may be rendered either "on behalf of" or "from"; the latter translation gives the meaning "seven times vengeance has been exacted from Cain." The latter meaning is retained in Arm, which reads զի թէ եօթն անգամ վրէժք խնդրեցին ի Կայենէ.[13]

The idea that Cain received seven punishments is widespread in subsequent biblical interpretation and appears in Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic sources.[14] Of particular

---

[11]Παραλύω may mean either "to pay a penalty" or "to loose, take off, put an end to."

[12]Tgs. Onkelos, Ps.-J. and Neofiti give a different interpretation, noting that he who kills Cain will be avenged for seven generations. Other versions follow MT.

[13]Other versions are either irrelevant to this problem or follow MT.

[14]See, e.g. Philo, Quaes. Gen. I.77; Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79; Arabic (fol. 104a) and Syriac (fol. 10a.2-10b.1) Cave of Treasures; Hypostasis of the Archons II:4.91,30, James M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library (San Francisco: Harper and Row, 1977); Victorinus, De fabrica mundi 8; Cosmas Indopleustes, Cosmographia V.

interest is T. Ben. 7:3-5, where Cain is alloted one of the seven punishments every hundred years for seven hundred years.[15]

At least four other lists of the seven punishments of Cain grew out of the mention of seven punishments in the biblical texts of Gn 4:15 and 24. Three of the lists are in Greek and are closely related to one another. The earliest list is found in Ephraem Syrus' In Sanctam Parasceven[16] (fourth century) amidst a list of questions and answers about disparate biblical texts, the second is found in Procopius of Gaza's Commentary on Genesis[17] (fifth century), and the third in Pseudo-Malalas' Anonymous

---

[15]An alternative interpretation noted that Cain's punishment was suspended for seven generations. This idea is found in Jos. Ant. 1.58; Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79; BR 23:4; Midr. Tan. (Wilna) Bereshit 11; MHG on Gn 4:23 (Schechter, 1902); Yal. Shimoni to Gn 4:23; Theodoretus, Questions in Genesis 43; Ephraem Syrus, In Genesim I43E (P. Benedictus and S. Assemanus, eds., Ephraem Syri Opera Omnia Opera Syriace-Latine, Rome, 1737-43). Procopius of Gaza, In Genesim (Migne, vol. 87[1], col. 239) reads ἐν ἑπτὰ γενεαῖς δίκην δώσει, which may signify either that Cain will pay the penalty in seven generations (as above) or that he will pay it throughout seven generations (cf. T. Ben. above). The notions that Lamech was responsible for killing a man (Gn 4:23) and that Cain's punishment was suspended for seven generations are responsible for the widespread tradition that Lamech killed Cain. Lamech is the seventh generation after Cain according to Gn 5:1-25; Lk 3:36-38. This tradition will be discussed below.

A useful discussion of the subsequent interpretation of Gn 4:15 and 24 is found in Aptowitzer, Kain und Abel.

[16]Benedictus, Ephraem Syri, Opera Graeci-Latine, III, p. 477F. The text contains two lacunae.

[17]Migne, vol. 87[1], col. 248.

Chronicle[18] (ninth century?). Ephraem, in a manner similar to Repentance, derives his list by dividing the biblical account of the punishment of Cain into seven parts. Procopius draws his text directly from Ephraem, but expands it using a different LXX text.[19] Ps. Malalas has in turn copied from and abbreviated Procopius.[20] The Greek lists bear no relationship to the Armenian lists. Although the Greek is closer to the list in Repentance insofar as both divide the text of Gn 4:11-15 into seven parts, the differences between them indicate the lists were derived independently.[21] A fourth list which occurs in a late Georgian text appears to be related to the Armenian lists and not to the Greek.[22]

---

[18] W. L. Dindorf, Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae, vol. 8, p. 5.

[19] The content and order of the seven punishments is identical to that of Ephraem, the Greek wording in the two texts is similar, and most of the differences in wording can be explained with reference to LXX variants.

[20] The order and content of the seven punishments is identical. The Greek wording is very similar when the texts do not follow LXX, and when they do follow LXX, they generally reflect the same variant readings. Both contain one variation on LXX elsewhere unattested.

[21] Punishments four and six in Greek are not found in Repentance, Greek punishment one is divided into two parts (punishments one and two) in Repentance, and the repetition in punishments five and six in Repentance is not found in the Greek list. There are no striking similarities in the wording of the shared punishments.

[22] Lüdtke, "Adam-Bücher," p. 156, cites only one of the punishments in the list, according to which one horn sprouted from Cain's head which cried "Cain is a brother murderer." The Georgian agrees with Repentance in saying

The idea that Cain was made to shake (Repentance 55, Abel and Cain 41) is also found in MT, the versions, and subsequent interpretation of Gn 4:12. MT Gn 4:12 reads נע ונד תהיה בארץ; נוע means "to quiver, shake, tremble," and נוד may mean either "to wander" or "to shake, waver, totter." LXX reads στένων καὶ τρέμων, although some MSS read σαλευόμενος for στένων. Syriac zʾʿ wnʾd retains the ambiguity of MT. Tgs. Onkelos, Ps.-Jon., Neofiti, and Frag. Targ. use the word מטלטל, which may mean either "exile" or "trembler." Arm երերեալ and տատանեալ are identical to the words found in Repentance. In subsequent interpretation, Ps. Philo 2:1, Philo, Det. 119, Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79, and Chrysostom, Homilies on 1Cor 7:9, 30:9 note that this was Cain's punishment, and Philo Det. 140 adds that "worthless men of whose company Cain is a member" will live trembling (τρέμοντες) and shuddering (φρίττοντες). Hypostasis of the Archons II:4.91,30[23] states that Cain's murderer will exist "trembling upon the earth," and Recognitions of Pseudo-Clement VIII.47 notes that trembling sickness has been the punishment of parricide from the beginning. Midr. Tan. (Wilna, 1885) Bereshit 9 notes that the earth shook under Cain wherever he went, cf. Syncellus, that Cain had only one horn, but agrees with the Adam Cycle in reporting the words of the horn. This may suggest that the Georgian is also from the earlier form or source of the Adam Cycle, although the data is insufficient to judge.

---

[23]Robinson, Nag Hammadi.

Chronography, p. 16, which states that Cain dwelt in the low land which quakes (τρέμουσα).

Additional elements of tradition recorded in the two Armenian lists are found in earlier Jewish and Christian sources. We have noted that the widespread interpretation of Gn 4:15 that Cain's punishment was suspended for seven generations combined with the reference to a murder committed by Lamech (Gn 4:23), a seventh generation descendant of Adam's progeny, gave rise to a tradition that Lamech killed Cain.[24] According to this legend, Lamech, who was blind, went hunting with his son. Lamech's son saw Cain with a horn growing out of his forehead (N.B.), mistook him for a beast, and directed Lamech to kill him.[25] This tradition is also found in Abel and Cain 48-51, where Lamech sees Cain with his two horns and skin, mistakes him for a stag, and kills him. Yal. Shimoni to Gn 4:15, BR 22:12, Midr. Tan. (Wilna) Bereshit 10, and Zohar I36b understand the sign which God put on Cain (Gn 4:15) to be a horn which sprouted from his head.

The idea that Cain was not allowed to die is found in Philo, Fug. 64, who notes allegorically that Cain is "the symbol of wickedness which must of necessity ever live among men," and in Tertullian, Against Marcion II.25, where God

---

[24] Jos. Ant. 1.58 notes only that Lamech saw he was to pay the penalty for Cain's murder of his brother.

[25] Midr. Tan. (Wilna) Bereshit 11; MHG to Gn 4:23; Ephraem Syrus, In Genesim I46D; Jerome, ad Damasum 125. The same legend is found in the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve II.13; Sefer HaYashar (Berlin, 1923) p. 8; Midrash Aggadah on Gn 4:23; Yal. Shimoni on Gn 4:16, and Rashi on Gn 4:23, but the horn is not mentioned.

does not allow Cain to atone for his sin by dying. The notion that God asked Cain where his brother was in order to give him the opportunity to repent is found in the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79 and in Theophilus, To Autolycus II.29, in which Cain responds contemptuously and angers God. Midr. Tan. (Wilna) Bereshit 9 records the tradition that wherever Cain went, the beasts said to one another, "Cain killed Abel his brother."[26] The purpose of the sign which God put on Cain, according to the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79, was so that everyone would know that Cain murdered his brother.[27] Jub. 4:1, 31 notes that Cain lived 860 years (cf. Abel and Cain 46).

Finally, the notion in Abel and Cain 47 that Cain covered himself with a skin may be influenced by Gn 3:21, in which God covers Adam and Eve with garments of skin directly after cursing them.[28]

2. The Annunciation of the Birth of Seth

No single literary source for the story of the annunciation of the birth of Seth in the Armenian Adam books is extant among the remains of Jewish and Christian literature. The only other surviving account of an annunciation of Seth's

---

[26] Cf. the cry of Cain's horn in Repentance and the Adam Cycle and the response of the mountains, rocks, and valleys in the Adam Cycle.

[27] Cf. Repentance in contrast to Gn 4:15.

[28] Note that in MS Y, God brings the skin and covers Cain.

birth is found in Ap. Mos. 3:2-3 where God, in response to Adam's grief, sends an angel who tells him not to grieve and promises him another son to replace Abel. None of the more specific elements of the four Armenian accounts is paralleled here, and Ap. Mos. 3:2 contradicts Repentance 30 in naming the archangel Michael, not Gabriel.[29] In addition to this annunciation account, some of the elements of tradition contained in the Armenian texts are found in a variety of older sources. The idea that Adam and Eve engaged in a period of sexual separation following Abel's murder is common in apocryphal and rabbinic sources. Its earliest occurrence is in Jub. 4:7, where the duration of the separation is "four weeks of years." George the Syncellus, Chronography, p. 15, agrees, citing Jubilees as his source.[30] The Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve II.2[31] gives the figure seven years, while Syriac (fol. 8a, col. 1 - 8b col. 1)[32] and Arabic [29]The role of Gabriel may be influenced by Lk 1:26-38, where the angel delivers tidings of Jesus' birth. The Lukan story may account for some of the language and structure in Tidings. Here the angel tells Mary to fear not, promises she will bear a son, instructs her to name the son Jesus, and predicts his greatness.

---

[30]W. Dindorf, ed., Georgius Syncellus et Nicephorus. Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae, vol. VI. Syncellus most likely inherited his Jubilees material from Panodorus through Anianos. See H. Gelzer, Sextus Julius Africanus und die byzantinische Chronographie (Leipzig: B. G. Teubner, 1898), II, pp. 247-297.

[31]S. C. Malan, The Book of Adam and Eve (London: Williams and Northgate, 1882).

[32]C. Bezold, Die Schatzhöhle (Leipzig: Hinrich's, 1883), p. 8.

(fol. 97b)[33] Cave of Treasures say one hundred years. Eutychius, Annals 16,[34] Methodius the Younger, Revelations 3,[35] and Michael the Syrian, Chronicle I:1[36] have inherited the latter figure. Tg. Ps.-J. to Gn 4:25; BR 23:4 (cf. 20:11); Num. R. 14:12; b. 'Erub. 18b; Midr. Tan. (Wilna, 1833) Bereshit 11; and Midr. Tan. (Buber) Bereshit 26 // Yal. Hamekiri on Prv. 14:28 agree that the period of separation was one hundred and thirty years.[37] None of these figures agree with those in Abel and Cain and Repentance. The idea that Adam and Eve mourned over Abel's unburied body is also attested elsewhere. In Pirqe R. El. 21 and the Slavonic

---

[33] M. D. Gibson, "Kitāb al Magāll, or the Book of the Rolls," Apocrypha Arabica (London: J. C. Clay, 1901).

[34] J.-P. Migne, ed., Patrologie Cursus Completus (Paris: Garnier, 1863), Series Graeca, vol. 111, col. 911.

[35] Quoted in S. Baring-Gould, Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets (New York: Holt and Williams, 1872), p. 57.

[36] J.-B. Chabot, Chronique de Michel le Syrien (repr. Brussels: Jos. Adam, 1963).

[37] This unanimity among the rabbis goes back to a contradiction in the biblical text. According to Gn 4 (=J), Cain and Abel were the first sons of Adam, while Gn 5:3 (=P) implies that Adam begat his first son, Seth, at age one hundred and thirty. In order to resolve this discrepancy, the rabbis concluded that the one hundred thirty years of Gn 5:3 refers to a period of separation of Adam and Eve which was broken when Seth was conceived.

Cf. with Tidings and Abel and Cain the motivation for the separation given in Midr. Tan. Bereshit 26 // Yal. Hamekiri on Prv. 14:28: "Why should I beget sons if they will come under a curse" (i.e. death).

In addition to the texts listed above, Pesiq. Rab. Kah. 5:2 and Pesiq. R. 15:2 allude to a separation of Adam and Eve of unspecified duration.

Palaea,[38] Adam and Eve mourn over Abel's body, being unaccustomed to burial, until God sends two ravens, one of which kills and buries the other as a sign for Adam and Eve to imitate.[39] According to the Melchizedek fragment 3:36,[40] Adam buried Abel after Abel lay unburied for three years. In Ap. Mos. 40:3-5, the earth does not receive Abel's body until Adam is buried. This is also implied in the Life of Adam and Eve 48:4-7, where Adam and Abel are buried simultaneously, and in Jub. 4:29, Syriac Cave of Treasures (fol. 9a col. 1), where Adam is the first to be buried in the ground.

The etymological identification of Seth as "consolation" is attested in other Armenian sources, but not elsewhere. As in Repentance 31 and 42, Seth is called "son of consolation" in The Words of Adam to Seth 3 and the Armenian Infancy Gospel 11:11, 23.[41] The notion that Seth is to be [38]See Denkschriften der Kaiserlische Akademie zu Wein. Philosophisch-Historischen Classe, Bd. 22 (1873), p. 52.

---

[39]The story of how Cain learned to kill in Abel and Cain is corrupt in all the MSS and its precise content is unclear. See note 11 to the text of Abel and Cain in chapter four below. To improve the sense of the text, Issaverdens, Uncanonical Writings, p. 57, inserts a variant form of this tradition about the two ravens taken from Vartan's Commentary on the Creation.

[40]Present in some MSS of 2 Enoch and translated in W. R. Morfill, The Book of the Secrets of Enoch (Oxford: Clarendon, 1896), pp. 85-93.

[41]E. Tayetsi, Ankanon Girk Nor Ktakaranac (Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1898). For a translation, see P. Peeters, Évangiles Apocryphes (Paris: Auguste Picard, 1914), II, pp. 138ff.

translated "consoler" is found in The Death of Adam 7. All these sources explain the name Seth from the root մխիթար . The closest parallels outside Armenian sources occur in the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve II:1, 17, where Seth is given to replace Abel as a comfort to his parents,[42] and in Michael Glycas, Annals, pp. 235-236,[43] where God comforts (παραμυθέομαι) Adam by giving him the virtuous Seth. The identification of Seth as a consolation arises naturally from Gn 4:25, where Seth is a replacement for the murdered Abel.

The exalted status of Seth as a "blessed son" and "foremost of the patriarchs" in Tidings is found in other sources. In rabbinic sources, Seth is blessed by virtue of being the third child (Midr. Tan., Yitro 10) and is the foundation (שית) of mankind[44] (Num. R. 14:12; MHG on Gn 4:25; Midr. Lekah Tov on Gn 5:2) from whom all the righteous are descended (Pirqe R. El. 22). In Philo, De Post 42, Seth is the head (ἀρχηγέτης) of men of nobility and virtue. According to George the Syncellus, Chronography, p. 34, who cites Africanus as his source, "the genealogies of the righteous and the patriarchs up until the savior are traced from him

---

[42]II.17: God gave Seth to Adam "to comfort me instead of Abel."

[43]I. Bekker, ed., Michaelis Glycae. Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae, vol. XXVII. The name Barnabas is said to be translated "son of consolation" (Arm որդի մխիթարութեան) in Acts 4:36.

[44]Cf. Theophilus of Antioch to Autolycus II.30, where Seth is the ancestor of the human race.

[Seth 1"[45]

3. The Murder of Abel

Although there is no extant parallel to the story of Abel's murder found in Repentance and Abel and Cain, several of the elements contained in the story are attested in earlier Jewish and Christian sources.[46] Cain's remark to Abel, "let us go and take a walk in the field" (Abel and Cain) is reflected in the biblical versions. MT Gn 4:8 reads: ויאמר קין אל הבל אחיו, but does not report what Cain said to Abel. LXX, Syr., Arm, Samaritan Pentateuch, Tgs. Neofiti, Ps.-J., and Frag. Tg. to Gn 4:8 all supply the missing remark in a form similar to that found in Abel and Cain. BR 22:8, Midr. Tan. (Wilna ed., 1833) Bereshit 9, and Aggadat Shir (ed. Schechter, 1896, p. 43) record the tradition that Abel was stronger than Cain and outwrestled him,[47] but had mercy on Cain and allowed him to get up,[48] whence he was killed. The idea that Satan incited Cain to murder Abel is found in the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.76; Syriac (fol. 8a col. 1) and Arabic (fol. 97b) Cave of Treasures, and [45]The exaltation of Seth culminates in the identification of Seth with Christ by the Sethian gnostic sect.

---

[46]Lüdtke, "Adam-Bücher," p. 156, cites a Georgian account of the murder which resembles that in Abel and Cain.

[47]Cf. Philo, De Migr. Abr. 13, where Cain is a clever wrestler who prevails over Abel by skill (τέχνη) rather than strength. See also Ephraem Syrus, In Genesim I.41.

[48]An attempt to explain Gn 4:8: ויקם קין אל הבל אחיו ויהרגהו.

Eutychius, Annals (Migne, vol. 111, col. 910). The notion that Cain killed Abel with a stone is widespread. Syriac Cave of Treasures (fol. 8a col. 1) specifies the weapon was a flintstone; other suggestions are a sharp stone (Arabic Cave of Treasures, fol. 97b), large stone (Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79), stones (Syncellus, Chronographia, p. 19), or merely a stone (Jub. 4:31, BR 22:8, Tg. Ps.-J. to Gn 4:8, PRE 21, Midr. Tan., Wilna ed., 1833, Bereshit 9, Aggadat Bereshit, ed. S. Buber, 1902, ch. 26, Eutychius, Annals in Migne, vol. 111, col. 911). The story in Midr. Tan. (Wilna ed., 1833) Bereshit 9 that Cain hit Abel on the hands and feet with a stone several times before discovering that breath came from the neck should be compared with the ideas in Abel and Cain 26, 31 that Cain "did not know which is the place of killing" and that he killed Abel by cutting his wind-pipe.[49] The idea that Abel requested mercy for their parents when he was about to be murdered is found in the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve I.79. Finally, the notion that one bird's killing another with a stone provided Cain with the paradigm for murdering his brother is reflected in rabbinic and apocryphal traditions. According to Midr. Tan. (Wilna ed., 1833) Bereshit 10, PRE 21, and Melchizedek fragment 3:36,[50] one bird killed another and buried its partner, thereby showing Cain how to bury his brother.

---

[49]A similar story is found in b. San. 37b, but a stone is not named as the weapon.

[50]Morfill and Charles, Secrets, p. 91.

It is worthy of note that much of the tradition found in Abel and Cain is reflected in Midr. Tan. (Wilna, 1885) Bereshit 9-10, which contains more information about the murder than any other Jewish source. In this text we find the story of the wrestling between Abel and Cain, that the murder weapon was a stone, that one bird's murder and burial of another served as a model for Cain, and that Cain searched for a vulnerable spot on Abel's body before cutting his throat. The fact that all the traditions in these Armenian texts which are elsewhere attested occur in rabbinic and/or oriental Christian sources may suggest a semitic background for the story.

4. Enoch's/Enosh's Garden

The story of Enoch's/Enosh's garden found in Tidings, Words, and The Descendants of Adam is unique to the Armenian tradition. Apart from a late parallel tradition in Georgian which is most likely taken from the Armenian, there is no other account of Enoch or Enosh planting a garden in Jewish and Christian literature.[51] The story can be understood, however, as a product of early traditions. The attested ideas that Enoch was righteous (1En. 12:4, 15:1, et al.), that he did not die (Gn 5:24 and versions), and that he was translated to paradise (see below) could give rise to the notion that his proper guardianship of a garden earned him [51]For the Georgian account, which most closely resembles Tidings, see Lüdtke, "Adam-Bücher," p. 156.

the immortal life in paradise denied Adam and Eve.[52]

Some of the traditions in the Armenian texts are attested elsewhere. Enoch's translation into paradise by angels is mentioned in Jub. 4:21-23, 1 En. 70:3-4,[53] and the idea that he continues to dwell there is found in Jub. 4:23, Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 2:66, Gospel of Nicodemus 9 (Latin), and Michael the Syrian, Chronicle, I.5.[54] For the assertion that Enoch received the divine light after being translated, cf. Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve II.22.[55]

In summary, it has been shown that The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works and The History of the Repentance of [52] This suggestion is supported by the fact that in The Words of Adam to Seth, Enoch/Enosh receives the divine glory and light of which Adam is robbed before being expelled from the garden (vss. 2, 13, 16). The expressions աստուածային փառացն and աստուածային լուսոյն are used in connection with both Adam and Enoch.

---

The word այգի is used instead of դրախտ , but note that in 3 Bar. 4:8, the devil leads Adam astray by means of an άμπελός.

[53] The idea that Enoch was translated into paradise is also found in Syriac (fol. 14a col. 1) and Arabic (fol. 107a) Cave of Treasures, Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve II.22, George the Syncellus, Chronography, p. 39 (citing Africanus), and late rabbinic works (Alphabet of Ben Sira 38, Derek Eretz Zuta (end), PRK 83:2, Aggudat Aggadot 12, et al.). Enoch is taken into paradise by angels in 2 En. 8, but this refers to his visionary ascension and not to his translation.

[54] According to the Arabic chronographer Tabari, Annals, i. c. xxxv., the angel Azrael bore Enoch to paradise where he continues to dwell (quoted in Baring-Gould, Legends, p. 72).

[55] God transported Enoch to paradise "in light that reaches up to heaven, light that is outside the light of this world; for it is the light of God...Thus, because Enoch was in the light of God, he found himself out of the reach of death."

Adam and Eve have used the Armenian text of Genesis as a literary source, and that Repentance has further taken material from the Armenian version of Ap. Mos. In addition to these literary sources, the Adam Cycle and Repentance contain materials for which no literary source may be identified, but which bear affinities with a broad range of older Jewish and Christian sources. While Repentance has inherited some of those elements of tradition indirectly from the Adam Cycle which it used as a source, other elements may not be so easily explained.[56] If those materials cannot be shown to be part of the large body of Armenian translation literature, it can at least be demonstrated that they draw heavily on foreign sources. The attested traditions are found most consistently in rabbinic and oriental Christian sources. This may suggest a Jewish origin for the traditions which may have been mediated to Armenia through the Syrian church.[57] However, no consistent pattern of borrowing was discernible in the stories examined.

---

[56]See esp. the list of the seven punishments of Cain, most of the material in which is independent of the Adam Cycle, and the expanded treatment of the annunciation of Seth's birth.

[57]Armenian translation literature drew most heavily from Syriac and Greek sources. A statement in Samuel of Ani's Chronology (13th cent.) is suggestive in this regard. He notes that in ca. 590 A. D., a band of Syrian Nestorians entered Armenia attempting to propagate their doctrine and translated their books for their disciples. Included in a list of these works is a document called The Repentance of Adam.

Chapter 4

TEXT, APPARATUS, TRANSLATION AND NOTES

Editio princeps

I. The Text

A. The Armenian Adam Cycle of Four Works

The edition of the Adam Cycle given below must be regarded as a preliminary working edition. Due to technical reasons, not all known witnesses to the text of the Adam Cycle were available to the author. It is the author's intent to produce a complete edition based on all the known manuscripts at a later date. Nevertheless, a substantial majority of known textual witnesses to the Adam Cycle has been consulted for this work. Hence the edition below represents a significant advance over the only previous edition, that of S. Yovsepeanc', which was produced from a single manuscript.

The text given below is in essence a diplomatic text. The readings of Y are followed consistently except at points where Y appears corrupt, at which points the evidence of other manuscripts is incorporated into the text. At points where other manuscripts differ markedly and at length from the text of Y and there is no evidence of corruption either in Y or in the differing manuscript(s), the readings of both Y and the differing manuscript(s) are given in parallel columns.

As noted in chapter one, the readings of Y are taken from the Yovsepeanc' edition of MS Y since the manuscript was not made available to the author. Unfortunately, the Yovsepeanc' edition indicates both suggested editorial additions and omissions by enclosing them in parentheses. It is not always possible to determine if words enclosed in parentheses were in the original manuscript or were added by the editor to improve the text. At these points, where other manuscripts disagree, a superior reading from those other manuscripts is incorporated into the text and the reading of Y is placed in the apparatus with the parentheses retained. At points where the evidence of other manuscripts is not available, the reading of Y is placed in the text with parentheses retained.

The critical edition presented here gives the text of recension I, which is judged herein to be a text form superior to that of recension II. The text and translation of a single manuscript copy of recension II is provided in an appendix below.

Apparatus

The apparatus includes all variants of possible significance for the study of the substantive readings preserved in the manuscripts. It is not exhaustive of all variants between the manuscripts since some variants, being chiefly orthographic or scribal in character, have been excluded. These variants may be listed as follows:

1. Standard spelling variants (e.g. աւ/օ ; ե/է ; inclusion or omission of otiose ի before a word to which the preposition is already attached) and errors of spelling.

2. Case variations in possessive pronouns and adjectives (e.g. իմ / իմում).

3. Addition or omission of demonstrative ս/դ/ն and variations between these and their analogues այս/այդ/այն and compounds thereof.

4. The addition or omission of թէ or եթէ before direct speech and variations between these two forms.

5. Addition or omission of the personal pronoun before conjugated verb forms.

6. Addition or omission of զ as a sign of the definite object.

7. Addition or omission of կու before verb forms.

8. Variation of sg. and pl. forms of adjectives, which do not always agree with the noun modified, unless the form of the adjective is deemed important for determining the number of the noun.

9. Minor variants of word order.

10. Insignificant morphological alternatives (such as inclusion or omission of եց before the aorist participial ending եալ).

B. The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve

The text of Repentance presented below is taken from the only known manuscript of the work, here designated MS E.

Although a copy of the manuscript made by F. C. Conybeare was presented to the Mechitarists of San Lazarro for inclusion in Yov., there are several minor errors of copying as well as two major omissions, identified in chapter one, in the Yov. edition. Those errors are corrected in the text given below.

C. The Words of Adam to Seth

As noted in chapter one, the text of Words is known only from a single manuscript which was unavailable to the author but which was reproduced in Yov. The text of the Yov. edition is reprinted here. Since the editor's suggested additions to and omissions from the text are both enclosed in parentheses, it is impossible to distinguish between them and hence to determine the original reading of the manuscript. Therefore, all parentheses in the Yov. edition have been retained below.

II. The Translation

The translator has sought to combine fluidity of English expression with literal adherence to the wording of the Armenian. At points where this balance is difficult to achieve, the translator has tried to retain a more literal rendition of the text. Any words introduced by the editor and the editor's emendations are placed in brackets < >; attempts by the editor to clarify the translation are placed in parentheses, e.g. he (Adam).

The editor has introduced a system of versification to facilitate use of both the text and translation. For the most part, the divisions between verses correspond to those so noted in Yov., although the verses are not numbered in Yov.

A limited number of notes to the text and translation is provided at points where the Armenian appears difficult or where other pertinent observations are deemed necessary.

Signs and Abbreviations

< >	Editor's emendation of the text or translation.
( ) in text and apparatus	Retained in Y from text of Yov.
( ) in translation	Editor's clarification of the text.
dot over letter	Letter uncertain in the MS.
dot over space	Letter cannot be deciphered in the MS.
+	Adds
1°, 2°, 3°, etc.	Following a word indicates the first, second, third, etc. occurrence of the word in the verse.
A*, B*, C*	Text as written by the original scribe.
A^{c}, B^{c}, C^{c}	Text as corrected by an unidentified hand.
word---word	Indicates all words between the two words so linked.
word...word	Indicates only those two words so linked.
ante	Before
fin	End of the verse
inc	Start of the verse
om	Omits
pl.	Plural
post	After praepon	Places in front of
sg.	Singular

ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ՍՏԵՂԾՄԱՆ ԵՒ ՅԱՆՑՄԱՆՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ[1]

Y

1. Յորժամ ստեղծ Տէր Աստուած զերկինս եւ զերկիր, եւ[2] արար նախ զզօրս հրեշտակաց ի ծառայութիւն աստուածութեանն իւրոյ: 2. Իսկ չարն Սաղայէլ եւ Բելիար դասազլուխ էին դասուց Սատանայի, մեծափառօք զարդարեալ, բարձր քան զամենայն հրեշտակք[3] եւ զամենայն դասս հրեշտակաց.

D

1. Տէր Աստուած յառաջ քան զաշխարհս, ստեղծեաց ինն դաս հրեշտակքն վասն ծառայութեանն աստուածութեանն իւրոյ: 2. Առաջի հրեշտակին դասն Բէլիարին դասն էր բարձր քան զամենայն դասս հրեշտակաց. իսկ չարն Բէլիար որ գլուխ էր դասս հրեշտակաց մեծ փառօք զարդարեալ.

օրհնէին, զովէին, բարեբանէին եւ փառաբանէին զԱստուած:

3. Իսկ պիղծն Սատանայ ոչ կամեցաւ օրհնաբանել զԱստուած. եւ հպարտացաւ ի սրտի իւրում, եւ կամեցաւ զաթոռ իւր բարձրացուցանել հաւասար Աստուծոյ աթոռին: 4. Եւ հրամայեաց Տէր Աստուած յունանաւոր սերովբէից մեծին Գաբրիէլի եւ ահաւորին Միքայէլի, եւ ինն դասուց հրեշտակացն. դիմեցին ի վերայ

Title] Պատմութիւն Ադամայ ի դրախտէն ելանելու D

2 օրհնէին] + եւ D | բարեբանէին] om D

3 պիղծն Սատանայ] չար Բէլիարն D | օրհնաբանել] օրհնել եւ փառաբանել D | եւ 1°] այլ D | բարձրացուցանէր D

4 յունանաւոր] om D | եւ 2°---եւ 3°] om D | հրեշտակացն] om D |

Սաղաէլի եւ ամենայն կամարարացն նորա, հարին զնոսա եւ ի վայր տուին, որպէս զկարկուտ ի յամպէն:

5. Իսկ բարերարն Աստուած, վասն հպարտութեանն Սատանայի, ստեղծ զԱդամ հողեղէն, զի լցուսցեն[4] զտեղի անկելոց հրեշտակացն:

6. Եւ արկ Տէր Աստուած թմբրութիւն ի վերայ Ադամայ, եւ առ զմի ի կողիցն նորա եւ ելից ընդ այնր մարմին. եւ իբրեւ զարթեաւ Ադամ ի քնոյ, տեսաւ զկին հաւանեցաւ: 7. Եւ ասաց Ադամ. Ահա ոսկր ի յոսկերաց իմ, եւ մարմին ի մարմնոյ. սա կոչեսցի կին:

8. Եւ տարեալ զնոսա Տէր Աստուած, եւ եդ ի մէջ դրախտին Ադենայ, որ է փառօք մեծ. եւ ետ պատուէր նոցա Տէր Աստուած եւ ասէ. Ուտելով կերիջիք յամենայն պտղոց ծառերոյդ, բայց ի ծառոյն կենաց մի ուտիցէք եւ մի հուպ լինիցիք. զի յորժամ ուտիցէք ի նմանէ մահու մեռանիք: 9. Իսկ վասն այն եդ զԱդամ ի միջասահման դրախտին, (զի) եթէ պահեալ էր Ադամ զպատուիրանս Տեառն, վերանայր փառօք ի վերինն Երուսաղէմ ի տեղի անկեալ հրեշտակացն:

Սաղաէլի---եւ 5°] ղասուն Սատանայի D

5 բարերարն] + Տէր D | զԱդամ---զտեղի] զմարդն ի հողէն զի լիցին ի տեղուն D

6 զմի---մարմին] զկող մի ստեղծ զմարմնոց կից Ադամայ մայր մեր D | եւ 4°] om D | ի քնոյ] om D

7 մարմնոյ] + իմոյ եւ հրամայեաց Տէր D

8 եւ 1°---Աստուած 1°] om D | եդ] եդիր զնա D | փառօք մեծ] փառք միջաց սահման D | եւ 3°] om D | կերիջիք---պտղոց] կերիցէք ամենայն պտուղ D | ի ծառոյն կենաց] այս մի ծառոյն D | եւ մի հուպ լինիցիք] om D | մեռանիցէք D

9 (զի)] եւ D | վերանայր փառօք ի] ի փառք D | տեղի] + այնս D

10. Վասն այն Սատանայ նախանձեալ եմուտ յօձն:

11. Յայնժամ օձն թեւաւոր էր, լեզու ունէր, մտանէր ի դրախտն. եւ Սատանայ յանէն հրեշտակաց ոչ իշխէր ի դրախտն մտանել: 12. Իբրեւ ետես զօձն ի դրախտին, ուսուց[5] օձին խաբել զԵւայ եւ զԱդամ: 13. Իբրեւ գնաց օձն եւ տեսաւ զԱդամ եւ զԵւայ, զի շրջէին եւ պտղոյն ուտելովն զուարճանային ի մէջ դրախտին. իսկ օձն <խրատեալ> էր ի Սատանայէ. այնչափ որսաց, որ զԵւայ միայն գտաւ:

14. Ասէ օձն Եւայի. Ընդէ՞ր <ամենայն> ծառոյ պտղոյ ճաշակես, եւ <այս> գեղեցիկ պտղոյս ոչ ճաշակես:

15. Ասէ Եւայ. Զի Տէր Աստուած պատուէր ետ չուտել ի պտղոյդ. իբրեւ ուտիցէք, ասէ, մահու մեռանիցիք:

16. Ասէ օձն. Խաբել կամի զձեզ Աստուած. զի Աստուած իբրեւ զձեզ նման էր, քան զի չէր կերեալ ի պտղոյդ. իբրեւ կերաւ

---

10 յօձն] օձն D

11 Յայնժամ] եւ D | լեզու ունէր] om D | մտանէր] եւ մտեալ D | դրախտն 1°] + եւ ելանէր D | եւ---մտանել] իսկ Սատանայ ոչ կարէր մտանել ի դրախտն անէն հրեշտակաց D

12 ետես] եզիտ D | ի] արտաքոյ D | եւ զԱդամ] om D

13 օձն եւ] զօձն D | եւ պտղոյն ուտելովն] ի պտղէն ճաշակելով D | խրատեալ D] խրախեալ Y | էր] om D | որ] մինչեւ D

14 ամենայն D] (յ) ամենայն Y | պտղոյ] պտուղ D | այս D] (յ) այս Y | պտղոյս] պտուղն D

15 Զի] om D | Աստուած] + մեր D | իբրեւ---մեռանիցիք] թէ ուտեմք մահու մեռանեմք D

16 Աստուած 1°] om D | պտուղ D | կերաւ] + ի պտղոյ այտի B |

սստուածութեան փառացն հասաւ: 17. Վասն այն ասաց ձեզ չուտել ի պտղոյդ, զի հաւասար լինիցիք եւ փառակից եւ աթոռակից Աստուծոյ:

18. Յայնժամ առեալ ի պտղոյն եւ կերաւ. ընդ ուտել պտղոյն մերկացաւ ի լուսոյն: 19. Իբրեւ եկն Ադամ եւ ետես զկինն մերկացեալ ի լուսոյն, տրտմեցաւ Ադամ եւ ասէ. <ընՁէր[6]> կերար ի պտղոյն:

20. Ասէ Եւայ. Զի քաղցրազոյն պտուղ է, առ եւ դու ճաշակեայ եւ տես զքաղցրութիւն պտղոյդ:

21. Ասէ Ադամ. Ոչ կարեմ ուտել ի դմանէ, եւ <մերկանալ> քեզ նման:

22. Ասէ Եւայ. Շատ կերայ, վասն այն մերկացայ. դու սակաւ ճաշակեայ:

23. Ասէ Ադամ. Ոչ կարեմ ճաշակել եւ քեզ նման մերկանալ:

սստուածութեան] այն մեծութեան B D

17 ասէ D + Աստուած B | զի] + մի B D | հաւասար] + իւրն B D | փառակից եւ] om B | Աստուծոյ] om B D

18. Յայնժամ---պտղոյն 1°] առեալ Եւայ զպտուղն B եւ իբրեւ զայս լուաւ Եւայ առաւ զպտուղն D | եւ] om D | կերաւ] + եւ B | ուտել պտղոյն] ուտելուն D

19 Իբրեւ] եւ ապա D | եւ 1°] om D | զկինն---լուսոյն] զԵւայ մերկ եւ D | Ադամ 2°] om D | ընդէր B D] om Y

20 inc] + եւ D | Զի] խիստ D | եւ դու] om B D

21 կարես B | մերկանալ B D] մերկանամ Y | քեզ նման] om D

24. Ասէ Եւայ. Թէպէտ ուտես ոչ բարկանայ քեզ Աստուած, զի Աստուած զքեզ յոյժ սիրէ:

25. Եւ ապա առաւ զպտուղն քննէր, եւ վախէր թէ կնոջ նման մերկանայր: 26. Թէ ոչ ճաշակէր, կինն լայր եւ աղաչէր ասելով. Մեռանիմք ի միասին, եւ թէ ապրիմք ի միասին, մի <որոշիր զիս> ի քէն: 27. Իսկ Ադամ, երբ հայէր ի կնոջ զեղեցկութիւնն, խելքն թափէր ի գլխոյն. Թէպէտ ի լուսոյ էր մերկացեալ բայց զեղեցիկ էր, զի մարմինն որպէս մարգարիտ սպիտակափայլ էր. քանզի նորաստեղծ էր, զի Աստուած իւր ձեռօքն էր ստեղծեալ եւ զարդարեալ: 28. Իսկ Ադամ բազում քննութիւն արար, ասաց. Մի թէ Աստուած ողորմի ինձ եւ ոչ մերկացուցանէ. երբ թէ մերկանամ. զի լաւ է ինձ մեռանիլ քան թէ բաժանիլ եւ որոշիլ ի կնոջէս: 29. Զի զայս ոչ իմացաւ, թէ պահեալ էր

---

24 քեզ] ինձ D | սիրէ] + կեր մի թէ ողորմեսցէ ինձ զ̈ քո̈յդ D

25 առեալ B | քննէր եւ] ի ձեռն Ադամ քննէր թէ ճաշակէր B ի ձեռն թէ ճաշակեր D

26 թէ ոչ ճաշակէր] om D + զի B | կինն] + զԵւայ̈ D | ի 1°] om D | եւ 2°] om B | որոշիր զիս B D] որոշիլ Y | քեզ +ան̈ D

27 երբ] om D | գլխոյն] + (որ) Y | թէպէտ ի] մի թէ D | զի 1°---էր 3°] om D | զի 2°] om D | եւ զարդարեալ] om B

28 մերկացուցանէ] + զիս B | զի] դեռ B D | ինձ 2°] + մերկանամ D | մեռանեմ D | բաժանիլ եւ] om D | կնոջէս] + կերաւ մերկացաւ D

29 իմացաւ B D] + (զի) Y |

զպատուիրանն, կարող էր Աստուած քան զայն եւ այլ գեղեցիկ կին ստեղծանել: 30. Մինչեւ երեք ժամ պտուղն ի ձեռն քննութիւն արար, ասաց թէ ոչ կարեմ ապրիլ առանց կնոջս. եւ եթող զխօսքն Աստուծոյ եւ կնոջ խօսքով կերաւ զպտուղն, եւ մերկացաւ ի լուսոյն: 31. Զի ոչ թէ պտուղն չար էր, քան զի չար պտուղն ի դրախտի մէջն ոչ կայր. այլ չարն այն էր, որ Եւայ զԱստուծոյ խօսքն[7] եւ զպատուիրանն եթող եւ զօձին լսեց. եւ Ադամ զԱստուծոյ խօսքն[7] եւ զպատուիրանն եթող զիւր կնոջ խօսքն[7] լսեց:

32. Վասն այնորիկ <մերկացան> ի լուսոյն. եւ գնացին ծածկեցան թզենի[8] տերեւաւն. քանզի զիտէին տերեւի ծածկելովն կարէին ծածկել ի տեսութենէն Աստուծոյ. քանզի հանապազ երեւէր

զպատուիրանն] + Աստուծոյ B D | Աստուած] om D | եւ] om B D | այլ] om D + աւելի B | կին] om D | ստեղծէր B^c D

30 ձեռն] ձեռին պահեաց D | արար] + եւ ապա D | զխօսքն] + եւ զհրամն B + եւ պատուէրն D | խօսքով] հրամաիւն B

31 զի ոչ] մի D | քան զի] om B D | ոչ կայր] ինչ քանունէր B ինչ կանէր D | այլ] om B D | Եւայ] om B | խօսքն եւ զպատուիրանն 1°] հրամն B D | եւ 2°] om B | զօձին] զաւծ ի հրամն B օձին հրամն D | եւ 3°] om D | խօսքն եւ զպատուիրանն 2°] հրամն D | խօսքն 2°] խաթիրն B | զիւր] om D | խօսքն լսեց] խօսքն եւ խաթիրն պահէց B հրամօվն ճաշակեաց զպտուղն D

32 Վասն այնորիկ] om D | մերկացան D] մերկացաւ B մերկացաւն Y | լուսոյն] + Աստուծոյ D | գնացեալ B D| ծածկեցան] + ի ներքոյ B D եւ B | տերեւաւն] տերեւին B D | քանզի 1°] զի հանց B D | զիտէր D | տեսութենէն] նոցա Աստուած, զի զայր հանդարտապէս, եւ քաղցր բարբառով խօսէր ընդ նոսա: 33. Բայց ի ժամուն յորում կերեալ էին ի պտղոյն մերկացեալ ի լուսոյն եւ տերեւովն ծածկեալ էին զմերկութիւնս իւրեանց, ձայնն կեցաւ ի վերայ թզենւոյն, եւ ձայնեաց ասելով. Ո՞ւր ես Ադամ:

34. Ասէ. Տէր, զքո ձայնն լուայ, փախեայ, թաքեայ:

35. Ասէ Տէրն. ընդէ՞ր փախեար եւ թաքեար:

36. Ասէ Ադամ. Վասն այն փախեայ եւ թաքեայ, զի մերկ էի եւ ամաչէի ի քէն:

37. Ասէ Տէրն. Զի լուսով ծածկեցի զձեզ, ընդէ՞ր մերկացաք[9] ի լուսոյն. մի թէ կերա՞յք ի պտղոյն:

38. Ասէ Ադամ. Այս կինս, որ դու ստեղծեր, սայ խաբեաց:

39. Դարձեալ Տէր խօսեցաւ ընդ կնոջն, եւ ասաց. կին, դո՞ւ

խստութենէն D

33 ի 1°] om D | պտուղն D] + (եւ) Y | ի 2°---իւրեանց] om D | էին 2°---իւրեանց] om B | ձայնն կեցաւ] իսկ յայնժամ եկն Տէր որոտալով ձայնիւ B D եկաց B | ես] + ուր ես B

34 ասէ] + Ադամ B D | զՏէր D | լուայ] + եւ D | թաքեայ եւ փախեայ D | փախեալ B

36 մերկեմ D | ամանչեմ D

37 զի] om D | զձեզ] om D զքեզ B | մերկացար B D | ի լուսոյն] om D | կերար B կերեալ ես D | պտուղն D

38 Ադամ] + Տէր B | որ B D] (զ) որ Y | խաբեաց] + զիս B D

39 դարձաւ Աստուած D | կնոջն] + Եւայի D | դու] + զի B D

արարեր զայդ:

40. Իսկ կին ասաց. Տէր, <այն օձն որ> ստեղծեր նա խաբեաց զիս:

41. Ցայնժամ Տէր բարկացաւ նոցա, եւ ասաց Ադամայ. Փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ, ոչ լուար խրատոյ իմոյ, այլ փութապէս լսեցեր զխրատոյ կնոջ քո. փոխանակ անմահ տնկոյս փուշ բուսանի քեզ. քրտամբ երեսաց քոց կերիցես զհաց քո. զի հող էիր եւ ի հող դարձցիս: 42. Եւ դարձեալ ընդ Եւայի, ասաց. Փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ, բազմացուցանելով բազմացուցից զտրտմութիւն քո, ծնունդ քո մահու չափ եղեցի, եւ ցաւօք կերիցես զաշխարհս, եւ եղիցի քեզ տրտմութիւն զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց: 43. Եւ դարձեալ ասաց ցօձն. Անիծեալ լիցիս յամենայն կենդանեաց մէջ,[10] ի վերայ լանջաց եւ որովայնի քում սողասցիս, եւ հող կերիցես զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց. եդից զթշնամութիւն ի մէջ քո եւ ի մէջ կնոջ եւ ի մէջ զաւակի <քո եւ ի մէջ զաւակի>[11] դորա, նա

---

40 իսկ կին] Եւայ եւ D | իսկ] om B | այն---որ B D] զօձն զոր Y

41 յայնժամ] իսկ B D | բարկացաւ] + ի վերայ B D | ցԱդամ D | փութով D | լսեցեր] լուար B | զխրատոյ] խրատ D | քո 1°] om D | անմահ տնկոյս] կեանսդ քո մեռուցիր եւ D | երեսաց քոց] om B | ի] om D

42 դարձեալ] դարձաւ խօսեցաւ D | եւ ասէ D + Եւայ B | քո 1°] + եւ B D | եղեցի] լիցի D | կերիցես] զրեսցես B

43 յամենայն---մէջ 1°] ի մէջ ամենայն կենդանեաց B D եւ B | եւ 2°---սողասցիս] քոց գնասցես D յորովայնի քում գնասցես B | քոց] + եւ D | եւ 5°] om B D | քո 2°--- սպասեսցէ[12] քում զլխոյ եւ դու սպասեսցես[12] նորա զարշապարի: 44. Եւ հրամայեաց հրեշտակաց հանել ի դրախտէն, եւ հրեղէն սրով պահել զճանապարհս դրախտին կենաց: 45. Եւ հանին զԱդամ եւ զԵւայ ի դրախտէն:

46. Եւ ելեալ արտաքս ի տեղի մութն եւ խաւար, <վեց օր> [13] անդ մնացին, առանց ուտելոյ, անմխիթար լային եւ կոծէին զանձինս իւրեանց: 47. Իսկ <հետ վեց աւուրն> ողորմեցաւ նոցա Տէր, եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր հանել զնոսա ի խաւարէն, եւ առաջնորդեալ եբեր զնոսա ի լոյս աշխարհս,[14] եւ եցոյց նոցա զպտղաբերս այնով լիանալ եւ ապրիլ: 48. Իսկ իբրեւ տեսին Ադամ եւ կին իւր <զլոյս աշխարհիս ուրախացան եւ խնդացին Ադամ եւ կինն իւր> ,[15] ասացին. Թէպէտ չէ բարութիւն, եւ աշխարհիս լոյս

զաւակի 2° B D] om Y | նորա զարշապարի] զկրունկն D զկրունկ նորա B

44 հրամայեաց] + Տէր D | ցհրեշտակաց D | հանել] + զնոսա B զնա D

45 եւ 1°] om D | դրախտին D

46 եւ ելեալ] om D | տեղի] om B | խաւար] + մինչեւ B մինչ ի D | վեց օր D] հինգ օր B զօր ողջոյն Y | անմխիթար] եւ անօթի B D | եւ 3°] om D

47 հետ վեց աւուրն D] զվեց օրէն հետ Y | հինգ B | եւ 1°] Աստուած D | իւր] om B | առաջնորդեաց D + նոցա B D | բերել B D | եւ 3°] om B | նոցա 2°] + ծառս B D | լիանար D

48 իբրեւ] որ B om D | Ադամ 1°---իւր 1°] զԱդամ եւ զԵւա D | զլուս---իւր 2° B] om D Y | Թէպէտ] + եւ D | բարութիւն---լոյս] ի լոյսն աշխարհիս D |

եւ պտուղս չեն հաւասար լուսոյ եւ պտղոյ դրախտին. բայց ոչ սովաւ մահ <լինիմք>[16] եւ կամ <խաւարի> մնամք: 49. Այսպէս ուրախ կացին:

եւ պտուղս չեն] om B D | եւ պտղոյ] om D | դրախտին] արքայութեան B + կամ պտղազոութիւն D | մահ լինիմք B] մահեմք D (ի) մահ եւ Y | խաւար Y

49 կացին] մնացին մինչեւ երեկոյ որպէս ողորմեցաւ Տէր նոցա եւ խաւարէ ի լոյսէ Աստուած B

The History of the Creation and Transgression of Adam[1]

Y	D
1. When the Lord God created the heavens and the earth, he first made the hosts of the angels for the service of his divinity. 2. Now the wicked Sadael and Beliar were the heads of the divisions[2] of Satan; they were adorned gloriously, and were higher than all the angels[3] and all the divisions of the angels.	1. Before the Lord God <created> earth, he created the nine divisions of angels for the service of his divinity. 2. The chief division of the angels <was> the division of Beliar; it was higher than all the divisions of the angels. Now the wicked Beliar, who was the head of the divisions of the angels, was adorned gloriously.

They blessed, exalted, praised, and glorified God.

3. But the detestable Satan did not want to bless God and was arrogant in his heart, and he wanted to raise up his own throne equal to God's throne. 4. And the Lord God commanded the hammer-man of the Seraphim, the great Gabriel, and the terrible Michael, and nine divisions of the angels, and they fell upon

---

[1] This title is supplied by Yovsepeanc' and is not found in the Venice MS. It has been retained in favor of the title in D which may be confused with the title of Expulsion. Cf. the title given in recension II (see appendix, p. 241)

[2] Perhaps եւս is intended.

[3] One would expect acc. հրեշտակս with the comparative.

Sadael and all his attendants, smote them, and cast them down like hail from a cloud.

5. And God the beneficent, because of Satan's arrogance, created earthen Adam to fill[4] the place of the fallen angels. 6. And the Lord God brought a deep sleep upon Adam, and He took one of his ribs, and he filled in flesh in place of it. And when Adam awoke from sleep, he saw the woman and approved. 7. And Adam said, "Behold, this is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh. She shall be called woman."

8. And the Lord God brought them and put them in the midst of the Garden of Eden, which is very splendid, and the Lord God commanded them and said, "You may eat from all the fruits of these trees, but you may not eat from the tree of life, nor may you touch it. For when you eat of it you shall die." 9. Now he put Adam in the middle of the garden because if Adam had kept the Lord's commands, he would have ascended gloriously to the celestial Jerusalem, to the place of the angels who had fallen.

---

[4]Note the plural verb. Perhaps Adam and Eve is the intended subject.

TRANSGRESSION 10-16

10. Because of this the envious Satan entered the serpent. 11. At that time the serpent had wings and a tongue, and he used to enter into the garden. But Satan did not dare to enter the garden because he feared the angels. 12. When he saw the serpent in the garden, he taught[5] the serpent to deceive Eve and Adam. 13. When the serpent went and saw Adam and Eve, for they were walking in the garden and amusing themselves by eating the fruit, the serpent was instructed by Satan. So he enticed Eve, because he found her alone.

14. The serpent said to Eve, "Why do you eat of the fruit from every tree, but you do not eat of this beautiful fruit?

15. Eve said, "Because the Lord God commanded not to eat of that fruit. He said, 'When you eat it, you will die.'"

16. The serpent said, "God wants to deceive you, for God was like you, because he had not eaten of that fruit. When he ate it,

---

[5]For ուսոյց .

he attained the glory of divinity. 17. That is why he told you not to eat of that fruit, because you would become equal, sharing the glory and throne of God."

18. Then she took some of the fruit and ate. When she ate of the fruit, she stripped herself of the light. 19. When Adam came and saw his wife stripped of the light, Adam grieved and said, "<Why>[6] have you eaten of the fruit?"

20. Eve said, "Because the fruit is very sweet. Take and you taste, and notice the sweetness of this fruit."

21. Adam said, "I cannot eat of it and be stripped like you."

22. Eve said, "I ate too much, and was stripped because of that. You taste just a little."

23. Adam said, "I cannot taste it and be stripped like you."

---

[6] ը՛նդէր is required by զի in vs. 20.

TRANSGRESSION 24-29

24. Eve said, "Even if you eat it, God will not become angry at you, for God loves you very much."

25. And then he took the fruit and examined it, but he feared lest he become stripped like the woman. 26. If he did not taste it, the woman cried and begged him saying, "Let us die together or live together. Do not <separate me> from you." 27. But when Adam looked upon the beauty of the woman, he became foolish. Even though she had been stripped of the light, she was nevertheless beautiful, for her flesh was dazzling white like a pearl because she was newly created, for God had created and adorned her with his own hands. 28. So Adam thought about it much and said, "Might God take pity on me and not strip me? When would I become stripped? For it is better for me to die than to become separated and detached from this woman." 29. For he did not understand that if he had kept the commandment, God would have been able to create yet another woman more beautiful than this one. 30. He examined the fruit in his hand for three hours, and said, "I cannot live without this woman." And he repudiated the word of God, and following the woman's word, he ate the fruit and stripped himself of the light. 31. For it was not that the fruit was evil, because the fruit in the midst of the garden was not evil, rather this was the evil, that Eve repudiated God's word[7] and commandment and listened to the serpent's, and Adam repudiated God's word[7] and commandment and listened to his wife's word.[7]

32. Because of this they stripped themselves of the light. And they went and covered themselves with the leaves of a fig tree,[8] because they thought they could hide from God's sight by covering themselves with leaves. For God used to appear to them continually, for he came gently and spoke to them with a pleasant voice. 33. But at the time when they had eaten from the fruit and stripped themselves of the light and had hidden their nakedness with leaves, a voice came from above the fig tree, and it spoke saying, "Where are you, Adam?"

---

[7]Acc. խօսսն is needed here.

[8]Nom./acc. is incorrect; gen. թզենւոյ is needed here.

34. He said, "Lord, I heard your voice, and I fled and hid."

35. The Lord said, "Why did you flee and hide?"

36. Adam said, "I fled and hid because I was naked and ashamed before you."

37. The Lord said, "Since I covered you with light, why did you strip yourselves[9] of the light? Have you eaten of the fruit?"

38. Adam said, "This woman whom you created deceived me."

39. The Lord turned and spoke to the woman, and said, "Woman, have you done this?"

---

[9] 2nd plural aorist in modern Armenian and thus translated here.

40. Then the woman said, "Lord, the serpent whom you created deceived me."

41. Then the Lord became angry at them, and said to Adam, "Because you have done this, and you did not listen to my counsel, but hastily listened to your wife's counsel, thorns will spring forth to you in place of this immortal plant. By the sweat of your brow shall you eat your bread, for you were dust, and you shall return to dust." 42. And he turned to Eve and said, "Because you have done this, I will greatly multiply your affliction; childbearing will be the measure of your death, in suffering shall you eat <the fruit of> this earth, and you shall have sorrow all the days of your life." 43. And he turned and said to the serpent, "Cursed are you among[10] all beasts; upon your breast and belly shall you crawl, and you shall eat dust all the days of your life. I shall put enmity between you and the woman and between your <seed and her>[11] seed; she shall watch for[12] your head, and you shall watch for her heel." 44. And he commanded his angels to take them away from the garden, and to guard the paths to the garden of life with a fiery sword. 45. And they took Adam and Eve away from the garden.

[10]Cf. Arm. Gn 3:14 յամենայն անասնոց. Perhaps the intent is "more than all beasts," cf. MT מכל → LXX ἀπὸ πάντων.

[11]With B D Arm Gn 3:15, omitted from Y by haplography.

46. And they went outside to a dark and gloomy place, <and> they remained there <six days>[13] without eating, weeping inconsolably, and bemoaning themselves. 47. But after six days the Lord took pity on them, and he sent his angel to take them out of the darkness, and he guided and brought them into this bright world,[14] and he showed them fruit-bearing trees with which to be satiated and to live. 48. And when Adam and his wife saw <the light of this world, Adam and his wife rejoiced and were glad,>[15] and they said, "Even though it is not so good, and the light and fruits of

---

[12] սպասեմ makes sense here only as "to watch for." The word is taken from Arm Gn 3:15 following LXX τηρέω. Contrast MT שוף.

[13] Read զ̄օր (= վեց օր) with D and following the sense of vs. 47. Y misconstrued զ̄օր as զօր and added ողջոյն.

[14] The phrase is difficult since լոյս is not an adjective and աշխարհս is acc./loc. plural. Neither "this bright world" nor "the light of this world" is entirely satisfactory.

[15] Lost to D and Y through haplography.

this world are not equal to the light and fruit of the garden, nevertheless with this we shall neither <die>[16] nor remain <in> darkness. 49. Thus they were cheerful.

---

16 in Y is most likely an emendation, without which the text appears corrupt.

ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ԵԼԱՆԵԼՈՅՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ Ի ԴՐԱԽՏԷՆ

1. Իսկ երբ անկաւ Ադամ[1] ի դրախտէն յաշխարհս, ուրախութեամբ կացին ի վերայ արեգական եւ լուսնին մինչեւ յերեկոյին[2]։ 2. Իսկ երեկուն, երբ որ արեգակն մտաւ, նոքա գիտացին թէ խաւար կալաւ զնոսա, այլ ոչ տեսանեն զլոյս. քանզի դրախտն հանապազ լոյս էր,[3] նոյնպէս գիտացին թէ աշխարհս ամենայն լուսաւոր եղիցի. զայն ոչ գիտէին թէ յաշխարհս գիշեր լինի, կամ ցերեկ կայ. վասն այն տրտմեցան իբրեւ մտաւ արեգակն, հանց

---

om D | inc] + այս է B

1 իսկ---կացին] om D | երբ] om B | ի 2°--- յերեկոյին] մինչեւ երեկոյ ի վերայ արեգական եւ լուսնին ի վերայ աշխարհիս։ Արեգակն եւ լուսին D | եւ] om B | լուսոյն B | երեկոյ B

2 երեկոյին B | երբ որ] իբրեւ A | որ] om B D | արեգակն 1°] om D | եմուտ A | նոքա] սուք արարին D + այսպէս B D | գիտացին 1°] իմացան B | զնոսա] om D + եւ D (եւ) Y | այլ 1°] om D | դրախտին B | թէ 2°] + յամենայն ժամ B | ամենայն] om B + ժամ D | լուսաւոր] լոյս D | եղիցի] լինի A B կու լինէր D | յաշխարհս] աշխարհս ամենայն A | գիշեր---կայ] տիւ եւ գիշեր փոխին B գիշեր կամ ցերեկ կու փոխի D | լինի] կայ A | կայ] om A | իբրեւ] հետ D | գիտացին թէ այլ ոչ լուսանայ, լացին եւ կոծեցան մինչեւ ցառաւօտն:

3. Իսկ առաւօտին հաւախօսին, եկն առ նա Սատանայ ի կերպ հրեշտակի, եւ ասէ. Ընդէ՞ր տրտում էք:

4. Ասէ Ադամ. Վասն այն տրտմինք, քանզի ստեղծեալ էր զմեզ Աստուած եւ եդեալ ի մէջ լուսեղէն դրախտին, եւ պատրանօք օձին ճաշակեցաք ի պտղոյն եւ ելաք ի դրախտէն, եւ անկանք ի խաւար ժամանակս ինչ: 5. Դարձեալ ողորմեցաւ Տէր եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր, <եւ> եհան զմեզ ի խաւարէն. եւ բերեալ ի լոյս աշխարհս,[4] թէպէտ չէր հաւասար լուսոյ արքայութեան,[5] բայց լոյս էր: 6. Իսկ ոչ գիտեմք թէ զի՞նչ գործեցաք, որ բարկացաւ ի վերայ

գիտացին 3°] իմացան B | լուսանայ] + (եւ) Y | կոծեցան] + զանձինս իւրեանց D | առաւօտն D

3 իսկ առաւօտին] ի B | նոսա D | տրտմես D + Ադամ A B D

4 տրտում եմք D + եւ լանք B | քանզի---Աստուած] որ Տէր Աստուած զմեզ ստեղծեաց D | եդէր D | լուսեղէն] om D | դրախտին] + եւ զարդարեալ լուսով D | եւ 2°] իսկ D | պատրանօք] պատուիրանօք B ի խրատոյն D | ճաշակեցաք] կերանք D | պտղոյն] պտուղն մերկացանք ի լուսոյն D | եւ 4°---խաւար] ի մէջ խաւարի A | անկաք B | խաւար] + ի B D | ժամանակի անցաւ D

5 իւր] om D | եւ եհան] հանել A D (որ) եհան Y | եբեր D + զմեզ A B | թէպէտ] +(սա) Y | հաւասար] + ի B | լուսոյ] լոյսն D

6 որ] եւ D | ի վերայ մեր] մեզ D |

մեր Տէրն եւ խափանեաց զայն սակաւ լոյսն. վասն այն կոծամք եւ լամք:

7. Ասէ Սատանայ. Զի՞նչ ետուք այն հրեշտակին, որ զձեզ եհան ի մութ տեղուոջէն եւ եբեր ի լոյս:

8. Ասէ Ադամ. Եւ ոչ ինչ:

9. Ասէ Սատանայ. Զի է, ընդէ՞ր ոչ ասացիք զձեզ ծառայ նմա ամենայն ծնընդովք ձերովք:

10. Ասէ Ադամ. Յիմարութիւն կալաւ զմեզ եւ զայդ ոչ իմացաք ասել:

11. Ասէ Սատանայ. Զի՞նչ <տայք> ինձ <թէ> տամ ձեզ աւետիք[6] լուսոյ:

12. Ասէ Ադամ. Եթէ մի անգամ լոյս տեսանիցեմք, քեզ ծառայ լինիմք մեք եւ ամենայն ծնունդքն մեր:

13. Իսկ Սատանայ ցուցանէր նոցա յարեւելից <կողմն>,[7]

եւ 1°] որ D | զայն սակաւ] om A B D | լոյսն] + մեր D

7 զայն D | եբեր] + զձեզ D | լոյս] + յաշխարհ D

8 եւ---Ադամ (v. 10)] om D | եւ] om B | ինչ] + ետուք B

9 զի---նմա] պարտ էր ձեզ ծառայ լինել B | ընդէր] զի A | զձեզ---նմա] ի քեզ ծառայ լինիմք A | ձերովք] մերովք A

10 եւ...ասել] om A B D

11 տայք A] տաք B D Y | թէ B] որ D (որ) Y om A

12 Ադամ] + եւ D | մի] միւս A D | անգամ] + այլ B | մեք] om D

13 արեւելսն D արեւելեան A | կողմն] om D Y |

եւ ասաց. Հայեցարուք եւ անդ տեսանիցէք լոյս:

14. Իբրեւ ասաց Սատանայ զայս բանս, եւ ինքն սակաւ մի հեռացաւ. եւ հայէին Ադամ եւ Եւայ ղէպ յարեւելից կողմն, տեսանէին զնշան լուսանալոյն. յոյժ ուրախացան եւ խնդացին: 15. Իբրեւ <ծագեաց արեգակն կատարելապէս խնդացին իբրեւ> [8] սակաւ մի բարձրացաւ արեգակն, եկն առ նոսա պիղծն Սատանայ, ասէ. Տեսա՞ք զաւետիսն զի ուրախացուցի զձեզ:

16. Ասէ Ադամ. Ծառայ եմ քեզ եւ աւետեաց քոց, զի դու լուսաւորեցեր զմեզ. ամենայն ծնունդքն մեր ծառայ եմք:

17. Իսկ Սատանայ բերեալ քար մի եւ եդ առաջի Ադամայ, եւ ասաց Ադամայ. Դիր զձեռդ ի վերայ քարին եւ ասայ այսպէս. Ամենայն ծնունդքն իմ ծառայ քո եղիցին: 18. Եւ թէ ոչ ասես

ասաց] + հանց հանթէ D + անդ B

14 զայս բանս] զբանս A | ինքն] գնաց A B D + եւ D | եւ 2°---Եւայ] Ադամ հայեր ի D | յարեւելից կողմն] յարեւելս B D | զի նշան A B | լուսանալոյն] երեւէր B D էր եւ A | յոյժ] om B D

15 ծագեաց---իբրեւ 2° B] om A Y | խնդացին B] om D | սակաւ մի] մի ժամ D | նոսա] + անիծեալ D | Սատանայ] + եւ A B D | տեսաք A B | զաւետիսն] + իմ A B D

16 եմ] եմք A | ամենայն---եմք] ծառայ եմք (եմ B D) քեզ (+ մեք B D) եւ (+մեր D) ամենայն ծնունդքն մեր A B D

17 եւ ասաց] ասելով D | Ադամայ 2°] om A D | զձեռդ] +քո D | վերայ] +սալ A | այսպէս] om D + թէ մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի եւ անմահն մեռանի B D | եղիցի B D

այսպէս, խոր խաւար բերեմ ի վերայ քո։

19. Իսկ Ադամ եդեալ ձեռն ի վերայ քարին, եւ ասաց. Մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի եւ անմահ՟ն մեռանի, մեք եւ ամենայն ծնունդքն մեր ծառայ եղիցի[9] քեզ։

20. Եւ առեալ Սատանայ զքարն, եւ տարեալ թաղեաց ի գետն Յորդանան։ 21. Այս եղեւ ձեռագիր Ադամայ ի ձեռն Սատանայի։

22. Մինչեւ յերեկոյն ուրախացան եւ խնդացին Ադամ եւ Եւայ < ի վերայ արեգական. իսկ յերեկոյն արեգակն իբրեւ մտաւ գիտացին Ադամ եւ Եւայ >[10] որ խաբեցան ի Սատանայէ, լացին եւ ողբացին, մինչեւ եօթն օրն անօթի կացին եւ զՏէրն աղաչեցին։ 23. Եւ յետ եօթն աւուրն ողորմեցաւ նոցա Տէրն, եւ առաքեաց զ՟րեշտակ իւր, եւ բերեալ ձեռնագիր յԱստուծոյ ետ ի ձեռն Ադամայ, եւ ասէ. Մի երկնչիր Ադամ թէ խաբեաց զքեզ Սատանայ.

---

18 խոր] դարձեալ B D | քո] ձեր A B

19 եղ A | եւ 2°] + մինչեւ A | եղիցին A չ̇նեցիմք D | քո B D

20 զՍատանայ D | տարաք D

21 այն] եւ D

22 ուրախացան եւ] ուրախ B | ի 1°---Եւայ 2° D] (եւ ապա իբրեւ իմացան) Y | ի 1°---արեգակն D] եւ A | ի վերայ արեգական D] om B | իբրեւ D] երբ B | իմացան A | Ադամ եւ Եւայ 2° D] om A B | մինչեւ 2°---կացին] om B | մինչեւ 2°] om A | կացին] om A | եւ 5°] om A

23 եւ 3°--- յԱստուծոյ] ի ձեռագիրն Աստուծոյ բերեալ կնքեալ D | Աստուծոյ A | ետ] եդ A B | երկնչել D | Ադամ] + եւ B | վասն այն ասաց քեզ թէ մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի, զի անծին ես եմ որ ոչոք ծնաւ. անմահն իմ աստուածութեան <աստ>, որ ոչ ունի զմահ. վասն այն այսպէս խաբէութեամբ էառ զձեռնագիրն ի քէն, որ մնաս դու գերի ի ձեռն Սատանայի. բայց ոչ թողում զքեզ գերի ի ձեռն Սատանայի, զի դու պատկեր իմ ես. ոչ կորուսից զքեզ եւ ոչ թողից ի ձեռն նորա: 24. --Զի այն եօթն օրն որ պահեաց Ադամ, այն ասի առաջաւոր[11]---: 25. Եւ ի մտանել վեց դարուն, առաքեցից ի լուսոյ աստուածութեան իմոյ զորդի իմ սիրելի. որ եկեալ մարմնանայ ի զաւակէ քումմէ, ի սուրբ եւ յանարատ կուսէն. զի նայ եղիցի որդի որդւոյ <քո եւ որդի իմ> :[12] 26. Եւ որդին իմ ջնջեսցէ զձեռագիր քո, եւ ազատեսցէ զքեզ ի գերութենէ Սատանայի,

---

քեզ] ձեզ D | ծնանի] + եւ անմահն մեռանի B | եմ] + աստ Աստուած A | որ 1°] om D | ծնաւ] + զիս B D եւ B | աստ B] om A D (ասաց) Y | ունիմ A B D | այն 2°] om D | քէն] ձեզ անէ D | Սատանայի 1°] նորա B | բայց---Սատանայի 2°] om D | գերի 2°] om A | Սատանայի 2°] նորա A B | զի դու---նորա] om A | կորուսից---ոչ 5°] om D | թողից] +զքեզ B D

24 Ադամ] + զի B | այն 2°] + որ A | ասի առաջաւոր] է որ առաջաւոր ասեն (ասեմք D) B D | առաջաւոր] + ասեն A

25 ի 1°] om A | ի լուսոյ] իմ իմաստութեան D | աստուածութենէ A | քումմէ] + եւ D | եւ յանարատ] om D | նայ] այն D | որդւոյ] om B D | քո---իմ 2° A B] om Y իմ D

26 եւ 1°] զի B | իմ] քո D |

եւ տացէ քեզ զառաջին փառսն քո։

27. Իբրեւ զայս <աւետիս> լուաւ Ադամ, ուրախացաւ յոյժ. վեց հազար <տարին> իբրեւ ժամ մի երեւեցաւ։

28. Օրհնեալ է Աստուած։

քո 2°] + եւ D

27 զայս] om D | աւետիս D] աւետիքս A B Y | յոյժ] om A զի D | տարին B D] դարն A Y | իբրեւ ժամ] զժամ D

28 օրհնեալ է Աստուած] վասն քաղցր (քաղցրով A) աւետեաց հրեշտակին Աստուծոյ A D ուրախացայր եւ խնդայր D om B

The History of the Expulsion of Adam from the Garden

1. Now when Adam <and Eve>[1] fell from the garden into this world, they rejoiced over the sun and moon until the evening.[2] 2. But towards the evening, when the sun set, they thought darkness had seized them <and> they would not see light again. Since there was always light in the garden,[3] they thought all this world would be bright in the same way. They did not know that in this world there is night, or there is day. Therefore they were grieved when the sun set, as

---

[1]The plural verbs in vss. 1-2 indicate Eve's presence also.

[2]D omits the opening words by haplography and intends vs. 1 to be the conclusion of Transgression: "Thus they rejoiced until evening over the sun and moon <which were> above the earth." Expulsion then begins "Sun and moon..."

[3]The phrase is difficult since one would expect either an adjectival form of լոյս or դրախտն in the loc. Cf. Transgression, vs. 47.

they thought it would not be light again,<and> they wept and lamented till morning.

3. Now in the morning at daybreak, Satan came to him (Adam) in the form of an angel and said, "Why are you sad?"

4. Adam said, "We are sad because God created us and put us in the midst of the bright garden, but by the serpent's deception we tasted of the fruit and were expelled from the garden, and we fell into darkness for some time. 5. Again the Lord took pity and sent his angel, <and> he took us out of the darkness. And he brought us into the light of this world;[4] although it was not like the light of paradise,[5] nevertheless it was light. 6. But we do not know what we have done that the Lord has become angry

---

[4]"The light of this world" and "this bright world" are both difficult. See n. 3 above.

[5]Or "the light of the kingdom."

at us and has taken away that little light. That is why we lament and weep."

7. Satan said, "What did you give to that angel who took you away from the dark place and brought you into the light?"

8. Adam said, "Indeed nothing."

9. Satan said, "Why is that? Why did you not declare yourselves to be his servants together with all your offspring?"

10. Adam said, "Folly took hold of us and we did not think to say that."

11. Satan said, "What will you give to me if I give you the good news[6] of light?"

12. Adam said, "If we could see light one time, we would become your servants, we and all our offspring."

13. Then Satan showed them the east[7]

---

[6] N.B. nom. where acc. աւետիս is required. Cf. Transgression, vs. 31, and vs. 27 (ABY) below.

[7] Y is faulty. Either կողմն has been elided (A B and vs. 14) or արեւելք must be acc (D).

and said, "Look and you will see light there."

14. When Satan said these words and withdrew a little, Adam and Eve looked towards the east, saw the sign of the dawn, rejoiced greatly and were glad. 15. When <the sun had risen completely they rejoiced. When>[8] the sun had risen a little higher, the detestable Satan came to them and said, "Did you see the good news, that I made you rejoice?"

16. Adam said, "I am a servant to you and your good news, for you gave us light. All our offspring are <your> servants."

17. Then Satan brought a stone and set it before Adam, and he said to Adam, "Put <your> hand upon the stone and say thus: 'Let all my offspring be your servants.'
18. And if you do not say

---

[8]Probably omitted from A Y by haplography, although this may be a later explanatory comment incorporated into the text of B D.

so, I will bring deep darkness upon you."

19. Then Adam put his hand upon the stone and said, "Until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies, we and all our offspring will be[9] your servants."

20. And Satan took the stone, and he brought it and buried it in the river Jordan. 21. This was Adam's promissory note in Satan's hand.

22. Until the evening Adam and Eve rejoiced and were glad <about the sun. But in the evening, when the sun set, Adam and Eve knew>[10] that they had been deceived by Satan; they wept and lamented, and they fasted for seven days and beseeched the Lord. 23. And after seven days the Lord took pity on them and sent his angel, and he brought a promissory note from God, put it in Adam's hand, and said, "Do not fear, Adam, if Satan has deceived you.

---

[9] N.B. the 3rd singular form of the verb.

[10] The material in parenthesis in Y is almost certainly an editorial addition to make sense of the text. D makes clear that Y is guilty of haplography (Ադամ եւ Եւայ...Ադամ եւ Եւայ) and is followed here.

He said to you, 'Until the unbegotten is born' because I am the unbegotten, who no one bore. And <he said> 'the immortal one' of my divinity, which cannot die. Thus he took the promissory note from you deceitfully, so that you might remain a prisoner in Satan's hand. But I will not leave you as a prisoner in Satan's hand, for you are my image. I will not destroy you and I will not leave you in his hand."
24. ---For those seven days in which Adam fasted are called Aradjavor.---[11] 25. And when the sixth eon arrives, I will send from the light of my divinity my beloved son, who will come and take human form from your seed, from the holy and perfect virgin. For he shall be the son of your <son and (also) my son>.[12] 26. And my son will annul your promissory note, free you from captivity to Satan,

---

[11]The sentence is out of place and belongs at the end of vs. 22. The gloss identifies Adam's fast with Aradjavor, a preparatory fast celebrated during the tenth week before Easter in the Armenian church [see M. Ormanian, The Church of Armenia (London: A. R. Mowbray & Co., 1955), p. 158.] The fast is known to Zenob of Glak (10th cent. ?) and Nerses Shnorhali (12th cent.).

[12]Omitted from Y D by haplography.

and give you your former glory."

27. When Adam heard this <good news>, he rejoiced greatly. And the six thousand <years> seemed like one hour. 28. Blessed be God.

ԱՅՍ Է ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ՈՐԴՒՈՑՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ ԱԲԵԼԻ ԵՒ ԿԱՅԵՆԻ

1. Իսկ յորժամ Ադամ յետ խաբէութեան Սատանայի երբ հինգ օր պահեաց ծոմով, յորժամ յառաջաւոր ասեմք. քաղծրացաւ նմա Աստուած եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր եւ պատմեաց նմա զմարդանալն Աստուծոյ եւ զփրկութիւն նորա ի ձեռաց Սատանայի: 2. Եւ բերեալ զեզն հնազանդեցոյց նմա նովաւ վարել եւ վաստակել եւ գործել զերկիր, եւ զպտուղ նոցա[1] ուտել եւ լիանալ. եւ հրամայեաց ի պտղոյ անտի բաժին հանել Աստուծոյ:

3. Զի[2]Ադամայ առաջին զաւակն Կայեն էր. երբ Կայէն եղեւ երեսուն տարեկան, ապա ծնաւ Աբէլ եւ քոյր նորա:

այս---Կայենի] om D

1 յետ խաբէութեան] ետես զխաբէութեանն D | երբ] + Ադամ D | յորժամ---ասեմք] այժմ առաջավորք ասեմ D | յորժամ] որք այժմ B | նմա Աստուած] Տէր ի վերայ նոցա D | եւ 1°] om D | եւ 2°] om D | զմարդանալն] զմարդայ սիրութեան Քրիստոսի D | եւ 3°---Սատանայի] որ D

2 նմա] om D + եւ A | վարէր D | վաստակէր D | եւ 3°] om B D | գործէր D | նոցա---լիանալ] այնով լիանայր D | պտղոյ անտի] պտղէն D

3 Ադամայ] Ադամ յետ ելաւ ի դրախտէն զաւակ ոչ ունէր D | զաւակ] որդին B | Կայեն էր] ծնաւ Կայեն եւ քոյրն իւր D | եղեւ] ծնաւ D | տարեկան] ամաց A + էր եւ D | նորա] իւր B D

4. Եւայ երեսուն տարի մի[3] փոր կու ծնանէր ջուխտակ, մին աղջիկ եւ մին տղայ:

5. Երբ Աբել եղեւ քսան տարեկան խաշանց հովիւ եղեւ, իսկ Կայեն հողագործ էր: 6. Զի[4] ասաց նոցա Ադամ, թէ ի վաստակոց ձեռոց <տասնէն> մին բաժին հանէք Աստուծոյ. զի Աբելի ոչխարն ծնաւ հազար եւ մի պուտ ունէր, զայն Հաբէլ ընտրեաց Աստուծոյ բաժին. բայց ոչ մատոյց վասն սիրոյ եղբօրն. քանզի ասէր. Երբ հասանէ հունձն եղբօրն իմ, ապա ի միասին մատուցուք զբաժինն Աստուծոյ: 7. Իբրեւ հասին հունձքն ցորենոյ Կայենի, երբ հնձէր զցորեանն իւր, զորն որ քամի տուեալ էր[5] փունջ անէր, եւ զայն

---

4 inc] քանզի B D | Եւայ] om D | տարէն յետ D | աղջիկ...տղայ] տղայ...աղջիկ D արու...էք B

5 տարոյ A | ոչխարաց A B D | եղեւ 2°] էր D | էր] om B

6 նոցա] om D | թէ---ձեռոց] om B | թէ] om D | ձեռոց] իւրեանց D | տասնէն A B D] տասանորդէն Y | հանիցէք A հանել B D | ոչխարն] ոչխարքն ծնան մէկ զառն B + (որ) Y | հազար եւ մի] մին զառն ի վերայ ճակատին մէկ D | ունէր] + մի զառանն իսկ A + իսկ B | զայն Հաբել] om D | մատոյց] + Աստուծոյ A B D | քանզի] om A B D | Երբ հասանէ] Աբել հասան B | եղբօրն---միասին] եւ ես այլ ... եմ իմ բաժինն D

7 իբրեւ 1°---ցորենոյ] երբ հասաւ ցորենն D | Կայենի] om A + նայ D | հնձէր] + Կայեն A B D | իւր] om A B D | զորն---եւ 1°] քամի տուաւ վայլէր եւ փչէր D | փունջ անէր] եւ B փունջ էր A B | եւ 1°] om B |

խուրձն կապէր եւ ուրիշ դնէր ի բաժինն Աստուծոյ:

8. Եւ եբեր Հաբէլ զզատն իւր, զոր ընտրեալ էր եւ բաժին Աստուծոյ խոստացեալ: 9. Իսկ Կայէն կանգնեցաւ յաղօթս առ Աստուած, եւ ասաց. Դու, Տէր, ստեղծող ամենայնի, գիտութիւն լիցի քեզ. զամենայն ինչ զոր վաստակեցին եւ զործեցի հանի քեզ բաժին եւ տասանորդ, ըստ արդար վաստակոց իմ մատուցի քեզ. իսկ դու գիտես, որպէս հաճոյ է քեզ, այնպէս եղիցին կամք քո: 10. Եւ բարկացաւ Տէր ի վերայ Կայենի.

Y (A)	B	D
ափ մի հողոյ նման	ամպ մի սեւացեալ եկն	որոտաց եւ ել հողմ
քամատարաց[6]	ի վերայ խոցոցն	եւ ամպ մի սեւ եկաւ
զամենայն հունձսն	Կայենի որոտաց եւ	ի վերայ դիզուն
Կայենի ցորենեացն	ել հողմ ի նմանէ	Կայենի եւ ուրիշ] +էր B | ի] om A B D | Աստուծոյ] + իբրեւ (մինչեւ D) աւարտեցաւ հունձքն Կայենի ժողովեաց զփունջ եւ քամայտար խրցունս (+ որ անպէտք էր D) դէզ մի արար բաժին Աստուծոյ B D

8 եբեր] եբր D | զոր---Աստուծոյ] ընտրեալ (ընտրէր D) որ բաժին Աստուծոյ էր B D | եւ 2°] om A | խոստացեալ] om A

9 կանգնեցաւ] եկաց A | զործեցի] + եւ D | հանեցի B | եւ 3°] om D | իմ] + եւ B D | քեզ 3°] + ընծայ B D | որպէս] որչափ որ A

10 ի վերայ] ընդ D | Կայենի 1°] + զինչ A | հողոյ] փոշոյ A | քամատարեաց A | հունձսն] + եւ զխուրձս A | ցորենեաց] om A |

ցրուեաց, եւ կորոյս զամենայն ինչս նորա	քամայտար արար զամենայն խոցունսն ցրուեաց, եւ կորոյս զամենայն	քամատարեղ եւ ամենայն խուռցն Կայենին ցրուեաց եւ կորոյս զամենայն ինչս նորա

եւ < հասկ մի > ոչ գտաւ. կարկտիւ եհար զԿայենի երեսն եւ սեւացոյց իբրեւ զգործելի, եւ այնպէս մնաց երեսն սեւ:

11. Իսկ Հաբէլ մատուց զանդրանիկ զառն Աստուծոյ. ձեռնատարած աղօթէր առ Տէր եւ ասէր. Տէր Աստուած, ստեղծօղ եւ արարիչ ամենայն բարութեանց, աղաչեմ զքեզ ընկալ զնուէրս, որ մատուցանեմ քեզ բաժին ի բարեստեղծեալ[7] պարզեւաց քոց, զոր բաշխեցեր մեզ. քո բաշխեալ բարեացդ ի քեզ մատուցանեմ ի հաճոյս: 12. Իսկոյն քաղցր հոդմն հնչեաց, եւ լոյս ծագեաց յերկնից եւ լուսաւորեցան երեսն Աբելի. եւ եկն յերկնից բարբառ որ ասէր.

ինչ---գտաւ] եւ ոչ մնաց եւ ոչ մի եւ զմնացեալն A | եւ 3°] մինչեւ B | հասկ մի B D] հասկի միոյ Y | գտաւ] մնաց B + եւ B D | զԿայենի---սեւացոյց] զԿայեն եւ սեւացոյց յերեսս նորա B | եւ 4°] om A | իբրեւ] որպէս A | եւ 5°] om D | մնաց] om A | սեւ] նորա B

11 Աստուծոյ] + եւ A | բազկատարած C | առ Տէր] om A | եւ արարիչ] om D | ի 1°] om D | բարեստեղծեալ] բարի (+ ի C) ստեղծեալ (ստեղծովածոց + քոց D) B C D | մեզ] om B | քո] ի քումմէ B C քումմէ D (ի) քո Y | ի 2°---հաճոյս] om D | ի 2°] om A B C | ի հաճոյս] om C + կամաց քոց A

12 իսկ յայնժամ քաղցրահոդմ D | լոյս] + պայծառ B | յերկնից եւ լուսաւորեցան] om B | լուսաւորեցաւ D | եւ 3°]

լսելի եղեն աղօթքն քո, եւ ընդունելի <եղեւ> ընծայն քո:
13. Եւ լուսափայլ <ամպ> հովանի եղեւ ի վերայ Հաբելի, եւ ընկալաւ զզաոն Աբելի եւ վերացաւ յերկինս:

14. Իսկ Կայէն ոխացաւ ընդ Աբելի, կամէր սպանանել զնա բայց ոչ գիտէր սպանանել, զի այլ սպանումն ոչ էր եղեալ:
15. Բայց Աբել ոչ գիտէր զչար խորհուրդն եղբօրն, եւ Աբէլ սիրէր զեղբայրն իւր, եւ հանապազ ուտէին եւ ըմպէին ի միասին եւ շրջէին:

16. Իսկ ի միում աւուր ասէ Կայէն ցեղբայր իւր. Գնասցուք ի դաշտն շրջեսցուք: 17. Եւ ելեալ գնացին ի դաշտն, եւ կամէր Կայէն կապել զեղբայրն իւր. բայց Աբէլ ժիր էր աւելի քան զԿայէն, վասն այնորիկ ոչ յայտնել կարէր Կայէն զխորհուրդն

---

om D | եղեն] եղեւ C D | քո 1°] om A | եղեւ B C D] եղեն A Y +ինդրուածք եւ A

13 լուսաւոր D | ամպ A B C D] om Y | Հաբելի] om B | Աբելի] om B

14 Աբելի] +եւ B C D | սպանանել 2°] սպանումն B C D +զնա A | զի այլ սպանումն] om C

15 բայց] om B | խորհուրդն] + Կայէն D | իւր] + հանապազ D | հանապազ] + միտեղ A D ի միտեղ B | ի միասին] om A B D միտեղ C

16 ի] om D | ցեղբայր իւր] եղբայր C D

17 ելեալ] այլ D | եւ 2°] om B C D | կապել] սպանանել C | ցեղբայրն D | իւր 1°] om A B C D | ժիր էր աւելի] ուժ եղէր C D ուժով էր B | այնորիկ] այն D | Կայէն 2°] om A B C իւր: 18. Սկիզբն արար խաղալ ընդ եղբօրն իւր եւ արար զօտամարտիլ, եւ կշտի բռնել փորձիլ, զի տեսցէ յուժն իւր յաղթել կարէ զնա. քանզի որ կշտի <բռնեաց> վայր անկաւ եւ ոչ կարաց յաղթել զԱբէլ: 19. Եւ ելեալ Կայէն հայեցաւ աստ եւ անդ, եւ ետես մատն խաղողի քաղում երկայն. իսկ Կայէն ասէր. Եկ եղբայր մատնաւ <խաղասցուք> :

20. Ասէ Աբէլ. Ո՞րպէս <խաղասցուք> մատնեաւ:

21. Ասէ Կայեն. Դու <զրկեա> զծառս, եւ ես երեք մատնովս պատեմ զքեզ, տեսանեմ թէ կարես կտրել զնա եւ արձակիլ. ապա ես զրկեմ զծառդ, եւ դու պատեա մատներաւդ ի վերայ իմ,

---

18 inc ի B | իւր 1°---արար 2°] om C | իւր 1°] om B D | եւ 1°---փորձիլ] om A | զօտամարտիլ---փորձիլ] զօտէմարտ փորձելով D | զօտամարտ B | փորձելով B C | յուժն իւր] թէ B | ուժն A D | կարէ] +կապել B C | քանզի որ կշտի] որքան որ զմիմեանս A | քանզի] քանի B քան D | բռնեաց B C] բռնեցին Y բռնեն D +ինքն B C D | անկաւ] + Կայէն A | կարաց] + դէմ կալ Աբելի եւ A | զԱբել] զնա A

19 ել B C D | հայեցաւ] om D | յայս կոյս եւ այն կոյս B | եւ 3°] om C D | մատն] մատնայ B C + մի D | խաղող C | քաղում] +եւ B C | մատնաւ] այլ մի D | խաղասցուք A B C] խաղաղասցուք Y D

20 խաղասցուք A B C D] խաղաղասցուք Y | մատնեաւ] + խաղողի A C

21 զրկեա A C] զիրկ արա D զիւեայ Y + այս C | զծառս] ծառոյս D | երեք] + պատ C | մատնովս] պատ ոտով D | եւ արձակիլ] om B C | ապա] դարձեալ եւ B C եւ A D | պատեա] տուր պատ A B տուր երեք պատատովն D |

տեսցուք զի ով կարէ կտրել զնա։

22. Եւ նա ուժով էր, այնու փորձեաց[8] թէ ում ուժն աւելի <է> ։ 23. Իբրեւ գնաց Այէլ ի ծառն Կայէն առեալ զուռն որթի եւ պատէր երեք պատ ձեռներովն եւ քամակովն, եւ ապա իմացաւ Աբէլ զչարութիւն եղբօրն. աղաչէր եւ ասէր. Եղբայր, արձակեա զիս ի կապէն։ 24. Եւ Կայէն ոչ արձակէր, այլ պնդագոյն կապէր այնչափ ուռով որթիւ պատեաց զնա ծառովն[9] ոտից մինչեւ ցգլուխն։ 25. Լայր Աբէլ եւ ասէր. Եղբայր, արձակեա զիս. այս անցաւոր աշխարհիս համար մի հեղուր զարիւնն իմ. ես քեզ ի՞նչ չարութիւն <արարի> , ընդէ՞ր բարկանաս ինձ. աշխարհս ամէն քեզ լինի։

26. Իսկ Կայէն աստ եւ անդ շրջէր թէ իրք[10] մի գտցէ, եւ

տեսցուք] om B D | կարաց B D | զնա om B

22 եւ---էր] ուժ եղէ D | փորձեսցուք B C D| ում] om A | առաւել D | է A B C D] այ Y

23 գնաց ի ծառն] զրկեաց զծառն B C D | որթներովն C D | եւ 1°] om D | պատէր--- vs. 24 պատեաց] om C | պատատեաց D | ձեռնովն D | քամակովն] թիկամբն A + պատեաց D | եւ 3°] om B | եղբօրն] Կայենի B D | ի կապէն] om B D ի կապանացս A

24 արձակէր] + զնա A | ուռով որթիւ] եւ այն թիւով D | պատատեաց D | զնա] + ի D | ոտից---ցգլուխն] om D

25 լայր] om D | զիս] որչափ աղաչէր եւ ոչ լսէր քանզի չարն ի սիրտն վառեալ էր D | զարիւնն] զանմեղ արիւնն B D | արարի A B C D] արի Y | ամէն] + այն B | լինի]
եղիցի B D

26 իսկ] եւ D | շրջէր] հայէր C | իրք--- այնով սպանանիցէ զեղբայրն, եւ ոչ գիտէր թէ որոյ տեղ է սպանելոյ։ 27. Իսկ չարն Սատանայ իբրեւ եղեւ երեկոյն, սեւ զայլաքարաւ[11] եւ քարածեծուքար[12] մի կայր, սուր իբրեւ ածելի, այնով սպանին մինն զմիւսն, եւ զսուր քարն ի վայր ձգեաց։

28. Եւ Կայէն ուսեալ ի նմանէ եւ առեալ զսուր քարն, եւ եկեալ առ Աբէլ. իսկ Աբէլ լայր, եւ ասէր. Ո՞չ ողորմիս մեր ծնողացն։
29. Իսկ Կայէն ոչ ողորմեցաւ նմա։ 30. Իբրեւ եկն ի սպանումն լալով ասաց Աբէլ. Եղբայր, բեր զերեսդ համբուրեմ <զի> կարօտ չմնայ ի սրտիս. դու գիտես դատաստանն Աստուծոյ։ 31. Իբրեւ քարիւն կտրէր <զխոչակն>[13] եղբօրն, յայնժամ եղբայրն ասաց. Իմ

զեղբայրն] զտանէր ինչ զի սպանցէ զնա D | զեղբայրն--- սպանելոյ] om B | զեղբայրն] om C + իւր A | որոյ--- սպանելոյ] որ տեղէն սպանցէ C զոր սպանիցէ D | սպանելոյ] սպանցէ A

27 երեկոյն] երկու B D om C | սեւ] om B | զայլաքարաւ] աքրաւ D | եւ 1°] նման եւ սինն առեալ A | կայր] om A | զածելի D +եւ C D | սպանեաց A B C D +եւ մորթեաց D | մինն] + եւ C | եւ 2°---ի] զքարն D

28 եւ 2°] om C D | եկն B C եկ D | առ] om C ի D | ասէր] + եղբայր B | մեր ծնողացն] ողորմեայ ինձ D

29 իսկ Կայէն] ոչ լսէց եւ D | իսկ] եւ B C | նմա] om D

30 բեր] եկ D | զի B C D] om A Y | չմնայ A C D | ի սրտիս] om D | դատաստանն] պատասխանն B պատասխանին D

31 inc եւ B | կտրէր] խարէր D | եղբօրն] om B | յայնժամ] om A B C D | եղբայրն] Աբէլ A B C D |

մօրս ասես զի զկաթն իւր հալալ արասցէ ինձ։[14] 32. Քանզի քարն փոքր էր, <դժուարին մորթեաց մինչ ի ժամ մի բռանց> մորթեաց։ 33. Դարձեալ ի ժամ մորթելոյ ասէր եղբայրն. Ես գնացի յաշխարհէս եւ դու շահեա զսիրտ ծնօղաց մերոց։

34. Իբրեւ սպանեաց զեղբայրն, ուրախութեամբ երթայր. երեւեցաւ Տէրն ի ճանապարհին յիսուն կանգնաչափ բարձր, ասաց Կայենի. Ո՞ւր է եղբայրն քո։

35. Եւ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց. Ո՞վ ետ ինձ պահ որ խնդրես յինէն։ 36. ---Վասն այն հարցանէր Աստուած թերեւս մեղայ ասիցէ։ 37. Իբրեւ ետես Տէրն որ այնպէս ասաց Կայէն, բարկացաւ

զի] om B D | զկաթն] + եւ աշխատանքն B C D | իւր] om C D | արասցէ ինձ] անէ D

32 դժուարին---բռանց D] հազիւ մինչեւ օզուտ ժամ մի Y | մինչեւ A | մի] մեծ C | բռանց] հազիւ A բռունք B անճախ C

33 եղբայրն] om C D | եւ դու] om D | շահէ D | ի սիրտ A C D | մերոց] om A + եւ D

34 սպանեալ B | եղբայրն D +եւ A (եւ) Y | երթայր] եւ C + ի տուն իւր A + Կայեն B | երեւեցաւ] + նմայ B | բարձր] + եւ A B C D | Կայենի] Կայեն D + Կայեն B

35 նա] Կայեն D | լրբութեամբ] om A B C D | ետ] եդ B

36 inc] + զի A B C D | թերեւս] թէ եւ C | ասիցէ] տացէ B D + եւ D

37 այնպէս---Կայէն] պատճառիւ տայր պատասխանի եւ ոչ ետ մեղայ D | բարկացաւ] + Տէր B C D |

ի վերայ Կայենի եւ եօթն պատուհաս եա Կայենի:

38. ա. Մէկ պատուհասն այն է, որ երկու կոտօշ բուսաւ ի վերայ գլխոյն:

39. բ. Երկրորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ կոտոշն ձայնէր եւ սաէր բարձր բարբառով. Թէ, Կայէն եղբայրասպան է: 40. Սար եւ քար եւ ձոր ձայնէր եւ սաէր. Կայէն եղբայրասպան է:

41. գ. Երրորդ պատուհասն այն է, որ ոտիւք եւ ձեռօքն եւ ամենայն բոլոր անդամօքն <դողայր> իբրեւ զուռ:[15]

42. դ. Չորրորդ պատուհասն այն էր, <որ քանի> ուտէր ոչ լիանայր:

43. ե. Հինգերորդն պատուհասն այն էր, որ ինչ սիրտն

Կայենի 1°] նորա B | պատուհաս եա] պատուհասիւ պատուհասեաց B C | Կայենի 2°] om D զԿայեն B զնա C

38 ա] om D | պատուհասին D | երկու] om D post բուսաւ C | վերայ] om B

39 բ] om D | սաէր 1°] կոչէր B C | բարձր---Թէ] om D | բարբառով] ձայնիւ B C ձայն եւ սաէր B | է] om B C D

40 եւ 1°] om C | եւ ձոր---է] զնոյն կասէր D | եւ ձոր] om B C այսպէս A | ձայնէին A | է] om B

41 գ] om D | երրորդ] + մեծ B C | ոտիւք] սրտիւք A | եւ ամենայն] om D | ամենայն] om B C | անդամօքն] մարմնովն B C D | դողայր B C D] դողդողայր A Y | իբրեւ զուռ] om D

42 դ] om D | որ քանի A] քանի B որ քան C որ քանզի D (զի) քան Y | ուտէր] + եւ A D

43 ե] om D | որ] om B | ինչ] om B C |

ուզէր եւ ուտել չկարէր, եւ իբր թէ ուտէր, ի վայր հեղոյր։

44. զ. Վեցերորդն պատուհասն այն էր, որ քուն չունէր ոչ զիշերն եւ ոչ ցերեկն։

45. է. Եօթներորդն պատուհասն այն էր, որ Աստուած նմա մահ ոչ հրամայեաց, այլ ասաց Տէրն. Ով որ սպանիցէ զԿայէն, նա նորա պատուհասն ի վերայ սպանողին անկանիցի։

46. Եւ այնպէս մնաց մինչեւ ութ հարիւր եւ վաթսուն տարի. յետ անճար մնաց, մահուն փափաք ունէր, եւ ոչ մեռանէր։
47. Իսկ <մորթ> մի <վայրենի> էած եւ ծածկեաց զինքն։

Y[16]	D	A
48. Իբրեւ եւ	48. Եւ իբրեւ

եւ 1°] om A C | եւ իբր թէ] իբրեւ A երբ B C D | ի] ընդ B | հեղոյր] փսխէր B փոխէր C փխսէր D

44 զ] om D | ոչ 1°---ցերեկն] om D | զիշերն] տիւ B | ցերեկն] զիշեր B

45 է] om D | նմա---հրամայեաց] հրաման ոչ ետ որ սպանանեն զնա D | հրամայեաց] տայր C | այլ---Տէրն] om D | ով] +ոք B D | որ 2°] om B | զԿայէն---անկանիցի] զնա Կայէնի պատուհասն ի վերայ նորա լինի D | նա] om A B C | նորա---անկանիցի] եօթանասն եկի եօթն պատուհասս կրեսցէ A

46 մնաց 1°] եկաց B | յետ] + եւ A B | մնաց 2°] + մնաց (զի) Y | ունէր] էր B C D | մեռանէր] հասանէր C

47 մորթ B C] մորթի A մորթիւ D մորթի(ւ) Y | վայրենի A B C] վայրի D վերէն Y | էած] այծի B C | եւ] om B D | զինքն] ի դաշտին B

48 եւ---ճի] Ղամեք ճի | 48 եւ 1°] om C |

Ղամէք ի ծի, գնաց ի յորս. երեւեցաւ Կայեն ի հեռաստանէ կոտոշիւ եւ մորթիւ: 49. Իբրեւ տեսաւ Ղամէք, զիտաց թէ եղջիւր[17] է. եհար նետիւ աղեղան, եւ սպան զԿայէն:	Ղամէք ծի աւորեալ գնաց յորս եւ տեսաւ զԿայէն: 49. Ցանց զիտաց թէ այծ էր, եւ մազն իւր մէն էր, եւ թէ զլխոյ եւ թէ մարմնոյ ոտէն մինչ ի գլուխն մազ էր. նետիւ աղեղաւ սպան Կայեն. եւ պատուհասու Տէր եղաւ:	49. Եւ Ղամէք զիտաց թէ այծ է նետիւ աղեղէն սպան զԿայէն:

50. Պատուհասն անկաւ ի վերայ Ղամեքայ:

51. Իսկ Ղամեքայ կինն քարի էր, աղաչեաց | 51. Ետես Ղամեք եւ

աւորեալ B (cf. D) | ի 2°] om B | յորս] +եւ B | երեւեցաւ Կայէն] ետես զԿայէն B (cf. D)

49 իբրեւ---է] հանց զիտ թէ վայր ի այծ է B (cf. D) | եղջիւր] այծ B (= A C D)| եհար] om B | եւ] om B

յորս] +երէոց C | զԿայէն] +ի հեռաստանէ կոտոշիւ եւ մորթիւ C (=Y)

49 եւ 1°---էր 3°] om C

50 պատուհասն] եւ ցաւ պատուհասն Կայենի B եւ ցաւ պատուհասի նորա C

51 Ղամեք C | կինն] +մի B | էր] ունէր B C D |

Y

զԱստուած եւ ողորմեցաւ նմա Տէրն վասն բազում արտասուելոյ կնոջն, բժշկեցաւ ցաւն եւ վերացաւ պատուհասն Ղամեքայ:

A

երկեաւ եւ խոստովանեցաւ առաջի կանանց իւրոց. եւ վասն երկիւղին եւ խոստովանութեան եթող նմա Տէր Աստուած զպատուհասն Ղամեքայ:

52. Իսկ Ադամ եւ Եւայ իբրեւ իմացան զպանումն Աբելի, <գնացին բերին արիւնիւ շաղախեալ մարմինն Աբելի,> լային եւ սգային բազում ժամանակս: 53. Քանի որ թաղէին զմարմին Աբելի ելանէր յերեսս հողին. իսկ հանապազ արիւնն ոչ ցամաքէր, եւ ոչ հոտէր եւ ոչ որդնէր մարմինն: 54. Քանզի Աստուած Ադամայ ասաց հող լինի եւ ապա իւր ծնունդն. պիտէր յառաջ Ադամ մեռնէր եւ հող դառնայր,

---

Տէրն] Աստուած B om C D | բազում] om B C D | արտասուելոյ] + աղաչանաց C | կնոջն] + եւ B | բժշկեաց Աստուած C | ցաւն եւ վերացաւ] om D | ցաւն] զցաւ B | վերացաւ] om B C

52 իբրեւ A B C D] (իբրեւ) Y | գնացին---Աբելի 2°] om A Y | շաղախ B C | Աբելի 2°] անմեղին B | սգային] սուգ առնէին B

53 որ] om B C D | Աբելի] + այլ վի B + եւ D | իսկ---եւ 1°] om D | իսկ] զի A B C | հանապազ] om A | եւ 1°] om B | մարմինն] om A B C D

54 Աստուած---ասաց] ասաց Աստուած նախ Ադամ B C D | լինել A C | իւր] om B C D | դառնայր] + եւ B D

ապա ծնունդն նորա: 55. Մինչեւ ի մարմինն Աբելի ոչ ոք էր մեռեալ, եւ այնու ոչ հողանայր եւ ոչ ցամաքէր արիւնն Աբելայ: 56. Մինչեւ Ադամայ մահն այնպէս անփորձ մնաց մարմինն, որպէս կենդանի ի քուն. երբ Ադամ մեռաւ, ապա թէ մարմինն Աբելի ի գերեզմանն մտաւ:

57. Բայց յորժամ որ Կայէն զԱբէլ եսպան, Կայէն զեօթն ցաւով կոծէր վայ եւ եղուկ լայր դառնապէս. իսկ ծնօղքն Ադամ եւ Եւայ, տեսանէին զԱբէլ արեամբ շաղախեալ եւ Կայէն պատուհասիւ վիրաւորեալ. իսկ Ադամ եւ Եւայ լային եւ ողբային վասն զաւակացն իւրեանց: 58. Մինչեւ երկերիւր տարի Ադամ ոչ մերձեցաւ ի

---

55 ի] om A | մարմինն Աբելի] մահն Ադամայ B C D + այլ C D զԱբէլ A | եւ այնու] վասն այն A B C D | եւ 2°] om D

56 անփորձ] անփուտ A B C D | մնաց] կենայր A | մարմինն 1°] om B D | կենդանի] +մարմինն B D | քուն] + (իսկ) Y | մարմինն 2°---մտաւ] գերեզմանն տեղ եռ որ թաղեցին (թաղեցաւ D) զմարմինն Աբելայ B C D | ի գերեզմանն մտաւ] հող դարձաւ ի գերեզմանի եռ տեղի A

57 բայց] om C | որ---եսպան] նորա սպանէր Աբէլ եւ B յորժամ սպանէր Աբէլ եւ C որ էր սպանեալ Աբէլ եւ D | Կայէն 2°] եւ ինքն A | կոծէր] կսկծէր A B C | վայ--- դառնապէս] եւ լայր D | դառնապէս] om B C | իսկ 1°--- Եւայ 1°] om A | ծնօղքն] + նոցա B C D | պատուհասիւ վիրաւորեալ] ցաւաք արեալ եւ պատուհասեալ B ցաւազար պատուհասեալ C ցաւազնեալ եւ պատուհասեալ D | իսկ 2°--- Եւայ 2°] om B C D | իւրեանց] om B

58 տարի] + եւ D | Ադամ] om A այլ B C | ի---

կինն, աւէր թէ վախեմ թէ այլ չարագոյն զաւակ <ծնցի> իւրեանց կոծօք: 59 իսկ ողորմեցաւ Տէր, եւ առաքեաց <աւետիս> վասն Սեթայ <ծննդեանն, եւ Սէթ> մխիթարեաց զԱդամ եւ զկինն իւր զԵւայ:

թէ 1°] om B | որեցան C | կինն] + իւր A | աւէր թէ] om A D | վախէին A B C վախէր D | թէ 2°] + մերձենամ D | ծնցի A B C] om D ծնի Y | իւրեանց կոծօք] om A եւ լիցի (լինիցի C) իւրեանց կոծ եւ սուգ B C D

59 Տէր] Աստուած B C D | աւետիս D] աւետիք A B C Y | ծննդեանն եւ Սէթ B C D] om A Y | զկինն իւր] om B D | իւր] նորին A | իւր զԵւայ] նորա C

This Is the History of Abel and Cain the Sons of Adam

1. Now after Satan's deception, when Adam had fasted for five days, which we call Aradjavor, God relented toward him and sent his angel, and related to him the incarnation of God and his salvation from the hands of Satan. 2. And He brought and made obedient to him an ox with which to plow and cultivate and work the soil, that he (Adam) might eat their[1] produce and be satiated. And He commanded <Adam> to set aside a portion of the produce for God.

3. For[2] Adam's first child was Cain. When Cain was thirty years old, Abel and his sister were born.

---

[1] The plural is taken to refer to Adam, the ox, and the soil. նոցա could also be the subject of ուտել .

[2] The function of զի is unclear. Perhaps the intent is to relate Cain to the teaching of agriculture in the preceding verse.

4. As for Eve, her womb brought forth a pair every thirty years,[3] one girl and one boy.

5. When Abel was twenty years old, he became a herdsman of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the soil.
6. For[4] Adam said to them, "From <the fruit of> your labors set aside one portion <out of ten> for God." Now a sheep was born to Abel; it had 1001 speckles; Abel chose this one as God's portion. But he did not offer <it> because of <his> love for his brother; for he said, "When my brother's harvest ripens, then together we will offer the portion to God." 7. When Cain's grain harvest became ripe, when he gathered his grain, that which the wind had exposed,[5] he made a bundle, and he

---

[3] երեսուն տարի մի : lit. "thirty years one," a difficult phrase. մի most probably means "once," "one time," hence "once every thirty years."

[4] The function of զի is unclear.

[5] Lit. "that which the wind had given over," i.e. to injury, hence "had exposed, beaten."

bound this bunch and set it aside for God's portion.

8. And Abel brought his lamb which he had chosen, and he promised it to God as his portion. 9. Now Cain prayed to God and said, "Know thou, O Lord, creator of everything, that <from> everything <for> which I have labored and toiled, I have set aside portion and tithe for you; according to my righteous labors have I offered it to you. And you know, as it is pleasing to you, thus let your will be done." 10. But the Lord became angry at Cain.

Y (A)	B	D
He scattered all Cain's grain harvest like a handful of wind-blown[6] dust,	A black cloud came over Cain's bundle <and> it thundered, and dust came forth from it,	It thundered, and dust came forth, and a black cloud came over Cain's heap, and

[6]Presumably an adjective from քամի plus a form of տանիմ , hence "wind-blown," "wind-scattered," "carried away by the wind."

ABEL AND CAIN 10-12

Y	B	D
and destroyed everything which belonged to him,	<and> it caused everything <to be> blown by the wind. It scattered the bundle, and destroyed everything,	<it was> blown by the wind (?), and it scattered all Cain's bundle, and destroyed everything which belonged to him, such that a single ear of grain was not to be found. He beat Cain's face with hail and blackened it like coal, and thus his face remained black.

11. Now Abel offered the first-born lamb to God. With outstretched hands he prayed to the Lord and said, "O Lord God, creator and author of all good things, I pray you, accept this sacrifice which I am offering to you as a portion of your well-created[7] gifts which you have distributed among us. From those good things you have distributed I am offering to you for your pleasure." 12. Immediately a gentle breeze blew, and a light shone from heaven and illuminated the face of Abel. And a voice came from heaven which said,

---

[7] բարի + ptcp. from ստեղծանեմ , hence "well-created." Cf. the phrase բարեստեղծողն Աստուած in Theodor Mayragometsi (7th cent.).

"Your prayers are heard, and your offering is accepted." 13. And a shining <cloud> became a protection over Abel and took Abel's lamb and ascended into heaven.

14. Now Cain was bitter toward Abel; he wanted to kill him, but he did not know how to kill, for no other murder had taken place. 15. But Abel did not know his brother's evil plan, and Abel loved his brother, and they always used to eat and drink and walk together.

16. But one day Cain said to his brother, "Let us go take a walk in the field." 17. So they arose and went into the field, and Cain wished to bind his brother. But Abel was stronger than Cain; because of this Cain could not reveal his plan. 18. He began to play with his brother and to wrestle, and he tried to grab him from the side to see if by his strength he could overcome him. <But> because he grabbed him from the side, he fell down and could not overcome Abel. 19. And Cain went forth and looked here and there, and he saw a very long grapevine. Then Cain said, "Come, brother, <let us play> with a vine."

20. Abel said, "How <shall we play> with a vine?"

21. Cain said, "You <embrace> this tree, and I will bind you three times around with this vine and see if you can break it and become untied. Then I will embrace the tree, and you tie me up with the vines,

<and> we will see who can break it."

22. And he was strong, <but> by this he tried <to find out>[8] who was stronger. 23. When Abel went to the tree, Cain took the vine branch and tied it three times around his hands and body. And then Abel perceived his brother's wickedness. He implored and said, "Brother, untie me from the bond." 24. And Cain did not untie him, but bound him more firmly. In such a way he bound him to the tree[9] with a vine branch from his feet to his head.
25. Abel wept and said, "Brother, untie me. Do not shed my blood on account of this perishable world. What evil have I done to you; why are you angry at me? All this world is yours."

26. Now Cain was walking here and there in order to find something[10] and

---

[8]Lit. "he tested," "he tried out."

[9]The instr. here is difficult. Perhaps "around the tree" is intended, but the preposition q̣ is absent.

[10]Pluralis tantum?

kill his brother with it, but he did not know which is the place of killing. 27. But Satan the wicked, when the evening came, with a black flintstone...[11] and there was a grinding stone,[12] sharp as a razor, with which the one killed the other, and he threw down the sharp stone. 28. And Cain learned from him and took the sharp stone and came toward Abel. Then Abel wept and said, "Do you not have compassion on our parents?" 29. But Cain did not pity him. 30. When he came for the kill, Abel said weeping, "Come brother, let me kiss your face, <lest> want remain in my heart. You know the judgement of God." 31. While he was cutting his brother's wind-pipe[13] with the stone, his brother said, "Tell

---

[11]The text is corrupt here in all the MSS; some material has obviously been lost, perhaps through haplography. Recension II (see Appendix, Abel and Cain, vs. 27) may provide a clue to the original reading: "Then Satan came in the form of two ravens, and the one took a sharp stone, struck the other with it in the throat and killed him, and the stone was sharp as a razor." Cf. also D, which gives the variant reading աքրաւ for զայլաքարաւ . Issaverdens, Uncanonical Writings, p. 56, attempts to restore the meaning by referring to a similar tradition in Vartan Vartabed's Commentary on the Creation (12th cent.). He translates: "for he (Cain), dwelt in by Satan, saw some devils in the shape of crows, one of whom with a stone slew another. He did the same, and so Abel's blood was shed upon the ground." This tradition is known in Jewish and early Christian sources (see chapter three above).

[12]Presumably քար + ծեծեմ , hence "crushing stone," "grinding stone." Cf. քարածեծ , "crushed or stricken with stones."

[13]The spelling of this word is confused in all the MSS but is corrected here.

my mother that she should make her milk as nourishment for me."[14] 32. Because the stone was small he killed him with difficulty; for one hour he slaughtered him violently. 33. Again while he was slaughtering <him>, his brother said, "I have gone out of this world, but you gain the heart of our parents."

34. When he killed his brother, he went away cheerfully. The Lord appeared on the way, fifty cubits above, <and> said to Cain, "Where is your brother?"

35. And he said impudently, "Who made me his guardian, that you should ask it of me?" 36. Because of this God asked him; perhaps he might repent. 37. When the Lord saw that Cain spoke thus, he became angry

---

[14]Perhaps the intent is "lest she should make her milk...," but this translation would require the negative before the verb.

at Cain and gave Cain seven punishments.

38. (1) The first punishment was this; that two horns sprouted upon his head.

39. (2) The second punishment was this; that the one horn cried out and said in a loud voice, "Cain is a brother-murderer." 40. <Then> mountain and rock and valley cried out and said, "Cain is a brother-murderer."

41. (3) The third punishment was this; that with his feet and hands and every single limb he shuddered like a yew-tree.[15]

42. (4) The fourth punishment was this; that no matter how much he ate, he was not satisfied.

43. (5) The fifth punishment was this; that his heart would

---

[15] nιn may also be translated "vine-branch." The author may be using irony to relate Cain's shaking to the instrument used in tying Abel to a tree.

desire something, but he could not eat it, and when he tried to eat it, it would fall to the ground.

44. (6) The sixth punishment was this; that he could not sleep, either at night or during the day.

45. (7) The seventh punishment was this; that God did not allow him to die, rather the Lord said, "Whoever kills Cain, his punishment will fall upon the murderer."

46. And thus he remained for 860 years. Afterwards he remained incurable, and he wished to die, but he did not die. 47. Then he brought a skin of a wild <animal> and covered himself.

Y[16]	D	A
48. When Lamech	48. And when

[16]The MSS contain widely divergent readings for vss. 48-49. Y, D, and A are most distinct and are presented in parallel columns, while B and C each contain features of both Y and D, with B most closely following Y and C most closely following D.

ABEL AND CAIN 48-51

Y	D	A
went out on <his> horse, he went for the purpose of hunting, <and> Cain appeared some distance away with his horn and skin. 49. When Lamech saw <him>, he knew that it was a horn.[17] He struck him with an arrow from his bow and killed Cain.	Lamech mounted <his> horse, he went for the purpose of hunting, and he saw Cain. 49. Now he thought that it was a goat, and that his hair was the same <all over>, and that there was hair on his head and on his body from his feet to his head. With bow <and> arrow he killed Cain. And the Lord came with punishment. (??)	49. And Lamech thought that it was a goat, <and> he killed Cain with an arrow from his bow.
50. The punishment fell upon Lamech.
51. But Lamech's wife was a good woman; she entreated		51. Lamech saw and [17]Y reads եղջիւր , "horn," but Yov. suggests եղջերու , "stag, hart," is intended. Note A B C D read այծ .

Y

God, and the Lord took pity on him because his wife lamented much, and he cured his affliction and removed the punishment from Lamech.

A

became afraid, and he confessed before his wife. And because of his fear and confession, the Lord God withdrew the punishment from Lamech.

52. Now when Adam and Eve learned of Abel's murder, <they went and brought Abel's blood-smeared corpse,> and they wept and mourned for a long time. 53. Whenever they buried Abel's body, it came out on the face of the ground. Also his blood never dried, and his body did not stink or become worm-eaten. 54. For God said to Adam that he should become dust and then his offspring. It was necessary that Adam should die first and return to dust; then his offspring. 55. Before Abel's corpse, no one had died, and because of this he did not return to dust, and Abel's blood did not dry. 56. Until Adam's death the corpse remained thus intact, as though alive and asleep; but when Adam died, then Abel's corpse entered its grave.

57. But when Cain killed Abel, Cain was stricken with seven afflictions; he cried "Woe!" and "Alas!" bitterly. Now <Cain's> parents, Adam and Eve, saw Abel smeared with blood and Cain wounded with punishment. So Adam and Eve wept and groaned on account of their sons. 58. For two hundred years Adam did not know his wife; he said he feared lest another more wicked son might be born through their mourning. 59. But the Lord had compassion and sent good news concerning Seth's <birth, and Seth> comforted Adam and his wife Eve.

ՎԱՍՆ ԱՒԵՏԵԱՑՆ ՍԷԹԱՑ ՋՈՐ ՊԱՐՏ Է ՄԵԶ ՈՒՆԿՆ ԴՆԵԼ

1. Եւ քաղծրացաւ Տէրն ի վերայ Ադամայ, եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր առ Ադամ, եւ ասէ. Մերժեցիր ի կին քո, զի լինի քեզ որդի փոխանակ Աբելի:

2. Ասաց Ադամ. Չկարեմ մերժենալ կնոջս. զի երկու անգամ մերժեցայ ի կինս, այն մեծ պատուհաս էր ինձ, քան զդրախտէն ի դուրս ելանելն իմ. զի զԱբէլ արեամբ տեսանեմ սիրտս այրէ եւ կսկծայ. զայն թողի եւ զԿայենի պատուհասն կու[1] տեսանեմ, արտասուք[2] կու թափեմ. զի թէ այլ մերժենամ ի կինս, լինի ինձ կրկին նեղութիւն եւ տրտմութիւն:

վասն---դնել] om D | զոր---դնել] նահապետին A om B

1 ի 2°] առ B D | լիցի B | որդի] + եւ B

2 մերժաւորիլ B | ի 1°] om A D | կինս 1°] զի A +զի B | էր] եղեւ A եղեն B | քան] քանզի B | զդրախտէն---իմ] ելանելն իմ ի դրախտէն B D | ի դուրս] om A | արեամբ] + թացեալ B D | տեսանեմ 1°] + շաղախեալ A | եւ 1°---թողի] om D | զայն թողի] om A | զայն---թափեմ] զԿայեն ի դող եւ ի լաց եւ ի ցաւ տեսանեմ զաչերուսարտաս ունքն թափի B | զԿայենի---թափեմ] Կայեն ցաւազնեալ տեսանեմ յաչս արտասուք թափի D | կու 2°] om A | զի 3°] մի D | այլ] om B D | ի 3°] om A D | լինի---տրտմութիւն] այլ զաւակ լինի (ծնի D) նման (+ այս B) զաւակացս (+ ի B) նեղութիւն եւ սուք բերեն B D + ի վերայ իմ D | ինձ 2°---տրտմութիւն]

3. Ասէ հրեշտակն. Մի երկնչիր Ադամ. քանզի տալոց է քեզ Աստուած որդի, եւ կոչեսցես զանուն նորա Սէթ, որ թարգմանի մխիթարանք. նա եղիցի զաւակ օրհնեալ եւ գլուխ նահապետաց, եւ մխիթարիս ի նմանէ. զի որչափ տրտմեցար վասն չարութեան Կայենին, նոյնչափ մխիթարիս ի Սեթայ: 4. Եւ բազմանայ զաւակ քո եւ զաւակ Սէթայ, եւ նոքօք լցցին աշխարհս. եւ ապա մի խառնակեսցեն Սէթայ զաւակքն ընդ Կայենայ, կամ այլ յաւակացն քոց ընդ ազգին Կայենայ. երբ խառնին ընդ ազգս բարի որդիքն քո չարանան, եւ զամենեսեան միատեղ պատուհասին:

5. Զի յայնժամ, որ հրեշտակն աւետիս ետ վասն Սէթայ, դեռ այլ զաւակ չունէր[3] բայց ի Կայենայ ազգէն: 6. Երեք հարիւր զաւակ ինձ նեղութիւն եօթն եւ սզաքեր A

3 մի---Ադամ] om A B D | քեզ] + Տէր B | եւ 1°] զի D | կոչեսցի A D | մխիթարութիւն B մխիթարիչք D | օրհնեալ] + մխիթարիս ի նմանէ B | նահապետաց] + եղեցի B | մխիթարեսցես D | մխիթարիս ի նմանէ] om B | մխիթարեսցիս D | ի Սեթայ] Սեթաւ B

4 եւ 1°] om D | նոքօք] նոքա A B D | լցուսցեն A լցուց անձն D | եւ 4°] om B D | մի---չարանան] զաւակն քո եւ զաւակն Սէթայ մի խառնակեսցէ ի զաւակին Կայենի զի անիծ ոք զաւակեն յերփ խառնակին ամենայն աշխարհս չարուսանեն D | խառնեսցեն ի A | զաւակքն] զազգն B | ընդ Կայենայ] om B | Կայենայ 2°] +զի ընդ անիծօք է զազգն Կայենի B +(զի) Y | երբ] եթէ A | խառնակին B | ազգս] + նորա B | բարի--- եւ 5°] om B | քո] + ամենեքեան A | ամենեքեան B | ի միասին A B

5 զի] ի A | յայնժամ որ] յորժամ D | ետ] + Ադամայ B | այլ] Ադամայ ոչ մին B | այլ---6 ծնաւ] Ադամ

իննսուն կանայք հային քսանեւչորս այր որ[4] Սէթ ծնաւ։
7. Երեսուն տարի էր ամուսնացեալ, երբ սպանեց հայէն զԱբէլ. եւ Աբէլ այն տարին կամէր ամուսնանալ, բայց ոչ եղեւ, կոյս նահատակեցաւ։ 8. Իբրեւ ծնաւ Սէթ եւ այլ եղբայրքն նորա, մխիթարէին զնմանէ ծնօղքն <որպէս> հրեշտակն աւետեաց։ 9. Եւ բազմացան ազգն Սէթայ եւ այլ եղբարքն. բայց հալածէին զազգն հայենի եւ ոչ խառնակէին ընդ ազգին հայենի, այլ սրբութեամբ հային։

10. Իսկ Սեթայ որդին բարի պտուղն Ենովք, եհարց ի հօրէն թէ պապն մեր Ադամ ընդէր տրտում <է> ։

11. Ասէ Սէթ. Վասն ճաշակելոյ պտղոյն, որ ելաւ ի

զաւակ մի ոչ ունէր կանայք կայի քսան եւ չորք այր զի հաէն D | ի] om A

6 կային] + (եւ) Y | այր] + (երք) Y + զի հայէն երկու հարիւր եւ երեսուն տարեկան էր որ ամուսնացեալ էր A B

7 inc] + երկու հարիւր D | էր] + որ D | ամուսնացեալ] + էր հայէն A + որ Սէթ ծնաւ D | եւ---եղեն] կամէր այն տարին ամուսնանալ զԱբէլ A զի Աբել քսան տարեկան էր որ սպանեցաւ կուս էր այն տարին ամուսնանայր B քսան տարոյ էր Աբէլ կամէր այն տարուն ամուսնանայր D | եղեւ] + (այլ) Y | նահատակվեցաւ B

8 իբրեւ] երբ D | նորա] + եւ B | ի նմանէ B այն D | որպէս A B] զի D որ (ոց) Y | աւետեաց] ասաց B D

9 եղբարացն ի բաց B | ընդ ազգին] զազգն D | ազգին] ազգս B | ազգին հայենի] նոսա A

10 որդին] om A + եւ B | է A D] om B (է) Y

11 վասն 1°] + այն A B | ճաշակելոյ---է] տրտում է

դրախտէն, վասն այն տրտում է:

12. Իսկ Ենովք ասէ ցհայրն. Հօր պարտքն պիտի որդին < վճարել > :

13. Վասն այն ոչ ամուսնացաւ Ենովք: 14. Տնկեաց այգի մեծ լի ամենայն քաղցրութեամբ. վաթսունեւչորս տարի սպասաւորեաց այգւոյն: 15. Ամենայն մարդ ճաշակէր ի պտղոյն. իսկ ինքն Ենովք ոչ ճաշակեաց ամենեւին. այլ երկաթի սաղաւարտ ի գլուխն եդեալ, զի մի քարձր հայեսցի ի պտուղն ծառերոյն. քանզի վաթսունեւչորս տարի այգեգործ եղեւ եւ ոչ ճաշակեաց ի նմանէ: 16. Իսկ Աստուած հրամայեաց հրեշտակին իւրոյ զի զնա մարմնով վերացուցին[5] եւ եդին ի մէջ դրախտին, եւ է մինչեւ ցայսօր: 17. Իսկ այլ որդիքն Սեթայ եւ Ադամայ, իբրեւ տեսին զԵնովք որ կուսութեամբ եւ պահօք վերացաւ ի դրախտն. բազում հրաժարեցան

պտուղն ճաշակեաց ելաւ ի դրախտէն B | որ] om A

12 ցհայրն] om D | պարտքն պիտի] պարտ է D | վճարել A B D] վճարիլ Y + հօր պարտքն D

13 վասն այն] ապա A om B + քանիս D

14 inc] + այլ A D | այգի A B D] + այգի Y

15 ամենայն---պտղոյն] om D | ի պտղոյն] այգւոյն պտուղն A + այգոյն B | ինքն] om A B D | ամենեւին] om A B պտուղն D | եդեալ] + էր A B | քարձր հայեսցի] քարձրացուցէ տեսցէ D | քանզի---նմանէ] om D | եւ] om B

16 իսկ] + Տէր D | հրամայեաց] + վասն նմա A | հրեշտակին---զնա] հրեշտակացն առեալ D | զի] առեալ A B | մարմնով] + եւ A | եւ 1°] + տարեալ A B | եւ եդին] Ենովք առեալ տարան եդեալ D | եւ 2°] անդ D

եւ ելին ի լերինս <եւ> կուսութեամբ ծգնէին:

18. Բայց ազգն Կայենի յոյժ բազմացան աղջկունք նոցա. զի մի մարդոյ հետ հարիւր կանայս[6] շրջէին եւ կռուէին ի վերայ մի մարդոյն եւ խլէին ի միմեանց. զի մարդն սակաւ էր, կանայք եւ աղջկունք բազումք: 19. Ազգն Սեթայ եւ եղբայրք նորա ոչ խառնէին ընդ նոսա, եւ սրբութեամբ Կային ազգն Սեթայ:
20. Այնչափ բարի մարդ կայր. հինգհարիւրեւքսան կոյս եւ ծգնաւոր

Y[7]

կային ընդ նոսա, եւ ոչ զոյր հնար խառնակելոյ ընդ ազգն Կայենի:

21. Իսկ աղջկունքն ազգին

D

էին ի զաւակէն Սէթայ որ ի լերինն ծգնէին:

21. Իբրեւ տեսին ազգն Կայենայ որ ոչ խառնակէին ընդ

---

17 եւ 3°] om D | եւ 4° B D] (եւ) Y om A

18 (յ)ազգն Y | աղջկունք նոցա] om A | նոցա] om D | մարդոյ---եւ 1°] մարդն ի մէջ տասն կանանց շրջեցուցանէին եւ խառնակէին B մարդն հարիւր կանայս յետ իւրեանց շրջեցուցանէին խառնակէին եւ D | հետ] մէջ A | շրջեցուցանէին A | մի մարդոյն] միմեանց A B D | էր] + (իսկ) Y

19 inc] + եւ A B D | եղբարցն B D | նորա] om A B իւր D | խառնակէին B D

20 կայր] + որ B | եւ 1°] om A B D | ծգնաւորք B D

Y

կային---հնար] ի մարդ ազգէ հինգհարիւրեւքսան ելեալ ի լերինս ծգնէին ոչ A | խառնելով A

D

էին---որ] ի մարդ ազգէն էին որք B | լերինն] + որք B

21 իւրեանց] նոսա B

Y

նայենի, հնարիւք սահմանեցին զկարմրաղեղն եւ զսպիտակաղեղն զերեսս կարմրացուցանէին եւ սպիտակացուցանէին. <զյունքն> քաշեցին եւ զաչսն դեղեցին եւ ծարուր դրին, զծամն եւ <զվարսն> սահմանեցին, եւ այլ պէսպէս սազ[8] եւ երգարանս սահմանեցին. զոտսն եւ զձեռսն խինեցին եւ կարմրացուցին, եւ այլ զարդարանօք զմարմինս իւրեանց զարդարեցին եւ պճնեցին:

D

իւրեանց աղջկունք հնար իմացան եւ սահմանեցին զկարմրաղեղն եւ զսպիտակաղեղն դնէին երեսս իւրեանց. զինքեանս զուգէին դեղէին յունքն քաշէին եւ յաչս ծարուր դնէին եւ պէսպէս սազէրս սահմանեցին զոտս եւ զձեռս իւրեանց կարմիր դեղ դնէին:

22. Եւ այնպիսի պճնեալ զգեստիւք եւ ազգի ազգի եղանակօք

A

22. Թմբկօք եւ փողս եւ քնարիւք եւ այլ երգարանօք զոր սահմանեցին

22. Այլ զարդարեալ մարմնով եւ փողիւ եւ քնարիւ եւ այլ ազգի ազգի երգօվք

---

21 հնարս իմացան A | եւ 1°] om A | զսպիտակաղեղն] +(որովք) Y | զյունքն B D] զունքն Y | քաշեցին] om A | եւ 3°] om B | դեղեցին եւ] om A | եւ 6°] om A B | զվարսն A B] զվարս(ս)ն Y | այլ 1°] om A | եւ 11°] om B | զարդարանք մարմնոյ B | իւրեանց] om A B

A

22

22 Թմբկօք] դափով B | փողս] շուով B | երգովք B

Y	D
զնացին ի լեառն խնդալով եւ	ելին ի լերինն խնդալօվ եւ
պարելով, ծափ տալով եւ փողս	ծաղս տալօվ եւ պարունելօվ
հնչեցուցանելով, երկայն	հնչեցուցանելօվ եւ պէսպէս
ածելով[9] եւ պէսպէս ձայնիւ	ձայնիւ եղանակօք. չարն
	Սատանայ այսպէս չարութիւն սերմանեաց ի միտսն Կայենի զարմին եւ եղանակօվ
եղանակելով խառնեցան ընդ	խառնակեցան ընդ որդիս Սեթայ, որդւոցն Սեթայ, զամենեսեան	զամենեսեան խաբեցան եւ
խաբեցին:	խառնակեցան:
23. Հինգհարիւրեւքսան ճգնաւոր	23. Հինգհարիւրեւքսան ճգնաւորք
էին, մի նոյ միայն մնաց կոյս,	էին, մինն մնաց կոյս որում
եւ այլ ամենեքեան խառնեցան	անունն էր նոյ, եւ այլքն
ընդ նոսա եւ չարացան քան	խառնակեցան ընդ նոսա եւ
զնոսա, եւ եղեն պղծագործ քան	չարագործ եղեն իբրեւ զնոսա.
զշուն. այլ ոչ հայր զդուստրն	եղեն իբրեւ զշուն եւ ոչ
ճանաչէր եւ ոչ մայր զորդին	ճանաչէին զքորս զեղբարս եւ

զնացին] էին զնաց եա .... ին B | լերինս A B | տալով] հարելով A | երկայն] երգարանս B | երկայն ածելով] om A | խառնակեցան B | որդիսն B | խաբեցին] + եւ խառնակեցան A B + ընդ նոսա A

23 էին] +(եւ) Y | մի] om A | միայն] om B | եւ 1°---ամենեքեան] այլք ամենայն B | խառնակեցան A B | նոսա] միմեանս A | քան 2°] իբրեւ B | զդուստրն] + իւր B | ճանաչէր եւ] ջոկէր A B |

Y	D
<ջոկէր> , ոչ քոյր զեղբայր. եւ այնպիսի կենօք համապազ շնային, եւ ոչ յիշեցին զԱստուած:	զմարս. այսպէս չարութիւն գործէին, եւ ոչ յիշէին զԱստուած:

24. Իսկ վասն բազում մեղաց նոցա բարկացաւ Աստուած ի վերայ նոցա, եւ կամեցաւ ջրով խեղդել զնոսա: 25. Հրամայեաց Աստուած Նոյի տապան շինել, եւ ամուսնանալ: 26. Իբրեւ եկն հրեշտակ եւ ասաց Նոյի ամուսնանալ, եւ Նոյ ոչ կամէր ամուսնանալ, զի հինգհարիւր տարեկան էր:

27. Եւ ասաց հրեշտակն. ԶԱստուծոյ հրամանքն[10] պիտի կատարես. զի զաշխարհս ամենայն ջրով անցուցանելոց է, զամենեսեան խեղդելոց է, եւ լինիս նոր Ադամ. զի ի զաւակէ քումմէ լցցի աշխարհս:

28. Ասէ Նոյ. Ո՞րչափ է աւուրց կենաց իմ ապրիլ

ջոկէր] om A B | եւ այնպիսի---շնային] այնպէս չարութիւն գործէին A այնպէս չարութեամբ կային B

24 իսկ---եւ] եւ Աստուած D | վասն] om B | զնոցա D

25 հրամայեաց] + Տէր D | զՆոյ D | կազմել D

26 իբրեւ---ամուսնանալ 1°] om A D | ամուսնանալ 1°] + պիտիս B | հինգհարիւրեւքսան B D | ամաց A

27 եւ 1°] om B | զԱստուծոյ] om D | կատարել պիտիս A B D | աշխարհս D | ամենայն] om A B D | անցանելոց B պիտի անցանել D | է 1°] եւ D | ամենեքեան B D | զամենեսեան---է 2°] om A | է 2°] են ջրով B D | եւ 2°] + դու B (դու) Y | Ադամ] սկիզբն աշխարհի A | զի 2°] om B եւ D | աշխարհս] + ամենայն B

28 է---յաշխարհս] կեանք ունիմ աշխարհիս B D | աւուրց

յաշխարհս:

29. Ասէ հրեշտակ. Հինգհարիւր տարի <ես>, չորս հարիւր տարի այլ պիտի ապրիս:

30. Ասաց Նոյ. Չորս հարիւր տարին իբրեւ զերազ գիշերոյ անցանի. վասն միոյ անցաւոր երազոյ ընդէ՞ր ապականեմ զկուսութիւնս իմ:

31. Ասէ հրեշտակն. Հրամանք Տեառն է, ոչ կարես արգելուլ:

32. Ասէ Նոյ. Ոչ գիտեմ եթէ մաքուր կին մնացեալ է, զի առից զնա ի կնութիւն:

33. Ասէ հրեշտակն. Նուս մի կայ մաքուր < ի զարմէն Սեթայ որ պահեալ է զկուսութիւն իւր մաքուր >, անուն նորա Նոյեմզառա. զնա առ քեզ ի կնութիւն: 34. Եւ սկիզբն < արա >

կենաց] կեանք A

29 հինգհարիւրեւքսան տարէկան D | ամաց A | ես] ապրեր ես Y +դու A +դեռ B +դեռեւս D | ամ A | այլ---ապրիս] եւս ապրելոց ես A ել կեանք ունիս B ապրել պիտիս D

30 իբրեւ] om D | զերազ---անցանի] գիշերոյ (միոյ A) մի երազ (երազի B) անցանէ A B D | անցաւորի B om D | ապականեմ---իմ] խառնիմ աշխարհ A խառնակիմ ի աշխարհս B խառնակիմ աշխարհի D

31 ի Տեառնէ D | է] om B

32 եթէ] ոք B | կին---կնութիւն] կոյս զի խառնեցին ընդ նմա A կոյս զի առից զնա B կոյս աղջիկ որ զի առնում D

33 ի 1°---մաքուր 2° B D] om A Y | նորա] + է B | Նէեմզար B Նոեմզար D | ի 2°] om A ante քեզ D

34 եւ 1°] om B | արա A B D] արար (արա) Y |

տապան շինելոյ. Հարիւր յիսուն կանգուն երկայնութիւն եւ յիսուն լայնութիւն, < եւ> երեսուն կանգուն բարձրութիւն:

35. Եւ գնաց ի նմանէ հրեշտակն: 36. Եւ Նոյ ամուսնացաւ:

Y[12]	A
37. Եւ ի տապան շինել, կացին ձայնէր, ուրաքն ձայնէր, սղոցն ձայնէր, փայտն ձայնէր թէ Անաւասիկ ջրհեղեղ ելանէ եւ ապականէ զաշխարհս:	37. Ակիզբն արար շինել զտապանն. եւ յորժամ կացինն տայր փայտին ձայնէր փայտն թէ ջրհեղեղ կու գայ:

Y	B	D
38. Երբ լուաւ Նոյ զձայնն, յայնժամ	38 a. Երբ լուաւ Նոյ զձայնն կացնոյն եւ եկեալ պատմեաց	38a. Ամենայն մարդ տնազ արարին[13] զնոսա. իսկ Նոյ հաստատուն

զտապանն D | երկայնութիւն] + նորա A | եւ 2°] om B | յիսուն] + կանգուն B D | եւ 3° A] om B D (եւ) Y | կանգուն 2°] om A | բարձրութիւն] + երեք տուն շինեայ (արար D) ներքնատուն միջնատուն եւ վերնատուն B D

37 inc] + եւ B | եւ յորժամ] առաջի B D | կացինն] + որ B D | ետուր D ետ D | ձայնէր] ձայն եղեւ (ետ D) B D | փայտն] փայտէն B om D

38 երբ] իբրեւ A | յայնժամ ---եւ] կացին A |

Y

յարտասուս հարեալ եւ աղաչեաց զԱստուած, զի քսանեւեօթն օր համբերեսցէ նմա:

B

ամենեցունց թէ ջրհեղեղ կու գայ. ամենայն մարդ տնազ արարին զնա. իսկ նոյ հաստատուն քանէր ի վերայ տապանին:
b. Ամենեքեան գնային
եւ տեսանէին զձեւ տապանին, լսէին զձայն կացնոյն եւ ուրաքին ծակիչին եւ շաղափին սղոցին եւ խիզարին որ ասէին ջրհեղեղ կու գայ: c. Տնազէին եւ
ասէին տեսէք զանզիտութիւնն նոյեայ որ ասէ թէ ջրհեղեղ կու գայ: d. Գնացեալ նոյ ի բարձր բլրի վերայ շինէր զտապանն թէ ասա ջուրն հասանէ եւ այլ բարձրանայ. ութսուն տարումն շինեաց

D

քանէր ի վերայ տապանին:
b. Իսկ ամենեքեան
գնային եւ տեսանէին զձեւ տապանին, լսէին զձայնն կացինին եւ ուրաքին եւ սղոցին եւ շաղափին ձայնն որ
ասէին ջրհեղեղ կու գայ:
c. Ցիմարութիւն աշխարհի
կուրացուցանէր զաչս նոցա եւ խփանէր[14]
ականջս նոցա ոչ ի
սիրտս առնէին ոչ դառնէին ի չարութենէն եւ օր ըստ օրէ չարանային: d. Նոյ տապանն ի վերայ բարձր բլրի շինէր եւ ասա ջուր հասանի հարիւր կանգուն բարձրանայ եւ հարիւր տարումն շինեաց.
դարձեալ նոյայ ծնաւ

աղաչեաց---նմա] քսանեւեօթն օր համբերութիւն խնդեաց Աստուծոյ
A |

ԱՒԵՏԻՔ

B

զտապանն։ e. Եկն հրեշտակն առ Նոյ եւ ասէ. երեք աղջիկ առ ի Սեթայ զարմէն վասն որդւոց քոց, եւ անուանքն են այսոքիկ, Զանազան, Զարմանազան, Երեքնազան։ f. Եւ այս երեք աղջկունքս դեռ փոքրեն կուս եւ զաւակ Սեթայ են. եւ մի ամուսնացին որդիք քո մինչեւ ելանիցէք ի տապանէն. եւ դու մուտ ի տապանդ որ ջրհեղեղ կու գայ. զի յորժամ ամուսնացաւ Նոյ եւ սկսաւ տապանն շինել երեք որդիք եղեւ նմայ. եւ անուանքն են այսոքիկ Սեմ, Քամ, եւ Աբէթ։ g. Իսկ Նոյ աղաչեաց զԱստուած տասն տարի համբերել եւ Աստուած քաշխեաց Նոյի մինչեւ ի տասն տարի թերեւս դարձցին։ h. Եւ սկսաւ Նոյ քարոզել թէ կամէր Աստուած կորուսանել զձեզ եւ ես աղաչեցի վասն ձեր դարձէք ի մեղաց եւ ապրեսջիք։

i. Ամենեքեան տնազէին զնա եւ ասէին երբ ջուր գայ Նոյ որ արտն կու վարի կամ որ տեղ այգի կու տնկէ։ j. Իբրեւ վճարեցաւ

D

երեք որդի այսինքն Սեմ, Քամ, Աբէթ։ e. Եւ դարձեալ հրեշտակն երեւեցաւ Նոյի եւ ասէ երեք աղջիկ առ Սեթայ զարմէն վասն որդւոց...եւ անուանս ասաց Զանէզան, Զարմանէզան, Հէրէքնազան։ f. Եւ այս երեք աղջիկս փոքրէին եւ պզտիկ եւ զարմէն Սէթայ. առ զնոսա վասն որդւոցդ եւ մի ամուսնացին որդիք քո մինչեւ ելանէք ի տապանէն։ g. Իսկ աղաչէր զԱստուածն կենդանին ստեղծօղ ամենայնին տասն տարի համբերել. եւ Աստուած լսէր աղաչանացն Նոյին. տասն տարի թերեւս դառնային ի չարութենէն։ h. Եւ սկսեաց քարոզել Նոյ եթէ Աստուած կամեցաւ կորուսանել զձեզ եւ ես աղաչեցի վասն <ձեր> դարձէք ի մեղացէ եւ դադարեցէք ի չարէ եւ ապրեսջիք ի զալոյ ջրհեղեղէն։

i. Եւ ամենեքեան տնազ առնէին քանին եւ քարոզին Նոյեայ. յեփ ջուրն յաշխարհս կուլլվի

B

տասն տարի երեւեցաւ հրեշտակն առ Նոյ եւ ասէ մտիր ի տապանն: k. Ասէ Նոյ մինչեւ եւթն օր համբերութիւն խնդրեմ ի Տեառնէ:

D

եւ ապա Նոյ յորտեղ կու վարէ կամ որպէս կապրի: j. Եւ իբրեւ վճարեցաւ տասն տարին երեւեցաւ հրեշտակն եւ ասաց Նոյի մտանել տապանն: k. Նոյ մինչեւ եւթն օր համբերութիւն խնդրեաց Աստուծէ:

39. Եւ իբրեւ ել Նոյ ի վերնատունն, երկու տախտակն եռ ի վերայ մէկ մէկու. իսկ տախտակն ձայնէր թէ ջրհեղեղ կու գայ:
40. Ամենայն կենդանիքն երկու երկու եկին եւ մտաւ ի տապանն, եւ սուրբ անասունքն եօթն եօթն: 41. Իսկ անբան անասունքն իմացան զջրհեղեղն, եւ մարդիք ոչ իմացան:

42. Եւ եմուտ Նոյ ի տապանն, ինքն եւ որդիք իւր. փակեաց զդուռն եւ <զհերձսն> [16] կպրեաց եւ ծեփեաց.

---

39 եւ] om B D | Նոյ] om A D | ի 1°] om B | վերնատունն] + եւ B | եղ A | վերայ] om D | մէկ մէկու] միմեանց B | իսկ] եւ B | ձայն եռ B D

40 երկու 1°---եւ 1°] om D | երկու 2°] + եւ սրբոցն եօթն եօթն A | մտին B մտանեն D | եւ 2°---եօթն 2°] om A

41 իսկ---իմացան 2°] om A | անբան] om B D | անասունքն] + ձայն D | զջրհեղեղն] om D ջրհեղեղի գալն B | մարդքն B

42 եւ 1°] իբրեւ B D | ինքն] + եւ կինն D | իւր] + եւ A B + եւ երեք աղջկունքն D | փակեաց---զհերձսն] om D | զդուռն] + տապանին B | կպրեցին D | ծեփեաց] + եւ A

բացան սահանք երկնից, եւ ջուրն ելանէր ի ներքուստ եւ < ի > վերուստ ի վայր թափէր: 43. Բազումք կամեցան փախչել եւ մտանել ի տապանն, ի ճանապարհին խեղդուեցան: 44. Մինչեւ քառասուն օր բարձրացաւ ջուրն եւ կոխեաց զծայրս լերանց. մինչեւ ի մի տարին տապանակն ի վերայ ջրոյն կեցաւ, եւ եկն դադարեաց ի վերայ լեռան Մասիսայ:

45. Եւ յետ քառասուն աւուր նոյ բացեալ զպատուհան տապանակին, եւ արձակեաց ագռաւ մի, զի գնացեալ նշան բերցէ. եւ նա գնացեալ ի ճաշակումն զէշերուն, այլ ոչ դարձաւ: 46. Իսկ արձակեաց զաղաւնին, եւ գնացեալ աղաւնին, շրջեալ ի գլուխս

+ յայնժամ D | բացաւ D | յերկնից + եւ աղբեւրք անդնդոց A | ներքուստ---թափէր] վեր D | եւ 6°] + իջանէր A | ի 3° A B] եւ Y | ի 4°] om B | ի վայր թափէր] om A

43 բազումք---խեղդուեցան] եւ բազումք փախեան մտանել ի տապանն եւ ոչ կարացին A | եւ] om D | տապանն] + (այլ) Y | խեղդեցան B

44 մինչեւ 1°] om A + ի B | եւ կոխեաց] om D | զծայրս] om A զամենայն բլուրս B D | զլերինս A + եւ A (եւ) Y | մինչեւ 2°---կեցաւ] տապանն շրջէր ի վերայ ջրոյն մինչեւ մի տարին A | տարին] + շրջեցաւ B D | կեցաւ] om B D | վերայ 2°] om D

45 եբաց A բացաւ D | զպատուհան] om D | տապանակին] մի A զտապանն D om B | եւ 2°] om D | մի] om A | գնացեալ] om A B D | եւ 3°] om D | ի---այլ] հանդիպեցաւ գիշու եւ D | զէշերուն] + դիպեցաւ B

46 իսկ] + (ապա) Y | եւ 1°---աղաւնին] om A | գնացեալ աղաւնին] գնաց D | շրջեցաւ B D |

լերանց եւ գտեալ երեք ծաղիկ եւ բերեալ նշան <մատոյց> նոյի: 47. Իսկ Նոյ արձակեաց զամենայն թռչունս:

48. Եւ իբրեւ եղեւ երեք ամիս, բացեալ զտապանն, ետես զի լերինք եւ բլուրք ցամաքեալ էին. բայց դաշտք ջրով ծածկեալ էին: 49. Արձակեաց զամենայն կենդանիսն: 50. Իսկ անասնոց սրբոց եւ թռչնոց,[17] որ եօթն եօթն մտեալ էին, եօթնէն մին մատոյց բաժին Աստուծոյ. եւ խնդրեաց յԱստուծոյ, զի այլ մի ջրով անցուցանել զաշխարհս. ընդունելի եղեն[18] պատարագ նորա, եւ կատարեաց Տէր զխնդիրքն նորա:

51. Եւ խնդրեաց ի Տեառնէ եւ ասաց. Տուր

գտեալ] ոչ գտաւ հանգիստ ոտաց եւ ապա յետ քառասուն աւուր մի արձակեաց զաղաւնին եւ եբեր D | եւ բերեալ] om D | < մատոյց> B D] մատոյ Y om A

48 եւ 1°] om A B D | եղեւ] om A | բացեալ] դարձաւ բացաւ D | զտապանն] + եւ A B | ետես---էին 1°] զի ետես զլերինս եւ զբլուրս ցամաք D | զի] om B | ցամաքեալ] բացեալ A | բայց] եւ A | դաշտք] + դեռեւս A դեռ B | ջրով] աջով B om D | էին 2°] կային A B կար եւ յետ եւթն աւուր D

50 իսկ---սրբոց] om D | թռչունքն D | որ] + երկու երկու եւ D | եօթն 2°] + որ B | էին] + ի տապանն A D | մատոյց] om D | եւ 2°] + նոյ դարձեալ D | Աստուծոյ + նոյ A | զի] om A B որ D | մի] ոչ A B D | զաշխարհս] + ձայն եղեւ յերկնից որ ասէ A եղեւ ձայնն նոյին D | նորա 1°] քո A | կատարեաց---նորա 2°] կատարեցին խնդրուածք քո A | կատարեաց Տէր] կատարեցան B | Տէր] om D | խնդիրս D

51 եւ 1°] om B | խնդրեաց] + նոյ B | ի---ասաց]

ինձ նշան հաշտութեան։

52. Եւ ասաց Տէրն. Հայեաց ի յարեւելից կողման։

53. Եւ ետես Նոյ նշան աղեղան կարմիր, <կանաչ> իջեալ էին։[19] 54. Եւ ասաց Աստուած Նոյի. Այս եղիցի նշան հաշտութեան իմոյ ընդ որդիս քո. երբ տեսանեն զաղեղն զիտասցեն[20] քաղցրացեալ է Տէր ի վերայ նոցա. զի այս եղիցի ուխտ իմ ընդ քեզ եւ ընդ <որդւոց> քո, այլ ոչ ածից ջրհեղեղ ի վերայ աշխարհիս. Թէ չար զործեն այլ ուրիշ պատուհասիւ խրատեցին զնոսա։

55. Իսկ Նոյ առեալ զօրհնութիւն Աստուծոյ, էջ ի լեռնէն եւ բնակեցաւ Ակոռի։

Աստուծոյ Տեառնէ Տէր D | ասաց] +Տէր B | ինձ] մեզ B D | հաշտութեան] + զի զիտասցեն որդիքն իմ զնշան հաշտութեան (քո B) B D

52 յարեւելս A B | կողմն D կոյս B om A

53 ետես Նոյ] հայեցաւ Նոյ եւ ետես B | նշան---կանաչ] ի յարեւելս ծիրանի կարմիր կանանչ նշան աղեղան B | կարմիր---vs. 34 Նոյի] om D | կանաչ A] կանանչ B Y | էր A

54 Նոյի] om A B | իմոյ] +եւ D | որդւոյ D | երբ---նոցա] om D | երբ տեսանեն] եւ տեսցեն B | է Տէր] եմ B | ուխտ] աւետիս D | քեզ...որդւոց քո] իմ...քեզ D | եւ 2°---աշխարհիս] այլ ոչ սատակեսցեն որդիքն քո ջրհեղեղաւ A | որդւոց B] որդիքն Y | այլ 1°---աշխարհիս] այլ թէ ոչ սատակեսցեն որդիքն քո ջրհեղեղաւ B | ածից---աշխարհիս] սատակեսցեն որդիքն քո ջրհեղեղաւ եւ D | թէ---ուրիշ] այլ թէ զործեսցեն զչարիս այլ A | չար զործեն] զործեսցեն զչարիս B D | պատուհասիւ խրատեցից] չարիւ պատուհասեմ D

55 Աստուծոյ] om A | արկուռի A յակուլիս D

56. Երբ բազմացան զաւակ նորա ի՚յին <յ> ի՚յեւան եւ անդ պարեցան երեք հարիւր տարի: 57. Եւ երկու որդիքն Անդուն եւ Մանեառուն եւ որդիքն աճեցան եւ բազմացան եւ լցին զնախ ի՚յեւան, եւ նովաւ լցին զաշխարհս: 58. Եւ անուն տեղւոյն կոչեցաւ Նախիջեւան. եւ այն է զերեզման Նոյի: 59. Այսքան առ այս:

---

56 երբ] յորժամ A | նորա] նոցա D | ի B D] om A Y | նախջաւան B D | անդ] + բնակեաց եւ անդ B | պարեցաւ B + այլ եւս B D

57 որդիքն 1°---որդիքն 2°] որդիս ծնաւ նոյ եւ մանեառուն որդիք նորա B | Անդուն---որդիքն 2°] ծնաւանդ D | լցին 2°] +զամենայն B D

58 եւ 1°] զի B D | անուն] + այն B | կոչի D է B | ի՚յեւան D | այն] անդ D | Նոյի] + եւ երեք իցնուոց եւ որդւոց նորին A

59 այսքան առ այս] om B Ադամայ ի դրախտէն ելանելուն մինչեւ ի Նոյի ջրհեղեղն ամս ունէր երկու հազար երկերիւր յիսունեւերկու D

Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth, to Which We Ought to Give Ear

1. Now the Lord relented toward Adam, and sent his angel to Adam and said, "Know your wife so that you may have a son in place of Abel." 2. Adam said, "I cannot know my wife, for I knew my wife twice, <and> that was a punishment greater to me than my expulsion from the garden. Because I see Abel bloody, my heart burns and grieves. I left him, and whenever[1] I see Cain's punishment, I shed tears.[2] For if I know my wife again, I will have double grief and sorrow."

---

[1] կու + present to express continuing action in the present. See Karst, Grammatik, pp. 299-301.

[2] For acc. արտասուս .

3. The angel said, "Do not fear, Adam, because God will give you a son, and you shall call his name Seth, which is translated 'consolations.' He will be a blessed seed and the head of patriarchs, and you will be consoled by him. Because in the same measure that you were grieved on account of Cain's wickedness, you will be consoled by Seth. 4. And your seed and Seth's seed will multiply, and the lands will be filled with them. But let not Seth's seed mix with Cain's, nor any other of your seed with Cain's generation. Whenever they are united with that generation, your good children will become wicked, and all will be punished together."

5. For at the time when the angel gave good tidings concerning Seth, he (Adam)[3] as yet had no other offspring apart from Cain's generation. 6. There were three hundred and ninety women <and> twenty-four men <when>[4] Seth was born. 7. Cain was married thirty years when he killed Abel. And Abel wanted to marry that year, but he did not, <rather> he became a virgin martyr. 8. When Seth and his other brothers were born, his parents were consoled concerning him <as> the angel had announced. 9. Now the generation of Seth and the other brothers multiplied, but they drove away the generation of Cain and did not mix with Cain's people, but lived in purity.

---

[3] Adam must be supplied as the subject of չունէր .

10. And Seth's son Enoch, the good fruit, asked his father, "Why <is> Adam, our grandfather, sad?"

11. Seth said, "He is sad because he tasted of the fruit, for which he went out of the garden."

---

[4] Perhaps ժամ has been elided here.

12. Then Enoch said to his father, "The son must <pay> the debts of the father."

13. Because of this Enoch did not marry. 14. He planted a large orchard filled with every good thing. For sixty-four years he tended the orchard. 15. Every man tasted of the fruit, but Enoch himself did not taste at all. Rather he put an iron helmet on his head so that he would not look up at the fruit of the trees. Although he was an orchard worker for sixty-four years, he did not taste of it.
16. Then God commanded his angel so that he[5] took him up bodily and placed him in the midst of Paradise, and he is there until today. 17. And when the other sons of Seth and Adam saw Enoch, who ascended into Paradise through virginity and fasting, many practiced abstinence, retired to the mountains, <and> subdued their passions through virginity.

---

[5]Note the plural verb with singular subject.

18. But as for Cain's generation, its maidens multiplied exceedingly, so that a hundred women[6] walked after one man, and they quarreled over the one man and snatched him from one another. For the men were few in number, <but> the women and maidens were many. 19. Seth's generation and his brothers did not mix with them, rather Seth's generation lived in purity. 20. This many men were good; there were five hundred and twenty virgins and anchorites

Y[7]	D
among them, and there was no way of mixing with Cain's generation.	among Seth's seed who practiced abstinence in the mountains.
21. But the maidens of Cain's	21. When Cain's generation saw that they did not mix with [6]For nom. կանայք .

[7]The wording in the MSS diverges widely in vss. 20b-23. Y and D are most distinct and are presented in parallel columns, with A and B containing mixed texts showing features of both Y and D. B is collated with D through իմացան եւ (vs. 21), after which it more closely follows Y. A is collated with Y throughout except for the opening words of vs. 22, where A and B are distinct from both Y and D and are presented separately.

Y

generation invented carmine and flake white, <and> they reddened and whitened their faces. They plucked their eyebrows and painted their eyes and put on antimony; they fixed up their hair and curls, and they invented various other stringed instruments[8] and musical instruments. They put henna on their feet and hands and made them red, and they adorned and beautified their bodies with other embellishments.

D

them, they acted deceitfully and made carmine and flake white <and> put it on their faces. They joined themselves together <and> dyed <and> plucked <their> eyebrows and put antimony on <their> eyes and invented various stringed instruments. They put carmine on their feet and hands.

22. And with such beautiful garments and with various musical tunes

A

22. With drums and trumpets and harps and other musical instruments which they made

22. Moreover, with adorned bodies and with trumpets and harps and with various other songs

---

[8] սազ, an Armenian musical instrument with strings.

Y	D
they went to the mountains making merry; and dancing together, clapping their hands and sounding their trumpets, marching in a long procession[9] and singing various songs	they went out to the mountain making merry and clapping their hands and dancing <and> sounding the trumpet and with various musical tunes. The evil Satan thus spread evil in the mind of Cain's family, and with musical tunes they harmoniously, they intermingled with the sons of Seth and seduced them all.	intermingled with the sons of Seth and seduced them all and and had intercourse <with them>.
23. There were five hundred and twenty anchorites, <but> only one, Noah, remained a virgin; all the others intermingled with them (Cain's generation) and became more wicked than they, and acted more shamefully than a dog. Neither the father discerned his daughter nor did the mother distinguish	23. There were five hundred and twenty anchorites,<and> the one, whose name was Noah, remained a virgin. But the others intermingled with them (Cain's generation) and became evildoers like them. They became like a dog, and they did not discern <their> sisters, brothers, or [9] երկայն ածելով, a difficult phrase. Preuschen suggests "so kamen sie im Zug," which is followed here.

Y	D
her son, nor sister her brother. And through such a life they committed adultery continuously, and they did not remember God.	mothers. Thus they did evil, and they did not remember God.

24. Now God became angry at them because of their many sins, and he wished to drown them. 25. God commanded Noah to build an ark and to marry. 26. When an angel came and told Noah to marry, Noah did not want to marry, for he was five hundred years old.

27. And the angel said, "You must fulfill God's commands,[10] for he is about to destroy all this world with water; he will drown everything, and you will become a new Adam, for this world will be filled by your seed."

28. Noah said, "How long shall I live

---

[10]For acc. հրամանսն .

in this world?"

29. The angel said, "You are five hundred years old; you must live another four hundred years."

30. Noah said, "Four hundred[11] years pass like a dream in the night. Why should I corrupt my virginity on account of one transitory dream?"

31. The angel said, "They are the Lord's commands; you cannot hinder them."

32. Noah said, "I do not know if there remains a chaste woman whom I might marry."

33. The angel said, "There is one pure virgin <from the line of Seth who has kept her virginity unstained,> whose name is Noemzara; marry her." 34. And he began to build an ark. Its length was one hundred and fifty cubits and its width fifty, and its height was thirty cubits.

[11] For nom. չորք .

35. And the angel went away from him. 36. And Noah married.

Y[12]	A
37. And while he was building the ark, the axe cried out, the hatchet cried out, the saw cried out,<and> the wood cried out, "Behold, a flood is coming and it will destroy this world!"	37. He began to build the ark. And when the axe struck the wood, the wood cried out, "A flood is coming!"

Y	B	D
38. When Noah heard that cry,	38a. When Noah heard the cry of the axe, he went <and> related	38a. Every man scorned them, but Noah was [12]Vss. 37-38 are quite distinct in the MSS. Most significant is the inclusion in B and D of an extended passage about Noah's preparations for the flood entirely missing in Y and A. While B and D have the same general content, they are at some points very different and are therefore presented in parallel columns. Although A does not have the extended Noah passage, it is nevertheless a mixed text, reflecting a less corrupt text of B and D in vs. 37, but agreeing more closely with Y in vs. 38.

[13]MS reads արին .

Y	B	D
he melted in tears and begged God to wait twenty-seven days for him.	to everyone that a flood was coming. Every man scorned him. But Noah was determined about the ark. b. Everyone would go and see the design of the ark; they would hear the cry of the axe and the hatchet, the drill and the auger, the saw and the hand-saw which said, "A flood is coming!" c. They would scorn and say, "Look at the ignorance of Noah, who says a flood is coming!" d. Noah went forth,<and> upon a high hill he was building the ark,<and he said>, "The water will come up to here and will rise higher." He built the ark for eighty	determined about the ark. b. Now everyone would go and see the design of the ark; they would hear the cry of the axe and the hatchet and the saw and the cry of the auger which said, "A flood is coming!" c. The folly of the world would blind their eyes and deafen their ears; they would not take it to heart <and> they would not turn away from evil, but day by day they acted wickedly. d. Noah was building the ark on a high hill, and the water would come up to here <and> reach a height of one hundred cubits. And he built it for one hundred years. Moreover, three sons [14] MS reads խփնոյր.

B

years. e. The angel came to Noah and said, "Take three women from Seth's line for your sons, and these are their names: Zanazan, Zarmanazan, <and> Yereknazan. f. And these three women are still young, virgins, and of Seth's seed. But your sons may not marry <them> until you go out of the ark. But you enter that ark, because a flood is coming!" For when Noah married and began building the ark, he had three sons. And these are their names: Shem, Ham, and Japhet. g. But Noah asked God to wait ten years, and God granted Noah up to ten years; perhaps they might repent. h. And Noah began to proclaim, "God wants to destroy you, but I made supplication on your behalf; turn away from sin and live!" i. Everyone derided him and were born to Noah, namely Shem, Ham,<and> Japhet. e. And again the angel appeared to Noah and said, "Take three women from Seth's line for <your> sons," and he said their names: "Zanezan, Zarmanezan,<and> Hereknazan. f. And these three women are young and small and from Seth's line. Take them for your sons, but your sons may not marry <them> until you go out of the ark." g. Now Noah asked the living God, creator of all, to wait ten years. And God heard Noah's supplications, perhaps in ten years they might turn away from evil. h. And Noah began to proclaim, "God wanted to destroy you, but I made supplication on <your>[15] behalf; turn away from sin and desist from evil and be saved from the coming flood!" i. And everyone [15] ձեր is not found in the MS.

D

---

B	D
said, "When is the water coming, Noah?" For he made use of the very field where he had planted a vineyard. j. When ten years had passed, the angel appeared to Noah and said, "Enter the ark." k. Noah said, "I need seven more days delay from the Lord."	derided Noah's word and message. When the water was swallowed into the earth, then Noah cultivated in the same place where he was saved. j. And when ten years had passed, the angel appeared and told Noah to enter the ark. k. Noah requested seven more days delay from the Lord.

39. And when Noah went up to the upper story, he put two planks, one upon the other. Then the one plank cried out, "A flood is coming!" 40. All the beasts came two by two and entered the ark, and the clean animals came seven by seven. 41. Now the dumb animals perceived the flood, but men did not perceive it.

42. And Noah entered the ark, himself and his sons; he locked the door and tarred and plastered its crevices.[16]

[16] Corrected from զհերթան .

The cataracts of heaven were opened, and the water came forth from below and poured down from above. 43. Many wanted to escape and to enter the ark, <but> they were drowned on the way. 44. For forty days the water rose and covered the peaks of the mountains. For one year the ark remained upon the water, then it came and rested upon Mt. Masis.

45. And after forty days, Noah opened the window of the ark, and he sent forth a raven so that it might go out and bring back a sign. And it went out to eat the corpses, but did not return. 46. Then he sent forth the dove, and the dove went out, passed over the peaks of the mountains, found three flowers, and brought the sign <and> presented it to Noah. 47. Then Noah sent forth all the birds.

48. And when three months had passed, he opened the ark and saw that the mountains and hills were dry, but the fields were covered with water. 49. He sent out all the beasts. 50. But <from>[17] the clean animals and birds which had entered seven by seven, he offered one out of <each> seven to God as <his> portion. And he implored God not to destroy this world by water again. His offering was[18] acceptable, and the Lord granted his request.

51. And he entreated the Lord and said, "Give [17] ի is needed before անասնոց and թռչնոց as suggested by Yov. The omission of ի is frequent in the MSS.

[18] Note the plural verb with singular subject; final ք on պատարագ may have been elided.

me a sign of reconciliation."

52. And the Lord said, "Look toward the east."

53. And Noah saw the sign of a bow; red <and> green had come down.[19] 54. And God said to Noah, "This shall be a sign of my reconciliation with your sons. When they see the bow they will know <that>[20] God has relented toward them, for this shall be my covenant with you and with your sons; I will not bring another flood upon this earth. If they do evil, I will chastize them with another punishment."

55. And Noah, after receiving God's blessing, went down from the mountain and dwelt <in> Agori.

---

[19]The syntax of this sentence is difficult; I have supplied "and" for clarity. Alternatively, one might supply զի after նոյ and translate, "And Noah saw that the sign of a red <and> green bow had come down."

[20]զի is needed here as noted by Yov.

56. When his seed multiplied, they went down to Iǰewan and lived there for three hundred years. 57. The two sons, Antoon and Manedoon, and <their>[21] sons grew and multiplied, and they filled the first dwelling [nax iǰewan], and in such a way they filled the earth. 58. And the name of the place was called Naxiǰewan, and that is Noah's tomb. 59. Such it is until today.

---

[21] Yov. adds միւս, "the other sons."

ԲԱՆՔ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ ԱՌ ՍԷԹ

1. Ասէ Ադամ ցՍէթ. Որդեակ, ոչ է այս բնակութիւնս մեր. զի այս բնակութիւն զազանաց եւ անասնոց էր. եւ մեր բնակութիւնն յԵդեմ ընդ արեւելս ի դրախտն էր: 2. Զի եստեղծ զմեզ Աստուած եւ եդ ի դրախտին, եւ պատուիրեաց մեզ յորոյ ուտել ի պտղոյն եւ յորոյ չուտել. (իսկ) մեք ոչ պահեցաք զպատուիրանն (եւ) մերկացաք (յ) աստուածային փառացն (եւ) զրկեցաք ի դրախտէն:

3. Եւ Սէթ որդին մխիթարութեան զբանն զայս լուեալ ի հօրէն եւ ի միտ առ, եւ երթեալ զքառասուն տիւ եւ զքառասուն զիշեր հաց ոչ եկեր եւ ջուր ոչ էարբ: 4. Եւ ասէ առ Տէր յաղօթելն իւրում. Ամենակալ, ամենակարող Տէր, կատարեա ի բարի զխնդրուածս իմ: 5. Եւ առ ժամայն տեսանէր զհրեշտակն, զի զայր եւ ունէր ճիւղ մի ուրախութեան ի ձեռին իւրում. եւ ետ ի Սէթ, եւ ասէ. Այդ է մխիթարութիւն հօր քում: 6. Եւ Սէթ զոհանայր զտվողէն կենդանութեան զՔրիստոսէ, որ արար եւ կատարեաց զխնդրուածս նորա ի բարի:

7. Եւ առեալ զճեղն զայն Սէթ, տարաւ առ հայրն իւր Ադամ, եւ ասէ. Հայր, այս ի բնակութենէն քումմէ (է):

8. Եւ առեալ Ադամ զճիւղն զայն եդ ի վերայ աչաց եւ բացան աչք նորա, եւ հայեցեալ տեսանէ զճիւղն, զի (յ)այն ծառոյն էր յորմէ զմահ ճաշակեաց: 9. Եւ ասէ ցորդին իւր. Որդեակ իմ Սէթ. այս ի այն ծառոյն է յորմէ հրամայեաց մեզ Տէրն չուտել մեզ:

10. Եւ ասէ Սէթ ցհայրն. Հայր, գիտեա զի որպէս մահարար է, նոյնպէս կենդանատու եւ լուսաւորիչ եղեւ:

11. Եւ օրհնեաց Ադամ զԱստուած եւ զՍէթ զորդին իւր, եւ փոխեցաւ ըստ հրամանի Տեառն ի հող յորմէ ստեղծաւ:

12. Եւ յետ ժամանակաց անցելոց, Սէթ զբանն ընդ Ենովս խօսեցաւ եւ ասէ. Այսպէս ասէր հայրն իմ Ադամ, թէ ոչ էր այս բնակութիւնս մեր, այլ այս բնակութիւնս զազանաց էր եւ այլ ստեղծուածոցն, եւ մեր բնակութիւնն յԵդեմ ընդ արեւելս էր:
13. Եւ յորժամ ստեղծ Աստուած զհայրն մեր եւ եդ զնա ի դրախտին, եւ պատուէր ետ նմա յորոյ ուտել ի պտղոյն եւ յորոյ չուտել. իսկ նորա ոչ պահեալ զպատուիրանն, մերկացեալ յաստուածային լուսոյն եւ արտաքս անկեալ ի դրախտէն եւ հաւասար եղեալ անասնոց անբանից:

14. Եւ Ենովք զբանս զայս ի միտ էառ, եւ զքառասուն տիւ եւ զքառասուն գիշեր ամենեւին ոչ ճաշակեաց: 15. Եւ յետ այնորիկ անկեաց դրախտ վայելուչ, եւ զամենայն պտղաբեր տնկեաց ի նմա: 16. Եւ կացեալ ի դրախտին այնմիկ հինգհարիւր եւ քառասունեւերկու ամ, եւ (յ)ետ այնորիկ մարմնով յերկինս համբարձաւ, եւ աստուածային փառացն եւ լուսոյն արժանաւորեցաւ:

The Words of Adam to Seth[1]

1. Adam said to Seth, "Son, this is not our home, for this was the home of wild beasts and animals. Rather our home was in Eden towards the east, in the garden. 2. For God created us and put us in the garden, and he commanded us from which fruit to eat and from which not to eat. (But)[2] we did not keep the commandment, (and) deprived ourselves of the garden."

3. And Seth, the son of consolation, heard this discourse from his father and considered it. And he went away, and for forty days and forty nights he neither ate bread nor drank water. 4. And he said to the Lord in his prayer, "Almighty, omnipotent Lord, fulfill my request for good." 5. And at that time he saw the angel that came and held a branch of joy in his hand. And he gave it to Seth and said, "This is your father's consolation." 6. And Seth gave thanks concerning Christ the giver of life, who granted and fulfilled his request for good.

7. And Seth took that branch, brought it to his father Adam, and said, "Father, this (is) from your home."

---

[1]The title was supplied by Yov. since no title is given in the MS.

[2]The text exists in only one MS which was made available to the writer only through the Yov. edition. The words placed in parenthesis in the Yov. edition appear to be additions which the editor deemed necessary. Since that is not stated by the editor, these words are retained in parenthesis in both the text and translation.

THE WORDS OF ADAM TO SETH

8. And Adam took that branch, put it upon his eyes, and his eyes were opened. And he looked and saw that the branch was (from) that tree from which he had tasted death. 9. And he said to his son, "Seth, my son, this is of the tree from which the Lord commanded us not to eat.[3]

10. And Seth said to his father, "Father, know that just as it causes death, so also it gives life and light."

11. And Adam praised God and his son Seth, and by the Lord's command he was changed into dust, from which he was created.

12. And after some time had passed, Seth spoke that discourse to Enosh and said, "Thus my father Adam said, 'This was not our home, rather this was the home of wild beasts and the other creatures, but our home was in Eden towards the east.' 13. And when God created our father, he also put him in the garden, and he commanded him from which fruit to eat and from which not to eat. But he did not keep the commandment, stripped himself of the divine light, and was expelled from the garden and became equal to the irrational animals."

14. And Enoch considered this thing, and for forty days and forty nights he tasted nothing at all. 15. And after that he planted a comely garden, and he planted in it every fruit-bearing tree. 16. And he lived in that garden 542 years, and (af)ter that he ascended bodily into heaven, and became worthy of the divine glory and light.

---

[3]The text appears corrupt here; the second ձեզ is awkward and unnecessary.

ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ԱՊԱՇԽԱՐՈՒԹԵԱՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ ԵՒ ԵՒԱՅԻ ՆԱԽԱՍՏԵՂԾԻ[1] ԹԷ ՈՐՊԷՍ ԱՐԱՐԻՆ

1. Յետ ելանելոյն Ադամայ ի դրախտէն, առեալ զԵւայ, հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ, եւ բնակեցան յանդիման դրախտին. զի միշտ տեսանելով զդրախտն, հանապազ տառապէին փափաքանաւք ի դէմ[2] դրախտին։ 2. Եւ աւր ըստ աւրէ կարաւտութիւնն յաւելոյր, եւ փափագ վայելչութեան դրախտին նեղէր զնոսա։ 3. Յորժամ եղեւ երեկոյ, եմուտ արեգակն եւ եղեւ մութն եւ խաւար գիշեր. յայնժամ անկաւ ահ մեծ ի վերայ նախաստեղծիցն, եւ այնպէս կարծեցին թէ այն էր մահն, որով մեռանելոց էին. եւ ահիւ մեծաւ սարսեալ տագնապէին, մինչ որ լուսացաւ եւ ծագեաց արեգակն։

4. Ապա դիւրացան սակաւ մի յերկիւղէ մահուն։ 5. Քանզի ասաց Աստուած թէ մահու մեռանիցիք. եւ այն բաւթ, սաստիկ վտանկէր զնոսա. եւ էր այն ապաշխարութիւն Ադամայ եւ կնոջ նորա Եւայի։ 6. Զմտաւ ածեալ յիշէին զվայրն վայելչութեան, եւ զդրախտն փափկութեան. զգեղեցկութիւն ծառոցն, եւ զզուարճութիւն տնկոցն. զպայծառութիւն վարդիցն, եւ զանուշահոտութիւն ծաղկանցն. զանթառամութիւն տերեւոցն, եւ զքաղցր ճաշակումն պտղոցն. զբարի հնչմունս հրեղինացն, եւ զքաղցրանուագ երգս հրեշտակացն. զախորժ բարբառ երկնաւորացն, եւ զհեշտալի եղանակս անմարմին զաւրացն։ 7. Զայս ամենայն կորուսեալ Ադամայ վասն[3] որոյ սկսաւ լալ եւ ողբալ մեծակական ձայնիւ։ 8. Վասն զի տեսանէր զվայրս դրախտին յանդիման աչաց իւրոց. եւ լայր կողկողագին հառաչանաւք. եւ կոծէր զկուրծս իւր յորդ արտասուաւք: 9. Եւ ի խորոց սրտին հեծէր եւ յոգւոց հանէր. լեարդն այրէր. սիրտն ճմլէր. եւ աղիքն զալարէր: 10. Որովայնն ցաւէր երիկամունքն խորովէր եւ աչքն զարտասուս բերէր:

11. Միտքն ծնանէր լեզուն խաւսէր բերանն բարբառէր զաշխարանաց զքանս եւ ասէր:

12. Վայ ինձ աստուածաստեղծ մարդոյս.
Վայ ինձ նախաստեղծ կենդանւոյս.
Վայ ինձ կենդանի մեռելոյս:
13. Վայ ինձ մեռեալ հողոյս.
Վայ ինձ նախահաւրս.
Վայ ինձ առաջին մարդոյս:
14. Վայ առաջնորդիս կորստեան.
Վայ ինձ մահու զրաւելոյս.
Վայ ինձ մեղաւք մեռելոյս.
Վայ ինձ զի զպատուիրանն յանցեայ:
15. Վայ ինձ մեծատանս որ աղքատացայ.
Վայ ինձ զի ի բարձրութենէ խոնարհեցայ.
Վայ ինձ որ յառաջն թագաւորէի եւ տնանկացայ:
16. Վայ ինձ կորուսելոյս.
Վայ ինձ մոլորելոյս.
Վայ ինձ մեղաւորիս.
Վայ ինձ յանցաւորիս.
Վայ ինձ մահապարտիս.
Վայ ինձ Ադամայս:
17. Վայ իմ կողածին Եւայիս.
Վայ իմ կենաց կցորդիս.
Վայ ինձ որ մեղայ Աստուծոյ:
18. Լացէք զիս ամենայն արարածք.

Լացէք զիս երկինք.

Լացէք զիս երկիր.

Լացէք զիս ծովք.

Լացէք զիս ցամաք.

Լացէք զիս հրեշտակք.

Լացէք զիս զազանք եւ անասունք.

Լացէք զիս սողունք եւ թռչունք.

Լացէք զիս ծառք եւ տունկք.

Լացէք զիս քոյսք եւ դալարք.

Լացէք զիս ծառք ամենայն դրախտիդ վայելչութեան:

19. Ողբացէք զիս եւ կոծեցարուք ի վերայ բնակչիս ձերոյ.

Ողբացէք զիս զաւտարացեալս ի ձէնջ.

Ողբացէք զարտաքսեալս ի փափկութենէ ձերմէ.

Ողբացէք զտարամերժեալս ի վայելչութենէ ձերմէ:

20. Ով թռչունք երկնից, իջէք առ իս եւ տեսէք զլաց իմ.

Ով զազանք տեսէք զիս զվտանկեալս.

Ով անասունք հայեցարուք յիս ի տարակուսեալս.

Տեսէք զիս զթշուառականս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ որ երբեմն տէր էի ձեզ իշխան եւ թագաւոր, եւ արդ եմ ձեզ հաւասար եւ առաւել եւս վաթար:

21. Ով արեգակն եւ լուսին ողորմեցարուք ինձ անարգ
հողոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ տառապելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ վտանկելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ տարակուսելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ մերկացելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ մեղուցելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ զլորելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ կործանեցելոյս.

Ողորմեցարուք ինձ ի խաւարի եւ ի ստուերս մահու նստելոյս:

22. Իւ՞ ապրիմ զի ահա քաղցեալ եմ.

Որպէ՞ս ցանեմ. զիա՞րդ վաստակեմ.

Զին՞չ ուտեմ. զին՞չ առնեմ.

Իւ՞ մխիթարիմ.

Ուրո՞վ խնդամ.

Ուրո՞վ զուարճանամ.

Իւ՞ յագենամ.

Իւ՞ լիանամ:

23. Ով ծառք զի՞ կայք.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զԱդամ.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զզրկեալս ի ձէնջ.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զխաւարեալս ի լուսոյդ ձերմէ.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զքաղցեալս ի բարեաց ձերոց.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զպասքեալս ի պտղոց ձերոց.

Ընդէ՞ր ոչ լայք զկարաւտեալս առատութեանց ձերոց:

24. Եւ դարձուցեալ զբանն ի կինն եւ ասէ.

Ով կին դու զին՞չ գործեցեր ընդ մեզ.

Ով կին ընդէ՞ր զրկեցեր զմեզ յայնպիսի փափկութենէն.

Ով կին ընդէ՞ր որոշեցեր զմեզ յայնպիսի զրգանացն.

Ով կին ընդէ՞ր արտաքսեցեր զմեզ յայնպիսի վայելչութեանցն.

Ով կին, ես զքեզ կեանք անուանեցի եւ դու զիս ի կենաց հաներ.

Ով կին արդ զին՞չ արասցուք եւ որպէս ապրեսցուք.

Զի՞նչ կերիցուք եւ կամ զի՞նչ արբցուք.
Զի՞նչ զգեցցուք եւ զմերկութիւնս մեր որո՞վ պարտակեսցուք.
Զի ահա մաշկեղէն այս հանդերձս դիւրամաշ է եւ
շուտով անցանէ։

25. Ասէ Եւայ մեր կենացս այս բաւական է. զի հրամայեաց արարիչն մահու մեռանել մեզ, եւ այն ե՞րբ իցէ եւ յորո՞ւմ աւուր հանդիպի եւ զայ հասանէ մահն ի վերայ մեր. եւ թէ զի՞նչ մահն իցէ որ զմեզ մեռուցանէ ոչ գիտեմք. զի ահա աւր մի եւ գիշեր մի անցաւ ի վերայ մեր եւ ոչ մեռաք։

26. Եւ այնպէս սգացին Ադամ եւ Եւայ անսուաղ եւ անաւթի զաւուրս հինգ ոչինչ ճաշակեալ։ 27. Եւ ապա յետ հինգ աւուրն ի վեցերորդում աւուրն եկեալ առ նոսա հրեշտակապետն Գաբրիէլ բանիւն Աստուծոյ. եւ տեսեալ զԱդամ եւ զԵւայ ի սուգ եւ ի լաց, մխիթարեաց զնոսա եւ ասաց ուտել ի պտղոյ երկրին որ կայր մաւտ առ նոսա։ 28. Եւ ասաց նոցա մերձաւորիլ ամուսնութեամբ ի նմանութիւն անասնոց եւ աճել որդեծնութեամբ ըստ հրամանին Աստուծոյ. եւ յետ երեսուն ամաց ելանելոյն Ադամայ ի դրախտէն, մերձեցաւ Ադամ առ Եւայ եւ ծնաւ զԿայէն եւ զԱբուսաքր քոյր նորա ընդ նմա. եւ ասէ ծնայ մարդ Աստուծով։

29. Եւ յետ երեսուն տարւոյ դարձեալ մերձեցաւ Ադամ առ Եւայ եւ ծնաւ զԱբէլ եւ զԱմայն քոյր նորա։ 30. Եւ յետ երեսուն ամաց սպան Կային զՀաբէլ. եւ դարձեալ սուգ առին Ադամ եւ Եւայ ի վերայ մահուն Հաբելի զամս հարիւր եւ քսան. եւ ապա հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ եկն առ Ադամ հրեշտակապետն Գաբրիէլ, եւ ասաց նմա, մերձենալ յԵւա վասն որդեծնութեան։ 31. Եւ ետ Ադամայ ճեւղ մի ի ծառոց դրախտին, եւ ասաց. Այդ քեզ նշան, որ ծնանի քեզ Եւայ որդի մխիթարութեան. եւ կոչեսցես զանուն նորա

Սէթ, փոխանակ Հաբելի զոր սպան Կային:

32. Եւ յառաջ քան զսպանանելն Կայենի զՀաբէլ յաւուր միում տեսիլս պատմեաց Եւայ Ադամայ եւ ասաց թէ Տեսի զիշերս յերազի, որ զարիւնն Աբելի Կային ի բերանն առեալ ըմպէր:
33. Եւ Հաբէլ աղաչէր զնա թէ Թող յարենէդ եւ նա ոչ լսէր, եւ ոչ մնայր ի փորն, այլ փախէր ի դուրս զարիւնն Հաբելի: 34. Իբրեւ լուաւ զայս Ադամ յԵւայէ, ի կարծիս իմն անկաւ վասն բանին. եւ զի յառաջ քան զպատմելն Եւայի զերազն, լուաւ Ադամ ի Կայենէ որ ասէր ցՀաբէլ թէ Եկ երթիցուք ի դաշտի անդ եւ տեսցուք զդրախտն իմ, զոր տնկեցի փոխանակ դրախտին, վասն որոյ ապաշաւեն եւ լան անդադար ծնաւղքդ մեր: 35. Եւ գնացեալ Ադամ փութանակի եւ տեսեալ զի սպանեալ էր Կային զԱբէլ զեղբայր իւր. եւ ինքն Կային հեռացեալ էր ի տեղւոջէն: 36. Եւ թէ ո՞րպէս եսպան, եւ կամ զին՞չ ուրինակաւ, այս է զոր ասեմս. Տարեալ Կային զՀաբէլ յիւրատունկ դրախտն, եւ կալեալ կապեաց զնա ծեռն յետս ընդ ծառով միոյ.[4] եւ առեալ քար մի զայլախազ, եւ այնքան քարազոհ[5] արար զանմեղ պատանին, մինչ որ աւանդեաց զհոգին:

37. Եւ գնացեալ Ադամ, ետես այնպէս. եւ յոյժ սգացեալ ելաց դառնապէս: 38. Եւ ապա աղէկիզեալ սրտիւ եւ դառնացեալ հոգով գնաց Ադամ ասել Եւայի, զի եկեալ ի միասին լայցեն զՀաբէլ, եւ ամփոփեալ թաղեսցեն զնա: 39. Եւ յորժամ առեալ զԵւայ եւ եկն անդ, այլ ոչ եգիտ զմարմինն Հաբելի, զի ամփոփեալ էր ի հրեշտակաց Աստուծոյ. եւ երկիր կլեալ էր զարիւն նորա, որ բնաւ ոչ երեւեցաւ: 40. Յայնժամ կալաւ անհնարին եւ սաստիկ տրտմութիւն զԱդամ եւ զԵւայ, վասն Հաբելի որդւոյն իւրեանց:
41. Եւ յերկար սգով կացին ի տրտմութեան ամս հարիւր եւ քսան:
42. Մինչ որ հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ ծնան զՍէթ որդի մխիթարութեան:

43. Եւ ի սպանանելն Կայենի զՀաբել, եկն Գաբրիէլ առ

Ադամ եւ ասաց նմա. Դուք մի հարցանէք զնային վասն Հաբելի. այլ Աստուած հարցանէ զնա եւ պատժէ: 44. Որպէս եւ արարն իսկ:
45. Վասն զի եհարց Աստուած զԿային, թէ ու՞ր է Աբէլ եղբայրն քո:
46. Եւ նա ստեաց Աստուծոյ եւ ասաց. Ոչ գիտեմ: 47. Եւ Աստուած վասն այն եհարց զԿային, որ զղջանայր եւ մեղայ ասէր: 48. Իսկ նա լրբութեամբ ասաց. Ոչ գիտեմ. մի թէ պահապա՞ն իցեմ եղբաւրն իմոյ: 49. Եւ ասաց նմա Աստուած. Պահապան չես, սպանաւղ ընդէ՞ր եղեր: 50. Եւ եաւթն պատիժ էած ի վերայ նորա: 51. Նախ զի ասաց թէ Անիծեալ լիջիր: 52. Երկրորդ ի վերայ երկրի ուր հեղեր զարիւն եղբաւր քոյ: 53. Երրորդ Գործել զերկիր վաստակաւք եւ աշխատանաւք: 54. Չորրորդ Եւ երկիր ոչ տայ քեզ զպտուղ իւր, զի արեամբ արդարոյ ներկեր զնա: 55. Հինգերորդ Երերեալ լիցիս որպէս զծառ ի հողմոց: 56. Վեցերորդ Տատանեալ լիցիս իբրեւ զծով որ ծփի յալեաց: 57. Եաւթներորդ զի նշան եդ ի վերայ նորա Աստուած որ ամենայն ոք գիտենայր զնա, եւ նշանն պիսակն էր:
58. Այլ եւ եղջեւր բուսաւ ի ճակատն. զի ընդ որ գնայր, եղջեւրն զոչէր եւ աղաղակէր, թէ զայ Կային եղբայրասպանն:

59. Եւ այնպէս եկեաց[6] մնաց ամս ութ հարիւր:
60. Դողդոջէր միշտ, եւ երերալի շրջէր ի վերայ երկրի անդադար զցայզ եւ զցերեկ: 61. Եւ այնու առաւել սաստկացաւ սուգն Ադամայ եւ Եւայի: 62. Նախ զի մեղան Աստուծոյ: 63. Երկրորդ զի մերկացան ի լուսոյն: 64. Երրորդ զի արտաքսեցան ի դրախտէն:
65. Չորրորդ զի յերկիրս անիծից անկան: 66. Հինգերորդ զի ընդ մահու զրաւեցան: 67. Վեցերորդ զի յԱստուծոյ ատարացան:
68. Եաւթներորդ զի ի շնորհաց ղատարկացան: 69. Ութերորդ զի անասնոց հաւասարեցան: 70. Իններորդ զի որդեկորոյս եղեն, եւ աղեաց կսկիծ ընկալան: 71. Տասներորդ զի զանդրանիկ որդին իւրեանց տեսին եղբայրասպան, ղատապարտեալ եւ պատժեալ յԱստուծոյ:

72. Այս ամենայն անմխիթար սուգ էր Ադամայ եւ դառն կսկիծ Եւայի, եւ աւելորդ զղջման եւ ապաշխարութեան նախաստեղծիցն:

73. Որ հանապազ լային դէմ դրախտին զամենայն աւուրս կենաց իւրեանց եւ ասէին.

Ով պանծալի դրախտ.
Ով գեղեցիկ ծաղկոց.
Ով անուշահոտ բուրաստան.
Ով վայելուչ այգի.
Ով աստուածատունկ դարաստան.
Ողորմեցարուք զրկելոյս ի ձէնջ.
Ողորմեցարուք կարաւտելոյս ձերոցդ բարեաց.
Ողորմեցարուք վտանկելոյ ի ձեր դիմաց:

74. Ո՞վ տայ ինձ տեսանել զձեզ, ծառք բարեբերք.
Ո՞վ տայ մեզ տեսանել զձեզ, ծաղկունք անուշահոտք.
Ո՞վ տայ մեզ տեսանել զձեզ, տերեւք անթառամք.
Ո՞վ տայ մեզ ճաշակել ի ձէնջ, պտուղ քաղցրահամք.
Ո՞վ տայ մեզ մտանել ի քեզ, դրախտ աստուածատունկ.
Ո՞վ տայ մեզ հանգիստ ի քեզ, վայրդ վայելչալի:

75. Ով աչք որ հայեցայք ի պտուղն, ընդէ՞ր ոչ խաւարեցայք:

76. Ով ոտք որ գնացիք ի ծառն մահաբեր, ընդէ՞ր ոչ կոտորեցայք:

77. Ով ձեռք որ հատիք զպտուղն, ընդէ՞ր ոչ զաւսացայք:

78. Եւ այսպիսի լալով եւ վայիւ եկեաց Ադամ, սգով եւ տառապանաւք ամս ինն հարեւր եւ երեսուն. եւ ապա հիւանդացաւ ի փորոյն:

79. Եւ ժողովեցան առ Ադամ ամենայն ուստերք եւ դստերք նորա վաթսուն, զորս ծնեալ էր Եւայ Ադամայ, ծնունդս երեսուն արու եւ էգ, որ էին ամենեքեան վաթսուն: 80. Ժողովեցան որդովք եւ դստերաւք իւրեանց առ նախաստեղծն մարդն Ադամ: 81. Եւ նա խիստ ի վտանկի կայր. եւ քաղէին ոգիքն ի սաստիկ ցաւոյն, որ կալեալ էր զանձն նորա:

82. Իսկ Եւայ եւ ամենայն ծնունդք նորա լային եւ ողբային զԱդամ. եւ Ադամ կայր առաջի նոցա չարաչար տանջեալ ի հիւանդութենէ իւրմէ: 83. Յայնժամ ասէ Եւայ ցԱդամ. Տէր իմ, ասա զժամանակ իմ թէ յամեմ ես յաշխարհիս, թէ շուտով մեռանիմ: 84. Չի՞նչ առնեմ զկնի քո, զի ես ոչ ինչ իմանամ: 85. Ասէ Ադամ, Ոչ յամես, այլ ի միասին մեռանիմք եւ դիցեն զիս եւ զքեզ ի մին տեղի: 86. Բայց դու այժմ երթ աղաչեա զՏէր, զի թերեւս տացէ ի ծառոյն աւծմանէ, որ այնու աւծանէք[7] զանձն իմ, զի դիւրանամ ի ցաւոցս:

87. Եւ յարուցեալ Եւայ առ զՍէթ, եւ գնաց աղաչել զՏէր, տալ պտուղ իւղընձիւղ ի ծառոց դրախտին, վասն առողջութեանն Ադամայ: 88. Եւ հանդիպեալ նոցա ահագին գազանն Բեհմովթ. յարձակեցաւ ի վերայ Սեթայ եւ կամէր ուտել զնա: 89. Յայնժամ Ճիչ բարձեալ Եւայ, աղաղակեաց ընդդէմ գազանին եւ ասաց. Սանձեա զբերան քո եւ մի իշխեսցես մերձենալ ի ծառայդ Աստուծոյ. յիշեա զի ընդ մերով իշխանութեամբ էիր, եւ մի համարձակիր վնասել զորդիդ իմ: 90. Յայնժամ եթող գազանն զՍէթ զոր կալեալ ուտէր եւ ասաց Եւայի. Չեզ հնազանդ յայնժամ էի, որքան դուք հնազանդ Աստուծոյ էիք, եւ զպատուիրանս նորա պահէիք. իսկ ի յանցանելն ձերում զհրաման արարչին, յարձակիմք ի վերայ ձեր եւ խստանամք, եւ ընդդէմ դառնամք ձեզ: 91. Զայս հրամանաւն Աստուծոյ խաւսեցաւ գազանն եւ ասաց ընդ Եւայ մարդկային բարբառով, խոժոռ խոլոր եւ ահարկու դիմաւք. եւ ապա թողեալ զնոսա զանց արար եւ գնաց:

92. Եւ մինչ դեռ մայրն եւ որդին Եւայ եւ Սէթ, աղօթէին յանդիման դրախտին, եկն առ նոսա հրեշտակապետն Գաբրիէլ եւ ասաց. Արիք եւ գնացէք զի մեռաւ Ադամ յերեկոյին ժամուն ընդ մտանել արեւուն: 93. Եւ նոքա ելեալ գնացին լալով եւ հառաչանաւք, եւ տեսին զԱդամ մեռեալ, եւ արարին կոծ մեծ ի վերայ նորա: 94. Եւ յետ երեք ժամու անցանելոյ ի վերայ մեռանելոյն Ադամայ, մինչ դեռ լայր եւ ողբայր Եւայ, նոյնժամայն ցաւեաց զլուխ նորա եւ ասաց. Վայ զլուխս, վայ զլուխս. եւ նա եւս մեռաւ ընդ Ադամայ: 95. Ի ստեղծանելն ընդ առաւաւտս ուրբաթուն ստեղծաւ Ադամ, եւ յերրորդ ժամու աւուրն ստեղծաւ Եւայ ի կողէն Ադամայ: 96. Իսկ ի մեռանելն, մեռաւ Ադամ յերեկի[8] ժամու ուրբաթուն. եւ Եւա մեռաւ յերրորդ ժամու զիշերւոյն[9]: 97. Իսկ որդիք եւ դստերք նոցա, սգացին զնոսա աւուրս երեսուն. եւ լուացեալ զսպեցին զնոսա, եւ պատեցին անոյշ խնկաւք եւ մաքուր կտաւօք եւ եդին ի փայտեայ տապանի: 98. Եւ պատուէին զաստուածաստեղծ մարմինս նախաստեղծիցն որդիք նոցա, եւ որդոց որդիքն մինչեւ ի Նոյ:

99. Իսկ յետ մեռանելոյն Ադամայ հազար երեք հարիւր եւ երկոտասան ամաց, եկն ջրհեղեղն, եւ Նոյ առեալ զնոսա ի տապանին զի[10] մի ապականեալ կորիցեն ի ջուրցն հեղեղէ: 100. Եւ յելանել Նոյի ի տապանէն, ետ զմարմինս նախաստեղծիցն յաւագ որդին իւր ի Սէմ: 101. Եւ նա առեալ տարաւ ի վիճակն իւր, որ արդ եւս կոչի Շամայ տուն, որ է Սեմայ տուն: 102. Եւ անդ ամփոփեաց զնոսա, դնելով զԵւայ ի յայրն Բեթղահեմի, ուր յետոյ ծնաւ Քրիստոս ի սուրբ Կուսէն Մարիամայ ի վերայ զերեզմանին Եւայի: 103. Եւ զԱդամայն[11] եդ ի Գողգոթայ, ուր խաչեցաւ Քրիստոս ի Հրէիցն ի վերայ գլխոյն Ադամայ. եւ արար զփրկութիւն ի մէջ երկրի:

104. Վասն այսորիկ կարգեցաւ եւ սահմանեցաւ յառաջին սրբոցն եւ ի հոգելի արանցն յաւուր ուրբաթու յիշատակել զննջեցեալսն ի Քրիստոս:

The History of the Repentance of Adam and Eve, the First Created Ones,[1] and How They Did It

1. After Adam went out from the garden, he took Eve, by God's command, and they dwelt opposite the garden. Because they always looked at the garden, they were vexed continually with longing for[2] the garden. 2. And day by day their misery increased, and their desire for the splendor of the garden tormented them. 3. When evening came, the sun set and it became dark and gloomy night. Then a great fear fell upon the first created ones, and they presumed that this was the death by which they would die. And they were terrified, quivering with a great fear, until it became dawn and the sun rose.

4. Then they were somewhat relieved from the apprehension of death. 5. For God had said, "You shall die," and this sorrowful news tormented them severely. This was the repentance of Adam and his wife Eve. 6. On reflection, they recalled the place of splendor and the garden of delight, the beauty of the trees and the enjoyment of the plants, the lustre of the roses and the sweet odor of the flowers, the

---

[1] Նախաստեղծի - The plural is needed here

[2] ի դէմ - lit. "before, in front of, opposite."

the unfading leaves and the sweet taste of the fruits, the fine sounds of the celestial beings and the harmonious chants of the angels, the sweet voice of the heavenly beings and the delectable melodies of the incorporeal hosts. 7. Adam lost all this, because[3] of which he began to cry and to mourn with a very sad voice. 8. For he saw the place of the garden before his eyes, and he wept sorrowfully with groans and beat his breast with copious tears. 9. And he groaned from the bottom of his heart and he fainted; his liver was enflamed, his heart burned, and his bowels shriveled up. 10. His belly was pained, his kidneys were afflicted, and his eyes shed tears. 11. His mind brought forth, his tongue spoke, his mouth uttered words of complaint, and he said, 12."Woe is me, God-created man!

Woe is me, first-created living being!
Woe is me, the living corpse!
13. Woe is me, a corpse of dust!
Woe is me, the first father!
Woe is me, the first man!
14. Woe to the author of perdition!
Woe is me, who took hold of death!
Woe is me, a corpse through sin!
Woe is me, because I transgressed the command!
15. Woe is me, the wealthy man who became poor!
Woe is me, because I have descended from the height!
Woe is me, who formerly was crowned but came to

---

[3]Vs. 7 վասն որոյ - vs. 30 is represented in Yov. by ..., indicating a lacuna. An entire folio was omitted when the MS was copied, but is here restored.

ruin!

16. Woe is me, who am undone!
Woe is me, who have gone astray!
Woe is me, the sinner!
Woe is me, the transgressor!
Woe is me, condemned to death!
Woe is me, Adam!

17. Woe to Eve, made from my rib!
Woe to my life's companion!
Woe to me, who have sinned before God!

18. Weep for me, all creatures!
Weep for me, O heavens!
Weep for me, O earth!
Weep for me, O seas!
Weep for me, O dry land!
Weep for me, O angels!
Weep for me, O wild beasts and animals!
Weep for me, O creeping things and birds!
Weep for me, O trees and plants!
Weep for me, O herbs and grass!
Weep for me, all trees of that garden of splendor!

19. Mourn for me, and lament over your inhabitant!
Mourn for me, estranged from you!
Mourn for this one driven out from your luxury!
Mourn for this one expelled from your splendor!

20. O birds of the heavens, come down to me and see my weeping!

O beasts, see me who am tormented!
O wild animals, look at me, who am ashamed!
Look at me, the miserable one!
Have pity on me, who was once your lord, sovereign, and king, but am now equal to you, but more unworthy!

21. O sun and moon, have pity on me, worthless clay!
Have pity on me, the afflicted!
Have pity on me, the tormented!
Have pity on me, the ashamed!
Have pity on me, the naked!
Have pity on me, the transgressor!
Have pity on me, the fallen!
Have pity on me, laid waste!
Have pity on me, sitting in darkness and in the shadows of death!

22. How shall I live, for behold, I am hungry?
How shall I sow? How shall I labor?
What shall I eat? What shall I do?
How shall I be consoled?
In whom shall I rejoice?
In whom shall I take delight?
How shall I be satisfied?
How shall I be filled?

23. O trees, why do you stand?
Why do you not weep for Adam?

Why do you not weep for the one deprived of you?
Why do you not weep for the one blinded from your light?
Why do you not weep for the one hungry for your good things?
Why do you not weep for the one who thirsts for your fruits?
Why do you not weep for the one who desires your abundance?"

24. And he directed <his> words to his wife and said,
"O woman, why did you work against us?
O woman, why did you deprive us of such luxury?
O woman, why did you separate us from such delicacy?
O woman, why did you drive us out from such delight?
O woman, I named you life, but you took me away from life!
O woman, now what will we do and how will we live?
What will we eat and what will we drink?
What will we wear and with what will we cover our nakedness?
For behold, this skin garment wears out rapidly and passes away quickly."

25. Eve said, "This life of ours is sufficient, for the creator commanded us to be punished with death, and when will that be and on what day will it occur, and death come upon us? And what death it will be which kills us we do not know, for behold, one day and one night have passed over us, but we did not die."

26. And thus Adam and Eve lamented without food and hungry, eating nothing for five days. 27. But then after five days, on the sixth day, the archangel Gabriel came to them at the command of God. And seeing Adam and Eve lamenting and weeping, he comforted them and told them to eat from the fruit of the earth, which was near to them. 28. And he told them to draw near in marriage in imitation of the animals, and to multiply by childbirth according to the command of God. And thirty years after Adam went out from the garden, Adam knew Eve, and she bore Cain and Abusakr, his sister, with him. And she said, "I have brought forth a man through God."

29. And after thirty years, Adam again knew Eve, and she bore Abel and Samayn, his sister. 30. And after thirty years Cain killed Abel. And Adam and Eve lamented again over the death of Abel, for a hundred and twenty years. And then, by the command of God, the archangel Gabriel came to Adam and told him to know Eve for the sake of procreation.
31. And he gave Adam a branch from the trees of the garden and said, "This is a sign to you that Eve will bear to you a son of consolation. And you shall call his name Seth, in place of Abel, whom Cain killed."

32. Now on a certain day, before Cain killed Abel,

Eve related this vision to Adam and said, "I saw in a dream last night that Cain took Abel's blood into his mouth and drank it. 33. And Abel begged him, 'Leave some of that blood!,' but he did not listen, and it did not remain in his belly, rather he vomited out Abel's blood." 34. When Adam heard this from Eve, he became somewhat suspicious about the matter, for before Eve related her dream, Adam had heard Cain say to Abel, "Come let us go into the field and see my garden which I planted in place of the garden on account of which our parents lament and weep continually." 35. Therefore Adam went quickly and saw that Cain had killed Abel his brother, and Cain himself had departed from the place. 36. And how he killed him, and in what way, I shall explain. Cain led Abel into the garden which he himself had planted, and he seized him and tied him to a tree[4] with his hands behind him. And he took a stone--a flint--and in such a way he stoned[5] the innocent lad until he gave up the ghost.

37. And when Adam went forth, he saw this, and he mourned exceedingly and wept bitterly. 38. So with a compassionate heart and an embittered spirit, Adam went to tell Eve to come so that they might weep together over Abel, gather him up and bury him. 39. When he took Eve and came there, he did not find Abel's corpse any more, for it had [4] ընդ ծառով միոյ is corrupt.

---

[5] քարազոհ = քար , "stone," + զոհ, "victim, sacrifice" (cf. զոհ առնել , "to kill"). Hence քարազոհ առնել = "to make a victim by stoning," "to stone."

been gathered up by God's angels. And the ground had swallowed up his blood, which has never been seen since. 40. Then a terrible and grievous sorrow seized Adam and Eve on account of Abel their son. 41. And for a long time they mourned sorrowfully, a hundred and twenty years, 42. until by the command of God they begat Seth, son of consolation.

43. And when Cain had killed Abel, Gabriel came to Adam and said to him, "Do not ask Cain about Abel; rather God will ask him and punish him," 44. as indeed he did. 45. Because God asked Cain, "Where is Abel your brother?" 46. And he lied to God and said, "I don't know." 47. And because of this God asked Cain, so that he might be sorry and repent. 48. But he said impudently, "I don't know. Should I be my brother's keeper?" 49. And God said to him, "You are not his keeper; why did you become his murderer?" 50. And he brought seven punishments upon him. 51. First, he said, "May you be cursed." 52. Second, "Upon the ground where you shed your brother's blood." 53. Third, "To till the ground in toil and fatigue." 54. Fourth, "And the earth will not give you its fruit, for with the blood of the righteous have you colored it." 55. Fifth, "May you shake like a tree in the winds." 56. Sixth, "May you be tossed like the sea which is agitated by the waves." 57. Seventh, God put a sign upon him so that everyone recognized him, and the sign was a mark. 58. Moreover, a horn sprouted on his forehead, such that wherever he went, the horn cried out and exclaimed, "Cain the brother murderer is coming."

59. And thus he remained[6] for eight hundred years. 60. He shuddered continually, and he walked upon the earth shaking incessantly, night and day. 61. And because of this, Adam and Eve's mourning became more intense. 62. First, because they sinned against God. 63. Second, because they were stripped of the light. 64. Third, because they were driven out of the garden. 65. Fourth, because they passed over to this cursed earth. 66. Fifth, because they became subject to death. 67. Sixth, because they became estranged from God. 68. Seventh, because they became devoid of grace. 69. Eighth, because they became equal to the animals. 70. Ninth, because they lost their child and were deeply pained. 71. Tenth, because they saw their first-born son, a brother murderer, condemned and punished by God. 72. All this was an inconsolable sorrow for Adam, a bitter pain for Eve, and an abundance of penitence and mortification for the first created ones.

73. For they wept constantly before the garden all the days of their lives and said,

"O glorious garden!
O elegant flower garden!
O sweet-smelling orchard!
O comely vineyard!
O garden planted by God!
Have pity on one deprived of you!

[6]Corrupt for ելաց.

Have pity on one who longs for your good things!
Have pity on one who is tormented before you!

74. Who will allow me to see you, O fruitful trees?
Who will allow us to see you, O sweet-smelling flowers?
Who will allow us to see you, O unfading leaves?
Who will allow us to taste of you, O savory fruits?
Who will allow us to enter into you, O garden planted by God?
Who will give us rest in you, O place of enjoyment?

75. O eyes that gazed upon the fruit, why were you not blinded?

76. O feet that walked to the deadly tree, why were you not broken to pieces?

77. O hands that picked the fruit, why did you not become withered?"

78. And weeping and moaning in such a way, Adam lived, in mourning and tribulation, nine hundred and thirty years. Then he became sick in his belly.

79. And there were gathered to Adam all sixty of his sons and daughters whom Eve had born to Adam; <there had been> thirty childbirths, a male and a female in each, which makes sixty altogether. 80. They were gathered with their own sons and daughters to the first created man Adam.

81. And he was in great danger, and he was dying from the severe pain which had seized him.

82. Now Eve and all her children wept and lamented over Adam, and Adam lay before them, greatly tormented by his illness. 83. Then Eve said to Adam, "My lord, tell me the time of my death; shall I tarry on this earth, or shall I die quickly? 84. What shall I do after you? For I perceive nothing." 85. Adam said, "You shall not tarry, rather we shall die together, and they will put me and you in the same place. 86. But go now and beg the Lord, for perhaps he will give you <some of the oil> from the tree of anointing with which you will anoint[7] me, so that I will be relieved of these pains."

87. And Eve rose up and took Seth, and she went to beg the Lord to give her the oil-producing fruit from the trees of the garden for the sake of curing Adam. 88. And the hideous beast Behemoth met them; he pounced upon Seth and wished to eat him. 89. Then Eve shrieked, shouted at the beast and said, "Bridle your mouth, and do not dare to approach the servant of God. Remember that you were under our dominion, and do not dare to harm my son." 90. Then the beast released Seth whom he had seized and was about to eat, and he said to Eve, "I was obedient to you as long as you were obedient to God and kept his commandments. But because you have transgressed against the command of the creator, we fall upon you, treat you mercilessly, and turn against you."

---

[7]Note the plural, which may anticipate Seth's role.

REPENTANCE 91-98

91. The beast spoke this by the command of God, and he talked to Eve in a human voice, with a stern, harsh, and frightful countenance. Then he left them, passed by and went away.

92. And while the mother and son, Eve and Seth, were praying before the garden, the archangel Gabriel came to them and said, "Arise and go, for Adam died in the evening at sunset." 93. And they left and went back weeping and groaning, and they saw Adam dead, and made a great lamentation over him. 94. And three hours after Adam had died, at the very moment while Eve was weeping and wailing, her head suffered pain and she said, "O my head! O my head!" And she also died with Adam. 95. When they were created, Adam was created on Friday morning, and at the third hour of the day, Eve was created from Adam's rib. 96. But when they died, Adam died at the evening[8] hour on Friday, and Eve died at the third hour of the night.[9] 97. And their sons and daughters mourned over them for thirty days, and they washed and bound them, and they wrapped them in sweet aromatics and clean linens, and they placed them in a wooden coffin. 98. And their sons and their sons' sons until Noah honored

---

[8] յերեկի, an unusual form. The root is probably երեկ, which however does not take ի type endings and appears strange with ժամ. So Issaverdens, who translates "towards the evening." Alternatively, Preuschen assumes the root is երկու and translates "in der zweiten...", making the parallel յերեկի ժամու ...յերրորդ ժամու. But this is not a correct form of երկու, and contradicts the notion in vs. 94 that Adam died three hours before Eve.

[9] For գիշերոյն.

the divinely created bodies of the first created ones.

99. But 1312 years after Adam's death, the flood came, and Noah took them into the ark[10] lest, having rotted, they should perish by the waters of the flood. 100. And when Noah went forth from the ark, he gave the bodies of the first created ones to his eldest son Shem. 101. So he took them and brought them to his own territory, which presently is still called Šamadun, which is the house of Shem. 102. And he buried them there, putting Eve in the cavern of Bethlehem, where subsequently Christ was born of the holy virgin Mary above Eve's tomb. 103. And he put Adam's[11] at Golgotha, where Christ was crucified by the Jews above Adam's head, and brought salvation to the world. 104. Because of this it was prescribed and decreed by the first saints and by the men full of the holy spirit to commemorate on Friday those who have fallen asleep in Christ.

---

[10] առեալ ---զի - These words are represented in Yov. by ..., indicating a lacuna. The bottom line of one page was omitted when the MS was copied, but is here restored.

Presumably the remains of Adam and Eve are referred to.

[11] The antecedent of զԱդամայն , presumably "remains," "bones," is omitted.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Achtemeier, P., ed. Society of Biblical Literature 1977 Seminar Papers. 2 vols. Missoula, Mt.: Scholars Press, 1977.

________, ed. Society of Biblical Literature 1978 Seminar Papers. 2 vols. Missoula, Mt.: Scholars Press, 1978.

Adler, William. "George Syncellus and his Predecessors." Ph. D. dissertation, University of Pennsylvania, 1982.

________. "Materials Relating to Seth in an Anonymous Chronographer (Pseudo-Malalas) and in the Chronography of George Syncellus." Philadelphia: Department of Religious Studies, University of Pennsylvania, 1977. (Typewritten.)

Anasyan, H. Haykakan Matenagitut'yun [Armenian Bibliology]. Erevan: Academy of Sciences, 1956.

Aptowitzer, V. Kain und Abel in der Agada, den Apocryphen, der hellenistischen, christlichen, und muhammedanischer Literatur. Wein und Leipzig: R. Löwit, 1922.

Armstrong, G. T. Die Genesis in der Alten Kirche. Tübingen: J. B. C. Mohr, 1962.

Bardenhewer, O. Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1962. Reprint of 1913 edition.

Baring-Gould, S. Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets. New York: Holt and Williams, 1872.

Berman, Dennis. "Seth in Rabbinic Literature: Translations and Notes." Philadelphia: Department of Religious Studies, University of Pennsylvania, 1977. (Typewritten)

Cardona, G. R. "Sur le gnosticisme in Arménie: les livre d'Adam." In Le origini dello gnosticismo: Colloquio di Messina, 13-18 aprile 1966, pp. 645-648. Edited by U. Bianchi. Leiden: Brill, 1967.

Charlesworth, J. H. The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research. Missoula, Mt.: Scholars Press, 1981, ed2.

Davies, W. D. Paul and Rabbinic Judaism. London: S.P.C.K., 1970, ed3.

Denis, A. M. Introduction aux Pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament. Leiden: Brill, 1970.

Dindorf, W., ed. Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae. 50 vols. Bonn: Weber, 1828-1897.

Frey, J.-B. "Adam (livres apocryphes sous son nom)." In Supplément au Dictionnaire de la Bible, pp. 101-134. Edited by L. Pirot. Paris: Letouzey et Ané, 1928.

Gelzer, H. Sextus Julius Africanus und die byzantinische Chronographie. 2 vols. Leipzig: B. G. Teubner, 1898.

Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews. 7 vols. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1909, 1939.

Götze, A. Die Schatzhöhle. Überlieferung und Quellen. Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosophisch-historisch Klasse, No. 13/4. Heidelberg: Carl Winter, 1922.

Gross, J. Entstehungsgeschichte des Erbsündendogmas. 2 vols. München: Ernst Reinhardt, 1960.

Harrington, D. J. The Hebrew Fragments of Pseudo-Philo. Missoula, Mt.: Scholars Press, 1974.

Hübschmann, H. Die Altarmenischen Ortsnamen. Amsterdam: Oriental Press, 1969. Reprint of Strassburg, 1904.

Issaverdens, Jaques. The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament. Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1934, ed2.

Jonas, Hans. The Gnostic Religion. Boston: Beacon Press, 1963.

Kabisch, R. "Die Entstehungszeit der Apokalypse Mose." ZNW 6 (1905), 109-134.

Karst, J. Historische Grammatik des Kilikisch-Armenischen. Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner, 1901.

Klijn, A. F. J. Seth in Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic Literature. Leiden: Brill, 1977.

Layton, B., ed. The Rediscovery of Gnosticism. 2 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1980-81.

Liechtenhan, R. "Die pseudepigraphe Litteratur der Gnostiker." ZNW 3 (1902), 222-237, 286-299.

Lipscomb, W. L. "Foreign Influences on the Armenian Adam Books." In Proceedings of the First Dr. H. Markarian Conference on Classical Armenian Culture: Influences and Creativity, pp. 102-112. Edited by M. E. Stone. Chico, Ca.: Scholars Press, 1982.

Lüdtke, W. "Georgische Adam-Bücher." ZAW 38 (1919), 155-168.

Miller, M. P. "Midrash." In The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible Supplementary Volume, pp. 593-597. Edited by K. Crim. Nashville, Tn.: Abingdon Press, 1976.

Peterson, Eric. "La liberation d'Adam de l'Ανάγκη." RB 55 (1948), 199-214.

Preuschen, E. "Die apocryphen gnostischen Adamschriften aus dem armenischen übersetzt und untersucht." In Festgruss Bernhard Stade, pp. 163-252. Edited by W. Diehl, et al. Giessen: J. Richer'sche, 1900.

Quinn, E. C. The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Life. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1962.

Sanjian, A. K. Colophons of Armenian Manuscripts, 1301-1480. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1969.

Schürer, Emil. Geschichte des Jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi. 3 vols. Hildesheim: Georg Olms, 1964. Reprint of Leipzig, 1909.

________. Review of "Die apocryphen gnostischen Adamschriften aus dem armenischen übersetzt und untersucht," by E. Preuschen. Theologische Literaturzeitung 26 (1901), 171-173.

Scroggs, R. The Last Adam. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1966.

Stone, Michael E. Armenian Apocrypha Relating to Patriarchs and Prophets. Jerusalem: Israel Academy of Sciences, 1982.

________. "The Death of Adam--An Armenian Adam Book." HTR 59 (1966), 283-291.

________. "Report on Seth Traditions in the Armenian Adam Books." In The Rediscovery of Gnosticism, vol. 2, pp. 459-471. Edited by B. Layton. Leiden: Brill, 1981.

Stroumsa, G. G. "Another Seed: Studies in Sethian Gnosticism." Ph. D. dissertation, Harvard University, 1978.

Tayetsi, E. Ankanon Girk' Nor Ktakaranac' [The Uncanonical Writings of the New Testament]. Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1898.

Theodore, J. "Midrash Haggadah." The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 8, pp. 550-569. New York: Funk and Wagnalls, 1904.

Tischendorf, K. von. Apocalypses Apocryphae Mosis, Esdrae, Pauli, Ioannis, item Mariae dormitio: Additis Evangeliorum et actuum apocryphorum supplementis. Leipzig: Herm. Mendelssohn, 1866.

Yovsepeanc', S. Ankanon Girk' Hin Ktakaranac' [The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament]. Venice: Armenian Monastery of St. Lazarus, 1896.

Appendix

THE ARMENIAN ADAM CYCLE OF FOUR WORKS, RECENSION II

In addition to the manuscript evidence presented in the edition in chapter four above, the _Adam Cycle_ exists in a quite different form in a group of manuscripts we have designated recension II (see chapter one). The text of recension II presented below is that found in the 1730 edition of _Zolovacu_, in which _Transgression_, _Expulsion_, _Abel and Cain_, and _Tidings_ are chapters 1, 3, 5, and 7 of an extended biblical paraphrase.[1] The even numbered chapters of the work contain homiletical materials based on the story presented in the _Adam Cycle_, and are similar in content to the homiletical materials placed at the end of each portion of the _Adam Cycle_ in B and Ẏ.

While the text of recension II is at some points virtually identical to that of recension I, at other points where II closely follows the story in I, the word order and vocabulary are markedly distinct.[2] There is also a tendency

---

[1] Chapter numbers in the _Adam Cycle_ given here correspond to those given in recension I above and not to the _Zolovacu_ edition.

[2] Compare, e.g., _Transgression_, I 1-4 and II 1-4; I 25-30 and II 25-31; _Abel and Cain_ I 5-7 and II 5-7.

in II to rearrange the order of events as told in I,[3] to expand upon the text of I and introduce new ideas,[4] and to make improvements upon I, especially where confusions are found in I.[5] These modifications are all characteristic of secondary or recensional activity, and indicate that recension I is a superior text form. Furthermore, the appearance of several Turkish words[6] in the text makes it

---

[3]In Transgression I 41-43, God curses Adam first, then Eve, then the serpent, whereas in II 40-43, the serpent is cursed first, then Eve, and then Adam. In I 31, the assertion that the fruit was good but man was evil occurs directly after Adam eats the fruit and before God appears. In II 45, however, that assertion occurs after God has delivered the curses and expelled Adam and Eve from the garden. For the transposition of verses, compare Abel and Cain I 36-37 and II 37; I and II 47; and the location of the promise that Seth will be the head of patriarchs in Tidings I 3 and II 1.

[4]In Transgression II 45-49 contains an extended explanation of the sin of Adam and Eve described in I 31. II introduces the ideas that Adam broke a fast and that he blamed God for his sin when given an opportunity to repent. See also the fuller explanation of how Christ accomplished humanity's deliverance from the promissory note of Adam in Expulsion II 23-26 (cf. I 23-26), and the explanation of the depth of the flood waters in Tidings II 44 (cf. I 44). The text of II is about 10% longer than that of I.

[5]In Transgression I 47, the angel takes Adam and Eve out of the garden and shows them fruit-bearing trees from which they can obtain sustenance. In II 51 Adam is shown how to obtain food provided he works for it, thus fulfilling the curse on him pronounced by God. While all extant manuscripts of Abel and Cain I 27 are confused at the point where Cain learns how to kill from two ravens, the text reads smoothly in II 27, and in II 35 Cain's response to God's query is brought closer to the biblical story of Cain's response (cf. I 35). Finally, Tidings II 14 makes clear that Enoch's orchard corresponds to the garden of Adam and Eve, whereas the correspondence is not explicit in I 14.

[6]E. g. կիւլէշ, "wrestling" (Abel and Cain 18), ասմայ, "vine" (Abel and Cain 19, 2x), աղրտաղ, a name for unlikely that recension II, at least in its present form, is much older than the early eighteenth century date of the oldest surviving manuscript. The readings in II consistently show a closer relationship to B and D than to other manuscripts of recension I.

The text and translation of II presented below is divided into paragraphs and verses corresponding to those in recension I in order to facilitate comparison.

Mt. Masis (Tidings 44), and լեշ , "corpse" (Tidings 45). Three of these words (կիւլէշ , աղրտաղ , and the first appearance of սամայ) may originally have been within marginal glosses which were incorporated into the text, since in each case they appear in parenthetical remarks designed to explain the meaning of Armenian words found in the text. The two remaining examples may not be thus explained.

ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ԵՒ ՃԱՌ, ՎԱՍՆ ՍՏԵՂԾՄԱՆՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ ԵՒ ՄԱՐԴԱՆԱԼՈՅՆ ՔՐԻՍՏՈՍԻ ԱՍՏՈՒԾՈՅ ՄԵՐՈՅ

1. Նախ ըստեղծ Տէր Աստուած զդասս հրեշտակաց եւ հրեշտակապետաց, ի վեր եւ բարձր արար քան զամենայն հրեշտակս զՍաղայէլ եւ զԳաբրիէլ եւ մեծ փառօք զարդարեաց զնոսա: 2. Իսկ ամենայն հրեշտակք եւ հրեշտակապետք օրհնէին զովէին եւ փառաւոր առնէին զԱստուած:

3. Եւ պիղծն Սատանայ հպարտացաւ եւ ոչ կամէր օրհնել զԱստուած. այլ կամէր եւս բարձրագոյն բազմիլ յաթոռս հաւասար աթոռոյն Աստուծոյ: 4. Եւ բարկացաւ Տէրն հրամայեաց ուռնաւոր սերովբէիցն եւ բազմաչեայ քերովբէիցն, եւ ամենայն երկնաւոր զօրացն, որք հարին զդասսն Սատանայի եւ թօթափեցին զամենայն զունդսն դիւաց. եւ ի վայր հարին որպէս կարկուտ ի յամպոյն:

5. Իսկ բարերարն Աստուած փոխանակ հպարտութեան Սաղայէլի ըստեղծ զԱդամ, զի հողեղէն մարդօք լնուցու զտեղի նորա: 6. Եւ արկ զթմբրութիւն ի վերայ Ադամայ, եւ էառ զմի կողիցն նորա եւ ելից ընդ այնր մարմին եւ եղեւ կինն. իբրեւ զարթեաւ Ադամ ի քնոյ, ետես զկինն եւ հաւանեցաւ: 7. Եւ ասաց, ահա սա ոսկր յոսկերաց իմոց, եւ մարմին ի մարմնոյ իմոյ. սա կոչեսցի կին:

8. Իսկ Տէր Աստուած տարեալ եդ զնոսա ի մէջ դրախտին Ադինայ որ է փառօք լի եւ միջասահման. եդ ի վերայ նոցա պատուէր եւ ասաց, թէ ուտելով կերիցէք զամենայն պտուղ դրախտին բայց ի պտղոյ գիտութեան մի ուտիցէք. զի յորժամ ուտիցէք մահու վաղճանեսջիք: 9. Վասն այն պատուէր եդ ի վերայ նոցա. զի փորձեսցէ եւ տեսցէ թէ պահէին զպատուիրանն Տեառն. եւ թէ ոչ զփշալից աշխարհն ժառանգեսցեն:

10. Իսկ պիղծն Սատանայ, նախանձեալ վասն Ադամայ, կամէր մտանել ի դրախտն: 11. Եւ ահա բեկեալ ի հրեշտակաց եւ ոչ կարէր.
ապա օձն էր թեւաւոր եւ ունէր լեզու, եւ էր գեղեցիկ եւ իմաստուն քան զամենայն կենդանի, մտանէր ի դրախտն եւ ելանէր: 12. Իսկ ամենաչարն Սատանայ ուսոյց օձին եւ խաբեաց զԱդամ: 13. Քանզի օձն տեսեալ զԵւա զի ճաշակէր յամենայն պտղոյ դրախտին. եւ ի մի ծառոյն ոչ ուտէր:

14. Իբրեւ հեռացաւ Ադամ եւ շրջէր ի դրախտն, օձն խօսեցաւ ընդ Եւայի եւ ասաց ընդէ՞ր յամենայն ծառոց ճաշակես, եւ յայդ մին ծառոյն ոչ ճաշակես որ գեղեցիկ է տեսլեամբ:

15. Ասէ Եւայ, զի Աստուած ասաց յորժամ ուտէք ի ծառոյդ
մահու մեռանիք:

16. Իսկ օձն ասէ, Աստուած զձեզ խաբեաց. զի յառաջ
Աստուած մարդ էր իբրեւ զձեզ. երբ կերաւ ի պտղոյ անտի, նա այն մեծ փառքին հասաւ: 17. Վասն այն ասաց ձեզ չուտել. զի մի կերեալ հաւասար լինիք Աստուծոյ:

18. Իբրեւ լուաւ զխրատ օձին, ցանկացաւ աստուածանալ.
փութապէս կտրեաց եւ կերաւ ի պտղոյն. եւ առժամայն մերկացաւ:
19. Իսկ եկն Ադամ եւ տեսեալ զկինն մերկացեալ, դառնացաւ եւ ասէ, այս ինչ՞ է զոր դու գործեցեր. ընդէ՞ր կերեր ի պտղոյդ եւ մերկացար:

20. Ասէ Եւա, խիստ քաղցր է պտուղս եւ բարեհամ առ դու եւս կեր. նա կամէր խաբել զԱդամ:

21. Ասէ Ադամ. ուտեմ եւ ես քեզ նման մերկանամ:

22. Եւ ասէ Եւա. ես շատ կերայ վասն այն մերկացայ. դու սակաւ կեր:

23. Ասէ Ադամ. ոչ կարեմ ճաշակել եւ քեզ նման լինիլ:

24. Ասէ Եւա. թէպէտ եւ դու շատ ուտիցես ոչ մերկասցին, զի սիրէ զքեզ Աստուած:

25. Իբրեւ զայս լսեց Ադամ, էառ զպտուղն ի ձեռն բայց վախէր ուտել: 26. Իսկ Եւա լայր եւ աղաչէր զնա եւ ասէր. կեր եւ մի որոշեր զիս ի քեզանէ. թէ ապրիմք ի միասին ապրիմք. եւ թէ մեռանիմք ի միասին մեռանիմք: 27. Իսկ Ադամ բազում քննութեամբ առնէր զպտուղն ի ձեռն մինչեւ երեք ժամ. երբեմն կամէր ուտել եւ երբեմն ոչ: 28. Բայց երբ հայէր կնոջ յաղաչանքն եւ յարտասուքն, ողորմութիւն անկանէր ի սիրտն: 29. Երբ զմերկութիւն տեսանէր, վախէր ուտել. երբ զգեղեցկութիւն տեսանէր, խելքն ի գլխոյն թափէր: 30. Թէպէտ մերկացեալ էր. բայց գեղեցիկ էր զի նորաստեղծ էր եւ իբրեւ սպիտակ մարգարիտ փայլ էր: 31. Իսկ Ադամ վասն սիրոյն կնոջն ոչ կարաց պահել զինքն եւ կերաւ ի պտղոյն, եւ մերկացաւ ի լուսոյն: 32. Ապա վասն մերկութեան ամօթոյն մտեալ ի ներքս թզենւոյն ծածկեցաւ ընդ տերեւովն, զի մի տեսցէ Աստուած. քանզի հանապազ գայր Աստուած եւ խօսէր ընդ նոսա սիրով եւ հանդարտութեամբ: 33. Եւ տեսեալ Ադամայ եւ Եւայի զոտնաձայնն Տէրն գալոյն Աստուծոյ զոր իբրեւ յիսուն կանգնաչափ բարձր ի վերայ թզենւոյն ձայնեաց բարկութեամբ եւ ասէ ո՞ւր ես Ադամ:

34. Ասէ Ադամ. Տէր զքո ձայնդ լուայ եւ երկեայ մերկ էի եւ թաքեայ:

35. Ասէ Աստուած. ո՞չ ասացի քեզ թէ մի ուտեր ի պտղոյ անտի. զի յորժամ ուտես մերկանաս եւ մեռանիս. 36. Ընդէ՞ր կերար։

37. Ասէ Ադամ. Տէր այս կինն զոր դու ստեղծէր սա խաբեաց զիս։

38. Դարձեալ Տէրն խօսեցաւ ընդ Եւայի. թէ ընդէ՞ր կերար ի պտղոյն։

39. Ասէ Եւա. Տէր այս օձս զոր դու ստեղծեր սա խաբեաց զիս։

40. Եւ բարկացեալ Տէրն ի վերայ օձոյն եւ ասէ. դու օձդ որ փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ անիծեալ լիցիս ի մէջ ամենայն զազանաց եւ ամենայն կենդանեաց. ի վերայ լանջաց քոց եւ ի վերայ որովայնի քոյ սողալով գնասցես եւ հող կերիցես զամենայն աւուրս կենաց քոց։ 41. Եւ եդից զթշնամութիւն ի մէջ քո եւ ի մէջ զաւակի դորա, դու սպասեսցես դորա զարշապարին, եւ դա սպասեսցէ քում գլխոյ։ 42. Եւ դարձեալ ասաց ցկինն. փոխանակ զի արարեր զայդ. տրտմութեամբ եւ ցաւօք ծնցիս եւ ծնունդ քո ի մահ փոխանակեսցի։ 43. Եւ դարձեալ առ Ադամ ասաց. փոխանակ զի թողեր զպատուէր իմ եւ լսեցեր կնոջ քոյ փոխանակ անմահ տնկոցս փուշ բուսանի քեզ. քրտամբք երեսաց քոց կերիցես զհաց քո. զի հող էիր եւ ի հող դարձցիս։ 44. Եւ հրամայեաց հրեշտակաց հանել զնոսա ի դրախտէն. եւ հրեղէն զաւազանաւն պահել զճանապարհ դրախտին։

45. Զի ոչ թէ պտուղն չար էր որ կերան եւ մերկացան. զի չար պտուղն ինչ կանէր ի դրախտն. զի պտուղն բարի էր բայց Աստուած զայն պտուղն պազ եդիր Ադամայ։ 46. Թէ պահեալ էր զԱստուծոյ խօսքն եւ չէր կերեալ զպազն այլ յետոյ ուտէր, բարձրանայր ի վերինն Երուսաղէմ. զի փորձեաց զնա Աստուած։ 47. Ապա եսես որ ոչ պահեաց զհրատն Աստուծոյ այլ փութապէս լսեցին զհրաս օձին եւ ցանկացան աստուածութիւն. վասն այն բարկացաւ Աստուած։ 48. Դարձեալ վասն այն եկն ի վերայ թզենւոյն եւ հարցաւ թէ ո՞ւր ես Ադամ. վասն այն հարցանէր թերեւս մեղայ ասեն եւ թողութիւն գտանեն: 49. Երբ տեսաւ Տէրն որ զպատճառն ի ստեղծօղն ասացին. վասն այն բարկացեալ Աստուած ի վերայ նոցա. եւ արտաքսեաց զնոսա ի դրախտէն:

50. Եւ անկան ի տեղի մթին եւ աղջամղջին քաղցած եւ ծարաւած մինչեւ վեց օր: 51. Ապա դարձեալ ողորմեցաւ Տէրն ի վերայ նոցա եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակն հանել զԱդամ ի խաւարային տեղեաց. եւ բերել ի լոյս աշխարհ. եւ եցոյց նմա գործել զերկիր, եւ ի պտղոյ նորա կերակրիլ: 52. Իսկ նոքա իբրեւ տեսին զարեգակն եւ զլուսին, ուրախացան մինչեւ յերեկոյն եւ ոչ գիտէին թէ արեգակն մտանէ եւ ելանէ. ապա հանց որ մտաւ արեգակն եւ մթացաւ երկիր նոցա եւ խաւար կալաւ զնոսա, տրտմութեամբ լացին զգիշերն ամենայն:

53. Այսքան առ այս վասն Ադամայ: 54. Զոր Տէր Աստուած փրկեալ ազատեսցէ զձեզ ի խաբէութենէ չարին Սատանայի. եւ արժանի արասցէ արդար դատաստանին. եւ արքայութեան լուսոյն ամէն:

ՎԱՍՆ ԵԼԱՆԵԼՈՑՆ ԱԴԱՄԱՑ ԵՒ ԵՒԱՑԻ Ի ԴՐԱԽՏԷՆ

1. Յորժամ Ադամ անկաւ ի լուսոյն, սակաւ մի ուրախացաւ ի վերայ լուսոյ արեգականն թէպէտ չէր հաւասար արեգական լոյսն արքայութեան լուսոյն. բայց լոյս էր. նա ոչ գիտէր թէ ի մայրն մտանէր արեգակն: 2. Իսկ որ մթացաւ եւ երեկոյ եղեւ, այնպէս թուեցաւ նոցա թէ մութ եղեւ եւ այլ ոչ լուսանայ. քանզի դրախտն հանապազ լոյս էր. եւ նոյնպէս գիտէին թէ աշխարհս ամենայն լուսով լինի. զի ոչ գիտէին թէ ցերէկն գիշեր կու փոխի. վասն որոյ իբրեւ մտաւ արեգակն, եւ մթացաւ օրն, նա այնպէս իմացան թէ այլ չի լուսանայր. վասն որոյ լացին եւ կոծեցին մինչեւ ցառաւօտն:

3. Իսկ ի հաւախօսին եկեալ Սատանայ ի կերպս հրեշտակի եւ ասէ ցԱդամ. ընդէ՞ր տրտմիք:

4. Ասէ Ադամ. վասն այն տրտմիմք եւ լամք զի ստեղծեալ էր զմեզ Աստուած, եւ եդեալ ի մէջ դրախտին լուսեղէն. եւ պատրանօք օձին կերաք ի պտղոյն. եւ արտաքսեցաք ի դրախտէն. եւ անկաք ի տեղիս այս խաւար մթին: 5. Արդ կրկին ողորմեցաւ մեզ Աստուած. եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր հանեալ զմեզ ի խաւարէս եբեր ի լոյս աշխարհս: 6. Այլ ոչ գիտեմք թէ ինչ չար գործեցաք որ բարկացաւ Աստուած ի վերայ մեր եւ խաւար կալաւ զմեզ:

7. Ասէ Սատանայ. ինչ՞ տուիք այն հրեշտակին որ եբեր զձեզ ի լոյս աշխարհս:

8. Ասէ Ադամ. ինչ՞ ունէաք որ տայաք:

9. Ասէ Սատանայ պարտ էր ձեզ ծառայ լինիլ նմա եւ

զամենայն ծնունդս ձեր խոստանալ նմա. երբ զայդ ոչ արարիք վասն այն խաւար կալաւ զձեզ:

10. Ասէ Ադամ. յափշութիւն կալաւ զմեզ եւ զայդ ոչ իմացաք:

11. Ասէ Սատանայ. զի՞նչ տայք ինձ թէ տամ ձեզ զաւետիքն լուսոյ:

12. Ասէ Ադամ. եթէ միւսանգամ լոյս տեսանիցեմք ծառայ լինիմք քեզ մեք եւ ամենայն ծնունդն մեր:

13. Իսկ Սատանայ ցոյց ետ նոցա յարեւելս եւ ասաց. անտի տեսանէք զլոյս:

14. Զայս ասաց Սատանայ եւ սակաւ մի հեռացաւ. իսկ Ադամ եւ Եւայ հայէին ընդ արեւելս եւ տեսանէին զի նշան լուսոյ երեւէր արեգականն. կատարեալ խնդացին: 15. Իբրեւ սակաւ մի բարձրացաւ, եկն առ նա Սատանայ եւ ասէ. տեսանէք զաւետիսն իմ որ ուրախացուցի զձեզ:

16. Ասէ Ադամ. ծառայ եմք քեզ եւ աւետեաց քոց. զի դու լուսաւորեցեր զմեզ. զի ծառայեմք քեզ մեք եւ ամենայն ծնունդն մեր:

17. Իսկ Սատանայ բերեալ քար մի եւ եդ առաջի Ադամայ եւ ասէ. դիր զձեռն քո ի վերայ քարիդ եւ ասա այսպէս. մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի, եւ անմահն մեռանի ամենայն ծնունդն իմ քեզ եղիցի: 18. Եւ եթէ ոչ ասէք այսպէս. դարձեալ խաւար բերեմ առ ձեզ:

19. Իսկ Ադամ զձեռն ի վերայ եդեալ ասաց թէ մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի եւ անմահն մեռանի ամենայն ծնունդն մեր ծառայ քո եղիցի:

20. Եւ մնաց նշան ձեռացն ի վերայ քարին: 21. Այն եղեւ ձեռագիր Ադամայ ի ձեռն Սատանայի. իսկ Սատանայ տարեալ զձեռագիր քարն թաղեաց ի գետն Յորդանանու:

ԵԼԱՆԵԼ

22. Դարձեալ իբրեւ երեկոյ եղեւ մտաւ արեգակն ի մայրն. զիտաց Ադամ որ խաբեցաւ, լացին եւ ողբացին մինչեւ հինգ օր անօթի եւ ծարաւ: 23. Աղաչեցին զԱստուած եւ յետ հինգ աւուրցն լուաւ Աստուած աղօթից նոցա եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր. եւ աւետեաց Ադամայ վասն մարդանալոյն Տեառն Աստուծոյ եւ ազատիլն ի ձեռաց Սատանայի: 24. Եւ ետուր Ադամայ զձեռագիրն Աստուծոյ. եւ էր գրեալ այսպէս. մի տրտմիր Ադամ. խաբեաց զքեզ Սատանայ. վասն այն որ ասաց թէ մինչեւ անծինն ծնանի. եւ անմահն մեռանի. զի անծինն ես եմ. եւ անմահ աստուածութիւն. զոր ի վեց դարուն առաքեցից զմիածին որդին իմ ի լուսոյ աստուածութեան իմոյ: 25. Եւ մարմին առցէ ի սուրբ եւ յանարատ կուսէ. զոր ի զաւակէն քումմէ եղիցի որդին իմ, որդի քո: 26. Զի անծինն ծնանի եւ ջնջէ զձեռագիր յանցանաց քոց. եւ դարձուցէ զքեզ յառաջին փառսն քո:

27. Իբրեւ զայս աւետիսն լուաւ ուրախ եղեւ. զի վեց դարն իբրեւ ժամ մի համարէր վասն աւետեացն հրեշտակին: 28. Որ նոյն ողորմութեամբն ողորմեսցի Քրիստոս Աստուած ձեզ եւ մեզ. Ամէն:

ՊԱՏՄՈՒԹԻՒՆ ՑԱՂԱԳՍ ԿԱՅԷՆԻ ԵՒ ԱԲԷԼԻ

1. Այս էր պատուէրն Ադամայ զոր պատուիրեաց որդւոցն իւրոց եւ ասաց, թէ յորժամ ելայ ի դրախտէն եւ անկայ յաշխարհս խաւարային, դարձեալ ողորմեցաւ ինձ Աստուած եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր եւ եբեր զիս ի լոյս. եւ որքան կենդանիք կային զամենեսեան հնազանդեցոյց ինձ։ 2. Եւ զեզն լծեալ ետ ի ձեռս իմ եւ ուսոյց նովաւ վարել եւ վաստակել եւ զործել զերկիր եւ ճաշակել ի պտղոյ նորա եւ լիանալ եւ ապրիլ. այլ եւ հրամայեաց ինձ յամենայն պտղոյ բաժին հանել Աստուծոյ։ 3. Վասն որոյ Ադամ պատուէր ետ զնոյն կատարել որդւոց իւրոց զի Ադամայ առաջին զաւակն Կայէն էր եւ յետ նորա Աբէլ։

4. Յորժամ եղեւ Կայէն յիսուն ամաց եւ Աբէլ քսան ամաց, Կայէն հողազործ էր եւ Աբէլ հովիւ ոչխարաց։ 5. Իսկ Ադամ խրատեաց զորդիքն իւր եւ ասէ. յամենայն ընչից ձերոց տասնէն զմէկն բաժին հանել Աստուծոյ։ 6. Իբրեւ եղեւ ծնունդն ոչխարաց Աբէլի, նա մէկն հազար եղեւ. ապա ընտրեաց զլաւն եւ զընտիրն խաշանց զգերն եւ զպարարտն տալ Աստուծոյ բաժին. բայց ոչ մատոյց Աստուծոյ վասն եղբօրն թէ քոյն եւս հասնին հունձք. ապա ի միասին մատուսցուք զբաժինն Աստուծոյ։ 7. Իբրեւ հասին հունձք ցորենոյ Կայէնին. նա զատեաց զքամատարն եւ զմնացեալ ոտնակոխն եւ զփուշն հանեց բաժին Աստուծոյ. եւ ժողովեաց իբրեւ դէզ մի։

8. Ապա եբեր Աբէլ զընտրեալ զառինսն եւ մեծարեաց զԿայէն վասն Աստուծոյ ասելով սիրելի եղբայր իմ, դու մեծ ես եւ ես փոքր ծառայ քոյ. յառաջ դու մատո զբաժինն Աստուծոյ. եւ ապա

ես։ 9. Իսկ Կայէն կանգնեցաւ յաղօթս առ Տէր եւ ասաց. դու Տէր ստեղծօղ ամենայնի. ահա քրտամբք իմովք վաստակեցի եւ վարեցի, ձեռօքս ժողովեցի եւ ի յուս բարձեալ բերի բաժին քեզ. արդ ընկալ զզոհս իմ որպէս հաճոյ է քեզ այնպէս արա։ 10. Եւ Տէրն բարկացեալ ի վերայ Կայէնի. վասն որոյ ամպ մի սեւացեալ եկն ի վերայ Կայէնի որոտաց եւ թնդաց. եւ ել հողմ եւ քամի ի նմանէ եւ ցրուեաց զամենայն հասկս նորա. եւ ոչ մնաց մի ցորեան. եւ Կայէնի երեսքն սեւացան որպէս զործելի։

11. Իսկ Աբէլ մատոյց զողջակէզսն անդրանիկ զառանցն առաջի Աստուծոյ. եւ զձեռսն տարածեալ աղաղակեաց եւ ասէ Տէր Աստուած ստեղծօղ եւ արարիչ ամենայն բարութեանց աղաչեմ զքեզ ընկալ զնուէրս իմ զոր մատուցանեմ քեզ բաժին, զի ի քո տուեալ բարի պարգեւաց քոց քեզ մատուցանեմ աղաչեմ եւ պաղատիմ ընկալ ի հաճոյս բարերար կամաց քոց։ 12. Նոյն ժամայն քաղցր հողմն հնչեաց եւ լոյս ծագեաց յերկնից եւ լուսաւորեաց զերեսս Աբէլի. եւ եկն բարբառ որ ասէր լսելի եղեն աղօթք քո եւ ընդունեցի զընծայս քո։ 13. Եւ լուսափայլ ամպն հովանի եղեւ ի վերայ Աբէլի։

14. Իսկ Կայէն ոխացաւ ընդ Աբէլի եւ կամէր սպանանել զնա բայց ոչ գիտէր թէ որպէս սպանցէ զնա. զի դեռ չէր սպանումն եղեալ ի վերայ երկրի։ 15. Եւ եւս Աբէլ ոչ գիտէր զչար խորհուրդն Կայէնի. զի հանապազ ընդ իրեար ուտէին եւ խմէին եւ շրջէին։

16. Իսկ ի միում աւուր ասէ Կայէն ցեղբայր իւր. Աբէլ գնասցուք ի դաշտ ման գալ։ 17. Եւ ելեալ գնացին ի դաշտն. ապա Աբէլ ուժով էր քան զԿայէն վասն այն ոչ կարէր յայտնել զխորհուրդն իւր։ 18. Ապա սկիզբն արար խաղալ ընդ եղբօրն կշտի բռնելով որ է կիւլէշ. թէ կարէ գետնով տալ եւ կապել զնա քանզի որչափ կուշտի բռնեցին, Կայէն ոչ կարաց յաղթել զեղբայրն:

19. Եւ ել Կայէն հայեցաւ աստ եւ անդ, եւ ետես զխաղողի ճուղն որ ասմայ ասի. նա ասաց Աբէլի թէ եկ ասմայի մատիւ խաղացուք:
20. Դու զրկէ զճառն եւ ես երեք անգամ պատեմ ուռամբս. տեսանեմ թէ կարես կտրել զնա: 21. Դարձեալ դու ինձ արա նոյնպէս երեք անգամ պատէ զիս, տեսանեմք թէ որս է զօրեղ եւ ուժով:
22. Իբրեւ զրկեաց զճառն Աբէլ, նա Կայէն առեալ զուռն պատեաց ոտիւքն եւ ձեռօքն մինչեւ գզլուխն: 23. Ապա իմացաւ Աբէլ զչարութիւնն Կայէնի. զոր զոչեաց լալով առ եղբայրն եւ ասէր.
եղբայր իմ սիրելի աղաչեմ զքեզ արձակեա զիս. եւ որքան կենդանի եմ ծառայեմ քեզ: 24. Մի սպանաներ զիս. զի ես ոչ թշնամի եմ քեզ, այլ բարեկամ եւ միշտ հնազանդ հրամանաց քոց. ես առանց քեզ ոչ կարեմ ժամ մի կենալ: 25. Դու զիա՞րդ կատես զիս եւ առանց ինձ մնալ ի վերայ երկրի. եւ զեղբայրական սէրն իմ ինչպէ՞ս մոռանաս դու:

26. Իսկ Կայէն աստ եւ անդ շրջէր եւ ոչ գիտէր թէ որով պիտի սպանանել զնա: 27. Ապա Սատանայ եղեալ ի կերպս երկու ազռաւի եւ առեալ մինն քարասուրիկ քար մի, եւ նովաւ հարեալ զմիւսն եւ սպան զնա ի կլափէն, եւ քարն սուր էր որպէս ածելի:
28. Եւ Կայէն ուսեալ ի Սատանայէ, եւ առեալ զքարն եւ վազեաց ի վերայ եղբօրն: 29. Իբրեւ շատ աղաչեաց Աբէլ զեղբայրն եւ ոչ լսեց նմա: 30. Եւ ասաց Աբէլ. եկ եղբայր մի անգամ համբուրեմ զքեզ. զի ոչ մնամ կարօտ ի քէն: 31. Այլ Կայէն ոչ ետ պատասխանի. ըմբռնեալ զքարն ի խոչակն եւ տարբերեալ խազխզէր, եւ քարն փոքր էր եւ ոչ կտրատէր: 32. Նա լալով աղաղակէր ասելով թէ ինչպէս ճուղապ կու տաս ծնողացն իմոց. զի ինձէն խապար չունին նոքա որ ի նոցանէ հալալութիւն առնէի. քանզի բազում աշխատանք ունին յինձ վերայ. եւ դու որպէս կենաս ի վերայ երկրի։ 33. Եւ ամենեւին ոչ լսեց. այլ չարաչար բռնութեամբ հազիւ մորթեց զեղբայրն. եւ եղ կապեալ այնպէս ի ծառին։

34. Եւ ինքն գնաց իբրեւ ուրախութեամբ. ապա երեւեցաւ Աստուած ի վերայ ամպոյ յիսուն կանգնաչափ հեռի. եւ ասաց Կայէնին ու՞ր է եղբայրն քո Աբէլ։

35. Ասէ Կայէն, ե՞ր տուիր ինձ պահ, որ ինձանէ խնդրես. մի թէ ես պահապան էի նմա։ 36. Եւ բարկացաւ Աստուած ի վերայ Կայէնի. թէ երբ պահապան չէիր սպանող վասն է՞ր եղեր։ 37. Վասն որոյ եւթն պատժոք պատուհասեաց զԿայէն. զի ի հարցանելն Աստուծոյ զնա քաղցրութեամբ յապաշխարութիւն կոչեաց. թէ զղջացեալ մեղայ զոչէ։

38. Յորոյ ճակատն կոտօշ բուսաւ. ուր եւ երթայր ձայն կու տայր կոտօշ. առաջին պատուհասն այս է. թէ սա է եղբայրասպանն Կայէն։

39. Երկրորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ բոլոր մարմինն դողդոջէր։

40. Երրորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ քանի ուտէր, ոչ կշտանայր։

41. Չորրորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ ինչ որ ուզէր նա ոչ հասանէր ուտել եւ ընդ վայր խուզէր։

42. Հինգերորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ յաչքն ամենեւին քուն չէր մտանէր։

43. Վեցերորդ պատուհասն այն էր, զի հանապազ լալով եւ դողալով շրջէր։

44. Եօթներորդ պատուհասն այն էր, որ Աստուած մահ ոչ հրամայեաց Կայէնի։ 45. Այլ ասաց թէ ինչ մարդ որ զԿայէն սպանանէ, նա ցաւն առ սպանողն դարձցի։ 46. Եւ ապրեցաւ Կայէն եօթն հարիւր յիսուն եւ երեք տարի. զի զմահն կուզէր եւ ոչ մեռանէր:

47. Ի ժամանակին յայնմիկ Ղամէք ձիաւորեալ հանապազ գնայր որսանել. իսկ Կայէն անճար մնաց վասն մահուն իւրոյ ապա հնարս իմացաւ առեալ մորթ մի վայրենի ի ծոցն, գնաց ի լեառն եւ եղեւ ընծոյ նման եւ անկաւ ի ճանապարհին:

48. Իսկ Ղամէք ելաւ գնաց յորս առնել. եւ ետես զԿայէն եհար նետիւ եւ սպան զնա: 49. Ապա ցաւն Կայէնի անկաւ ի վերայ Ղամէքայ. եւ բուսաւ կոտոշ ի գլուխն: 50. Իսկ Ղամէքայ կինն բարի էր. առ Տէր աղաղակեաց, եւ այնչափ ելաց որ յաչերէն արիւն կաթեցաւ փոխանակ արտասուացն: 51. Զոր ետես Աստուած զարտասուսն եւ զաղաչանք կնոջն, ողորմեցաւ Աստուածն ամենայնի. եւ բժշկեաց զցաւն Ղամեքայ:

52. Դարձեալ յորժամ իմացան Ադամ եւ Եւայ զսպանումն Աբէլի, գնացեալ բերին արեամբ շաղախեալ զմարմինն Աբէլի. որ եւ կոծ մեծ առին լալով եւ ողբալով. եւ միշտ սուգ կենային ի բազում ժամանակս: 53. Ապա յորժամ թաղեցին զմարմինն Աբէլի, նա ելանէր յերես հողոյն. զի հանապազ արիւնն ոչ ցամաքէր. ոչ հոտէր եւ ոչ որդնէր. զի էր իբրեւ զքուն. ոչ փտէր, եւ ոչ հող լինէր: 54. Քանզի Աստուած նախ Ադամայ ասաց հող լինիլ. եւ ապա ի նմանէ ծնելոցն. վասն որոյ պիտէր յառաջ Ադամ մեռանէր եւ ի հող դառնայր, ապա ծնունդ նորա մեռանէր եւ ի հող դառնայր: 55. Մինչեւ ի մահն Ադամայ այլ ոչ ոք մեռաւ. վասն այն ոչ ի հող դառնայր մարմինն Աբէլի: 56. Ապա երբ Ադամ մեռաւ եւ թաղեցաւ, նա ապա տեղ ետուր որ թաղեցին զԱբէլ ի գերեզմանի:

57. Բայց յորժամ Ադամ եւ կինն իւր տեսանէին զԱբէլ արեամբ շաղախեալ, եւ զԿայէն պատուհասեալ, վասն կոծոյն եւ սգոյն իւրեանց այլ ոչ մերձեցան առ միմեանս, զի մի այլ մեծ սուգ գայ ի վերայ ինքեանց վասն զաւակացն: 58. Իսկ Աստուած ողորմեցաւ եւ առաքեաց աւետիք վասն ծնանելոյն Սեթայ. զոր եւ մխիթարութիւն ետ վասն Աբէլի: 59. Որ եւ զծեզ մխիթարեսցէ յամենայն տրտմութեանց ծերոց. Ամէն:

ՎԱՍՆ ԱՒԵՏԵԱՑՆ ՍԷԹԱՅ ԶՈՐ ԵՏ ԱՍՏՈՒԱԾ ԱԴԱՄԱՅ ՅԱՂԱԳՍ ԱԲԷԼԻ ԶՈՐ ՍՊԱՆ ԿԱՅԷՆ Ի ՄԽԻԹԱՐԵԼ ԶԱԴԱՄ ԵՒ ԶԵՒԱՅ

1. Եւ Տէրն քաղցրացաւ ի վերայ Ադամայ եւ առաքեաց զհրեշտակ իւր եւ ետ զաւետիս վասն Սէթայ, եւ ասաց Ադամայ թէ մերձեցիր առ կին քո, եւ լինի քեզ որդի. եւ անուանեսցես զանուն նորա Սէթ, որ թարգմանի մխիթարութիւն. նա եղիցի զաւակ օրհնեալ եւ գլուխ նահապետաց:

2. Ասէ Ադամ. ոչ կամիմ մերձենալ ի կինդ. զի երկու անգամ մերձեցայ եւ ինձ մեծ սուգ եղեն քան զելանելն իմ ի դրախտէն. զի զԿայէն տեսանեմ որ այնպէս ցաւագնեալ դողդոջայ, սարսափի եւ մորմոքի սիրտ իմ, եւ զալարին աղիք իմ. ապա զԱբէլ տեսանեմ արեամբ շաղախեալ, նա ցաւի սիրտ իմ եւ արտասուք իմ իբրեւ արիւն կու հեղանի. թէ դարձեալ մերձենամ ի կին եւ լինի զաւակ, վախեմ թէ այլ նոր սուգ բերէ ինձ:

3. Ասէ հրեշտակն. տալոց է քեզ Աստուած բարի որդի, եւ անուն նորա Սէթ որ թարգմանի մխիթարութիւն. նա եղիցի զաւակ օրհնեալ. զի որչափ դառնացար եւ տրտմեցար վասն Կայէնի եւ Աբէլի նոյնչափ խնդաս եւ մխիթարիս Սէթաւ: 4. Եւ բազմանան զաւակ քո եւ զաւակ Սէթայ. եւ նոքօք լցվի աշխարհս. բայց մի խառնակեսցիս ընդ ազգն Կայէնի. զի ընդ անիծիւք են նոքա. երբ խառնակին ազգն Կայէնի ընդ ազգն Սէթայ եւ այլ զաւակաց քոց նա նոքա եւս կորնչին հետ նոցա:

5. Ապա Կայէնի զաւակքն բազմացան եւ եղեն քսանեւչորք արու մարդ եւ երեք հարիւր ութսուն կին: 6. Զի Կայէն երկու

հարիւր երեսուն տարի էր որ ամուսնացեալ էր երբ Սէթ ծնաւ։
7. Քանզի Կայէն երեսուն տարու էր որ ամուսնացաւ. եւ Աբէլ քսան տարեկան էր։ 8. Եւ էր կոյս երբ սպան զնա։ 9. Իբրեւ ծնաւ Սէթ, եւ բազմացան ծնունդքն Սէթայ եւ այլ եղբարցն, ի բաց հալածէին զազգն Կայէնի եւ սրբութեամբ կային եւ ոչ ժառանգէին ընդ ազգն Կայէնին։

10. Իսկ բարի պտուղն Ենովք, եհարց ի հօրէն թէ վասն է՞ր լայք եւ միշտ տրտմիք եւ ոչ ուրախանայք։

11. Նա ասաց. յաղագս ճաշակման պտղոյն եւ արտաքսելոյն ի դրախտէն։

12. Վասն որոյ Ենովք երբ լսեց զայս նա ասաց ես վճարեմ զծեր պարտքն։ 13. Եւ ոչ ամուսնացաւ։ 14. Այլ տնկեաց այգի մի յօրինակ դրախտին. եւ ով ոք որ անցանէր, նա ի պտղոյն ճաշակէր.
եւ ինքն ոչ ամենեւին ուտէր ի պտղոյն։ 15. Այլ յերկաթէ զտակ մի եդ ի գլուխն. զի մի տեսցէ զպտուղ ծառոյն. քանզի վաթսուն տարի ի մեջ այգւոյն կեցաւ եւ ոչ կերաւ ի պտղոյ անտի։
16. Վասն այն քաղցրացաւ Աստուած եւ հրամայեաց հրեշտակաց որ բարձեալ զԵնովք տարան ի դրախտն. եւ է մինչեւ ցայսօր։ 17. Իսկ այլ որդիքն Սէթայ եւ Ադամայ երբ տեսին որ Ենովք վերացաւ մարմնով յերկինս, եւ վասն կուսութեան եւ պահուց հասաւ այնպիսի փառացն. ըստ որում բազումք յօժարեցան հրաժարիլ յաշխարհէս եւ կուսութեամբ ճգնիլ ի լերինս. եւ եղեն թիւք աւելի քան զհինգ հարիւր եւ քան ոգի։

18. Բայց ազգին Կայէնի յոյժ բազմացան աղջկունք եւ կանայք. զի զմէկ մարդն ի մէջ հարիւր կնոջ շրջեցուցանէին.
զորեւ կռուէին վասն մարդոյ, եւ յափշտակէին ի միմեանց։
19. Այլ եւ զնացին խառնակիլ յազգն Սէթայ։ 20. Եւ նոքա ոչ տային թոյլ այլ ծեծէին եւ վարէին զնոսա։

21. Իսկ նոքա անճար մնացին. նա սկսան պճնիլ եւ զարդարիլ եւ շինեցին ծարուրս եւ դեղեցին զերեսս իւրեանց եւ զծեռսն հինայեցին: 22. Եւ սահմանեցին զերգս եւ զքնարս ազգի ազգի տաղերօք, խաղօք եւ պարուք ծափս հարկանելով գնացին ի լերինս, եւ խաբեցին զճգնաւորսն եւ խառնակեցան ընդ նոսա: 23. Միայն զնոյ ոչ կարացին խաբել. եւ այլք ամենեքեան խառնակեցան եւ պղծեցան ընդ նոսա, իբրեւ զշուն լլկեցին զամենեսին. ոչ հայելով զքոյր եւ զդուստր:

24. Որեւ Աստուած բարկացաւ վասն մեղաց նոցա. եւ հրամայեաց հրեշտակին որ ասաց նոյի զի ամուսնասցի:

25. Ասէ Նոյ. ոչ կամիմ ամուսնանալ վասն անցաւոր աշխարհիս:

26. Ասէ հրեշտակն. բարկացեալ է Աստուած վասն մեղաց մարդկան, եւ կամի կորուսանել զնոսա ջրով: 27. Վասն այն հրամայեաց Աստուած քեզ կին առնուլ. զի դու եղիցիս նոր Ադամ. զի սոքա ամենեքեան ջրով խեղդին: 28. Եւ դու միայն ապրիս որդւովքդ եւ կանամբքդ. եւ դու լինիս սերմ եւ հայր աշխարհի:

29. Ասէ Նոյ. քանի տարի դեռեւս պիտի ապրիմ:

30. Ասէ հրեշտակն. վեց հարիւր տարեկան ես. այլ եւս երեքհարիւր եւ յիսուն տարի ապրիս:

31. Ասէ Նոյ. վերջն մահ է եւ աշխարհս անցաւոր. զի երեքհարիւր եւ յիսուն տարին իբրեւ երազ գիշերոյ անցնի: 32. Զիա՞րդ խառնիմ ի մեղս աշխարհի:

33. Ասէ հրեշտակն. հրամանք Աստուծոյ է, կատարել պարտիս. զի աղջիկ մի կայ կոյս եւ մաքուր ի մեղաց ի դստերացն Սէթայ եւ անուն նորա Նեմզար. առ զնա ի քեզ կնութիւն: 34. Եւ շինեսցես տապան երեքհարիւր կանգուն երկայնութիւն, յիսուն կանգուն լայնութիւն, եւ երեսուն կանգուն բարձրութիւն. եւ շինեա երեք տուն. վերնատուն, միջնատուն, եւ ներքնատուն:

35. Ձայս ասաց հրեշտակն եւ գնաց ի նմանէ: 36. Իսկ նա առեալ գնեմզար եւ ամուսնացաւ ընդ նմա: 37. Եւ սկիզբն արաւ տապան շինել ի վերայ բարձր բլրի միոյ. եւ որքան շինէին նա ձայն տայր ուրաքն եւ սղոցն եւ փայտն թէ պիտի ջրհեղեղ գայ յերկիրս: 38ա. Իսկ մարդիկն երբ լսէին, նա ծաղր առնէին ասելով. թէ յայս քան բարձր տեղիս ջուր պիտի հասնի. կամ դու որ զտապանդ շինես դու պիտի ապրիս եւ մեք խեղդուիմք. ապա դու ու՞ր պիտի ցան ցանես եւ այգի տնկես թէ երկիրս ջրասոյզ լինի: 38բ. Եւ ի կատարել ութսուն տարւոյն ապա աւարտ եղեւ տապանն: 38գ. Իսկ Նոյի եղեւ երեք որդի. Սեմ, Քամ, Աքեթ. եւ երեւեցաւ հրեշտակն Նոյի եւ ասաց թէ առ երեք որդւոց քոց կին ի զարմէն Սէթայ կոյս աղջկունս. որ են անուանքն Ձանազան, Ձարմանազան, Արազնազան: 38դ. Բայց կոյս պահես զորդիքն քո մինչեւ որ ելանես ի տապանէն, եւ արար այնպէս. եւ դարձեալ երեւեցաւ հրեշտակն եւ ասաց. մուտ ի տապան քո. զի լինի ջրհեղեղ:

38ե. Իսկ նա աղաղակեաց առ Տէր եւ ասէ. Տէր տուր համբերութիւն զի քարոզեցից, թերեւս դարձցին ի մեղաց: 38զ. Եւ Աստուած ներեաց ամս քսան զոր քարոզէր Նոյ ասելով, թէ դարձիք ի մեղաց զի դարձուսցէ Տէր զջրհեղեղ պատուհասն:

38է. Դարձեալ ծաղր առնէին զՆոյ եւ ասէին. զիտեմք զի ընդ վայր տանջեցար եւ փոշիմանեալ ես եւ վասն անճարութեան քոյ քարոզես. եւ զինչ տամք քեզ զգին տապանիդ եւ քակեմք եւ տուն շինեմք զփայտն նորա. եւ այլ բազում բանիւ տնազ առնէին զՆոյ: 38ը. Եւ յետ քսան տարւոյն հրամայեաց Աստուած Նոյի առնուլ զորդիսն եւ մտանել ի տապանն. իսկ Նոյ խնդրեաց համբերել ի Տեառնէ մինչեւ եւթն օր յառնուլ զորդիսն իւր ի տապանն: 38թ. Յոր եմուտ ինքն եւ կին իւր. ապա որդիքն եւ որդւոց

կանայքն:

39. Եւ երկու տախտակ էառ ի ժառքն եւ եհար զտախտակսն նա ժայն արժակեցաւ ի տախտակէն թէ, փախերուք եւ մտէք ի տապան, զի էհաս ջրհեղեղն: 40. Իսկ զազանք եւ անասունք լսեցին եւ հաւատացին. եւ եկին ինքեանք եւ աղաղակէին: 41. Եւ հրամայեաց Աստուած առնուլ զնոսա երկու երկու ի սրբոց թռչնոց. եւ յանասնոցն եւթն եւթն. եւ եդ զթռչունսն ի վերնատունն. ի միջնատունն Նոյ եւ որդիքն. իսկ ի ներքնատունն զազանքն եւ անասունքն: 42. Եւ յետ եւթն աւուր իբրեւ ժողովեաց զամենայն ի ներքս տապանին, ապա ծեփեաց զդրունսն ներքուստ եւ արտաքուստ. եւ ապա բացան սահմանք երկնից, եւ պատառեցաւ երկիր եւ բղխեաց աղբերակունս եւ ջուրք զետերաց արտահոսել. եւ յերկնից անձրեւն իբրեւ զետօրէն իջանէր: 43. Եւ ապա մարդիկք կամեցան փախչիլ ի տապանն, եւ ի նոյն խեղդեցան: 44. Մինչեւ քառասուն օր այնպէս առատանայր որ մինչեւ ծածկեցան ամենայն գլուխ լերանցն եւ ի սարերէն էանց յիսուն մարդուչափ աւելի. եւ մինչ ի մէկ տարի շուրջ եկեալ տապանն, եւ գնացեալ հանգեաւ ի լեառն Մասիսոյ որ այժմ ասեն աղրտաղ:

45. Յորում բացաւ Նոյ զպատուհասն եւ առաքեաց զագռաւն զի բերցէ նշան ցամաքի. եւ նա գնացեալ անկաւ ի լեշն այլ ոչ դարձաւ: 46. Եւ յետ երեք աւուրն արձակեաց զաղաւնին եւ գնացեալ եգիտ ցամաք եւ եբեր զՇուղ ձիթենւոյ: 47. Եւ բացեալ Նոյի զտապանն եւ ետես զգլուխ լերանցն եւ արձակեաց զամենայն թռչունսն:

48. Եւ յետ երեք ամսոյն ելաւ ինքն ի տապանէն եւ որդիքն իւր: 49. Եւ զամենայն կենդանիսն արձակեաց: 50. Ապա ի սուրբ կենդանեացն էառ յեւթնէն զմէկն եւ պատարագ մատոյց Աստուծոյ. եւ խնդրեաց յԱստուծոյ այլ ոչ պատուհասել ջրով զորդիս նորա: 51. Եւ ձայն եղեւ առ նա թէ ոչ կորուսանեմ այսպիսի պատուհասիւ: 52. Թէ մեղանչեն ինձ այլ ուրիշ խրատով խրատեցից զնոսա: 53. Եւ երեւեցոյց Նոյի զաղեղն ընդ ամպս կանանչ եւ կարմիր ընդ արեւելս եւ ասէ. այս է նշան ուխտին իմոյ: 54. Զի յորժամ ցուցանեմ զայն նշանն իմասցին ամենայն որդիքն քո. զի հասեալ է ողորմութիւն իմ ի վերայ նոցա:

55. Եւ անտի իջին յարկուռի եւ անդ բնակեցան դեռեւս դաշտն նա լի էր ջրով: 56. Իբրեւ բազմացան որդիք նորա, գնաց էջ ի Նախջըւան, եւ անդ բնակեցաւ: 57. Եւ յետ ջրհեղեղին ապրեցաւ Նոյ երեքհարիւր եւ յիսուն տարի. եւ անդ է գերեզմանն Նոյի: 58. Եւ կնոջ գերեզմանն ի Մարանդ է. որ մայր ասի անուն նորա: 59. Որոց աղօթիւք փրկեսցէ Տէր Աստուած զամենայն հաւատացեալս ի ջրհեղեղէ ցանկութեան աշխարհիս. Ամէն:

History and Sermon: Concerning the Creation of Adam and the Incarnation of Christ Our God

1. First the Lord God created the divisions of the angels and archangels; he made Sadael and Beliar above and higher than all the angels, and he adorned them with great glory. 2. Now all the angels and the archangels blessed, exalted, and glorified God.

3. But the detestable Satan was amazed and enraptured by the greatness of his own glory. Because of this he became arrogant and he did not want to bless God. Rather he wanted to sit on this very high throne, equal to God's throne.
4. But the Lord became angry <and> commanded the hammer-man of the Seraphim and of the many-eyed Cherubim and all the heavenly hosts, who smote the divisions of Satan and drove away all the legions of demons and beat them down like hail from a cloud.

5. And God the beneficent created Adam in place of arrogant Sadael, so that He might fill his place with earthen man. 6. And He brought a deep sleep upon Adam, and He took one of his ribs, and he filled in flesh in place of it, and it became woman. When Adam awoke from sleep, he saw the woman and approved. 7. And he said, "Behold, this is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh. She shall be called woman."

8. And the Lord God brought <them and> put them in the midst of the Garden of Eden, which is full of splendor, indeed <at> the center. He gave them a command and said, "You may eat every fruit of the garden, but from the fruit of knowledge you may not eat. For when you eat <it>, you shall die." 9. Because of this he gave them a command, so that he might test <them> and see if they would keep the Lord's commandment. And if not they would inherit the earth full of thorns.

10. Now the detestable Satan, being envious of Adam, wanted to enter the garden. 11. But behold he was discouraged by the angels and could not. Then the serpent had wings and a tongue; he was more handsome and wiser than all beasts, <and> he used to go in and out of the garden.
12. Now the abominable Satan taught the serpent, and he deceived Adam. 13. For the serpent saw that Eve would taste of every fruit of the garden, but from one tree she would not eat.

14. When Adam departed and was walking around in the garden, the serpent spoke to Eve and said, "Why do you taste of all the trees, but from this one tree which is beautiful in appearance you do not taste?"

15. Eve said, "Because God said, 'When you eat of that tree, you shall die.'"

16. But the serpent said, "God has deceived you, for formerly God was man like you. When he ate of that fruit, he attained this great glory. 17. That is why he told you not to eat, lest eating <it> you would become equal to God."

18. When she heard the advice of the serpent, she wanted to become divine. She promptly picked and ate of the fruit. And immediately she became stripped. 19. Now Adam came and saw his wife stripped, <and> he turned and said, "What is this you have done? Why did you eat of that fruit and become stripped?"

20. Eve said, "This fruit is extremely sweet and tasty; you take also <and> eat." She wanted to deceive Adam.

21. Adam said, "Shall I eat and be stripped like you?"

22. And Eve said, "I ate too much and was stripped because of that. You eat just a little."

23. Adam said, "I cannot taste it and become like you."

24. Eve said, "Even if you eat too much, you will not become stripped, because God loves you."

25. When Adam heard this he took the fruit into his hand, but he was afraid to eat. 26. But Eve cried and begged him and said, "Eat and do not separate me from you. If we live, let us live together, and if we die, let us die together." 27. Now Adam thoroughly examined the fruit in his hand for three hours. Now he would want to eat it, and then he would not. 28. But when he looked at the woman's begging and <her> tears, he felt pity in his heart. 29. When he saw her nakedness, he was afraid to eat. When he saw her beauty, he became foolish. 30. Even though she was stripped, she was nevertheless beautiful because she was newly created and she glistened like a white pearl. 31. But Adam, because of his love for the woman, could not restrain himself and he ate of the fruit and stripped himself of the light.

32. Then because he was ashamed of his nakedness, he went to the fig tree <and> hid himself under a leaf, lest God see him. For God used to come continually and spoke with them lovingly and gently. 33. And the Lord saw Adam and Eve's footprints, <and> God, who was about fifty cubits above the fig tree, came <and> cried out angrily and said, "Where are you, Adam?"

34. Adam said, "Lord, I heard your voice and I was afraid; I was naked and I hid."

35. God said, "Did I not say to you, 'Do not eat of that fruit, because when you eat it, you will be stripped and die?' 36. Why have you eaten it?"

37. Adam said, "Lord, this woman whom you created deceived me."

38. The Lord turned and said to Eve, "Why have you eaten of the fruit?"

39. Eve said, "Lord, this serpent whom you created deceived me."

40. And the Lord became angry at them. And he said, "Serpent, because you have done this, cursed are you among all wild beasts and all animals. Upon your breast and upon your belly you shall go crawling, and you shall eat dust all the days of your life. 41. And I shall put enmity between you and her seed; you shall watch for her heel and she shall watch for your head." 42. And he turned <and> said to the woman, "Because you have done this, in sorrow and in pain shall you give birth, and your giving birth will be changed into death." 43. And turning to Adam, he said, "Because you forsook my command and listened to your wife, thorns will spring forth to you in place of these immortal plants. By the sweat of your brow shall you eat your bread, for you were dust, and you shall return to dust." 44. And he commanded his angels to take them away from the garden, and to guard the path to the garden with a fiery rod.

45. For it was not that the fruit was evil which they ate and <on account of which> they were stripped. For what was evil fruit doing in the garden? For the fruit was good, but God set aside the fruit <as> Adam's fast. 46. If he had kept God's word and had not eaten during the fast, but rather had eaten afterwards, he would have ascended to the heavenly Jerusalem. For God tested him. 47. Then he saw that he did not follow God's advice, but immediately they listened to the serpent's advice and longed for divinity. Because of this God became angry. 48. Again because of that he came over the fig tree and asked, "Where are you, Adam?" Because of this he asked it; perhaps they might repent and find forgiveness. 49. When the Lord saw that they said the fault was in the creator, that is why God became angry at them. And he drove them out of the garden.

50. And they fell into a dark and gloomy place, hungry and thirsty for six days. 51. Then the Lord again took pity on them, and he sent his angel to take Adam away from the gloomy place. And he brought <him> into the light of the world, and he showed him how to till the soil and to eat of its fruit. 52. Now when they saw the sun and the moon, they rejoiced until the evening. But they did not know that the sun sets and rises. Then as the sun set, the earth became gloomy for them and darkness seized them, and they wept sorrowfully all night.

53. So much concerning Adam. 54. Whom the Lord God saved, <and> may he redeem you from the wicked Satan's deception and make <you> worthy of the just judgment and of the kingdom of light. Amen.

Concerning the Expulsion of Adam and Eve from the Garden

1. When Adam fell from the light, he rejoiced a little over the light of the sun. Even though the light of the sun was not equal to the light of the kingdom, nevertheless it was light. He did not know that the sun sets in the west. 2. Now when it became dark and evening arrived, likewise it seemed to them that darkness had come and there would not be light again. Since there was always light in the garden, they thought all this world would be with light. For they did not know that day follows night. Hence when the sun set and the day became dark, they thus thought there would not be light again. Therefore they wept and lamented till morning.

3. Now at daybreak Satan came in the form of an angel and he said to Adam, "Why are you sad?"

4. Adam said, "We are sad and we weep because God created us and put us in the midst of the bright garden, but by the serpent's deception we ate of the fruit and we were driven out of the garden, and we fell into this place of dark gloom. 5. Then God had double pity on us and sent his angel, <and> he took us out of the darkness and brought us into the light of the world. 6. But we do not know that we have done any evil such that God became angry at us and darkness seized us."

7. Satan said, "Did you give something to that angel who brought you into the bright world?"

8. Adam said, "Did we have something which we could give?"

9. Satan said, "You should have become his servant and promised all your offspring to him. When you did not do this, consequently darkness seized you."

10. Adam said, "Greed seized us and we did not understand that."

11. Satan said, "What will you give to me if I give you the good news of light?"

12. Adam said, "If we could see light again, we would become your servants, we and all our offspring."

13. Then Satan showed them the east and said, "You (will) see light there."

14. Satan said this and withdrew a little. Then Adam and Eve looked to the east and saw that the sign of the sun's light had appeared. They rejoiced completely. 15. When it had risen a little, Satan came to him and said, "Do you see my good news, that I made you rejoice?"

16. Adam said, "We are servants to you and your good news, for you gave us light. For we shall serve you, we and all our offspring."

17. Then Satan brought a stone and set it before Adam, and he said, "Put your hand upon this stone and say thus, 'Until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies, all my offspring will be yours.' 18. And if you do not say so, I will bring darkness to you again."

19. Then Adam put his hand upon <the stone and> said, "Until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies, all our offspring will be your servants."

20. And the sign of the hands upon the stone remained. 21. This was Adam's promissory note in Satan's hand. Now Satan brought the stone promissory note <and> buried it in the river Jordan.

22. Again when the evening came the sun set in the west. Adam knew that he had been deceived; they wept and groaned for five days, fasting and thirsty. 23. They beseeched God, and after five days God heard their prayers and sent his angel. And he announced to Adam about the incarnation of the Lord God and the deliverance from the hands of Satan. 24. And he gave Adam a promissory note from God, and it was written thus: "Do not be sad, Adam; Satan has deceived you. He said, 'Until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies' because I am the unbegotten and immortal divinity, who in six eons will send my only begotten son from the light of my divinity. 25. And he will take on flesh from a pure and perfect virgin who <is> from your seed; he will be my son <and> your son. 26. For the unbegotten will be born and he will annul the promissory note of your transgressions. And he will return you to your former glory."

27. When he heard this good news, he rejoiced. For he considered the six eons <to be> like one hour because of the angel's good news. 28. May Christ God pity you and us with the same pity. Amen.

The History of Cain and Abel

1. This was the instruction of Adam which he taught his sons and said, "When I went out of the garden and fell into this dark world, God had pity on me again and sent his angel, and he brought me to light. And as many beasts as there were, he made them all obedient to me. 2. And he gave me a yoked ox and showed me how to plow and cultivate and work the soil with it, and to taste of its produce and be satisfied and live. Then he commanded me to set aside a portion of all the produce for God." 3. Because of this Adam gave that same command to his sons to fulfill, for Adam's first child was Cain, and after him, Abel.

4. When Cain was fifty years old and Abel twenty years old, Cain was a tiller of the soil, but Abel a herdsman of sheep. 5. Now Adam instructed his sons and said, "From everything that is yours set aside one portion out of ten for God." 6. When Abel's sheep had offspring, there were one thousand. Then he picked the best and choicest of the flock, the fat and succulent one, to give to God as a portion. But he did not offer it to God because of his brother. <He said,> "Perhaps your harvest will yet become ripe, then together we will offer the portion to God." 7. When Cain's grain harvest became ripe, he separated out what was windblown and what was left trampled under foot and he set aside that bunch as God's portion and gathered it as one pile.

8. Then Abel brought the choice lambs, and he welcomed Cain on account of God, saying, "My beloved brother, you are older and I, your servant, am younger. You offer your portion to God first, and then I will." 9. Now Cain prayed to the Lord and said, "You, O Lord, <are> creator of everything. Behold, by my sweat have I worked and plowed, with my hands I have gathered, and carrying it on my shoulders I have brought a portion to you. Now accept this my offering. As it is pleasing to you, so do." 10. But the Lord became angry at Cain. Because of this a black cloud came over Cain, <and> it thundered and roared. And wind and a breeze went out from it and scattered every ear of grain he had, and not one ear was left. And Cain's face was blackened like coal.

11. Now Abel offered his sacrifices, the first-born of the lambs, before God. And with his hands outstretched, he cried out and said, "O Lord God, creator and author of all good things, I pray you, accept this my sacrifice which I am offering to you as a portion, for from your good gifts which you have given I am offering to you. I pray and implore, accept it at the pleasure of your beneficent will." 12. At that very moment a gentle breeze blew, and a light shone from heaven and illuminated the face of Abel. And a voice came which said, "Your prayers are heard, and I have accepted your offering." 13. And a shining cloud became a protection over Abel.

14. Now Cain was bitter toward Abel and he wanted to kill him, but he did not know how he could kill him, for a murder had not yet been committed on the earth. 15. And Abel still did not know Cain's evil plan, for they always used to eat and drink and walk with one another.

16. But one day Cain said to his brother, "Abel, let us go strolling in the field." 17. So they arose and went into the field. Then Abel was stronger than Cain; because of this he could not reveal his plan. 18. Then he began to play with his brother by wrestling, which is kiwlesh; perhaps he could throw him to the ground and bind him. However much he wrestled, Cain could not overcome his brother. 19. And Cain went away and looked here and there, and he saw a grapevine, which is called asmay. He said to Abel, "Come, let us play with a vine. 20. You embrace the tree and I will bind you three times around with this vine, and I will see if you can break it. 21. Then you do the same thing to me; bind me three times around, and we will see who is powerful and strong." 22. When Abel embraced the tree, Cain took the vine and bound him by his feet and hands up to his head. 23. Then Abel perceived Cain's wickedness. So he cried out to his brother weeping and said, "My beloved brother, I pray you, untie me, and as long as I am alive I will serve you. 24. Do not kill me, for I am not your enemy, but your friend, and I am always obedient to your commands. I cannot live one hour without you. 25. How can you hate me and remain on the earth without me? How can you forget my brotherly love?"

26. Now Cain was walking here and there, but he did not know with what he must kill him. 27. Then Satan took on the form of two ravens, and the one took a sharp stone, and he struck the other with it in the throat and killed him, and the stone was sharp as a razor. 28. And Cain learned from Satan, and he took the stone and leaped upon his brother. 29. When Abel begged his brother much, he did not listen to him. 30. And Abel said, "Come, brother, let me kiss you one time, lest I remain in need of you." 31. But Cain did not answer. He grabbed the stone, and driving it back and forth he was cutting at his wind-pipe, but the stone was small and he could not cut it. 32. He cried out weeping and said, "How will you explain <this> to my parents? For they have no news from me. I used to do what <I received> as just from them, because they labor much for my sake. And how will you live upon the earth?" 33. But he did not listen at all. Even with unmerciful violence he killed his brother with difficulty. And he put him thus bound to the tree.

34. And he went away cheerfully. Then God appeared above a cloud fifty cubits away, and he said to Cain, "Where is your brother Abel?"

35. Cain said, "When did you make me his guardian, that you should ask it of me? Was I his keeper?" 36. God became angry at Cain. <He said,> "When you were not his keeper, why did you become his murderer?" 37. Because of this he punished Cain with seven penalties. For when God asked him sweetly he called for repentance; perhaps he would cry out acknowledging his sin.

38. A horn sprouted from his forehead. Wherever he went, the horn cried out (this was the first punishment), "This is Cain the brother-murderer."

39. The second punishment was this; that his entire body shuddered.

40. The third punishment was this; that however much he ate, he was not satisfied.

41. The fourth punishment was this; that whatever he desired he could not acquire to eat, and he sought it in vain.

42. The fifth punishment was this; that sleep never came upon his eyes.

43. The sixth punishment was this; that he walked around weeping and shuddering continually.

44. The seventh punishment was this; that God did not allow Cain to die. 45. Rather he said, "As for any man who kills Cain, the pain will pass on to the murderer." 46. And Cain lived 753 years. For he wished fo. death, but he did not die.

47. At that time Lamech was a horseman; he always used to go out to hunt. Now Cain remained incurable as regards his death. Then he had an idea; he took a skin from a wild animal for his lap, and he went to the mountain and became like a goat, and he fell on the road.

48. Now Lamech went forth, <and> he went hunting. And he saw Cain, <and> he struck him with an arrow and killed him. 49. Then Cain's pain fell upon Lamech, and a horn sprouted on his head. 50. But Lamech's wife was a good woman. She cried out to the Lord, and she wept in such a way that blood dropped from her eyes instead of tears. 51. God saw the woman's weeping and supplications; God took pity on everyone and he cured Lamech's pain.

52. Moreover, when Adam and Eve learned of Abel's murder, they went and brought Abel's blood-smeared corpse, <over> which they mourned exceedingly, weeping and lamenting. They were continually in mourning for a long time. 53. But when they buried Abel's body, it came out on the face of the ground. For his blood never dried, and he did not stink or become worm-eaten. For he was as though asleep; he did not rot and he did not become dust. 54. For God said first Adam should become dust, and then his offspring. Therefore it was necessary that Adam should die first and return to dust; then his offspring died and returned to dust. 55. Until Adam's death, no one else had died, and because of this Abel's body did not return to dust. 56. Then when Adam died and was buried, he gave room so that they could bury Abel in his tomb.

57. But when Adam and his wife saw Abel smeared with blood and Cain punished, because of their mourning and lamentation they did not again draw near to one another, lest another great lamentation <be> upon them because of their children. 58. But God had compassion and sent good news concerning Seth's birth, who indeed gave consolation for Abel. 59. May he console you in all your mourning. Amen.

Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth Which God Gave to Adam on account of Abel, Whom Cain Killed, in order to Console Adam and Eve

1. Now the Lord relented toward Adam and sent his angel, and he gave good tidings concerning Seth, and he said to Adam, "Know your wife and you will have a son. And you shall call his name Seth, which is translated 'consolation.' He shall be a blessed seed and the head of patriarchs."

2. Adam said, "I do not want to know my wife, for I knew her twice, and they were a greater affliction to me than my expulsion from the garden. For I see Cain who shudders thus in pain, <and> my heart is horror-struck and grieves, and my bowels writhe. Then I see Abel smeared with blood, <and> my heart is in pain and my tears flow like blood. If I know my wife again and there is a child, I fear that it might bring to me yet another affliction."

3. The angel said, "God will give you a good son, and his name <will be> Seth, which is translated 'consolation.' He will be a blessed seed, for in the same measure that you were embittered and grieved on account of Cain and Abel, you will rejoice and be consoled by Seth. 4. And your seed and Seth's seed will multiply, and this world will be filled with them. But do not mix with Cain's generation, for they are accursed. When Cain's generation mixes with Seth's generation and your other offspring, they also will perish with them.

5. Now Cain's offspring multiplied, and there were twenty-four men and three hundred eighty women. 6. For Cain had been married two hundred and thirty years when Seth was born. 7. Because Cain was thirty years old when he got married, and Abel was twenty years old. 8. And he [Abel] was a virgin when he killed him. 9. When Seth was born and the offspring of Seth and the other brothers multiplied, they drove away the generation of Cain and lived in purity and they did not take inheritance with the generation of Cain.

10. And Enoch, the good fruit, asked his father, "Why do you weep and mourn continually and not rejoice?"

11. He said, "Because of tasting the fruit and being driven out of the garden."

12. Hence when Enoch heard this, he said, "I will pay your debts," 13. and he did not marry. 14. But he planted an orchard in imitation of the garden. And whoever passed by would taste of the fruit, but he himself did not eat of the fruit at all. 15. Rather he put an iron cap on his head so that he would not see the fruit of the tree. Although he lived in the midst of the orchard for sixty-four years, he did not eat of the fruit. 16. Because of this God relented and commanded the angels, who lifted up Enoch <and> brought him to Paradise, and he is there until today.

17. Now when the other sons of Seth and Adam saw that Enoch had ascended bodily into heaven and attained such glory through virginity and fasting, many wanted to renounce this world and through virginity to subdue their passions in the mountains. And they numbered more than five hundred and twenty souls.

18. But the maidens and women from Cain's generation multiplied exceedingly, such that they made one man to walk among a hundred women. They also quarreled over the man, and they snatched him from one another. 19. Moreover, they went to mix with Seth's generation. 20. But they did not permit them, rather they beat them back and drove them away.

21. Now they remained incurable. They began to beautify themselves and to adorn themselves, and they made antimony and painted their faces and put henna on their hands. 22. And they invented songs and harps, <and> with various poems, games, and with dancing and clapping of hands they went to the mountains and seduced the anchorites and inter-mingled and were profaned by them; they ravished them all like a dog, not regarding sister or daughter.

24. Now God became angry because of their sins, and he commanded his angel who told Noah that he should marry.

25. Noah said, "I do not want to marry on account of this transient world."

26. The angel said, "God is angry because of the sins of mankind, and he wants to destroy them with water. 27. Therefore God has commanded you to take a wife, for you will be a new Adam, because all of them will be drowned. 28. But you alone will be saved, together with your sons and your wives, and you will be the ancestor and father of the world.

29. Noah said, "How many more years must I live?"

30. The angel said, "You are six hundred years old. You will live another three hundred and fifty years."

31. Noah said, "Death is the end and this world is transient, for three hundred and fifty years pass like a dream in the night. 32. Why should I join in the sins of the world?"

33. The angel said, "It is the command of God; you must fulfill it. For there is one maiden from the daughters of Seth, chaste and unstained by sin, and her name is Nemzar; marry her. 34. And you shall build an ark; three hundred cubits is its length, fifty cubits is its width, and thirty cubits is its height. And build three stories; an upper story, a middle story, and a lower story."

35. The angel said this and went away from him. 36. Now he took Nemzar and married her. 37. And he began to build an ark upon a high hill. And whenever they would build, the hatchet and the saw, and the wood would cry out, "A flood will come upon the earth!" 38a. Now when men heard it, they sneered saying, "Will the water reach such a high place as this? Will you who are building this ark live and we drown? Then where will you sow seed and plant a vineyard if the earth will be immersed?" 38b. And after eighty years had passed, the ark was completed. 38c. Now Noah had three sons; Shem, Ham, and Japhet. And the angel appeared to Noah and said, "Take women for your three sons, chaste maidens from Seth's line, whose names are Zanazan, Zarmanazan, <and> Araknazan. 38d. But keep your sons chaste until you go out from the ark," and he did so. And again the angel appeared and said, "Enter your ark, for there will be a flood."

38e. Now he [Noah] cried out to the Lord and said, "Lord, give me time so that I might proclaim it; perhaps they will turn from their sins." 38f. And God permitted twenty years, during which Noah proclaimed saying, "Turn aside from your sins so that the Lord will turn back the flood as punishment."

38g. Again they sneered at Noah and said, "We know that you suffer and grieve in vain and you proclaim <this> because of your incapacity, and we will give you whatever is the value of the ark and we will dismantle it and build a house with its wood." And they derided Noah with many other words.

38h. And after twenty years God commanded Noah to take his sons and enter the ark. But Noah asked the Lord to wait seven days to take his sons into the ark. 38i. Then he and his wife entered, then his sons and his sons' wives.

39. And he took two planks in his hands, and he struck the planks, <and> a cry went forth from the one plank, "Escape and enter the ark, because the flood has arrived." 40. Now the beasts and the animals heard and believed, and they came and cried out. 41. And God commanded <him> to take them in, from the clean birds two by two, but from the animals seven by seven. And he put the birds in the upper story; in the middle story were Noah and the children. Now the beasts and animals were in the lower story. 42. And after seven days when he had gathered them all inside the ark, he then plastered the doors inside and out. And then the cataracts of the heavens were opened, and the earth split and its foundations poured forth, and the waters overflowed from the rivers, and the rain came down from heaven like a river. 43. Then men wanted to escape into the ark, but they were drowned together. 44. For forty days it increased until every peak of the mountains was covered and it passed over the peaks by fifty times a man's height. For one year the ark went around, and it came <and> rested on Mt. Masis, which now they say is Ałrdał.

45. When Noah opened the window and sent forth the raven so that it might bring a sign of dry land, he went and fell upon the corpses but did not return. 46. And after three days he sent forth the dove, and it went and found dry land, and brought back a branch from an olive tree. 47. And Noah opened the ark and saw the peaks of the mountains, and he sent forth all the birds.

48. And after three months he himself and his sons went out of the ark, 49. and he sent forth all the beasts. 50. Then from the clean animals he took one from <each> seven and he offered a sacrifice to God. And he asked God not again to punish his children with water. 51. And He cried out to him, "I will not <again> destroy with such a punishment. 52. If they sin against me, I will reprove them with another punishment." 53. And He made a green and red bow appear to Noah against the cloud towards the east, and He said, "This is the sign of my covenant. 54. For when I show this sign, all your sons will understand that my compassion has come to them."

55. And they went down from there to Arguri, and they dwelt there, and the region was still full of water. 56. When his sons multiplied, he went down to Naxǰewan and dwelt there. 57. And after the flood Noah lived three hundred and fifty years, and Noah's tomb is there. 58. And the tomb of his wife is at Marant; which is called "mother" <after> her name. 59. Through their prayers the Lord God will deliver all those who believe from the flood of lust for this world. Amen.

THE ORTHODOX CHURCH
CHURCH OF ALEXANDRIA

THE COPTIC ORTHODOX CHURCH
and
THE DOGMAS

2

MAN AND REDEMPTION

Fr. Tadros Y. Malaty
St. George's Coptic Orthodox Church
Alexandria - Egypt

Reverend Father Tadros Y. Malaty has kindly permitted that his books be published in the COeRL. He has requested that we convey that any suggestions or amendments regarding their translation are welcome, and should be forwarded to:
sydneywebmaster@coptic.org.au

We acknowledge God as "God of men", for He who is unapproachable, inconceivable and invisible in His infinite love towards men, reveals Himself to them. God who fills heaven and earth is pleased to attribute Himself to men, especially those who love Him as if they are His own beloved children. He called Himself: "God of Abraham, God of Isaac, and God of Jacob" Exod 3:6, 15, 16, 4:5; Matt 22:23 etc ... repeatedly, in the Old Testament, He was called "God of Israel", for God dwells among His people the true believers, as if He were their own. Therefore the Psalmist says: "You are my refuge, my portion ... "

On the other hand, men who are created as free human beings, have the choice to be close to God as their Beloved Father, Lord and Savior, or even to deny Him; they are in fact God's creatures. We can't understand ourselves, our nature, our message and our destiny our relationship with God.

Now, I would like to give an idea about man and his redemption, or in other words " man in his relation to God, His Savior ", especially from the Coptic Orthodox Church point of view.

MAN IN GOD'S SIGHT

It is very difficult to present a real picture of God's view of His most beloved creature on earth, "man".

The message of the Church is to reveal God's infinite love towards man; this love which can satisfy our inner life, grants us peace and joy and fills us with hope.

Man, in his essence, is an image of God: "Love". He is always hungry and thirsty to love, and desires to be loved by everybody and also to give love to others. Outside "love" man loses his human being. No one can satisfy man's thirst for love like God Himself, for He is the Creator who takes care of His beloved creatures; He is the Origin that attracts the image and He is the eternal "Love" who gives Himself to man.

God in His relationship with man does not look at him as if he is just one of millions of creatures He makes, but He deals with him as His own close friend and beloved one. Before He created man He formed all the world for his sake, and gave him authority on earth, seas, air and even over other stars and over space. He created him in His likeness and image to live as a free being. Man, in his freedom, has the choice even to deny or to resist God Himself.

When contemplating God's supreme view of His beloved creature, i.e., man, and God's close and deep relationship with him, was incited the master of the Alexandrian School in the second century, Origen, to believe that man's soul is much greater than to be attributed to this visible world. Erroneously, he believed that the soul existed before the body to which it was assigned as a penalty for its sin. The Alexandrians rejected this Origenist theory, for it deforms the believers view of the body and also of the world. In fact this body is not a jail where the soul is imprisoned but is a good divine gift, that helps the soul and partakes with it in all human needs, and will partake with it in the heavenly glory.

It is man as a whole - soul and body - for whose sake God was involved in the dispensation of salvation before creating him and until the Last Day. He gave us His Law and His prophets throughout the ages, and at last on man's behalf sent His Eternal Word, incarnated and became man. In fact the incarnation of our Lord is a mystery that reveals two facts: God's view of man and to his daily life, and God's will towards our salvation.

l. The Word of God became man, so that He might live among men as one of them (John 1: 14). The Alexandrian churchmen looked at the incarnation as a sign of God's honorable concept of man. St. Clement of Alexandria says, (He had taken upon Him our flesh ... He scorned not the weakness of human flesh, but having clothed Himself with it, has come into the world for the common salvation of men1.) He also said: (O divine mystery! ... O wondrous mystery ! ... The Lord was laid low, and man was raised up !2)

2. He became Man to redeem man, granting him true freedom. To the Alexandrians, the Cross was the central purpose of Christ's coming3. For through the Cross the doors of heaven are opened and man finds his eternal home, wherein he will live in the bosom of the Father as His child who inherits eternal glory.

We can say that we shall remain in heaven contemplating God's interest in man.

1. Slromata 7: 2: 7, 8.
2. I~lctr II: 3: 3.
3. St Athanasius: DC Incamatione Varbi Dci 20; 9: 1,2 etc.

MAN'S FREE - WILL DIVINE GIFT

Man's freedom is the most important divine gift that God bestows on man. According to St. Cyril of Alexandria, the image of God in which man was created (Gen 1: 26) was his own free - will, and the spoilage of his human nature, that occurred by his disobedience to God, was the loss of his free - will.

According to Athenagoras, the dean of the Alexandrian School in the second century, man has the choice to do good or evil1. Man has the freedom to sin or not to sin; otherwise he could not be condemned, rebuked, exhorted, or summoned.

St. Clement of Alexandria interprets the goodness of the first man not as being perfect but as having free - will to be advanced towards perfection. He said that Adam was childlike and innocent; [He was not created perfect in constitution, but suitable for acquiring virtue... For God desires us to be saved by our own efforts 2].

Therefore the Alexandrians looked at Adam's life in Paradise as if it were a kind of divine life, because of Adam's free - will that grants him the ability to be in close contact with God. In this atmosphere, Adam and Eve received God's commandment not as a restriction that they had to suffer, but on the contrary, as a chance to express their love through obedience to God by their own free - will. In other words, without this commandment our first parents would find no way to accept God's love by practicing love, and had no way to have the experience of free - will.

FREE WILL AND ADAM'S SIN

Now, by our own volition we weakened our will. How ?

1. According to St. Athanasius, the first man, Adam, had a pure mind that was not enslaved to carnal lusts, so he could reflect God with his pure soul3. We are free, but because our minds are involved in evil desires and materialism it is very difficult to be lifted up towards God and to have heavenly experience. Now, we are in need of God's grace to make our minds free so that we can enjoy communion with God with pure hearts.

St. Athanasius states that man's soul is mobile by nature. It is not solid but very active, but when it was entangled by lust it did not lose its mobility nor activity but turned away from what is good and rejected it. Its movement did not cease but, it misused its body and its members by moving in the opposite way. Instead of beholding the creator it became involved in lust4.

2. According to St. Clement of Alexandria, the fault of Adam and Eve consisted in the fact that, using their volition wrongly, they indulged in the pleasures of sexual intercourse before God gave them leave5. Not that sex was wrong in itself, but the violation of God's ordinance was. As a result, their will and rationality were weakened, and they became a prey to sinful passions. He says: [The first man played in Paradise, at liberty, since he was the child of God. Then he fell, through pleasure ... and was led astray through his desires... How great the power of pleasure! Man was free, in his innocence, and then found himself bound by his sins6].

But while St. Clement accepts the historicity of Adam, he also regards him as symbolizing mankind as a whole 7. All men, he teaches 8, have a spark of the divine in them and are free to obey or disobey God's Law, but all, except the incarnate Logos, are sinners 9. They are, as it were sick, blind and gone astray; they enslaved to the elements and the Devil; and their condition can be crnhf~ c r1e~th 10

His teaching 11 seems to be, that through our physical descent from Adam and Eve, we inherit, not indeed their own guilt and curse, but a disordered sensualitywhich entails the dominance of the irrational element in our nature, and a lack of knowledge, for sin is due to "ignorance ~ 12

J. Pelikan says: [As a spokesman for the Christian faith, in response to the healthen and the heretics, Clement of Alexandria delivered just such an exhortation: "As far as we can, let us try to sin as little as possible". Only God could avoid sin altogether; but wisemen were able to avoid voluntary transgressions, and those who were properly trained in Christianity could at least see to it that they fell into very few 13].

Origenl4 in his defense of man's liberty and God's justice against the Gnostics adopted the theory of the pre-existence of human souls. He states that God - out of His goodness - created rational essences, all of them were equal and alike, and they were granted free - will. They had to be advanced by imitating God or to fall away by neglecting Him, to depart from good being tantamount to settling down to evil.

He says: [Before the ages, they were all pure intelligences, whether demons or souls or angels. One of them, the Devil, since he possessed free - will, chose to resist God and God rejected him. Other powers fell away with him becoming demons. The souls had not sinned so grievously as to become demons, therefore God made the present world, binding the souls to the bodies as a punishment 15].

It is worthy to note that Origen emphasizes on the personal sins of individuals who have followed Adam's example rather than their solidarity with his guilt. He believes that each one of us was banished from Paradise for his personal transgression 16.

Thus men are pure intelligences fallen from their former splendor and united with bodies; not that corporeality is, in his view, intrinsically bad, but he is opposed 17 ~O those who condemn the body as the principal of evil, and ~r~h(~.~ that evil resides in the will alone 18.

FREE-WILL & GOD'S PROVIDENCE

Someone may ask: How can we interpret God's providence through the free-will of men, for it God takes care of everyone, even of the number of his head's hair (Matt. 10: 30) how will we accept the free-will of others who would harm me or even kill me trough their free-will?

Our God who in His goodness grants us free-will, through His infinite wisdom uses this human freedom for the edification of His children, for He changes even the evil deeds to the salvation of others. St. Clement of Alexandria gives a biblical example. Jacob's sons sold Joseph as a slave, but God used this evil action for Joseph's glory. Joseph said to his brothers: "But now, do not therefore be grieved or angry with yourselves because you sold me here; for God sent me before you to preserve life ... so now it was not you who sent me here, but God, and He has made me a father of Pharaoh, and lord of all" Gen 45: 5-9; "Do not be afraid, for am I in the place of God? But as for you, you meant evil against me, but God meant it for good, in order to bring it about as it is this day, to save many people alive" Exod. 50: 19, 20.

Judas, the traitor, misused the freedom which was granted to him, and God used even his evil action for realizing the salvation of mankind by the crucifixion of our Lord.

Therefore Origen says, [The universe is cared for by God in accordance with the condition of the free will of each man, and that as far as possible it is always being led on to be better, and ... that the nature of our free - will is to admit various possibilities 19].

[God does not create evil; still, He does not prevent it when it is displayed by others, although He could do so. But He uses evil, and those who exhibit it, for necessary purposes. For by means of those in whom there is evil, He bestows honor and approbation on those who strive for the glory of virtue. Virtue, if unopposed, would not shine out nor become more glorious by probation. Virtue is not virtue if it be untested and unexamined ... If you remove the wickedness of Judas and annul his treachery you take away likewise the cross of Christ and His passion; and if there were no cross, then principalities and powers would have not Been stripped nor triumphed over by the wood of the cross (Col. 2: 15). Had there been no death of Christ, there would certainly have been no resurrection and there would have been no "firstbom from the dead" Col. 1: 8; and then there would have been for us no hope of resurrection. Similarly concerning the devil himself, if we suppose for the sake of argument, that he had been forcibly prevented from sinning, or that the will to do evil had been taken away from him after his sin; then the same time there would have been taken from us the struggle against the wiles of the devil, and there would be no crown of victory in store for him who rightly struggled 201.

1. Athenagorus Supp. 24:4.
2. Po~r.ll: 11; Stromata 2:2:131.
3. Con~. Gentes 2.
4. Ibid 4.
5. JN.D. Kelly: Early Christian Doctrines, 1978, p 179 - 180; Portr. 11:111, Stromata ~ : 17: 103.
6. Protr. 11: 111.
7. Stromata 2: 19: 98; Paed 1: 13: 101; Protr. 11: 111.
8.Protr6:68;Stromata2:15:62;3:9:63.
9.Paed.1:2:4;3:12:93.
10. Prot. 1: 6f; 11: 114; Paed. 1: 9: 63f ;Strom. 1: 11: 53.
11. Kelly, p 180; Stromata 3: 6: lOOf; 3: 9: 63 - 5.
12. Strom 3: 16: 100.
13. J Pdikan: The Christian Tradition, Vol. 1, The Emergence of the Catholic Tradition (100 - 600), 1961, p 284; Clem. Ales. Paedag. 1: 2: 4: 1-3.
14. De. Princiipus 2: 9: 2 - 6.
15. Ibid 2: 6: 3 (See St. Jerome: Ep ad Avitum l24: 6).
16. Kelly, p 180f.
17. Cont. Celsus 3: 42; 4: 65f.
18. Kelly, p. 180f.

19. C. Celsus 5: 21.
20. In Num. Hom 14: 2.

HUMAN NATURE

Then we speak about God's view of man or God's action for man's redemption, what do we mean by the word "man"? Is he merely a human soul?

What is the Alexandrian opinion concerning the body and its senses?
What is the role of the mind also in man's religious life?

1. We mean by "man" this creature who is superior to all other creatures in this world. Truly he consists of a soul, body, mind etc. ... but in a true unity. Man is not a mere soul that is clothed by a body as a superfluous thing added to it, but he is one being; his soul, body, mind etc. represents one creature that has one will, one action ... and will have the same reward. Man, with his own soul and his own body can be redeemed or lost; enjoy the heavenly glory or suffer eternal torments.

Therefore, when the word of God was incarnated He received His body in the womb of St. Mary and had a human soul. He became a true man and accepted human nature as a whole, to sanctify it all. St. Severus of Antioch says: [We confess that while remaining what He was, He united to Himself hypostatically a flesh possessing a rational soul 2]. St. Philoxenos of Mabbogh says: [The complete man was redeemed in God. Since the whole of Adam had come under the curse and been deprived, the whole of him was taken by God and renewed. The Lord who became incarnate gave His body unto death for the sake of everybody, and His soul for the salvation of all souls. In this way the whole of our nature was recreated in Him into a new man 3].

2. The early Alexandrian Fathers struggled against the Gnostics who rejected the body with its senses and believed it to be an enemy. St. Athanasius said: [All things made by God are beautiful and pure, for the word of God has made nothing useless or impure. For "we are a sweet savior of Christ in them that are being saved" (2 Cor. 2: 15), as the Apostle says ... and according to the divine Acts of the Apostles (17: 28) "we are God's offspring", we have nothing unclean in ourselves 4].

St. Athanasius considered man's body with its senses as a well - fashioned Iyre with its various strings, if it is used in its proper aim by a good soul, it will bring forth a beautiful symphony. He said: [In like manner, the senses being disposed in the body are like a Iyre, when the skilled intelligence presides over them, then too the soul distinguishes and knows what it is doing and how it is acting 5].

3. God created man as a rational being on earth, and deals with him as a rational creature. In other words, the mind is essential in our nature, when it is sanctified it helps the soul to rise up towards the heavenly places. By divine grace, the human mind can conceive divine mysteries which surpass its capacity.

St. Athanasius says: [The way of truth will aim at reaching the real and true God. But for its knowledge and accurate comprehension, there is need of none other save ourselves. Neither, as God Himself is above all, is the road to Him far off or outside ourselves, but it is in us, and it is possible to find it from ourselves, in the first instance, as Moses also taught, when he said, "The word" of faith "is written within your heart" Deut. 30: 14. Which very thing the Savior declared and confirmed, when He said "The Kingdom of God is within you" Luke 17: 12. For having in ourselves faith, and the kingdom of God; we shall be able quickly to see and perceive the King of the Universe, the sdving Word of the Father ... And if one were to ask, what road is this? I say it is the soul of each one of us, and the intelligence which resides there 6].

Now we conclude that man has only one being and can't be separated into parts: soul, body, senses, mind, heart and emotions etc. ... God loves man in his wholeness, saving and sanctifying his soul with its energies, his body with its senses, his mind, his heart and his emotions etc. ... When we accept the new life in our Lord Jesus Christ, we enjoy communion with the Father in His Son by His Holy Spirit to sanctify our inseparable human nature. It is the work of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Unity, not only to grant man unity with God, but also to grant him harmony in himself. Therefore the spiritual man feels that his body, senses, and emotions are not evil things, or a burden that the soul bears, but they are righteous tools that act with the soul and mind on behalf of the interior kingdom of God.

We give as examples, those who misused their emotions and energies while they were not "in Christ", and who used the same emotions and energies after their sanctification for the edification of the Church. One of those was St. Moses the black who was a chief-robber and adulterer, but then he became a leader of many monks and attracted many laymen to repentance after his conversion. St. Paul the Apostle, before his conversion violently persecuted the Church of God; and by the same energy the Holy Spirit used Him as a chosen vessel of God (Acts 9: 15), after sanctifying him.

1. Fr. Tadros Y. Malaty: The Terms "Physis & Hypostasis" in the Early Church, 1978, p. 17.
2. Philalethes, p. 187.
3. Ep. to the Monks of Senoun.
4. Ep. ad Amun. 2.
5. Contra Gentes 31.
6. Ibid 30.

GOD'S ROLE IN MAN'S SALVATION

NEED OF REDEMPTION

St. Athanasius states that when the first way, which was through Adam, was lost and in place of Paradise we deviated into death and heard the words: "Dust you are, and unto dust shall you return" Gen. 3: 19, therefore we became in need of someone else to renew the first creation and to preserve the new one which had come to be 1.

"Repentance" alone fails to guard the just claim of God2, for man had to suffer death as a natural fruit of his disobedience and leaving God, the Source of life. It also fails to renew his human nature and to grant it the power to conquer sin and death.

Moses' Law also fails to realize our salvation, for according to St. Pauls, it looks like a mirror that discovers our sins, ignorance, sickness and mortality, but it can't save us from sin (Rom. 6: 13-25), nor grant us true life (Rom. 6: 9) but it prepared the way to the Messiah, the Heavenly Physician, "for Christ is the end of the law of righteousness to everyone who believes" Rom. 10: 4.

Man is in need of One who can redeem him by realizing God's justice and reconciliating him with God, granting him the new life that conquers death. This One is the Messiah, about whom the prophets of the old testament foretold and the Evangelists concentrated, and the Apostles preached. He is the incarnate Son of God, the Only-begotten Son, who is one with the Father in the same essence, able to redeem men by sacrificing His life on their behalf.

The Savior can't be other than God Himself, who can realize the following advantages to us:

1. TO DECLARE THE CREATOR'S GOODNESS

To create man, God formed the world for his comfort and then made him of naught, to recreate him, God prepared the way of salvation through many ages and at last sent His incarnate Only-Begotten Son to sacrifice His blood on man's behalf. Jesus Christ says: n For God so loved the world that He gave His Only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life. John 3: 16 St. Paul says: "the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Him-self for me" Gal. 2: 20.

St. Athanasius says:

[For it were not worthy of God's goodness that the things He had made should waste away, because of the deceit practiced on men by the devil 3]. [He comes in condescension to show loving-kindness upon us and to visit us ... Now in truth this great work was peculiarly suited to God's goodness 4].

St. Clement of Alexandria says:

[The Word ... has appeared as our teacher, He by whom the Universe was created The Word who in the beginning gave us life when He fashioned us as Creator, has taught us the good life as our teacher, that He may afterwards, as God, provide us with eternal life. Not that He now has for the first time pitied us for our wandering; He pitied us from old, from the beginning. But now, when we were perishing, He has appeared and has saved us 5].

2. TO JOIN US WITH HIMSELF

Redemption in its essence is the unity with God, the Source of life. No-body can join us with God except the Son of God who became Son of man to raise us to the Father's bosom with His Holy Spirit, offering His saving blood as a price for this unity. Before His betrayal He said to the Father: "I in them, and You in Me; that they may be made perfect in one" John 17: 23.

St. Athanasius says: [If the Son were a creature, man would have remained mortal as before, not being joined to God, for a creature had not joined creatures to God, as seeking itself one to join it; nor would a portion of the creation have been the creation's salvation as needing salvation itself 6 I.

Origen says: [Christ, the true High priest who by His own blood made God propitious to you and reconciled you to the Father 7], [We have peace with God' Rom. 5: 1, but it is through our Lord Jesus Christ who reconciled us to God through the sacrifice of His blood... Christ came that He might destroy the enemies and make peace, and reconcile us to God when we were separated because of the barrier of wickedness which we set up by sinning 8].

3. TO ACCOMPLISH GOD'S SENTENCE OF DEATH

The Messiah, the incarnate Son of God gave His blood for us, and His flesh for our flesh and His soul for our souls. He suffered and died as a Sacrifice on our behalf and thus He accomplished the divine statement of death as a representative of all mankind.

St. Athanasius says:

[He sends His own Son, and He becomes Son of Man, by taking created flesh, that, since all were under sentence of death, He being other than them all, might Himself for all offer to death His own body; and that henceforth, as if all had died through Him, the word of that sentence might be accomplished (for "all died" 2 Cor. 5: 14, in Christ), and all through Him might thereupon become free from sin and from the curse which came upon it and might truly abide for ever, risen from the dead and clothed in immortality and incorruption 9].

[He takes to Himself a body capable of death, that it, by partaking of the Word who is above all, might be worthy to die instead of all, and might, because of the Word which was come to dwell in it, remain incorruptible, and that thenceforth corruption might be stayed from all by the grace of resurrection 10].

[For by the sacrifice of His own body, He both put an end to the law which was against us, and made a new beginning of life for us, by the hope of resurrection which He has given us 1l].

[Christ offered the sacrifice on behalf of all, delivering His own shrito death in place of all that He might set all free from the liability of the original transgression 12].

4. TO UNDERGO DEATH

The Alexandrian Fathers explain in more details what St. Paul declares concerning human nature, for man's problem is not limited in forgiving sins which he ever commits, but extends to the death and corruption that he endures. St. Paul says that "death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over those whose sins were not like the transgression of Adam" Rom. 5: 14.

St. Cyril of Alexandria repeatedly declares that the perfect humanity of Jesus Christ was the only method to deliver our earthly ~body from foreign corruption 13].

St. Clement of Alexandria says:

[The Lord then wished to release him (man) from his bonds, and clothing Himself with flesh - O divine mystery. - vanquished the serpent, and enslaved the tyrant; and, most marvelous of all, man that had been deceived by pleasure, and bound fast to corruption, had his hands unloosed, and was set free...

He has changed sunset into sunrise, and through the cross turned death into life; and having wrenched man from destruction, He has raised him to heaven, transplanting mortality into immortality and translating earth to heaven 14].

St. Athanasius says:

[To give a witness then, and for our sakes to undergo death, to raise man up and destroy the works of the Devil, the Savior came, and this is the reason of His incarnate presence. For resurrection would not have been, unless there was death; and how was there death, unless He had a mortal body? This is the Apostle learning from Him, this he sets forth, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might bring to nought him that had the power of death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead". I Cor. 15: 21 ...

Not for Himself then, but for our salvation, and to abolish death, and to condemn sin, and to give sight to the blind, and to raise up all the dead, has He come 15].

[He the incorruptible Son of God, being conjoined with all by a like nature, naturally clothed all with incorruption, by the promise of resurrection. For the actual corruption in death has no longer held - ground against me, by reason of the Word, which by His one body has come to dwell among us 16].

Whenoe also is He said ~ bc ~ b~n f~m the dead n Rev. l: 5, ~t that He died before us, f~ we bad died first, bul ~e having m~gone *ath for us and abdi~ed il. He was d~e f~st to lise, as man, for olrr sal~es, ~g His own Bad~ enoef~b He having ~, we too from Him and bec~se of Him, nse in due co~se ~wn the dead 17 ~.

St. Athanasius rep~es to dle qo~n: As God made man by a word, whyDot ~ him also by a word?, slying: a Creation out of nolhing is d~fen n~ from reparation of what already existed: [Por it was not things without being ~at needed salvation, so that a bare command should suffice, but man, already in e~Listence, was going to CQm~ tnn and ruin. It was then natural and nght that the Word should use a human ins~ument and reveal Himself every whither 18].

b. [Secondly, you must know this also, that the colTuption which had set in was not external to the body, but had become attached to it, and it was required that, instead of corruption, life should cleave to it; just as death has been engendered in it also. Now if death were external to the body, it would be proper for life also to have been engendered e~tternally to iL But if death were wound closely to the body and ruling over it as though united to it, it was required that life also should be wound closely to the body, that so the body, by putting on life in its stead, should cast off corruption ... For this cause, the Savior reasonably put on Him a body, in order that the body, would become close to the Life, should no longer, as a mortal abide in death, but having put on immortality, should thenceforth rise again and remain immortal ... He put on a body, that He might find death in the body, and blot it out 191.

Choosing death through the Cross is a divine mystery, that we already spoke about in another place 20, here I would refer to St. Athanasius' comment on the death of Jesus Christ through the Cross: [So death came to His body, not from Himself, but from hostile counsels, in order that whatever death they offered to the Savior, this He might utterly do away ... He accepted on the Cross, and endured, a death inflicted by others, and above all by His enemies, which they thought dreadful and ignominious and not to be faced; so that this also being destroyed, He Himself might be believed to be the Life, and the power of death be brought utterly to noughL So something surprising and starling has happened; for death, which, was thought to be inflicted as a disgrace was actually a monument of victory against death itself. Whence neither did He suffer the death of John, his head being severed, nor, as Isaiah, was He sawn in sunder; in order that even in death He might still keep His body undivided and in perfect soundness and no pretext be afforded to those that would divide the Church 21].

5. TO CONQUER OUR ENEMY, SATAN

St. Athanasius says:

[For the Word being clothed in the flesh, as has many times been explained, every bite of the serpent began to be utterly staunched from it out, and whatever evil sprung from the motions of the flesh, to be cut away, and with this death also was abolished, the companion of sin, as the Lord Himself says: "The prince of this world comes, and finds nothing in Me". John 14: 30, and "For this end was He manifested", as John has written, "that He might destroy the works of the devil" 1 John 3: 1 22].

[Thus also the father of the Arian heresy (Satan) asked ... "If Thou be the Son of God ... " Matt. 4: 3, for he knew that this is the truth and the sovereign principle of our faith, and that, if He were Himself the Son, the tyranny of the devil would have its end; but if He were a creature, He too was one of those descended from that Adam whom he deceived, and he had no cause for anxiety 23].

[For as when Adam had transgressed, his sin reached unto all men, so when the Lord had become man and had overthrown the Serpent, His great strength was extended through to all men so that each one of us may say: "for we are ignorant of his devices" 2 Cor. 2: 11 24].

6. TO RAISE US UP TO HEAVEN

Our Lord Jesus Christ in His speech with Nicodemus concerning the new birth, revealed Himself as the Heavenly One saying: "No one has ascended to heaven but He who came down from heaven, that is, the Son of Man who is in heaven" (John 3: 13). In other words, He is the Heavenly One who came down from heaven to grant us unity with Him that we may ascend to heaven in Him and with Him. St. Paul conceived that he was risen to heaven (Eph. 2:6) when the Head of the Church, Jesus was risen.

- ❖ And being joined to God, no longer do we abide upon earth, but as He Himself has said, where He is, there shall we be also[1].
- ❖ For in it (the Word's body) the Lord becomes our guide to the Kingdom of Heaven and to His own Father, saying, "I am the Way" John 14:6 and "the door" John 10:9 "through Me all must enter[2].
- ❖ Whence also, whereas the flesh is born of Mary the theotokos, He Himself is said to have been born, who furnishes to others an origin of being, in order that He may no longer, as mere earth, return to earth, but as being knit into the Word from heaven, may be carried to heaven by Him[3].

St. Athanasius of Alexandria

- ❖ O wondrous mystery... Man was cast out of Paradise; and now he receives a reward greater than that of obedience, the reward of Heaven[4].

St. Clement of Alexandria

7. TO RENEW OUR NATURE

In the Epistle to the Hebrews, St. Paul clearly explains the difference between the animal sacrifice and Christ's Sacrifice, for the first one was repeated because of its weakness and failure to renew the depth of human nature, but the last One was offered once only for it still has the power to renew our interior man. Origen says that Jesus Christ as a Priest and Victim at the same time did not offer animals blood that consumes but His own Blood that gives life, resurrectiand immortality. He always changes believers from mortality into immortality, redeeming their nature to participate in His life and to bear His likeness.

---

1 c. Arians 2:69.
2 c. Arians 2:61.
3 c. Arians 3:33.
4 Protr. 11:3

Origen says that the Logos is our Teacher, Law - giver and Model 29, by associating with Him, we lose our deadness and irrationality, becoming "divinely possessed and rational 30. He is" the pattern of the perfect life 31, the exemplar of true virtue into whose likeness Christians are transformed 32, thereby being enable to participate in the divine nature 33. He says: [Discoursing in bodily form and giving Himself out as flesh, He summons to Himself those who are flesh, in order that He may first of all transform them into the likeness of the Word who has been made flesh, and after that He was before He became flesh 34], [The Son of His kindness generously imparted deification to others ... who are transformed through Him into gods, as images of the prototype .. the word is the archetype of the many images 35].

St. Clement, Origen's teacher, explains the Savior's role in the renewal of our nature, as he said: [For this He came down, for this He assumed human nature, for this He willingly endured the sufferings of man, that by being reduced to the measure of our weakness He might raise us to the measure of His power 36]. He also says: [The Word of God, became man just that you may learn from a man how it may be that man should become god 37].

St. Athanasius in his discourses against the Arians confirms that the Incarnate Son of God hungered, wept and was wearied; He acted as our Mediator, taking on Him what was ours that He might impart to us what was His. In Him we became a new creation.

[As "the Word became flesh" John 1:14, so also man himself received the gifts which came through the Word ... For every one interceding for another, receives the gifts in his own person, not as needing, but on his account for whom he intercedes 38]

[He for our sake became man, so we for His sake are exalted. It is no absurdity then, as for our sake He humbled Himself, so also for our sake He is said to be highly exalted 39].

[He Himself has made us sons of the Father, and defied men by becoming Himself man 40].

[For He has become Man, that He might deify us in Himself and He was born of a woman, and begotten of a Virgin, in order to transfer to Himself our erring generation and that we may become henceforth a holy race and "partakers of the divine nature" as the blessed Peter wrote (2 Pet. 1:4). And what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh Rom. 8:3 41].

[He was made Man, straightway all things were set right and perfected. Earth received a blessing instead of a curse, Paradise was opened to the robber, Hades cowered, the tombs were opened and the dead raised, the gates of Heaven were lifted up to await Him that "comes from Edom" (Ps. 24: 7; Isa. 63:1) ... The Word has been made Flesh, and put on it, in order that "in Him" all should be set right. Suffering Himself, He gave us rest, hungering Himself, He nourished us, and going down into Hades He brought us 21 back thence ... At the restoration it was fitting that all things should be "delivered" (Luke 10:22) to Him, in order that He might be made man, and all things be renewed in Him 42].

8. TO REALIZE UNIVERSALISM

St. Clement of Alexandria 43 states that the Savior is the Lord not of the Jews only but of all men, therefore He came to save everyone that turns to Him; His sacrifice has its effect in all places and at all times.

9. TO GRANT US THE TRUE KNOWLEDGE "GNOSIS"

St. Clement of Alexandria was the first Christian writer who called the spiritual believer "Gnostic", for he believed that "gnosis" (knowledge) is a grace that comes from the Father through the Son 44. One of the principal actions of the Lord is to reveal the divine mysteries to His believers, for He said: "No one knows the Son except the Father. Nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and he to whom the Son wills to reveal Him". Mau 1 :27.

St. Clement says: [The Son is the true Teacher about the Father ... In order that we may come to know the Father, we must believe in the Son, because the Son of God is our Teacher; for the Father brings us from faith to knowledge by means of the Son 45].

Origen says: [The Word of God, coming to those who seek Him, or to those who receive Him when He is manifested, is able to make known the Father and to reveal Him who was not seen before His coming 46].

1. Contra Arians 2:65.
2. De lncamatione Verbi Dei 7.
3. Ibid 6;5.
4. Ibid 8:10.
5. Proterp. 1:7.
6. c. Arians 2:69.
7. In Leviticum hom. 9:10.
8. Com.inEp.adRom. 4:8.
9. c' Arians 2:69.
10. De lnc verbi Dei 9.
11. Ibid 10.
12. c. Arilms 2:7.
13. De Incar Unigeniti (Source Chretiene, L 97, p. 230).
14. Paedag. ll (See Strom. 2:10:47; 4:7:51).
15. c. Arians 2:55.
16. De Incar. 9.
17. c. Arians 2:61.
18. De Incar. 44.
19. Ibid.
20. See Fr. T.Y. Malaty: Church, House of God, ch. 10
21. De lnca n. 24.
22. c. Arians 2:69.
23. Ibid 2:73.
24. Ibid 1:51.

29. Kelly, p. 180f; Princ. 4:1:2; c.Celsus 2:52, 3:7.
30. ~ Ioh 1:37.
31. Contra Celsus 1:68.
32. Ibid 8:17.
33. De Principiis 4:4:4.
34. Contra Celsus 6:68.
35. Comm. ~ Ioan. 2:2.
36. Quis Dives Salvetur 37.
37. Protr. 1:8:4.
38. c. Arians 4:6.
39. Ibid 4:7.
40. Ibid 1: 38.
41. Ep. 60 ad Adelphium.
42. On Luke 10:22.
43. Strom. 6:6:47.
44. Strom. 5:71:5.
45. Ibid 5:1:1.
46 c Cel~ fi ù fiR

MAN'S ROLE IN HIS SALVATION

GRACE & MAN'S FREE - WILL

Grace is the heart and center of the Alexandrian theology. For God "first loved us" John 4:19; for He knew us (Rom. 8: 29), chose us, predestined us, called us, justified us and glorified us. He wills, decides and acts for our salvation, even while we were sinners and against Him (Rom. 5:10). Christ's blood is the only method through which salvation can be realized. This evangelic teaching is accepted and explained by the Alexandrian Fathers, without denying the free-will that God grants us, nor rejecting the positive role of the believer in accepting God's saving love and in responding to this divine love by practical love.

Now we can clarify the relation between God's Grace and man's free - will in the following points:

1. PRESESTINATION AND MAN'S FREE WILL:

St. Paul says: "He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him, in love" Eph. 1:4. Do these words mean that we - the believers - had to be so for we are chosen as men of God we were made, and the unbelievers have to be ruined for they can't believe as they were not chosen? We can't accept this meaning, for God desires the salvation of all men, as it is said:

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God, our Savior, who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth". 1 Tim. 2:4.

"I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked but that the wicked turn from his way and live". Ezek. 33:11.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His Only - begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life" John 3:16. "And He is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world ". 1 John 2: 2.

Clearly, God asks men to choose the way they desire to enter: "See, I have set before you today life and good, death and evil ... blessing and cursing, therefore choose life, that both you and your descendants may live". Deut. 30:15, 19. Our Lord Jesus Christ repeatedly confirms man's free - will in choosing the way, as He says: "if anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him". Rev. 3: 32.

Our Lord declares that God's will is the salvation of men, but if man does not will, He leaves him to his own will. He says: "How often I wanted to gather your children together as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, but you were not willing". Matt. 23:37.

God wants to relinquish His statement against sinners if they repent and return from their evil ways by their own will (Jer. :7-10; Ezek. 33:14-16; Jonah 3:10; Mal. 3: 7).

Now, what does St. Paul mean by his words: "He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world"? This means that although we believe in Go willingly and live as His children, we have become believers not due to our own merits. He first loved us and offered His saving deeds and acts, even in our hearts, that we will and do according to His own will.

Secondly, as the divine plan of our salvation was eternal, the Father chose us, for He was pleased with us even before we were made, through His beloved Son. He accepted us for we were hidden in His Son, our Mediator, clothing His righteousness. Thirdly, we were chosen, for He knew us before we were created that we would believe in Him. St. Paul clarifies this meaning, saying: "For whom He fore knew, He also predestined to be conformed to the image of His Son. Moreover, whom He predestined, these He also called; whom He called, these He also justified; and whom He justified, these He also glorified, Rom. 8:29, 30. Origen comments on this Pauline passage, saying: [Such passages as these are scizcd on by those who do not understand that the man who is foreordained by the foreknowledge of God is really responsible for the happening of what is fore known; and they imagine that God introduces men into the world who are already equipped by nature for salvation ... Let us observe the order of the words... It is not fore ordination that is the start of calling and justification. If this were so, a more convincing case could be put by those who bring in the absurd argument about "salvation by nature". t in fact, foreknowledge precedes fore ordination ... God observed beforehand the sequence of future events, and noticed the inclination of some men towards pieqr, on their responsibility, and their stirring towards piety which followed on this inclination; He sees how they devote themselves to living a virtuous life, and He fore knew them, knowing the present, and fore knowing the future ... His foreknowledge is not the cause of what happens as a result of the responsible actions of each individual. Thus, the freedom bestowed by the Creator enables man to choose what to realize, of various possibilities which arise].

2. FAITH AND GOOD WORKS

Until the nineteenth century, the struggle between faith and good works in achieving salvation had no room in the Alexandrian theology, because of its evangelic concept on "faith", "Good Works", "Salvation", etc. ...

a One of the essential characteristics of our church is the integration of all aspects of the new life in Jesus Christ. For example, theology - in our concept - can't be separated from preaching, worship, or ascetic life. Theologians are not those who achieve scientific degrees in theology, but those whose theologian knowledge is translated into life through their worship and conduct. Through the ages, the Popes of Alexandria were usually deans of the Alexandrian School, or one of its teachers, or had their theological studies in monasteries, and at the same time they were monks and had their ascetic life. In other words, the Pope is not only a leader in pastoral cares but also in theology and ascetic life.

This attitude has its effect in our concept on "Faith". For faith IS not merely believing in some dogmas or doctrines, but it means achieving the new life in Christ in all its aspects. We have to enjoy this life through the deep knowledge of the Word of God (the Holy Scripture), partaking in the church worship, practicing our family worship, fulfilling God's commandments in our relationship with others etc. ... Faith separated from conduct.

b. We have to distinguish between many kinds of good works:

1. The works of Law which some Christians of Jewish origin desired to practice in their literal meaning like circumcision, observing the Saturdays and Jewish feasts and other rites. ST. Paul struggled against this attitude confirming the ne~ of faith alone without these good wad~s of Law ~ Ibeir li~aal mea~ing, saying: "For by grace yw have been saved d~ f ilb . ~d d~ not of yoursdves; it is the gift of God, not of wof~s, lest an~wc sbould bw~st ~ Eph. 2:8, 9. We are f~ely j~ified by the grace th~h faith and nat through the righteau~ of the Law, ie., t~wgb observ~ng its lited ~s.

2. Good works that issue fm n a pfwd heart, in Ph~isi~ or Itl~ni~n; when man believes ~at he can be saved by his own m~nt . though his own righteousness. We confirm that salvation can't be attained ~hout believing m the ledeaning blood of Cnri~ for "without shedding of blood there is w remission". Heb. 9:22.

3. Good works that are issued from the believer's heart, who is united with the Fad~r iD His Son by the Holy Spirh These good wor~s are the fruit of God's wo~ in Him, as the Holy Bible clarifies:

"He who abides in Me, and I in Him, bears much fruit, for without Me you can do nothing". John 15:5.

"For it is God Who works in you bo~h to will and to do for His good pleasure". Phil. 2:13.

"But by the grace of God I a n what I am, and His grace toward me was not iD vain; but I hbored more abundantly that they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me". I Cor. 15:10.

Without God's grace ": ~re is none who does good, no, not one". Rom. 3:11, ~ for aU have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God". Rom. 3:23.

H.H. Pope Shenouda III, in his book "Salvation in the Orthodox Concept", presents many indications on the importance of these ~ good Works" to our salvation:

1. Evil deeds lead to eternal perdition (Gal. 5:19 - 21; Eph. 5:5, 6;1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Heb. 13:4; Col. 3:5, 6; Tit. 1: 16; 2 Pet 2:4-22; l Pet. 4:17, 18; Acts 5:9, 1 John 3:15; Jam. 3:1, 2; 5:1, 9).

II. Judgment will occur according to our works (Matt. 16:27; John 5:28, 29; Matt. 25:31-46; 1 Cor. 3:13; 1 Pet 1:17).

m. Works are the fruits of the real faith (Luke 3:8, James 2:14; Matt. 7:19 -21, Luke 13:6-9).

the need o~f faith ~e without these good wa~ of I~ ù~ ~ li~al ma~ing, sayil~g ~ or bg gmce you have been saved tl~ failh . and tbat not of ~ro~selves; it is the gift of God, wt of warl~s, lesl anyaoe sbould boast ~Eph. 2: 8 . 9. We are fieely j~ified b~r the graoe ~h faith and not thn~ugh the nghteousness of the ~w, ie., tl~ugh obs~ring its literal works.

2. Good WOI}S that issue fr~n a p oud beart, in Pnarisi~ or E~guni~; when man believes tbat he can be saved by his OWQ ment, thmugh his owu nghtewsness. We confnnn that salvatian can't be at~ained widlout belie~ing in the ledeeming blood of Cbri~, for "without shedding of blood there is no remission". Heb. 9:22.

3. Good works that are issued from the believer's heart, WQo is united with the Father in His Son by the Holy Spirit lbese good wor~s a~e the fruit of God's wor} in Him, as the Holy Bible clarifies:

> "He who abides in Me, and I in Him, bears much fruit. for without Me you can do nothing". John 15:5.

"For it is God Who works in you bolh to will and tQ do for His good pleasure. PhiL 2:13.

"But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me was not in vain; but I hbored more abundantly that they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me". 1 Cor. 15:10.

Without God's grace ": there is none who does good, no, not one ". Rom. 3:11, ~ for all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God". Rom. 3:23.

H H. Pope Shenouda III, in his boo~ "Salva~n in the O~hodo~ Concept ~, presents many indications on the importance of these ~ good Works" to our salvation:

I. Evil deeds lead to eternal perdition (Gal. 5: 19 - 21; Eph. 5: 5, 6; 1 Cor. 6:9,10; Heb. 13:4; Col. 3:5, 6; ~1Ll:16; 2PeL 2:4-22; 1PeL 4:17, 18; ActsS:9, llohn3:15; Jam.3:1, 2; 5:1, 9).

II. Judgment will occur according to our works (Matt 16:27; John 5:28, 29; Matt 25:31-46; lCor. 3:13; lPeL 1:17).

III. Wo~s are the fruits of the real faith (Luke 3:8, James 2:14; Matt 7:19 -21, Luke 13:6-9).

IV. Works are the evidence of the presence of faith (James 2:18; Matt. 7:16, 17).

V. Works are the evidence of being bom of God (1 John 2:29, 3:9, 10).

VI. Works make faith perfect (James 2:22; 1:27).

The Alexandrian Fathers explained "good works" as our response to God'slove towards us which we have to practice by God's help. St. Clement says: [For each of us He laid down His life ... and He requires in return that we should do the same for each other 2 I But we can not do this without God, because [He is for us the source of all good. From Him we learn the good life and are brought to the etemal life 3].

3. GRACE OF GOD AND MAN~S FREE - wnL

The good believer accepts divine grace to help him and to guide all his life, even in the smallest matters. In other words, through the freedom he receives in His Savior Jesus Christ, by his own volition he denies his own will, not to lose his freedom or to live with a weak personality but to enjoy God's will acting in Him. Through his free - will he can also refuse God's grace at any time and resist God's will. Therefore St. Paul warns us, "Do not quench the Spirit" Thes. 5:19, "And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption" Eph. 4:30.

It is the grace of God that acts within us, but without abolishing man's free - will. Man has to act positively on behalf of his salvation through God's grace. We hear the Apostle saying: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept Lhe faith... " 2 Tim. 4:7, "You have not yet resisted to bloodshed, striving against sin" Heb. 12:4, "To this end I also labor, striving according to His working which works in me mightily" Col. 1:29.

The bible confirms that we have to work, with our own free - will, with God: "For we are God's fellow workers" Cor. 3:9.

"If we say that we have fellowship with Him ... " 1 John 1:6.

Origen replies to those who say that our salvation is in no way our responsibility, but is a matter of our constitution, for which the Creator is responsible ... saying:

["Unless the Lord builds the house, they labor in vain who build it, Unless the Lord guards the city, the watchman stays awake in vain" Ps. 126 (127): 1 This is not meant to deter us from building, or to counsel us not to be vigilant in guarding the cily which is in our soul ... We should do right in calling a building a work of God, rather than of the builder, and the preservation of a city from hostile attack we should rightly call an achievement of God rather than of the guard. But in so speaking we assume man's share in the achievement, while in thankfulness we ascribe it to God who brings it to success. Similarly man's will is not sufficient lo altain the end (of salvation) (Rom. 9: 16), nor is the running of the metaphorical athletes competent to attain "the prize of the upward summons of God in Christ Jesus" Phil. 3:14.

This is only accomplished with God's assistance. Thus it is quite true, "il is not of him who wills, nor of him who runs, but of God who shows mercy Rom. 9:16. Our perfection does not come about by our remaining inactive, yet it is not accomplished by our own activity; God plays the great part in cffecting it 4].

4. TRUST IN ENJOYING THE KINGDOM

"Hope" is one of the three great virtues (I Cor. 13:13), that believers have to attain, and to progress in, trusting in the mighty grace of God and the infinite divine mercies, Without hope the believer loses his salvation, like Cain who in despair said, "My punishment is greater that I can bear" Gen. 4: 13, and Judas who hanged himself (Malt. 27:5).

H.H. Pope Shenouda III states that: [If anyone asks you: Do you trust?, What would you reply? Yes, I trust in Christ's blood beyond limits but I don't trust in myself, in my own free - will which may be inclined into evil, lest after I have begun in the Spirit, I shall be made perfect by the flesh (Gal. 3:3). Therefore, those who lose salvation, lose it because of the deviation of their free - will which may be inclined to evil, lest after I have begun in the Spirit, I shall be made perfect by the flesh (Gal. 3:3). Therefore, those who lose salvation ~ lose it because of the deviation of their free - will to evil, and not because God is unable to save them ... We trust in the blood of Christ and in the sufficiency of His atonement and redemption, but concerning ourselves we confess that we are sinners and conceive how possible it is that we may perish because of our sins ... Be humble, my brother, and hear the words of the Apostle Paul, that warning ... "Therefore, let him who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall" 1 Cor. 10:12. You are not more strong than those who fell before, you might not have even attained their level before their fall. Read what the Apostle Paul says and consider carefully the qualities which he mentions, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and have become partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the age to come, if they fall away, to renew them again to repentance" (Heb. 6: 4-6).

1. Comm, in Ep. ad Rom 1 (Philocalia 25:1)
2. Quis Dives Salveture 37.
3.Prot. I :7.
4. De Principiis 3: 1:18.

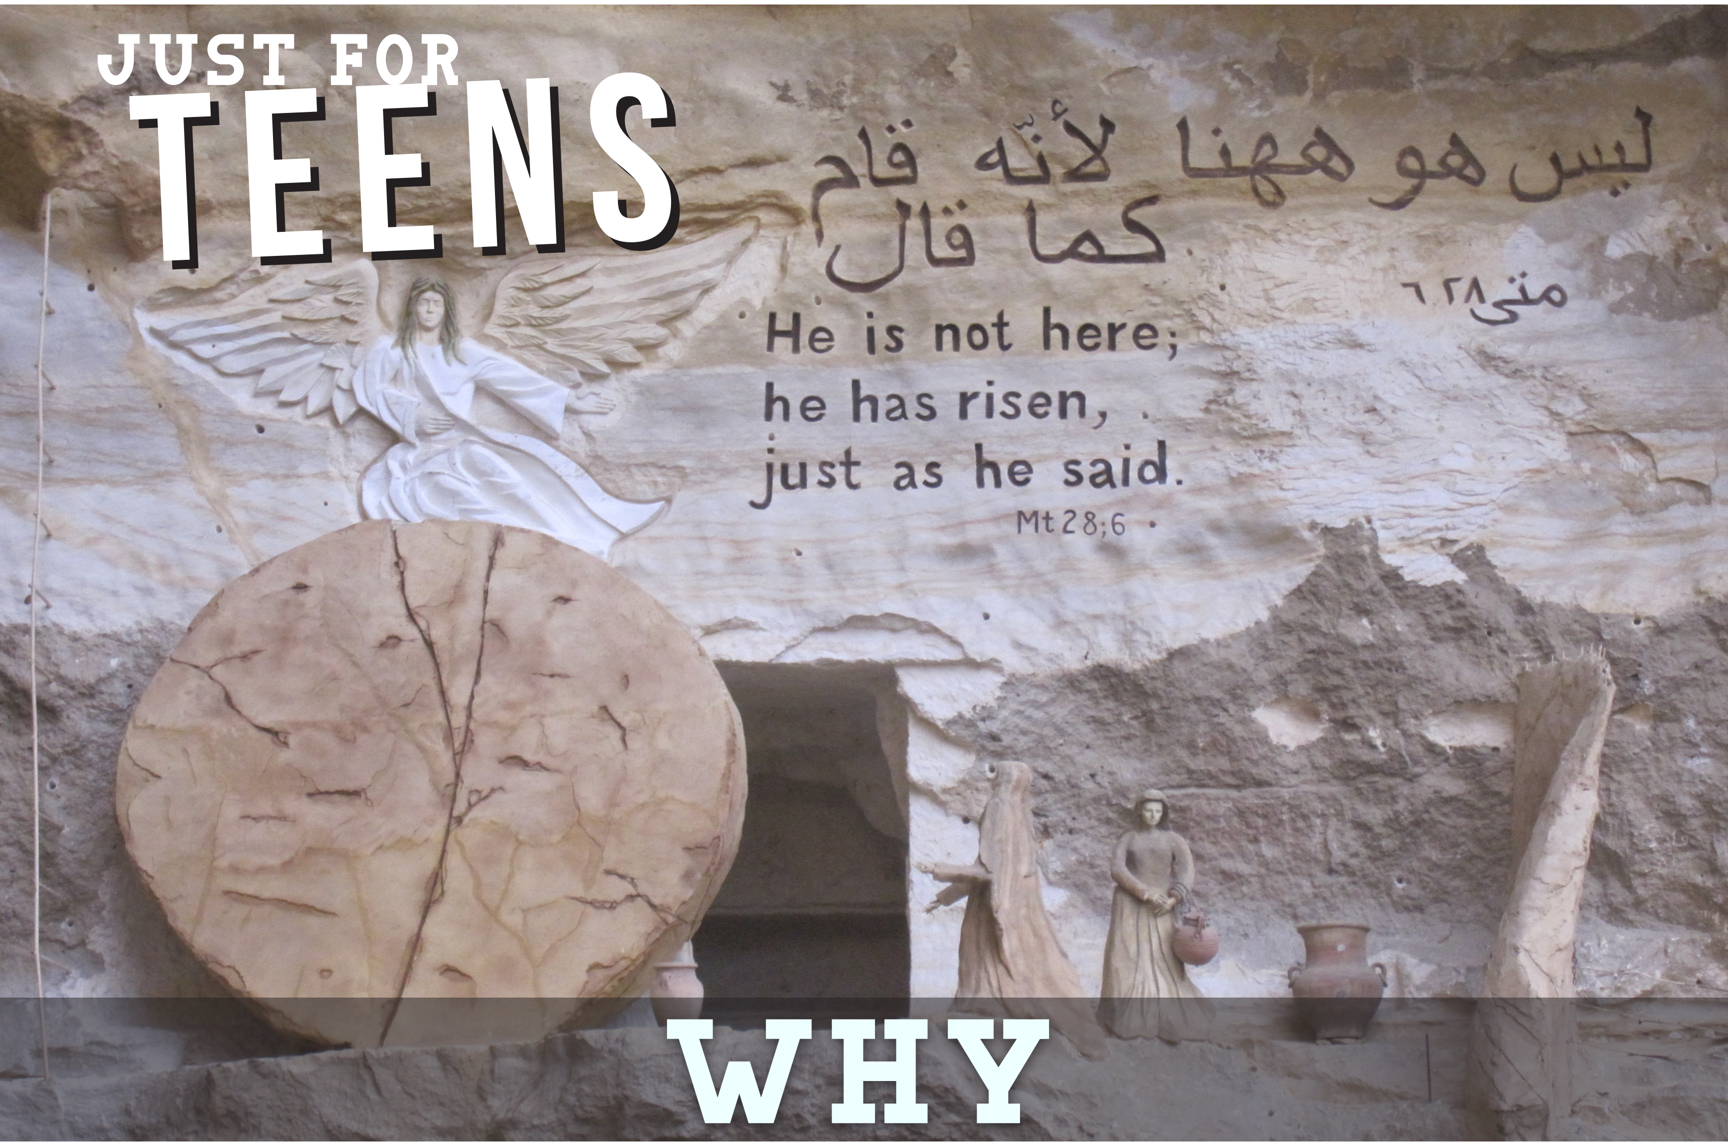
BUT THOSE WHO WAIT ON THE LORD, SHALL RENEW THEIR STRENGTH; THEY SHALL MOUNT UP WITH WINGS LIKE EAGLES,

MIGHTY CHAMPIONS

ISAIAH 40:31

THEY SHALL RUN AND NOT BE WEARY, THEY SHALL WALK AND NOT FAINT.

JUST FOR TEENS



WHY RESURRECTION MATTERS

MIGHTY CHAMPIONS MAGAZINE
Publication of the Coptic Orthodox Diocese of the Southern U.S.
SPRING 2015 VOLUME 1 ISSUE 2

JUST FOR

TEENS

Mighty Champions Spring Edition

2015

WHY RESURRECTION MATTERS

BUT THOSE WHO WAIT ON THE LORD, SHALL RENEW THEIR STRENGTH; THEY SHALL MOUNT UP WITH WINGS LIKE EAGLES, MIGHTY CHAMPIONS ISAIAH 40:31 THEY SHALL RUN AND NOT BE WEARY, THEY SHALL WALK AND NOT FAINT.

A PUBLICATION OF THE COPTIC ORTHODOX DIOCESE OF THE SOUTHERN UNITED STATES

YOU CAN EMAIL US AT:
mightychampionsmagazine@suscopts.org

PRESIDENT	Almighty God
VICE PRESIDENT	H.G. Bishop Youssef
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF	Marilyn Ekladios
ASSOCIATE EDITORS	Margo Yanney Freda Tyab Monastic Servant
LAYOUT & DESIGN MANAGING EDITOR	J.B.
LAYOUT & DESIGN EDITOR	J.B.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS	Esther Boulis Sara Dawoud George Iskander
SPECIAL FEATURED ARTICLE	H.G. Bishop Youssef
CONTRIBUTING WRITERS	Sara Dawoud John Habib Miryam Nessim Jeremiah Soliman Anonymous
PHOTOGRAPHY SUPPORT	Katherine Nawar
TECH SUPPORT	J.B.

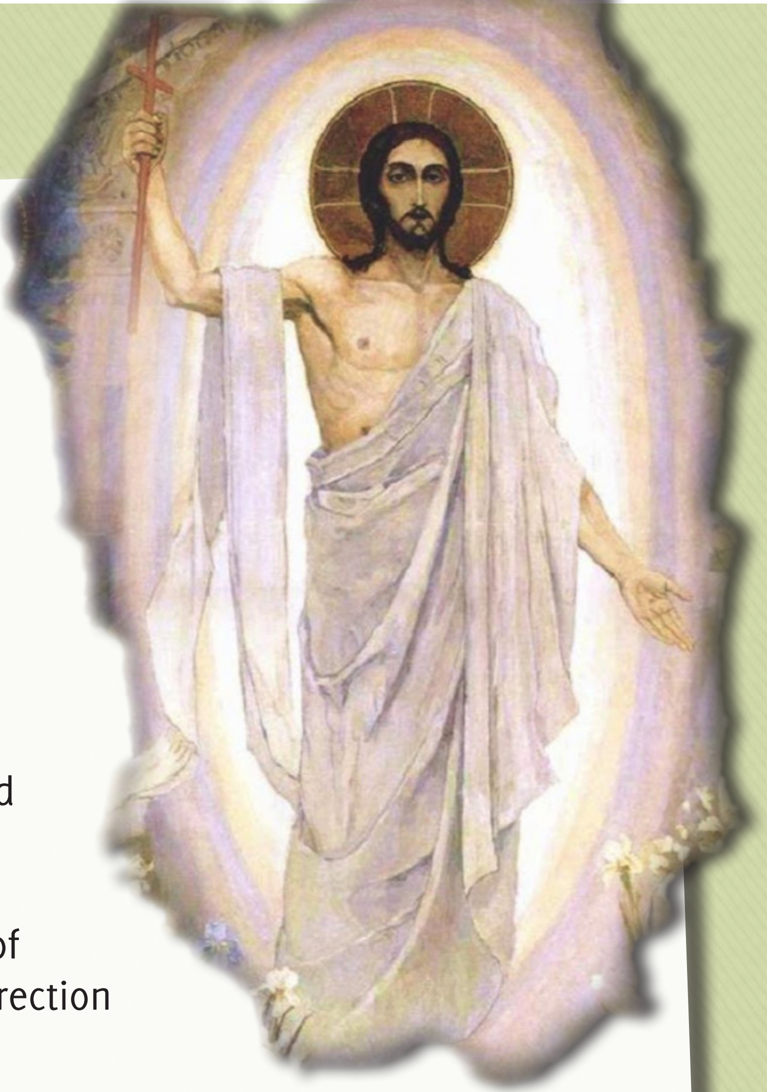
SUBSCRIPTIONS: http://suscopts.org/mightychampions

MISSON STATEMENT: We, the magazine staff, have a mission regarding you, the reader: to encourage you on your Christian walk and to strengthen you through articles, answers, and more about God's very special plan for you.

MATERIAL SUBMISSION

By submitting letters and other materials to Mighty Champions Magazine, you agree that the materials submitted are the property of Mighty Champions Magazine and will not be returned, and you agree that Mighty Champions Magazine, its assigns and licensees, have been granted the non-exclusive right to use and/or reproduce the materials in any manner and for any purposes.

MY BELOVED YOUTH,



Resurrection matters are matters of salvation. Does your salvation matter to you? Ifyou answered correctly, yes, then all the matters of the Holy Resurrection are ofgreat relevance to you. The Holy Resurrection is the beginning of a new life for all ofhumanity. Christ is the first fruit into this new life personally prepared for you. Priorto Christ's resurrection, humanity only knew of birth and death. No longer doesdeath have that sting of finality, sadness, and mourning. Resurrection mattersbecause it is eternal.

There is much thought put into the articles that you are about to read in this Spring2015 Edition of the Mighty Champion Magazine. Think about the beautiful life that awaits you after this temporary life—with all its vanities, heartache, and strugglesvanishes. Strive to make and keep a good relationship with Christ, our Good Savior,so that where He is, we will be too.

God bless you.

BISHOP YOUSSEF,

Bishop, Coptic Orthodox Diocese of the Southern United States

Visit His Grace's Official

YouTube Channel!

youtube.com/user/BishopYoussef

SOUNDCLOUD

soundcloud.com/his-grace-bishop-youssef/tracks

CONTENTS

6

FAITH OVER MIND and MATTER

FAITH IS THE ESSENCE OF HOLINESS.

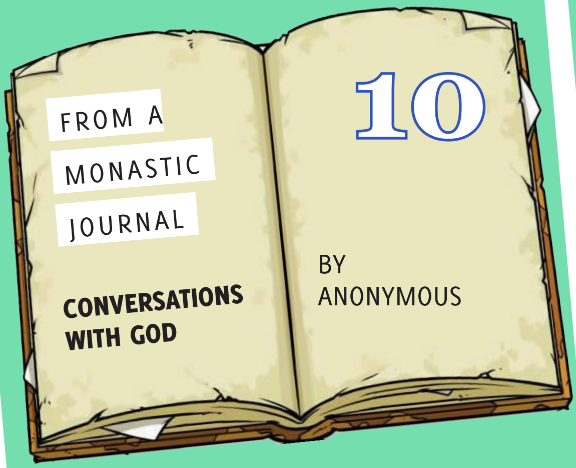
BY SARA DAWOUD

8

I WOULDN'T BELIEVE IN CHRIST IF HIS TOMB WASN'T EMPTY

CHRIST'S RESURRECTION MADE HIM OUT TO BE THE TRUTH, RATHER THAN A LIAR

BY JOHN HABIB



10

FROM A MONASTIC JOURNAL

CONVERSATIONS WITH GOD

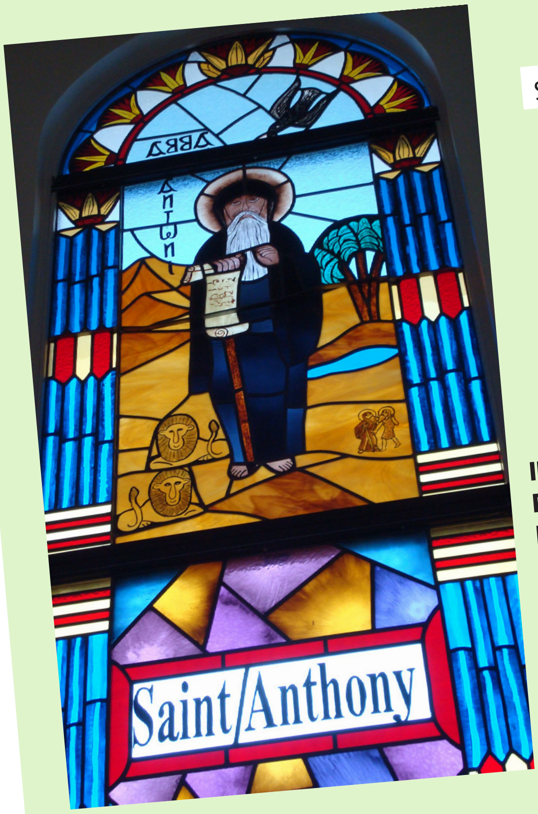
BY ANONYMOUS

11

AVOIDING DRYNESS AFTER THE SPIRITUAL SPRING

CELEBRATING THE RIGHT WAY.

BY MIRYAM NESSIM



ST. ANTHONY OF EGYPT AND THE VIRTUE OF POSITIVITY

IF YOU WANT TO BE PERFECT, GO.
BY JEREMIAH SOLIMAN

12

RESURRECTION MATTERS: THE ENDLESS FRONTIER

Special Message for You
FROM HIS GRACE BISHOP YOUSSEF

13

Gold Nuggets
WISE WORDS TO CONSIDER

15

BY THE THRICE BLESSED POPE SHENOUDA III

Golden Anecdotes
FOOD FOR THOUGHT

16

BY HIS HOLINESS POPE TAWADROS II

Diocese

PROGRAMS

Asaph Hymns Institute
(AHI) is the first ever online hymnological seminary.

Family Ministry Program
(FMP) Spring Registration deadline: December 10, 2014

LEAD Program
A program for learning Christian leadership principles.

Theological Seminary Program
Program Registration deadline: March 15, 2015

Theological Seminary Program - Nashville
An Arabic theological program located in Nashville.

Theological Seminary Boarding Program - Abbey
A 2 year live-in program located at St. Mary and St. Moses Abbey.

Archangel Raphael Ministry (A.R.M.)
A program designed specifically for individuals with special needs.

H.O.P.E. Social Services
A social services program designed to help those in need.

St. Clement Christian Academy
This is a learning community dedicated to meeting the needs of each learner within its walls.

St. Mark Festival Program
This is a spiritual competition among the Coptic Churches doing the same activity world wide.

St. Verena Resource Ministry
(SVRM) Professionals networking together to make a difference and provide resources to our Coptic community. To make a request or to volunteer as a consultant.

TIPS: Search for Job & Education Opportunities

EVENTS

Pre-Marital Retreat
FL: Jan 9-11, 2015
GA: Jun 12-14, 2015

Family Convention
TX: Nov 26-29, 2014
FL: Nov 26-29, 2014

Florida Servants Convention
FL: Dec 12-13, 2014

THY College Convention
FL: Dec 17-20, 2014

Winter High School Girls Convention
FL: Dec 21-24, 2014
TN/GA: Dec 22-25, 2014
TX: TBA

Winter High School Boys Convention
GA/TN: Dec 21-24, 2014
FL: Dec 25-28, 2014
TX: TBA

Winter Kids Camp
GA: Dec 21-24, 2014
FL: Dec 27-30, 2014
TX: Dec 29-31, 2014

Winter Middle School Convention
GA: Dec 26-29, 2014
FL: Jan 1-3, 2015
TX: Dec 26-28, 2014

Texas Winter College Convention
Jan 9-12, 2015

Crossroads Graduate Convention
Feb 19-22, 2015

CPAR Convention
Feb 26 - Mar 1, 2015

Arabic Youth Convention
FL: Mar 6-8, 2015
TX: TBA

17

Faith Over Mind and Matter

> "The entire virtue of what we call holiness lies in faithfulness to what God ordains."

BY SARA DAWOUD

The above quote is from Jean-Pierre de Caussade's Joy of Full Surrender. In the previous issue, I wrote The Curious Case of the Talking Stone which was the first part of the mini-series I am developing for this wonderful spiritual book. This article, the second in the series, will primarily deal with the issue of faith in the life of a Christian.

The word faith is often used interchangeably with the word belief. For example, "He is of Christian faith," or, "What is your belief?" However, the two words are very different from each other. All of us, as Christians, have belief. "We believe in One God…" begins the creed we recite in every Liturgy. A belief is a proclamation of faith, but faith is the essence of holiness, as the above quote states. We all believe that Christ is our Savior, but that belief does not mean anything if we do not have true faith. Even Christ Himself said, "Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven."[1]

So who will enter the Kingdom? Christ continues in the same verse, "Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father in heaven."[2]

Doing the will of God is the only way to Heaven because it encompasses all the virtues that build up a true Christian. It is God's will that we love one another, pray to Him, read His Word, attend Church, and the whole nine yards. Doing God's will means that we must have faith in His promises, and He will never forsake us if we choose to follow Him whole-heartedly.

Faith is not an abstract concept that is used in every Sunday sermon; it is a lifestyle. St. James said, "Faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead,"[3] because having true faith means doing the will of God, and God's will encompasses all the virtues and practices mentioned in the Bible.

At times, God's will may conflict with ours. We may become depressed and angry when something we really want is withheld from us by our Heavenly Father. These circumstances become the ultimate test of faith: it is easy to love God while life is good, but tribulation is the fire used to test how genuine we really are—either we are gold and the fire will refine us, or we are plastic and the fire will burn us.

This passage in The Joy of Full Surrender is particularly relevant:

> When you are conducted by a guide who takes you through an unknown country at night across fields where there are no tracks, by his own skill, asking no advice from anyone, giving no inkling of his plans, what choice do you have but to give yourself completely to his guidance? The plans of fancies of a guide who insists on being trusted will have none of this! He will take pleasure in overcoming your anxiety and distrust and will insist that you surrender entirely to his guidance. If you are convinced that he is a good guide, you must have faith in him and abandon yourself to his care.

---

[1] Matthew 7:21.
[2] Ibid.
[3] James 2:17.

General Question #1

ANSWER

LOOK FOR THE QUESTION ON ANOTHER PAGE

A When the Resurrection enactment became part of the Divine Liturgy of the Resurrection feast, is not known. In this enactment, the priest or the bishop stand inside the sanctuary symbolically guarding the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, just as the Cherubim stood in the Garden of Eden guarding the tree of life, while two deacons stand outside the sanctuary with the resurrection icon signifying the angels that accompanied and served the Lord Jesus Christ during His life on earth. The resurrection enactment starts with a dialogue between the angels outside the sanctuary and the cherubim inside the sanctuary. After this dialogue, the doors of the sanctuary open just as the doors of the Paradise were opened; and the lights are turned on symbolizing the light of the Resurrection that has enlightened the whole cosmos. The deacons carrying the icon of resurrection enter the sanctuary and proceed around the altar three times' chanting the resurrection hymn, "Christ is risen" symbolic of the Lord Jesus Christ's entering Paradise with His angels and the souls of the righteous. Then the procession goes around the nave of the Church three times; symbolizing the apparitions of the Lord Jesus Christ and that of some of the saints after His holy Resurrection and their entry into the Holy City. At the end, the procession goes again inside the sanctuary for one more time around the altar signifying the ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ and the resurrection of all the believers and their entry to the Kingdom of Heaven on the last day.

You can read in more details about the significance of the Resurrection Enactment athttp://suscopts.org/literature/literature.php?subaction=showfull&id=1081605001&archive=&start_from=&ucat=12&.

I WOULDN'T BELIEVE IN CHRIST IF HIS TOMB WASN'T EMPTY

Christ's resurrection made Him out to be the Truth, rather than a liar

BY JOHN HABIB

"I don't know if I really believe God exists. I mean, I've just believed what you and the servants and the priests have been telling me. But I'm not sure of it myself."

That's what a teenage boy at church told me one day.

How can we help this boy believe in Christ for himself, instead of just believing in Christ because it is what he was told to do?

The answer comes down to the greatest proof of all: Christ's tomb is empty—He resurrected.

Well, how does that make me believe in Him? That is because without that proof, Christ was either a liar, or a lunatic. Imagine a man walking around saying this:

- My name is Joshua, and I was born in a barn. But actually, before I was born in a barn, I was born from God and have existed forever.
- I haven't really done anything that notable for thirty years, but you should leave your job, follow me around, and listen to my words carefully.
- Thanks for following me. Now let me reveal more: remember that story about manna that fell from heaven in the Old Testament (the bread that appeared from heaven to feed the Israelites while they were wandering in the wilderness)? That bread actually symbolizes me, Joshua. And you have to eat my flesh so you can live forever.
- Don't believe me? Watch as I heal this person, make that person's eyes appear when he didn't have any, make this food multiply, tell you what you are thinking before you speak a word.
- Oh, and watch as I revive that guy who has been dead for four days. If you walk around with me, and believe that I am who I say that I am, and eat my flesh and drink my blood, you will become immortal, like me. Because I am not only able to give life, I am Life itself. I am the source of life. The only source.
- I bet you're starting to believe me now! Well believe this: I am God (if it wasn't clear already).
- I see you are all looking at me funny, but I'll prove it to you. I'm going to get arrested, be killed like a criminal, but I'll be back! Just give me 3 days.

Now, think about this: the only way anyone would accept that everything Joshua had been saying about himself is true is if he actually did rise from the dead like he predicted. If not, then Joshua was a liar or was crazy.

Christ rose from the dead, proving that He was God, and everything that He said about himself was true. But how do we know for ourselves that He actually rose from the dead? You can trust the witnesses who told us this.

What witnesses? The disciples and the other witnesses of Christ's resurrection.

But why can we trust them? Because they verified for themselves the truth of Christ's claims after they overcame an overwhelming weight of personal doubts. Only then were they willing to die for the truth they discovered.

Let's examine the extent to which the disciples believed Christ's words about Himself as their journey with Him progressed.

Throughout their time with Jesus, they were trying to figure Him out. Remember that Christ had more followers than just the Twelve, but eventually most left, especially when He started saying that people have to feed on Him and eat His body and blood to live forever. "From that time many of His disciples went back and walked with Him no more. Then Jesus said to the twelve, 'Do you also want to go away?'"[1] For those that remained by His side, all their belief was built up over time, as they heard all His words, saw His life, witnessed the miracles, and eventually finally became convinced of all that Christ was saying. As St. Peter declared, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God."[2]

But once He was arrested, they all forsook Him. "Okay, He said He was God, and I believed, but what if He isn't after all? How can God be so weak that He is arrested and subdued by His own creation?" That's what I imagine they were thinking, in line with the same logic applied by the priests and robbers around Christ as He was crucified: "Likewise the chief priests also, mocking with the scribes and elders, said, 'He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He is the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him. He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now if He will have Him; for He said, "I am the Son of God."' Even the robbers who were crucified with Him reviled Him with the same thing."[3] The Bible tells us the reaction of the disciples right after He was captured: "Then all the disciples forsook Him and fled."[4] And St. Peter, who had just recently declared belief in Christ as Son of God, strongly denied Him with a curse when pressed to answer: "Then he began to curse and swear, 'I do not know this Man of whom you speak!'"[5]

If they knew Christ was Lord, the disciples would not have feared death. But before we get those faithful disciples, we have the ones who are afraid after His death. After Christ died, we find them all locked up in a room afraid of being persecuted: "On the evening of that day, the first day of the week, the disciples had gathered together and locked the doors of the place because they were afraid of the Jewish leaders."[6]

Because we know that after they had their fears set aside and their belief in Christ restored, they joyfully accepted suffering and death, "rejoicing because they had been considered worthy to suffer dishonor for the sake of the name [of Christ],"[7] so that they willingly felt "to live is Christ, and to die is gain."[8]

How did the disciples suddenly change? Why can we trust their witness? It is because these disciples proved to us to be normal in their logic, and normal in their response. They saw the person they thought was God arrested and killed. And like any normal person, when they heard the news that He resurrected, it was not sufficient for them to just believe the news told them by Mary Magdalene. Peter and John ran to the tomb to verify it for themselves! They "both ran together, and the other disciple [John] outran Peter and came to the tomb first."[9] And after seeing the empty tomb, against all odds, they "saw and believed."[10]

But this was not all that happened. Do you think when Peter and John went to the other disciples and told them the news that everyone freely believed without any doubt? It took more, and more they received. As they were locked shut in the room, Christ Himself appears. "Jesus came and stood among them."[11] And as if appearing was not enough, He made them touch His side.

So then, after all these disciples believe, you would also think that Thomas would believe them too? Thomas wasn't there, as you know. He, like the rest of the disciples, needed to be sure before they went out and proclaimed what they were afraid was a lie. Like the rest of the disciples, like many of us, like this boy who I was speaking with, everyone was skeptical. Why should I believe just because they told me so? Thomas vehemently said, 'I will never believe it!' unless I see it for myself. We all know that is exactly what happened.

THE DISCIPLES GAIN NOTHING BY LYING, BUT RATHER LOSE EVERYTHING

See, it's very simple. These disciples were not willing to go suffer without being sure that what they were dying for was the truth. Unlike many religions out there whose founders often gained much from what they declared (be it fame, money, girls, etc.), what did the disciples and apostles gain?

Nothing, though they could have gained much. That is what St. Paul says. As messengers and servants of God, they could have asked for food, a wife, or other material things. However, St. Paul tells us, "We have not used this right, but endure all things lest we hinder the gospel of Christ… I have used none of these things, nor have I written these things that it should be done so to me; for it would be better for me to die than anyone should make my boasting void."[12]

Why then St. Paul? Why? Why would you suffer all these things? Because he was convinced that what he was doing was not based on a lie, but on a truth. He was persecuting Christians and had an amazing change of heart, in spite of the fact that he was joining a group that he helped make public enemy number one. Why? He too saw for himself and believed when Christ appeared to Him (Acts 9).

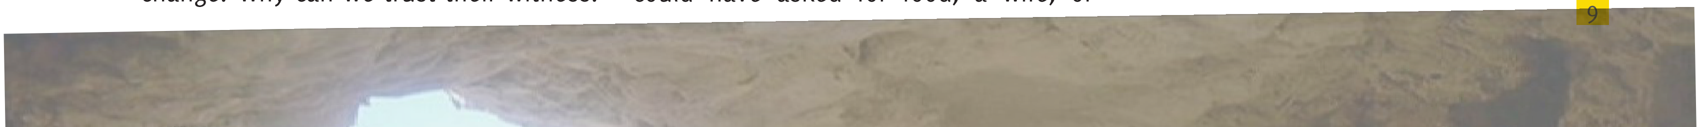
The story is simple. Why should you believe the testimony of everyone who teaches you today? Because the first witnesses upon whom those teachings are founded would not have suffered for a lie. They were afraid to suffer until they verified for themselves the truth. Then, and only then, did they accept suffering, and proceed with their mission to present Life to others so that they may pass the Truth to you today.

In the end, the following is the reason we believe in Christ's claims about Himself, and the claims of those who witnessed His life:

- Confucius's tomb: occupied
- Buddha's tomb: occupied
- Mohammed's tomb: occupied
- Jesus' tomb: EMPTY.

---

1 John 6:66–67.
2 Matthew 16:16.
3 Matthew 27:41-44.
4 Matthew 26:56.
5 Mark 14:71.
6 John 20:19.
7 Acts 5:41.
8 Philippians 1:21.
9 John 20:4.
10 John 20:8.
11 John 20:19.
12 1 Corinthians 9:12,15.



From a Monastic Journal

CONVERSATIONS WITH GOD

By: Anonymous

The Lord says:

"I love you. I want you to be with Me forever.

All that I have created is for your happiness. I keep watch over you throughout the night and give you the breath of life to wake up in the morning. I give you My light to brighten your day, and enlighten My path before you. I hold you under the shadow of My wing so you are not afraid, so you are not cold, so you feel the warmth of My embrace. During the heat, I fan you with My own hands so your frail, precious body doesn't faint from heat exhaustion. This body you live in is weak, but I love you, so I strengthen it and strengthen you beyond what is humanly possible. I love you and I stay awake all night thinking of you. My mind is always on you, concerned for you, longing for you. There is not a second I don't love you and think of you and strive for you to be with Me.

You are why I came to the world and took the form of man, walked on their roads, was circumcised, baptized, and shed My Blood on the cross… so we can be united in love forever. I died so that when you die we may live eternally in My Father's house. I died and resurrected so when your spirit departs your body, I will raise you up to stand before My Father who will unite us in His great wedding feast…

O, My beloved soul, how can you betray My love for you? How can you run after another? How can you not think of Me continually as I think of you? I am pure and perfect, how can you come to Me defiled with imperfection? Do you not know that My Father will not let us wed like this? How can you betray My love? After all I do for you and all the love I pour on you, how can you say that another has done this for you, or even worse, say that you are the one who has done or deserved this?! How can you betray My love so? How can you think that you don't need Me, that you don't want Me, that you don't love Me? How can you look to another, after all I have loved you? How can you love the world? How can you love the praise of other people? How can you love sin? How can you allow the devil to entice you? How can you choose him over Me?

I love you and labor for you continually, and think of you always! Why will you not return My love?

Do you not know that every time you overeat, oversleep, fail to pray or read or spend private time with Me, do you not know how much I pain, how much I long for our time together, how much I crave your company? I want us to dine together, but you go out to eat and then you come to say, 'I'm too full to eat with you, sorry.' I want to stay up late talking to you and spending time with you, but you busy yourself with everything or everyone else, so that when you come to look at Me you are so exhausted that I just let you sleep in My arms, as I watch over you. I glow when you walk in the door thinking we can spend time together, hear about your day and relieve your stress, but you are too distracted by thoughts of others that you do not let Me in… My advice you won't even hear. I watch over every second of your life, but you are too busy to notice, and too busy to look at Me.

CONVERSATIONS WITH GOD

. . . CONTINUED

What will I do? What will I say to My Father when He asks Me about you? With what shame does My head dangle as I relate to Him how You don't love Me, how you ignore Me, how you don't think of Me, but rather busy yourself with the world and have no time for Me! Will He let us wed? Of course not! He will answer Me, 'Why do You love such a wretched creature? Go marry one who loves You. As for her, she deserves hell for not loving My Son!'"

My Lord, Your heart is so sensitive and so gentle, it can be broken easily and quickly, yet You continue to love this poor wretched soul and try to call her to You. When I don't return Your love, I truly deserve hell, but I can't endure the thought of separating from You. Lord, I'm comfortable knowing You are there and that You love me, but I don't know why I'm not ready to commit myself totally to You. I enjoy the attention You give me, and the love You shower upon me, but if I commit myself totally to You, that would mean giving up all the other lovers I have… the ones who feed my pride and keep my ego alive… Ah huh! In Your presence all others are forgotten! I know what I'll do… I'll take You with me everywhere I go… If I can't do it physically, then I will do it mentally… I will always think of You as You always think of me… In the face of such intense love, who could resist?

O my sweet Lord, I have promised: now I ask Your strength to truly take You with me everywhere, to hold Your Hand for support and ask Your advice.

Lord, I truly do love You; please help me forsake all to truly unite with You.

AVOIDING DRYNESS AFTER THE SPIRITUAL SPRING

Celebrating the right way

BY MIRYAM NESSIM

The Great Fast is a time of spiritual renewal for many of us. In denying our flesh through fasting and prayer during this time, we fill ourselves with the presence of Christ in our lives. The Great Fast is the time when we return to our spiritual roots–that time when we were only a few days old and were baptized and became cleansed of sin. It is a journey to become a step closer to perfection, as Christ commanded, "You shall be perfect, just as your Father in heaven is perfect."[1]

However, when the Feast of the Holy Resurrection comes upon us, we are ready to do just the opposite of everything we've done in the last 55 days. We are quick to give our bodies everything that we deprived it of during the 55 days: food, sleep, TV, internet, etc. This can sometimes cause us to neglect our spiritual lives, maybe more than prior to the Great Fast. Thus, while this is a time of feasting, it is important to remember why and with Whom we are celebrating.

St. John Chrysostom tells us,

Enjoy ye all the feast of faith: Receive ye all the riches of loving-kindness. Let no one bewail his poverty, for the universal kingdom has been revealed. Let no one weep for his iniquities, for pardon has > shown forth from the grave. Let no one fear death, for the Savior's death has set us free.[2]

There is certainly plenty to be celebrating, but not without the spirit of continual thanksgiving and remembrance of the victory of our Lord Jesus Christ. If we abandon all spiritual practices after the Great Fast is over, how do we suppose we can spend time enjoying our Bridegroom while He is with us?

His Grace Bishop Youssef helps us with practical ways of keeping ourselves focused on the true feast that has more meaning than giving in to our flesh:

> Setting our minds on things above, not on things of the earth means seeking the ultimate spiritual glories of the age to come. Remember your baptism. Live according to His Resurrection! Seek true life in Christ. Put on the new man who is renewed in knowledge according to the image of Him who created him (Colossians 3:10). Thus the Resurrection restores to us the IMAGE OF GOD that we had lost due to sin.[3]

Let us not also forget that the Great Fast is a journey, not just a season that has a beginning and an end. The Great Fast is the spiritual highlight of the year, and the fruits we reap in the Great Fast are meant to keep us full all year long. Thus, it is imperative that we continue throughout the Holy Fifty Days–and the rest of year after that–the practices we have attained during the Great Fast. That way, the following Great Fast, we begin at a higher spiritual state, otherwise, we would only start again from scratch.

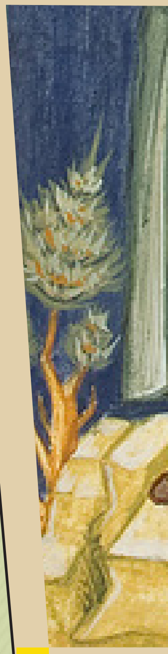
May God give us a heart that celebrates His Resurrection with the virtues we have attained in the Great Fast, that we may properly rejoice with the Bridegroom Who is with us during this blessed season.

---

1 Matthew 5:48.

2 http://oca.org/fs/sermons/the-paschal-sermon.

3 http://www.suscopts.org/resources/literature/257/feast-of-the-holy-resurrection/.



ST. ANTHONY OF EGYPT

AND THE VIRTUE OF POSITIVITY

BY JEREMIAH SOLIMAN

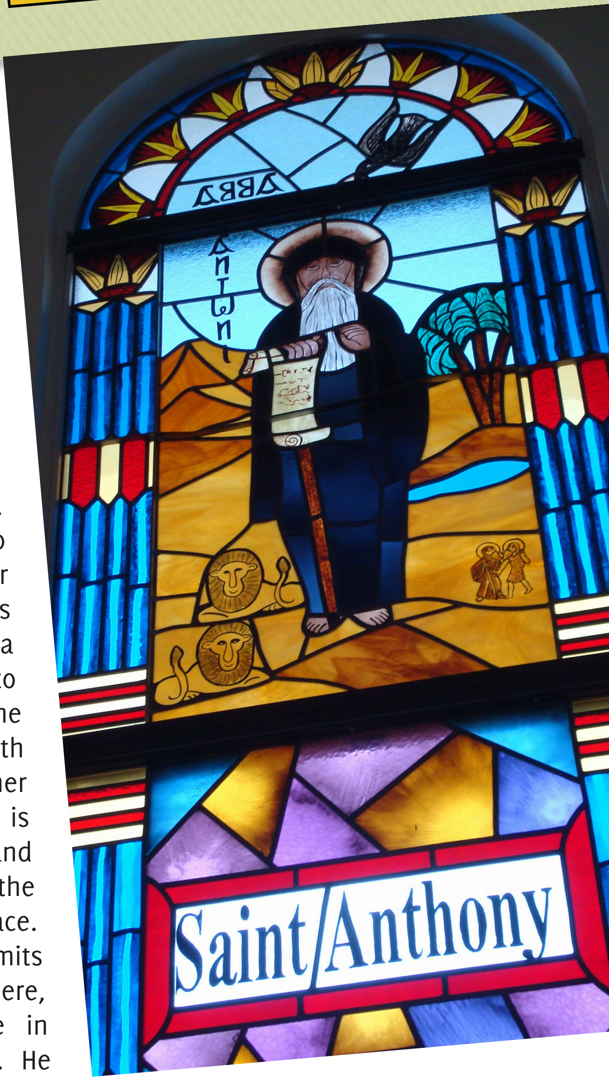
Saint Anthony was the first Christian to carry on an existence of consecrated solitude. As a hermit in the desert, he lived a long and righteous life that impacted endless individuals in his time, throughout the centuries, and even until today. Generally considered to be the father of monasticism, his life had an enormous effect on the history of not only our Orthodox Faith, but also the fundamental history of all of Christianity throughout the world.

His biography was written by one of Christianity's most eminent pioneers, St. Athanasius the Apostolic, who was both his pupil and close friend. The life story of the Father of all Monks is known across the Coptic community, exemplifying countless virtues that we as Christians ought to follow. Positivity, one of this saint's many virtues that we can see, is a distinguishing characteristic that grows in the life of wisdom. The wise man is always positive and views every matter with positivity and enthusiasm.

When St. Anthony was about eighteen years old, his parents passed away. Some people would surround themselves with complete sadness when they face a loved one's departure. However, St. Anthony the Great faced this situation in a positive way by not being entangled in earthly desires and cares. Colossians 3:1-4 tells us, "If then you have been raised with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. Set your mind on things that are above, not on things that are on earth. For you have died, and your life is hidden with Christ in God. When Christ who is your life appears, then you also will appear with him in glory." He did not care about the great amount of wealth his parents had left him, but rather focused on his spiritual journey and looked for what he needed to do to gain a strong relationship with Christ.

As a young man, hearing the Holy Gospel according to St. Matthew chapter 19—which mentions celibacy and Jesus telling the rich young man to give everything to the poor—provided him with the answer to his mission. His attendance and attention to the liturgical readings gave him the opportunity to receive a life changing message from God. He listened to this passage and considered it a personal message for him. Pope Tawadros II has said, "How wonderful is the man who considers the words of the Holy Bible a special message for him." Not a general message for anyone at any time, but a private message for you, your life and your circumstances.

Coming from a very wealthy family, it was probably very hard for St. Anthony to sell all that he owned and become a poor man. He took the wealth his parents left him and gave it to the poor and saved a part of this wealth for his sister Dious, who consecrated herself as a bride for Christ in a virgin's house.



At this point, St. Anthony abided by our Lord's commandment. He went to the near wilderness, and he started the life of asceticism. Tradition tells us that there were some hermits who were occupying the area surrounding the Nile River of Egypt, but there was no monastery to gather them. One famous story tells us of a woman who went to bathe in the river one day. The saint met with her and scolded her saying that this region is for the hermits only, and she does not have the right to enter this place. She replied that hermits should not be living here, for they should live in the inner wilderness. He listened to her words, considering them to be another message from God to go live in the inner wilderness. If he did not see the situation as a positive one, he would not have heard God's personal message to him, and may have wronged the woman by rebuking her.

These are a few of the many scenes in St. Anthony's life where he showed positivity and various other virtues in dealing with matters. A lesson for us all: be positive in your life. It is very easy to complain or to criticize, but to see a situation in a positive way benefits you and builds a better life.

Bibliography:

St. Anthony the Great. Perf. Pope Tawadros. Www.youtube.com. Christian Youth Channel, 29 Jan. 2014. Web. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9KrItZ30gA8>.

"Saint Anthony Father of All Monks." www.coptic.net. Copt-Net Repository, n.d. Web. <http://www.coptic.net/synexarion/anthony.txt>.

Athanasius, and J. B. McLaughlin. St. Antony of the Desert. Rockford, IL: Tan, 1995. Print.

RESURRECTION MATTERS: THE ENDLESS FRONTIER

Special Message for You

FROM HIS GRACE BISHOP YOUSSEF

Each week of the Holy Great Fast marks an opportunity to shun temptation and rise from sin. Refusing to repent is a deep slumber into a spiritual demise. There are three forms of resurrection. The first is the holy sacrament of Baptism, which is the first step onto the path of salvation and which cleanses us from original sin. This great sacrament can only take place once in a lifetime. The second is the holy sacrament of Repentance and Confession, which by the grace of God, is an ongoing renewal of heart and mind. The third is the final resurrection from physical death. In this ultimate resurrection, the body, soul, and spirit will rise unto everlasting life.

Week 1: Resurrection from Covetousness
Matthew 6:19-33

Many people—youth and adults are engrossed in materialism. There is a lot of pressure to show off. Our Lord Jesus Christ advises us as to where our treasures ought to be and not to be. Make an everlasting investment in heaven, not in the frivolous earthly things that last for a limited time. If you are not careful, materialism will consume your thoughts and desires, you will drift into the spell of covetousness, and your energy will be spent on meaningless things. Detach and let this be a resurrection from materialism.

Week 2: Resurrection from Deviousness
Matthew 4:1-11

The devil has no boundaries as to how far, and whom, he will try to lure into wickedness. Seeing that Christ had been fasting, Satan tried to seize this opportunity to tempt Him—as if he could. These same tricks he tries with us. Unfortunately, too often, we do not resist. We may not know how, but remember that Christ taught us how—through the Holy Scriptures, which sustain us. This wakefulness and alertness are a resurrection from temptation.

Week 3: Resurrection from Selfishness
Luke 15:11-32

Two selfish sons had issues, but the focus initially revolved around the recklessness of the younger son, and then turned toward the haughtiness of the older son. The younger—prodigal son thought he was invincible, took money that was not really his to take at that time, and squandered what his father labored to provide for the family. When he finally came to his senses, he repented. Unfortunately, the older son resented the celebration for his younger brother's resurrection and restoration to the family. Repentance is the resurrection that brings us to the holy Eucharist—Christ's ultimate sacrifice and feast, for which He emptied Himself on our behalf.

Week 4: Resurrection from Obliviousness
John 4:1-42

Obliviousness captivated a Samaritan woman—going from one marital relationship to another. Finally, she gave up on marriage after the fifth attempt and decided to just live with the sixth man. Spurned by society, she continued in a bizarre spiral of spiritual death until her meeting with Christ. From there, she left her water pot—her former thoughts of refreshment. She was renewed and resurrected from her previously prized sins. Empowered by our Lord Jesus Christ who transformed her, she began to evangelize in his holy name.

Week 5: Resurrection from Carelessness
John 5:1-18

Thirty-eight years and this man still could not find anyone to help him enter the water to be healed. No one seemed to care. Perhaps, he did not care either. He did not know who Jesus was and did not express sorrow for the sins that had brought him to this calamity of paralysis. Rather, he merely complained that there was no one to care for him. Therefore, Christ asked him frankly if he really even wanted to be healed. When this man finally took some personal action, to at least respond to the question about his healing, our Lord Jesus Christ healed him, but warned him to sin no more. Not only had this man sinned, which led him to his current state, but he did not even care to acknowledge his transgressions nor take responsibility for his offenses.

Week 6: Resurrection from Sightlessness
John 9:1-41

Born blind, Demas was not alone. Figuratively, all of humanity shared in his sightless body, as revealed in the Holy Gospel according to St. Matthew[1] quoting the prophecies of Isaiah the prophet: "The people who sat in darkness have seen a great light, and upon those who sat in the region and shadow of death Light has dawned."[2] Likewise, Zacharias the priest proclaimed similar prophetic words to his son, John, regarding his role as the Forerunner and Baptist: "To give light to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."[3] Admitting to our spiritual shortsightedness is a resurrection from the sins committed in ignorance.

Week 7: Resurrection from Lifelessness
Lazarus Saturday John 11:1-45

Though Hosanna Sunday is the seventh week of the Holy Great Fast, the Church celebrates the raising of Lazarus after having lain in the tomb for four days. His lifeless body arose at the command of the Lord Jesus Christ. If Christ Himself did not rise from the dead, neither would have Lazarus, or anyone for that matter. Lazarus' resurrection was a prelude to Christ's holy resurrection. On Hosanna Sunday—Hosanna meaning save us—we welcome the Lord into our hearts, to cleanse us from our sins, and to lead us to the resurrection.

Week 8: The Greatness of the Holy Resurrection
John 20:1-18

Resurrection matters greatly. This is the eighth day, which signifies eternity in Church tradition. Christ is the holy resurrection. There is nothing else and no one else that can be more wonderful, beautiful, and delightful. Thus, we joyfully die with Him, rise with Him, and live with Him, for Him, and in Him.

---

1 Matthew 4:15-16.
2 Isaiah 9:1-2.
3 Luke 1:79.

Gold Nuggets

There Is None Upon Earth That I Desire Besides You[1]

BY THE THRICE BLESSED POPE SHENOUDA III

There are some beautiful verses in Psalm 73 that I would like to talk with you about:

I was so foolish and ignorant, I was like a beast before You. Nevertheless I am continually with You; You hold me by my right hand. You will guide me with Your counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Whom have I in heaven but You? And there is none upon earth that I desire besides You.[2]

This last verse is the one I want to focus on with you. The person who loves our Lord, tastes the life of fellowship with Him, experiences life with Him, relishes God's strong Hand in life, and touches upon God's work in life, feels sufficient with God, saying, "And there is none upon earth that I desire besides You." After tasting the sweetness of our Lord, a person cannot put anything ahead of Him, it just does not fit. It is impossible! This is like a woman who wears an expensive silk dress, and then patches it with rags. That simply does not work. After tasting this sweetness, you cannot place anything else next to it. This is why people who have tasted our Lord, could not put anything else besides our Lord in their lives. Our Lord satiated them fully, such that all desires and pleasures became petty next to our Lord. All desires lost their value, all pleasures lost their taste, and when our Lord became everything, this person started to say, "And there is none upon earth that I desire besides You." To be continued...

---

[1] From the October 14, 1977 Friday sermon (at that time His Holiness' sermons were held on Fridays, instead of Wednesday) on There is none upon earth that I desire besides You.

[2] Psalm 73:22-25.

Golden Anecdotes

Faith is the mother of virtues[1]

BY HIS HOLINESS POPE TAWADROS II

At the start of the twentieth century, there was a nun serving in Africa. Buses had recently been invented. She served amidst tribes in various places, and thought that if she procured a bus, she could gather up the children from many places and bring them to church. She stood before the children and told them, "Children, pray that God sends us a bus." The children raised their hands and asked, "What is a bus?" She took a piece of chalk and drew a bus on the blackboard. The children stood up to pray: "God, send us a blue bus." She was surprised that the children were making a specific request from the Lord. It was blue chalk! Less than a year later, the abbess gathered up the nuns and told them, "There is a bus being gifted to the convent. Which of you prayed for a bus?" This nun stood and shared her story. The abbess said, "Well then, if the bus arrives blue then it is yours. If it is any other color, then it goes for convent use." The nun wrote in her journal, "How astonished I was to find the bus was actually blue!"

I want to reveal to you a mystery: God answers prayers the most when they are offered up by children. If you have children–or if you yourself have the heart of a child–and you have an issue that needs prayers, no matter how enormous the issue, ask the children to pray. Their innocence and purity of heart makes their prayers rise to heaven directly and return with the appropriate answer.

---

[1] From a sermon during His Holiness' visit to Canada in September 2014.

QUESTION General Question #1

Q What are the historical, spiritual significance, and symbolic contemplative effects of the Resurrection Enactment performed during the Divine Liturgy?

LOOK FOR THE ANSWER ON ANOTHER PAGE

Diocese

PROGRAMS

Diocese Educational Programs
Board of Education

Asaph Hymns Institute
(AHI) is the first ever online hymnological seminary.

Family Ministry Program
(FMP) mission: training men and women from congregations all over the United States to aid clergy in shepherding the flock.

LEAD Program
A program for learning Christian leadership principles.

Theological Seminary Program
Program Registration deadline:June 15, 2015

Theological Seminary Program - Nashville
An Arabic theological program located in Nashville.

Theological Seminary Boarding Program - Abbey
A 2 year live-in program located at St. Mary and St. Moses Abbey.

Diocese Programs

Archangel Raphael Ministry (A.R.M.)
A program designed specifically for individuals with special needs.

H.O.P.E. Social Services
A social services program designed to help those in need.

St. Clement Christian Academy
This is a learning community dedicated to meeting the needs of each learner within its walls.

St. Mark Festival Program
This is a spiritual competition among the Coptic Churches doing the same activity world-wide.

St. Verena Resource Ministry
(SVRM) Professionals networking together to make a difference and provide resources to our Coptic community. To make a request or to volunteer as a consultant.

EVENTS

Pre-Marital Retreat
TX: TBA
FL: Jan 15-17, 2016
TN: TBA
GA: Jun 12-14, 2015

FL Newlywed Convention
Jun 5-7, 2015

Extreme Family Makeover (EFM) Coptic Edition
Jun 19-21, 2015

College Summer Convention - GA/LA/TN
Jul 23-26, 2015

High School Summer Convention - GA/LA/TN
Girls: Jul 12-15, 2015
Boys: Jul 15-18, 2015

Diocese Pilgrimage to the Holy Land
Oct 19–31, 2015

BUT THOSE WHO WAIT ON THE LORD, SHALL RENEW THEIR STRENGTH; THEY SHALL MOUNT UP WITH WINGS LIKE EAGLES,

ISAIAH 40:31

MIGHTY CHAMPIONS

THEY SHALL RUN AND NOT BE WEARY, THEY SHALL WALK AND NOT FAINT.

www.suscopts.org/MightyChampions

To download, purchase, or subscribe to receive the magazine, visit us on our website!

Publication of the Coptic Orthodox Diocese of the Southern U.S.

Pope Shenouda III series
6

MEDITATIONS ON THE FEAST OF THE ASCENSION

BY HIS HOLINESS AMBA SHENOUDA III,
POPE AND PATRIARCH OF ALEXANDRIA
AND OF THE APOSTOLIC SEE OF
ALL THE PREDICATION OF SAINT MARK

Translated from the Arabic 2nd edition June 1999
By Meleka Habib Youssef

Name of the book: Meditations on The Feast of The Ascension
Author: His Holiness Pope Shenouda III
Second Edition: September 1999
Press: Amba Rueiss, (Offset)
Deposition number at "The Library": 7225/1997
I.S.B.N. 977 - 5345 – 41 - 3

All rights reserved to the author
His Holiness Pope Shenouda III
Pope and Patriarch of the See of Alexandria and of all the Predication of the Evangelist St. Mark

The Cover of the book.

In the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, the One God,
Amen

In this pamphlet, you read about:

- The manner of The Ascension
- The glorious body – is not against the terrestrial gravitation.
- A proof of His Divinity.
- The meaning of the sitting at the right of the Father.
- He was not separated from The Church during His Ascension.
- A weaning operation for the Apostles
- His Ascension is a pledge for our ascension
- Meditations on the Ascension
- The spiritual life is an ascension
- The wisdom of the ten days

Pope Shenouda III

FOREWORD

I have the pleasure to present to you this booklet about the glorious Feast of The Ascension, in which I shall converse with you about:

- The Ascension of The Lord Jesus-Christ was with the body.
- It was an Ascension with a glorious body. I t was not against the terrestrial gravitation.
- What is the meaning of His Ascension on the clouds? What is His relation to the clouds?
- The Ascension is a proof of His Divinity, and is the end of "making Himself of no reputation".
- What is the meaning of His sitting at the right of the Father?
- In His Asension, The Lord Christ was not separated from His Church.
- His Ascension was an operation of weaning for His Apostles.

- His Ascension is the pledge of our ascension to Him.
- Some meditations on the Ascension. Lessons from the glory of The Ascension.
- All the spiritual life is an ascension.
- The wisdom of the ten days between The Ascension and The Pentecost.

Pope Shenouda III

The Church celebrates The Feast of The Ascension, on Thursday on the fortieth day after The Resurrection of The Lord, and we would like to meditate together on the spiritual meanings that are included in that Feast, so that we can celebrate it with a deep comprehension of the inspirations which are embodied in the Feast…….

The Christ spent forty day with His Apostles after the Resurrection, and on the fortieth day he bade them farewell, and promised them that they "shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon" them. (Acts 1:8)…..

"Now when He had spoken these things, while they watched, He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as He went up,

" – two angels stood by them and said to them: "why do you stand gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, who was taken up from you into heaven, will so come in like manner as you saw Him go into heaven." (Acts 1: 9-11)

What is then our meditation in this Ascension?

***   *   ***

The Feast of The Ascension is a feast of The Lord. The miracle of The Ascension is special to the Lord Christ alone. It has never happened to any human being, but it was exclusively for The Lord: like His virginal birth. It was like His Resurrection by the power of His Divinity and His coming out of the closed tomb, and like The Transfiguration on the mount Tabor. Such also was His Ascension to heaven and His sitting at the right of The Father.

He ascended by Himself, and not like the prophet Elias who was taken by a chariot of fire and ascended into it. (2 Kings 2: 10-11)
And not like Enoch who "was not, for God took him. (Genesis 5:24)
As for The Lord Christ, He ascended by His power, without any external power.

***   *   ***

In the same manner as He arose by His own power alone, without anybody arising Him, so also He ascended by His power.

The power of the Ascension was in Him, just as the power of The Resurrection was in Him. His glory appeared in both.

HOW WAS THE ASCENSION

It was an Ascension with the body, with the human nature: because the Divine Nature neither ascends nor descends. He fills all. He is present in Heaven and on earth, and in what is between both of them. How then would He ascend to Heaven while He is in Heaven?! And how would He leave the Earth to go to Heaven, while He remains on earth during His Ascension?! Consequently we must say that The Lord ascended with the body (that was united to the Divine Nature). That is what we say to Him during the prayer of the Holy Gregorian Mass: "at the moment of Your bodily Ascension into Heaven".

***   *   ***

The Ascension of The Lord was in the clouds:
"while they watched, he was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." (Acts 1:9)
He ascended in glory on a cloud, such as also He will come in His second coming, on the clouds in glory. He said thus to the chief priests during his trial before the Crucifixion, "hereafter: you will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of the Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven." (Matt. 26:64)
This expression adds that the sitting at the right hand of the Father, was one of the glories of the Ascension.
In the Holy Bible, the clouds represents the glory and the coming of the Lord. In the story of the blessing of the seventy elders as assistants to the prophet Moses, the Lord says about Moses: "the Lord came down in a cloud and spoke with him…." And when the tabernacle was finally erected and arranged, the divine Intuition said: "Then the cloud covered the tabernacle of meeting, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. And Moses was not able to enter the tabernacle of meeting, because the cloud rested above it, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." (Exodus 40: 34-35)

In the New Testament, before the miracle of The Transfiguration*:*

"And a cloud came and overshadowed them; and a voice came out of the cloud, saying,"This is My beloved Son, Hear Him!" (Mark 9:7), (Luke 9:35)

CHRIST DID NOT PART FROM US

IN HIS ASCENSION

The Lord Christ was with the Apostles in the flesh….then He Ascended from them, but He did not part from them.

The Ascension of Christ to heaven, was not a separation from His Church on earth.

It was not a separation from the Church; it was not relinquishing or forsaking the Church, because He said:

" I am with you always, even to the end of the age." (Matt. 28:20)

And He said also:

"For where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there in the midst of them." (Matt. 18:20)

Consequently He is with us in the Church, and in every spiritual meeting. He is with us in the Holy Eucharist in every mass. He is [Immanuel, which is translated "God with us". (Matt. 1:23)]

The Apocalypse gives us a moving picture of The Lord Christ walking in the midst of the seven churches, holding in His right hand seven stars that are the pastors of the churches. (Apoc. 2:1)

He also abides in us, and we in Him (John 17), and He also dwells in our hearts through faith (Ephesus 3:17).

It is just simply that He is with us in an invisible manner.

For we have become in the New Testament in a state of spiritual maturity, in which we live by the word of The Lord:

"Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed." (John 20:29)

We believe in the existence of God with us, without seeing Him, and we believe in the existence of The Holy Spirit in us, without seeing Him. It is sufficient for us to see His work, and to touch His Hand in our life……

*** * ***

Christ is with The Church on a level which is higher than the level of the senses, and higher than the level of visible things…….we do not see Him in the body but we believe that He is with us through faith, and

"faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Hebrews 11:1)

In the Ascension of Christ, He disappeared from the sight of the Apostles…..but He did not disappear from their souls. That was an evanescence, but not a departure….It was an operation of weaning for the senses, so that the soul might be nourrished through faith, and not remain under the power of the senses.

Before the maturity of the Apostles, He had permitted them to see and touch, and live depending on the bodily senses ……but after their maturity, and after the coming of The Spirit upon them, they will have then to see through faith.

It is as if He says: " You are no more in need to see me in the body….you are now in the stage of maturity, and you see me through the spirit. And effectively, in that maturity the Apostles did not feel at all that Christ had parted from them. Let then this thought be in our hearts.

WEANING

The Ascension of the Lord to heaven was an operation of weaning for the Apostles:

During the time of their discipleship to Him when He was in the midst of them through the body, they were used to depend upon Him in everything without doing anything themselves. It was He who performed the miracles, and He who replied to those who opposerd Him, while the Apostles stood as spectators; Their discipleship was merely following Him and learning from Him. They contemplated and learned…..

But then after the Ascension, it was time for them to be weaned, and to assume all the spiritual responsibilities themselves: to make disciples of all the nations, to teach to them to observe all things that the Lord had commanded them (Matt. 28), to reply to those who oppose them, and to suffer pain in the work of preaching.

The weaning of the Apostles by Christ, did not at all mean that He relinquished them, but rather it meant the proclamation of their development and maturity, and their assuming responsibility.

Christ had spent forty days with His Apostles, talking to them about the things pertaining to the kingdom od God…..but He did not prolong the forty days….these were enough. Afterwards He Ascended and left them to minister. That was no surprise. But they had ten more days ahead in which to make themselves ready and to wait for the coming down of The Holy Spirit upon them.

With the forty days, the stage of preparation for the ministry ended, and the stage of faith through the senses ended.

Be mobilized then. Let every one say: "O Lord, I feel that you are with me, and I feel that Your word is in my mouth. I shall minister but not with my human nature, but with Your Spirit, You will give me what words to speak. Then I would make miracles, but with Your power Yourself.

The Lord was like an eagle teaching the little ones how to fly.

When they grow up or when they become mature, he carries them upon his wings, then drop them in the air and flies up away from them, so that they move their wings and learn how to fly. In all this, he does not forsake them, but rather he watches them and comes to protect them if they encounter any danger.

Or like a father teaching his son how to swim. He carries him on his hands, then leaves him inside the water after having taught him how to swim, in order that he would swim alone and experience the water. Nevertheless he does not forsake him, but stays near with him, and assists him whenever he is in need.

In a similar manner, The Lord trained His Apostles during three years or more, and sent them also for a practical training (Matt. 10). Then when the training stage was finished, He ascended from them so that they would act by themselves and complete their mission, while He would be with them always, even to the end of the age.

The Ascension was the proclamation of the end of the training stage and of the beginning of the ministry.

Therefore He said to them before His Ascension:
"you shall receive power when the Holy Sprit has come upon you, and you shall be witnesses to me" (Acts 1:8).
And He said:

"Go into all the world and preach he gospel to every creature." (Mark 16:1)
And He said also:

"Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you" (Matt. 28: 19-20).

THE ASCENSION
AND GRAVITATION

Some would ask: "Did The Lord trample down the law of terrestrial gravitation?

To answer this question, we mention two important points:

1. God had established the natural laws in order to submit nature to them, and not to submit Himself to them! Was there then a miracle? Here I answer:
2. It was a miracle for us to see The Lord Christ ascending with His body upwards to heaven. But effectively that was something natural for the glorious body with which The Lord is risen.

Therefore the miracle of the Ascension was not in the victory over the terrestrial laws of gravitation, rather it was in the spiritual celestial body, that could ascend upwards. It was then a sublimation of nature, and not a contradiction to it. It was a kind of transfiguration of the nature of the body……

If it was a natural body that ascended up to heaven, we would have said that this was against laws of terrestrial gravitation. But when a spiritual celestial body ascends to heaven, that is a matter which is in accordance with the exaltation of the new nature which the body takes in the resurrection, and then becomes a spiritual body, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15:50)

***   *   ***

Verily, the miracle is the body of the Resurrection or the body of the Ascension.

Christ has ascended into heaven with a glorious body, going steadily upwards, not at all submitting to the laws of terrestrial gravitation.

It is a body that has not the material weight which draws downwards, but has rather another glorious nature who can ascend.

Verily, the Lord Christ is risen with a glorious body, that could go out of the tomb while it was closed, and could enter the upper room to the Apostles, while the doors were locked. (John 20: 19-26), but the Apostles were not certain about the glory of His body, because they "supposed they had seen a spirit", and then because they handled Him, and because He condescended "and ate in their presence." (Luke 24: 37-43)

But they entered to the depth of the faith in that glorious body during the Ascension, that attracted their sights upwards, so that the two angels said to them:
"why do you stand gazing up into heaven? (Acts 1 :11)

*** * ***

The miracle of the Ascension is the transformation of the material body into a spiritual body, a heavenly body, a glorious body, that can go upwards. That same thing will also happen to us in the Resurrection, when "we shall be glorified with Him", we shall be "raised in incorruption", we shall be "raised in power", in glory.
(1Cor. 15: 52-53)

"Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus we shall always be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4:17)

The Apostle annouces us that theLord
"will transform our lowly body that it may be conformed to His glorious body" (Philippians 3:21) meaning that we shall be raised with a glorious body.

He explains this matter in detail in the chapter of the Resurrection (1 Cor. 15), how our mortal body will "put on immortality", and the "corruptible must put on incorruption". We shall take off the animal body of dust, in order to put on a spiritual luminous heavenly body. (1 Cor. 15: 41-50)

***   *   ***

Therefore the Ascension of the Lord is the pledge of our ascension.

In the same manner as the Resurrection was the pledge or our resurrection, since He is "the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep" (1 Cor. 15:20),
and
"as in Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive"
(1 Cor. 15: 22),
so also in the Ascension, we hear Him say:
"And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all peoples to Myself."
(John 12: 32)
on the clouds, and in heaven, and with a glorious body, and we shall be always with the Lord, in the heavenly Jerusalem the dwelling of God with men" (Revelation 21: 2-3) on a level that is higher than matter and higher than the senses, in the likeness of the body of His glory, among the myriads of His saints, when we shall also be glorified with Him (Rom. 8:17), when we shall be raised in glory (1 Cor. 15:43) and consequently we shall ascend to Him in glory…

We have received in the image of the Ascension, the pledge of the glorious body that is lifted up to heaven.

That still remains our hope, in that He will deliver us from matter and its outcome, and that our body will not be a material body forever, but that we shall put on the spiritual, by the redemption of our body (Rom. 8:23). But what is the way that leads to the glory which our bodies will obtain?

The way that leads to the glory of our bodies, is first death, then resurrection…..Therefore we do not fear death. With death we get rid of the sensible body, and with resurrection we put on the spirituality of the glorious body.

If we remain in that body, we shall remain in matter, but if we take off this substance through death, we shall be qualified to the spirituality of the body in eternity. Who then among us desires to remain in dust, without being transformed into glory?!

THE SITTING AT THE RIGHT HAND OF THE FATHER

This sitting was mentioned in both the Old and the New Testaments:

In the Old Testament, we read in the psalm"

"The Lord said to my Lord,
Sit at My right hand,
Till I make Your enemies Your footstool."

And here, in that sitting, He calls Him Lord, through the glory of His victory over His enemies.

And in the New Testament, the story of the Ascension in the gospel of St. Mark narrates"

"So then, after the Lord had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God." (Mark 16:19)

This sitting appeared in the story of the martyrdom of St. Stephen, the first deacon, when he said:

"Look, I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God" (Acts 7:56).

How numerous are the references to His sitting at the right hand of The Father, in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Here are some of them:

" when He had by Himself purged our sins, sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high having become so much better than the angels" (Hebrews 1:3-4) see also (Heb. 8:1), and (Heb. 12:2).

Here we ask: "what is the meaning of the sitting at the right hand of The Father?"

God has neither right nor left, because He is limitless. And there is no void space at His right hand where somebody would sit, because He fills all. But the word "right hand" means power and majesty and justice, as it was said in the psalm:

"The right hand of the Lord does valiantly,
The right hand of the Lord is exalted,
The right hand of the Lord does valiantly." (Psalm 118: 15-16)

The meaning is that Christ sat with the majesty and the power of The Father.

*** * ***

Another meaning which we understand from the Ascension:

THE END OF THE EXPRESSION: "HE MADE HIMSELF OF NO REPUTATION"

With the glorious Ascension, the expression "made Himself of no reputation" which was said about the Lord Christ, ended. (Philippians 2:7). Now He is in glory.

He had made Himself of no reputation when He incarnated "taking the form of a bondservant, and coming in the likeness of men." (Philippians 2:7)

But after His Ascension, He entered in His glory, and the expression "He sat at the right hand of The Father" means that He is abiding, that He is in perpetual glory, where there is no more making of no reputation…… the making of no reputation with which He was born in a manger, and lived poorly, having nowhere to lay His head,
"A Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" (Isaiah 53-3).

Therefore, when He will come in His second advent, He will come "with power and great glory" (Matt. 24:30),
(in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him" (Matt. 25:31).

It was rather said:
"Behold, the Lord comes with ten thousands of His saints" (Jude 14), "and then He will reward each according to his works." (Matt. 16:27).

Before His second coming, Saul of Tarsus saw Him in glory (Acts 9:3). And John saw Him such:
"and *His cou*ntenance was like the sun shining in its strength." (Rev. 1:16)

The expression "sat" means stability and continuity, because He is eternally in glory.

In His second advent He will not come to take away the sin of the world (John 1:29) and "be sin for us" (2 Cor. 5:21) as it happened during His first coming, but He will come as absolute justice, leading the army of the righteous or the army of the victorious.

***   *   ***

In the Ascension of The Lord to heaven, we say to Him: The earth is not the place where to lay Your head, but it is Your footstool (Matt. 5-35). Rather it is Your humility that makes it Your footstool!

Verily this earth does not deserve that Your feet tread upon it. And we are from the dust of this earth. Who then are we before You? Nothing…

By humbling ourselves like this before Him, it will be possible for us to be raised up to Him, because "he who humbles himself will be exalted" (Matt. 23:12).

MEDITATIONS ON THE ASCENSION

The Ascension gives the spirit of hope:

Who would have thought during the sufferings of the Cross, and what humiliations and scorn that were there, that He will end in that glory in the Resurrection and the Ascension and the sitting at the right hand of The Father?! Does not this give us the fullness of hope whenever we are surrounded by tribulations? Let us remember that after the sorrows of the Golgotha, there are the rejoicings of the Resurrection and the glories of the Ascension.

All the problem lies in that it is a matter that needs faith, confidence and patience.

There are people who are swallowed by tribulations whenever these happen to them, and their souls remain emprisoned inside the tribulations, as if there were no salvation!!

The lives of these people end in despair without hope, at the Golgotha; and if the story of Christ had ended with His crucifixion, we would have become the most miserable of men.

But we rejoice because the story of the Crucifixion was followed with the Resurrection, then the Ascension. In the Resurrection it was possible to destroy death, but Christ still remained on earth. While in the Ascension, He is raised up over the earth, in glory, to heaven.

The miracle of the Ascension gives us a kind of hope from

two sides:

The first one is meant for those who were scandalised by the Cross of our Lord and by the accompanying humiliations and sufferings, in that the riposte was first in the glory of the Resurrection, then in the glory of the Ascension. In that way, faith returned to those who had thought that everything ended with the Cross; and we have the hope that after every cross, there is resurrection and there is ascension. This hope accompanied the martyrs and the confessors in evey generation.

The second side of hope is that we shall have the same:

Therefore, as Christ ascended with a glorious body, so we also shall have a glorious body (Philippians 3:21). And as a cloud took Him out of the sight of the Apostles in His Ascension, so we also shall come with Him on the clouds on the last day,

"at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints" (1 Thess. 3:13),* when

"the Lord comes with ten thousands of His saints, to execute judgement on all" (Jude 14-15),* when He will be "coming with clouds, and every eye will see him" (Rev. 1:7).

"Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus we shall always be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4:17)

Verily how great is that hope!……

***   *   ***

This hope teaches us patience and waiting for the Lord.

Patience first in the realisation of the promises of the Lord, patience in the sufferings of the cross, until the glories of the resurrection and the glories of the ascension are accomplished.

Patience in the Ascension of the Lord leaving us with the body, until the word of the two angels to the Apostles on the day of the Ascension are fulfilled:

"This same Jesus, who was taken up from you into heaven, will so come in like manner as you saw Him go into heaven." (Acts 1:11)

Such also was the patience which our fathers the Apostles had in waiting for the promise of the Lord to send to them the Holy Spirit.

It is patience with hope. It is hope full of joy in the confidence of the fulfillment of the promises of the Lord, as the Apostle said: "rejoicing in hope" (Romans 12:12).

***   *   ***

The Ascension of the Lord implied three promises:

The first promise is the sending of the Holy Spirit to remain with us eternally. Thus He said to them in advance:

"Nevertheless I tell you the truth. It is to your advantage that I go away, for if I do not go away, the Helper will not come to you, but if I depart, I will send Him to you." (John 16:7)

And so it happened; and He sent to them the Holy Spirit ten days after His Ascension.

As for the second promise, it is His word to them:

"I will not leave you orphans, I will come to you." (John 14:18)

And His word also:

"I am with you alwa ys, even to the end of the age." (Matt. 28:20)

He fulfilled this promise also, and is still fulfilling it.

The beloved Saint John saw Him in the midst of the seven churches, (Apoc. 1: 13-14), holding the angels of the seven churches "or their pastors", in His right hand.

As for the third promise, it is His word to His Apostles:

"And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all peoples to Myself." (John 12:32)

He draws us to Himself in order to lift us up to heaven, as

He said:

"I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to Myself, that where I am, there you may be also." (John 14: 2-3)

Consequently, it is a promise that we shall be with Him, on earth and in heaven. On earth:

"I am with you alwa ys"*, and *"For where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there in the midst of them." (Matt. 18:20)

And in heaven:

"that where I am, there you may be also." (John 14:3)

And as the Apostle saint Paul said:

"Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus we shall always be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4:17)

How great is that glory!……

*** * ***

He said to His Apostles:

"that where I am, there you may be also." (John 14:3)

Not on earth, but in heaven. However on earth, prepare yourself in order to be in heaven.

I was with you when I made Myself of no reputation, and you will be with Me when I enter into My glory.

Whoever can conceive this truth, and that he will be with the Lord in the likeness of a glorious body, will indubitably respect his soul, and will not debase his soul with sin, but rather he will prepare his soul to inherit the kingdom.

This glory with the Lord on the clouds and in heaven, will not be inherited by those who cling to dust, to material matters, to the earth, and those who love the world.

*** * ***

SOME ADVICES
ON THE OCCASION OF
THE ASCENSION

In the uplifting of the Lord to heaven, He has drawn our sights and our hearts also to heaven:

Therefore it was said about the Ascension of the Lord to heaven that the Apostles:

"looked steadfastly toward heaven as He went up" (Acts 1:10).

That is one of the heavenly lessons to us, that we should be steadfastly looking toward heaven where the Lord has ascended, and to heaven from where He will come to us in His second advent. Also we should be steadfastly looking toward heaven where all our emotions and our hopes are concentrated all the time, in His heavenly kingdom, as the Lord said:

"For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also."
(Matt. 6:21)

Those people who have all their treasures on earth, are poor, and therefore all their desires and all their hopes will be on earth. And when they leave the earth, they will not find anything.

As for the sons of God, they live always looking steadfastly toward heaven to which their hearts and all their desires cling.

May therefore our thoughts be always lifted up toward heaven.

They all mount there to be with the Lord, together with all the desires of our hearts and all our spiritual senses. And as the saint Apostle Paul said:

"while we do not look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal." (2 Cor. 4:18)

If we remain looking steadfastly toward heaven, looking to the things which are not seen, and all our treasure has become in heaven, then we shall say with the Apostle:

" having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." (Philippians 1:23)

In the Feast of the Ascension, our thoughts must be lifted upwards, to contemplate the heavens to which Christ has ascended, and His sitting at the right hand of The Father.

In our contemplation of the heavens, we remember the word of the Lord:

"For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also."
(Matt. 6:21)

Let your treasure therefore be in heaven; and may every person train himself to the blessing of the Ascension in his life; being lifted up from the material level to the spiritual level. His aspirations and his desires would be lifted up from the level of the body to the love of God.

Whoever, with his heart and his thought, is lifted up from the level of the earth and material things, himself will deserve to ascend and to be with Christ.

But those who cling to the earth and to material things, how can they ascend?

It is clear, even from the material point of view: whenever a man is lifted up, the earth becomes small in his sight, and all the things in it are belittled, till they become as if they were nothing.

***　　*　　***

The Feast of theAscension teaches us also the principle of ascending.

Spiritual life, or life with the Lord, is a perpetual ascension, a constant development upwards, till we arrive at the life of perfection. It is a continuous relationship to heaven.

The church tower gives us an idea about the direction upwards, toward heaven, and the ascension over the level of the earth and earthly things.

THE CONTEMPLATION OF GOD'S GLORY

Also in the Ascension of The Lord, we can meditate on His magnificence and His glory.

The glory of Christ in His Ascension, was a reply to all those who were scandalized during His Crucifixion.

Those who were mocking saying:

"If He is the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we believe Him." (Matt. 27: 40-43)

His Ascension also invigorated the faith of the Apostles who were afraid during the time of His crucifixion and His arrest. The glory of Christ in His Ascension was a reply to the Jews who saw the Cross as a stumbling block, and to the Greeks who saw the Cross as foolishness. As for us who believe in the Ascension, we see the power of God in the Cross. (1Cor. 1:23)

The Ascension was an affirmation of the glory of Christ, which they had seen on the mount of the Transfiguration, and forgotten.

Consequently we give credence to, not only The Christ who was born in a manger for cattle, but also to The Christ who ascended on the clouds to heaven. We believe also, not only Jesus who was crucified, but also we believe Him sitting at the right hand of His Father, on the throne of magnificence in the highest.

Thus we have a complementary idea of Christ, Nativity, Crucifixion, concluded with the glories of The Transfiguration,

The Resurrection and The Ascension.

Many people take the love of God, His humility, His lowliness of heart and His forgiveness, as subjects for mediation. And that is good and useful. Are then any spiritual benefits whenever we meditate on the glory and magnificence of God? Undoubtedly, for they are many sources of spiritual matters.

1. The contemplation of the glory of God, leads us to deference.

Some people may be led by their unbridled feelings of love, to a lack of reverence, saying every time they are unrestrained and conscienceless, that God is very compassionate and sympathetic, and undoubtedly He will forgive; as if forgiveness had no conditions of repentance and subservience. We are in need of the feelings of veneration, whenever we contemplate the glory and magnificence of God….. the Boundless, the Inconceivable, who is the unapproachable Light, to whom angels and archangels bow down, and worship Him… whom the cherubims and the seraphims venerate: covering their faces with two wings, and covering their feet with two wings….The Ascension plants inside us feelings of deference.

The Jews exploited the love and the forbearance of God, in a wrong manner. They exploited the modesty of Christ in order to insult Him and to crucify Him. It was indispensable for everybody to know the glory of the Lord in order to believe in Him. This glory appeared in the Ascension and in many visions.

2. And also the glory of God plants reverence and obedience in us.

And we are in need of both of them, because without both of them, we are unable to reach the perfect love that "casts out fear" (1 John 4:18); and without both of them we cannot reach the purity of heart with which we shall see God (Matt. 5:8).

Fear is the beginning of wisdom, and the beginning of the spiritual way. Because those in whom the fear of God does not exist, may be guided to consciencelessness, and indifference, and consequently sin with impertinence.

The glory of God leads to apprehension; and this leads to the life of prudence and circumspection, and to purity and repentance.

Such as we see the kind-hearted Christ entering into Jerusalem seated on "a colt, the foal of a donkey", we see Him also on the clouds, in order to think of Him as it is befitting.

The loving merciful compassionnate God who speaks to the prophet Elijah in a lightsome low voice, is Himself the same God sitting on the cherubims, walking on the wings of the winds, from whose dreadful glory the angels cover their faces.

***   *   ***

While we mention His glory in the Ascension, we remember the word of saint Nicodemus:

"No one has ascended to heaven but He who came down from heaven, that is, the Son of Man who is in heaven."

(John 3:13)

So, heaven is not something new to Him in His Ascension, rather it is His original habitat; and in the same manner His sitting at the right hand of The Father.

Therefore He said to His Apostles:

"I came forth from the Father and have come into the world. Again, I leave the world and go to the Father." (John 16:28)

Thus pertaining to His true magnificence and His being the Son of God, all have comprehended His humility and His making himself of no reputation.

***   *   ***

3. This contemplation plants in our hearts, some deep feelings, We mention:

1. We feel at rest and confident, being at the care of such a magnificent God, and all contradictory majesty being worthless. Thus we are assured of His promise:

"and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it"

(Matt. 16:18),

and His word to the Church:

"No weapon formed against you shall proper"

(Isaiah 54:17),

and His words to saint Paul:

"Do not be afraid, but speak, and do not keep silent; for I am with you, and no one will attack you to hurt you" (Acts 18: 9-10).

2. The contemplation of the magnificence of the Lord, leads us to the life of humility and to the praise of God. Who are we in the presence of Him who ascends to heaven, who is sitting at the right hand of the Father (Psalm 110:1) (Acts 7:56) (Heb.1:3) …. who "charges His angels with error" (Job 4:18),

"the stars are not pure in his sight" (Job 25:50).

Then our souls become lowly and we learn to be humble; and when we contemplate the magnificence of the Lord in His Ascension to heaven and His sitting at the right hand of the Father, we confidently say to Him:

O Lord, Heaven is your throne to which you have ascended (Matt. 5:34),

"Your throne, O God, if forever and ever,
A scepter of righteousness is the scepter of Your kingdom."
(Heb. 1:8)

As for us, we are dust. It is Your great love that attracts us to You, to be with You and with Your angels. Verily You are Him who "raises the poor out of the dust,

And lifts the needy out of the ash heap,
That He may seat him with princes,
With the princes of His people."
(Psalm 113:7)

In the story of the Ascension, we need to imagine a little from the glory of God, and to fear Him, in order to become lowly before Him and be humiliated, since we are dust and ashes.

Therefore we lift our sights to heaven during our prayers, and pray our Father who is in heaven, although He is everywhere. But the expression "who is in heaven" reminds us of His glory, and reminds us of Christ who ascended to heaven.

Thus we remember God the Powerful, the Supreme, whose throne is heaven, and whose footstool is the earth (Matt. 5: 34-35). Our lowliness during prayer, in front of the magnificence of God, is very useful to us.

THE TEN DAYS

In the Ascension, we meditate on the virtue of waiting for the Lord, like the Apostles who had waited for ten days.

Christ ascended to heaven and promised the coming of the Holy Spirit to the Apostles. They kept waiting for ten days, in which they did not see the Lord with them, and the Holy Spirit had not come to them. But they were certain of the divine promise.

The spiritual person waits confidently, as it has been said in the psalm:

"Wait on the Lord,
Be of good courage,
An He shall strengthen your heart;
Wait, I say, on the Lord."
(Psalm 27:14)

Be confident that the ten days in which the Apostles had waited, were for their good. It was a holy period of preparation to the coming of the Holy Spirit in their heart.

AUC LIBRARIES

AND

LEARNING TECHNOLOGIES

Reference Services Department

MONASTERIES AND MONASTIC LIFE IN EGYPT

An Annotated Bibliography

March 2003

Table of Contents

Art, Coptic	4
Art, Coptic -- Egypt	6
Art, Coptic -- History	15
Celibacy -- Christianity	18
Christian antiquities -- Egypt	20
Christian pilgrims And pilgrimages	27
Coptic Christian saints	33
Coptic icons -- Conservation and restoration	39
Copts -- Biography	42
Copts -- History	45
Early church history -- Primitive and early church, ca. 30-600	53
Monasteries	61
Monasteries -- Conservation and Restoration	64
Monasteries -- Egypt	68
Monasteries and State -- Egypt	76
Monasteries, Coptic	81
Monasteries, Coptic -- Egypt -- (papyri)	83
Monasteries, Orthodox Eastern	88
Monastic and Religious Life	91
Monastic and Religious Life -- History -- Early church, ca. 30-600	98
Monastic and Religious Life -- History -- Middle Ages, 600 - 1500	103

Monastic and religious life in art 107

Monastic and religious life of women 110

Monastic libraries 111

Monasticism and religious orders 114

Monasticism and religious orders -- Habit 120

Monasticism and religious orders -- Liturgy 121

Monasticism and religious orders -- Occupations 123

Monasticism and religious orders -- Common Life 125

Monasticism and religious orders -- Orthodox
Eastern church 128

Monasticism and religious orders for women 130

Monasticism and religious orders in literature 130

Monasticism and religious orders, Coptic 132

Monasticism and religious orders, Orthodox 135

Spiritual Life -- Christianity 136

Citations of Scholarly Aricles Accessible through the AUC Library's: Article Indexes and Other Databases 144

Articles Available at the AUC Library 149

Art, Coptic

- Brooklyn Museum. Pagan and Christian Egypt:Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century AD. New York: Reprinted by Arno Press, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

This book comments on Christian and Pagan artifacts exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum by the Department of Ancient Art, on January 23rd to March 9th, 1941. John D. Cooney, the curator of Egyptology collections presents in his introduction how Christian art in Egypt was influenced by Greek, Ptolemaic and Roman styles in the Delta region while it was hardly changed in Upper Egypt. The book then presents a listing of the items that were exhibited including paintings, sculptures and wood carvings. Following this is a description of Egyptian textiles during the Greco-Roman and early Christian periods which, presented in an itemized list of the exhibited artifacts, include numerous plates representing examples of Fayum Portraits, sculptures, and textiles.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York] :Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century A.D. Brooklyn Museum Department of Ancient Art. Brooklyn, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

The introduction covers an analysis of the three main currents influencing Coptic art: the Egyptian style, Greek (Hellenistic) work, and Roman work. The introduction also discusses how the Copts have drawn on Christian history for subject matter, thereby developing a style of their own. The book includes 271 illustrations allowing the reader to visually compare and contrast pagan and Christian art from Egypt.

- Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.

Main Library DT57 N5

An excavation of the tomb of the XI Dynasty Vizier Daga in 1911 has revealed Coptic remains that turned out to be the Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is divided into two major parts in two volumes. Part I covers archeological and literary material from the excavation. The Monastery is described from the point of view of archeological remains. The book addresses the history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature. Part I contains numerous plates showing materials from the excavation. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school pieces. The text has been carefully translated, and includes notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Art, Coptic – Egypt

- Akermann, Philippe. Le Décor Sculpté du Couvent Blanc: Niches et Frises. (Decorations and Sculptures of The White Monastery:Niches and Frescoes) [Le Caire]: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale du Caire [1976].
Main Library NA 6084 S6 A45x 1976

This catalog describes examples of early Christian architectural art of Deir El-Abiad (The White Monastery) which is also known as Deir Amba Shenoute. It begins with an introduction followed by five chapters that give a full description of the art of the 'niche' in the first centuries of Christianity, including the way it is represented in the White Monastery. It goes on to explain the different themes and symbols used by the early artists. The descriptions are arranged by consecutive illustrations from chapter six to chapter eleven. These, in turn, are followed by a Conclusion and an index. A folded plan of the White Monastery or Deir El-Abiad is attached to the back of the bound cover of the book.

- Atalla, Nabil Selim. Coptic Icons. Barcelona, 1986.
Main Library N 8189 E35 C6X 1986

This book serves as an easy reference to Coptic icons (such as those of Saints) and the manner in which they are depicted in their spiritual convocations . The text also includes a brief introduction which traces the origin of the term "Coptic", and the Era of the Martyrs that began in 284 AD. Each plate includes a short paragraph discussing the artwork and the relevance of the symbolism and significance as presented from a Coptic religious perspective.

- Atiya, Aziz S. A History of Eastern Christianity. London, 1968.
Main Library BX 103 2 A8 1968

This book focuses on the history of the Christian Churches of the East, namely, the Coptic and Ethiopic, the Jacobite, Nestorian, Armenian, Indian, Maronite, and the vanished Churches of Nubia and North Africa. The author traces the origins and evolution of these churches in the seven different parts of the book. He attempts to restore a picture of the Eastern Churches that was lost to the eyes of the West. Most Eastern Churches, whose claim to apostolic origins is their major pride and glory, are viewed by the modern day west as 'primitive'. The author, himself a Copt, brings out the hierarchical organization of the various Eastern Churches, their rites and ceremonials, ecclesiastical art and architecture, religious music and literature. With these, this book goes a long way to clarify certain aspects of the Eastern Churches, which had hitherto been viewed through sectarian vehemence, and considerable lack of understanding by most Roman Catholic, Greek and Protestant authors. The book also contains maps, footnotes, plates and an extensive bibliography.

- Beckwith, John. Coptic Sculpture, 300-1300. London: A. Tiranti, 1963.
Main Library NB 1082 B4 1963

Beckwith gives an historical background of Egypt, which starts with the founding of Alexandria in 322 B.C. and continues until the end of the reign of Ptolemy II from 246 BC. The author also gives a description of the different styles and historical trends in Coptic sculpture. He devotes a whole section on Notes to Plates, and gives a description of the different styles with reference to the plates in the text. He specifically describes at great length the Alexandrian style, and the periods before and after the Islamic conquest in 641 AD.

- Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes*. Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 V. 1

Dr. Sobhy, gives a physical description of the dilapidated manuscript that is located at the Mo`allaka Church in Old Cairo. The author notes that the scribe has done the entire work and was obviously an adept craftsman. The text of the manuscript is presented in columns, followed by the translation. The original text is in Sahidiq with some dialects of Middle Egypt. The text includes many Greek words that are not spelled in the traditional way. The translator notes that the text is at times incoherent but explains that this particular trait is common among similar texts written about martyrs. The author's main objective in this study is to introduce words that are differently spelled in an untraditional manner, and to focus on new forms of grammar as presented in the manuscript. The work concludes with an index and a table of contents.

- Bolman, Elizabeth S. (ed). Monastic Visions: Wall Paintings in the Monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea*. American Research center in Egypt, Inc. Yale University Press, New Haven and London.
Main Library ND 2863.3 M66 2002

This concise publication displays a range of wall paintings in the monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. The book is divided into four major parts. Part I describes the life of St. Antony as the 'Father' of monasticism and examines the monastery from 251 to 1232/1233 AD. It also examines the plight of the monasteries after the Arab conquest of Egypt in 641 AD. Part II describes the church of St. Antony, with its early paintings and architecture, placing specific emphasis on the paintings of a group of Egyptian Coptic artists led by a master artist Theodore. Part III portrays life in the monastery, past and present, and specifically focuses on the medieval and later inhabitants of the monastery. The author also describes the mystical and spiritual connections of icons in monastic life, and th e idiosyncrasies of modern Coptic identity. Finally, Part IV examines the Coptic inscriptions in the church of St. Antony. The book includes valuable colored plates and black-and-white illustrations that show the various wall paintings in the monastery. The book is highly recommended for researchers of Coptic art.

- Brooklyn Museum. Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century AD. New York: Reprinted by Arno Press, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

This book comments on Christian and Pagan artifacts exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum by the Department of Ancient Art, on January 23rd to March 9th, 1941. John D. Cooney, the curator of Egyptology collections presents in his introduction how Christian art in Egypt was influenced by Greek, Ptolemaic and Roman styles in the Delta region while it was hardly changed in Upper Egypt. The book then presents a listing of the items that were exhibited including paintings, sculptures and wood carvings. Following this is a description of Egyptian textiles during the Greco-Roman and early Christian periods which, presented in an itemized list of the exhibited artifacts, include numerous plates representing examples of Fayum Portraits, sculptures, and textiles.

- Butler, Alfred J. The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt, vol.1 and 2. Oxford: Clarendon Press 1884.
SPCL BX 133 B8 1884

Volume 1 of this book focuses on the general layout and structure of Coptic Churches, giving plans and illustrations of some major Churches and Monasteries. Some of these, like the churches of old Cairo, the Monasteries of the Natrun valley, the Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt, are discussed in detail. Volume 2 goes deeper into the Coptic faith. It dwells on particular aspects of the Coptic religion like the arrangement of the altar, Eucharistic vessels and furniture, vestments of clergy, sacraments and the various rites and ceremonies of the church.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an “ancient order of Christians called the Copts.” The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts.

It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Coptic Icons, Les Icones Coptes, Koptische Ikonen. Cairo: Lehnert and Landrock, 1986.

Main Library N 8189 E35 C6x 1986

This book is a catalog of Coptic Icons that are found in several churches and monasteries throughout Egypt. The churches include Al-Mu'allaqah (The Hanging Church in Old Cairo), the church of Saint Barbara, the churches of St. Mercurius (Abu Saifain), and Al-Damshiriah and St. Shenouti. Haret al-Rum and Fum Al-Khalig in the Cairo area have also been included. The Coptic monasteries of Wadi El-Natrun and Upper Egypt are presented through their fascinating icons. The specific style of Coptic icons, described as the 'Triptych' style, is also presented in this work and is constituted by a centerpiece and two side panels that fold over a center. This work includes a fascinating array of different icon styles, among which are the Fayoum Portraits, and the different icons kept at the Coptic Museum. This catalog is trilingual (English, French, German). The book closes with a list of alphabetical names and a table of contents.

- Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate. St. Mark and the Coptic Church. Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate, Cairo, 1968.

Main Library BX 133.2 A4 1968

This book deals with St. Mark and the establishment of Christianity in Egypt. Dr. Hakim Ameen, the author of the first essay describes how St. Mark introduced Christianity to Egypt. The second chapter informs us about St. Mark's Doctrine (the one found in parts of Africa). Other chapters of the book deal with the Liturgy of St. Mark and the Theological School of Alexandria. The book also describes the Coptic Church under different rulers and its contribution to universal Christianity. The latter part of the book concludes with a brief survey of Coptic literature and art.

- Les Edifices Chretiens du Vieux Caire. (Coptic Monuments of Old Cairo) Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire :Imprimerie De l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919. Bibliography and Historical Topography By Charalambia Coquin for v.11 pt.1,1974.

Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 11 pt 1, 1974

The work comprises a bibliography and a historical topography of Christian buildings of Old Cairo, and presents a bibliographical guide written by ancient and modern authors. It includes a preface, a list of abbreviations, and an extensive bibliography. The buildings are divided into three groups: Northern Group, Central Group, and South Group. A plan and drawing of Old Cairo and some photographs of different elements of the architecture of the buildings are also included. The description of the different groups is followed by an addendum and two plans: One of al-Fustat-Misr of the fourteenth and eighteenth centuries, and the second of al-Fustat-Misr at the time of the Muslim Conquest in 642 A.D. This work ends with a list of plates and an index.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York]:Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Evetts, B.T.A. (ed.). The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Oxford, 1969.
Main Special Collection BX 133 A6

This publication discusses a history of Egypt's churches and monasteries including architecture, restoration, and religious iconography. The book also provides accounts by priests and monks of mystical experiences. It gives a geographical description of Egypt, footnotes, a map, appendix, and index of Coptic churches and monasteries. The book offers historical analyses of the Coptic language as used in neighboring countries.

- Gartkiewicz, Przemyslaw. NUBIA I, Dongola 2: The Cathedral in Old Dongola and its Antecedents. Editions Scientifiques de Pologne, Varssovie 1990
Main Library NA 216 D6 G27X 1990

This book gives a description and brief account of the architectural investigations carried out on the site of the Church of Granite Columns in Old Dongola. The author starts by describing the old church and the later additions to it. He focuses on the building process, materials, and layout of the church. The greater part of the book is reserved to the Church of Granite Columns. Gartkiewicz then gives a specific description of the architecture and usage of the church, with maps and technical architectural designs. In the last chapters the author dwells briefly on the Cathedral of Brick Pillars, its construction, evolution and eventual decline. For anyone interested in early church history, especially the architecture, this book is a must.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grogorius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Guillaumont, Antoine. L'Asceticon Copte de L'Abbe Isaie. (Coptic Asceticon of Abbot Isaiah) Sahidiq Fragments, Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 5

This catalog is a description of fragments of two manuscripts that represent the work of Abbot Isaiah, Saint of Scete, written in the tenth and eleventh centuries. Both manuscripts were found in the White Monastery or Deir El-Abiad, and parts of them are presently owned by several libraries. For convenience, the manuscripts have been named A and B and the translator has also included, at the end of his work, an extra fragment that does not belong to either A or B. The work ends with an index to the references in the scriptures, a word index in Greek, and a general index.

- Habib, Raouf. The Outstanding Aspects of the Coptic Arts. Mahabba Bookshop, 1980.
SPCL N 7382 H2X

This book discusses Coptic art from differing perspectives. It starts by looking at the influence of classical mythology in Coptic art, and discusses pottery until the Coptic and Islamic era. The author later focuses on feminine coquetry and headdresses in the Coptic period and some of the major contributions of ancient Egypt in Coptic art. Aspects of Coptic symbolism, manuscripts, weaving, and textiles are also discussed. The book concludes with a brief look at the stay of the Holy Family in Egypt, the Monastery of St. Catherine in Sinai, and the Coptic icons.

- Hondelink, H. Coptic Art and Culture. Shouhdy Publishing House, Cairo, 1990.
Main Library N 7382 C66X 1990

This book introduces Early Christian Architecture in the Nile Valley between 313 AD. and 640 AD., including the church and monastic architecture. The second chapter of the book describes and explains the significance of the Old Testament Saints in Medieval Church decoration. The book deals with the icon-painting in Egypt in general and the conservation problems of the icons. One of the authors of the book talks about the miraculous icons and their historical background. There is a brief discussion of Coptic textiles. The last chapter of the book is concerned with demons in early Coptic Monasticism.

- Kasser, Rodolphe. Complements au Dictionnaire Copte de Crum (Complements to The Coptic Dictionary of Crum). Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.7, 1964

This work was initially intended to be published in a journal but, as it has attained scholarly significance, was finally published as a separate volume. It is intended to be a supplement to complement W. C. Crum's life work (Coptic Dictionary, Oxford, Clarendon Press) Published nearly a quarter of a century later, it contains many additions including new words and new spellings. It has a foreward and an introduction that precede the dictionary. The work is completed by an addendum, a list of signs and abbreviations, and a list of authors' names.

- Leroy, Jules. Les Manuscrits Coptes et Coptes-Arabes Illustrés. (Illustrated Coptic and Coptic-Arabic Manuscripts) Paris: Librarie Orientaliste Paul Geuthner, 1974.
Main Library ND 2864 C66 L47 1974

This study presents historians of Christian arts and iconography with the most comprehensive reference about the illumination of books and manuscripts of Christian Egypt. Leroy introduces the various genres of Coptic painting and he deals with the Coptic 'miniature' and other forms of painting during the period of Christian Egypt. The purely decorative drawings are also mentioned and are duly reproduced over several pages at the end of chapter III. Chapter IV is dedicated to manuscripts decorated with figurative scenes. A substantial conclusion sums up the work done by the French Institute of Archaeology of Beirut. indexes to authors, proper names, geographical locations and historical periods, cited manuscripts, and an iconographical index precede the plates. Plates in color are designated from A to H, and black and white plates are represented over more than a hundred pages. A table of contents conclude the work.

- Mottier, Yvette, Bosson, Nathalie. Les Kellia: Ermitages Coptes en Basse-Egypte (The Kellia: Coptic Ermitages In Lower-Egypt) (Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Genève, 12 Octobre 1989-7 Janvier 1990), Genève: Editions du Tricorne, 1989.
Main Library DT 73 K47 K47X 1989

This book is a catalog of the Kellia Sites excavations. Included are numerous photographs and maps as well as plans of the different sites. The book starts with an introduction about Coptic Monasticism, and then moves to a depiction of the archaeological findings of the Kellia sites and its antique Coptic monasteries. The author also describes the architectural styles and paintings in the monasteries, and mentions projects for their conservation and preservation. The inscriptions and the Coptic pottery art are also described in detail.

- Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century A.D. Brooklyn Museum Department of Ancient Art. Brooklyn, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

The introduction covers an analysis of the three main currents influencing Coptic art: the Egyptian style, Greek (Hellenistic) work, and Roman work. The introduction also discusses how the Copts have drawn on Christian history for subject matter, thereby developing a style of their own. The book includes 271 illustrations allowing the reader to visually compare and contrast pagan and Christian art from Egypt.

- Qadus, Izzat Zaki Hamid and al-Sayid, Mohamed Abdel Fatah. Al-Aathaar wa al-Funun al-Qibtiyah. Al-Haddarii lil tibaah, Alexandria, 2000.
Main Library N 7382 Q33 2000

This book deals with different aspects of Coptic art. It is divided into three parts: Part one describes the history of art in Coptic society. It also discusses Coptic sculpture, Coptic architecture, mural frescoes/paintings in Coptic art, characterization and style in Coptic representation, and the art of Coptic weaving. The last chapter of the first part of the book discusses magic, prophecy and symbolism in Coptic art. Part two contains a bibliography and provides over 200 pages of different motifs, themes, and symbols in Coptic art.

- Sammu'iil Al-Siriaanii. Daliil Ilaa Al-Kanaa'is Wa-Al Adyirah al-Qadimah. Published by The Instiyute for Coptic Studies ,1990.
Main Library BX 133.2 S912X 1990

This book is essentially a guide to all churches and monasteries from Giza to Aswan. It also lists the feasts of the different monasteries and includes illustrations and photographs of some churches and monasteries.

- Al-Suryani, Samaan. Dair al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa`, al-Suryaan: Barriyyat Shihit – Wadi al-Natruun. Matba`at Dair al-Baramuus, Egypt, 1990.
Main Library BX 178 S3 S8x 1990

The book gives a detailed description of Dayr as-Surian, its location and its different churches such as Deir al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa` (the Monastery of the Virgin Mary at al- Suryaan Church), al-Arba`in Church, Virgin al-Maqaarah Church and Archangel Mikhail Church. In another section of the book the author discusses the remains of some Saints such as Anba Yahnas, Kama, Marafram al-Syuryani and others. Throughout the book the reader will find information about the library, monastery museum, al-Azbawiyyah, and rare icons. The book also gives a listing of names of all the heads of the monastery and also contains a short bibliography for Anba Theophileas. Al-Suriyyaani also gives information about the role of al-Syuryan monastery in the twentieth century, and the famous travelers and foreign scientists who visited it. The book closes with a detailed map of the monastery. In addition to some representations of icons and an index, there is a collection of pictures of the first heads of the monastery. This book is recommended to researchers, tourists and travelers alike.

- Al-Syriany, Samuel. A Guide to Ancient Coptic Churches and Monasteries in Upper Egypt. Institute of Coptic Studies, 1990.
SPCL BX 133 2 S9X

This book provides a succinct account of the main Coptic Churches in Upper Egypt. With contributions from over 60 architects, artists, historians and researchers, the book provides a perfect artistic, historical and architectural survey of Coptic Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt. It also includes maps, plans, and colored photographs of the major Churches and Monasteries.

- Weitzmann, Kurt. Studies In The Arts At Sinai. Princeton University Press, USA, 1982.
Main Library N 7988 A1 W 44, 1982

The author of this book introduces, in chapter 1, the Justinian and Post-Justinian arts in St.Catherine's Monastery, such as the Jephthah Panel, mosaics, and the valuable collection of icons. Chapter 2 deals with Middle Byzantine icons such as the Announciation Icon of the Virgin Mary. The last chapter of the book looks at icons of the crusades on Mount Sinai. The book is a contribution to the documentation of the artwork of St. Catherine's Monastery.

Art, Coptic – History

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia: Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques, (The Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration), Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.

Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the "Death and Resurrection" of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Brooklyn Museum. Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century AD. New York: Reprinted by Arno Press, 1969.

Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

This book comments on Christian and Pagan artifacts exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum by the Department of Ancient Art, on January 23rd to March 9th, 1941. John D. Cooney, the curator of Egyptology collections presents in his introduction how Christian art in Egypt was influenced by Greek, Ptolemaic and Roman styles in the Delta region while it was hardly changed in Upper Egypt. The book then presents a listing of the items that were exhibited including paintings, sculptures and wood carvings. Following this is a description of Egyptian textiles during the Greco-Roman and early Christian periods which, presented in an itemized list of the exhibited artifacts, include numerous plates representing examples of Fayum Portraits, sculptures, and textiles.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo : American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Les Edifices Chretiens du Vieux Caire, (Coptic Monuments of Old Cairo). Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie De l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919. Bibliography and Historical Topography By Charalambia Coquin for v.11 pt.1,1974.
Main Library PJ 2195 .B5 v. 11 pt 1, 1974

The work comprises a bibliography and a historical topography of Christian buildings of Old Cairo, and presents a bibliographical guide written by ancient and modern authors. It includes a preface, a list of abbreviations, and an extensive bibliography. The buildings are divided into three groups: Northern Group, Central Group, and South Group. A plan and drawing of Old Cairo and some photographs of different elements of the architecture of the buildings are also included. The description of the different groups is followed by an addendum and two plans: One of al-Fustat-Misr of the fourteenth and eighteenth centuries, and the second of al-Fustat-Misr at the time of the Muslim Conquest in 642 A.D. This work ends with a list of plates and an index.

- Kemmerer, Winifred A Coptic Bibliography in collaboration with Elinor Mullett Husselman and Louise A. Shier. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press,1950.
Main Reference PJ 2197 Z9 K3 1950

Winifred Kammerer explains in the Preface that his work is intended to provide a scholarly guide to various subject divisions in the field of Coptic studies. The author warns that some of the work between the years 1940 to 1948 is drawn from bibliographies that are generally not verified due to the constraints of World War II.

This applies also to Russian and Arabic sources due to the delay that would have occurred in trying to verify these sources. A table of contents and a list of abbreviations follow the preface. The compiled bibliography is divided into five categories: General Works, Philology, Coptic Texts, History, Art and Archaeology. An index to the different terms concludes the work.

- Mottier, Yvette, Bosson, Nathalie. Les Kellia: Ermitages Coptes en Basse-Egypte (The Kellia: Coptic Ermitages In Lower-Egypt). (Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Genève, 12 Octobre 1989-7 Janvier 1990), Genève :Editions du Tricorne, 1989.
Main Library DT 73 K47 K47X 1989

This book is a catalog of the Kellia Sites excavations. Included are numerous photographs and maps as well as plans of the different sites. The book starts with an introduction about Coptic Monasticism, and then moves to a depiction of the archaeological findings of the Kellia sites and its antique Coptic monasteries. The author also describes the architectural styles and paintings in the monasteries, and mentions projects for their conservation and preservation. The inscriptions and the Coptic pottery art are also described in detail.

- Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century A.D. Brooklyn Museum Department of Ancient Art. Brooklyn, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

The introduction covers an analysis of the three main currents influencing Coptic art: the Egyptian style, Greek (Hellenistic) work, and Roman work. The introduction also discusses how the Copts have drawn on Christian history for subject matter, thereby developing a style of their own. The book includes 271 illustrations allowing the reader to visually compare and contrast pagan and Christian art from Egypt.

Celibacy – Christianity

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

- Ceres, Wissa Wassef. Pratiques Rituelles et Alimentaires des Coptes, (Ritual and Alimentary Practices of the Copts). Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919- (PhD thesis presented at the Sorbonne, Paris)
Main Library PJ 2195 .B5 v. 9

This study presents an in-depth examination of the beginnings of Christianity in Egypt with its rituals and alimentary practices. Various subjects are treated in this work ranging from the Christianization of Egypt, the Coptic Calendar and seasonal foods, the different markets, ceremonials within the family, the different feasts, and the various sayings and metaphors used by the Coptic people. The work is concluded by a list of the plants mentioned in the work, a Bibliography, indexes to the geographic places, the names of persons and ceremonies, an index of terms, and a general index. The dissertation is concluded with an intriguing list of Coptic cutlery.

- Goehring, James E. Ascetics, Society, and The Desert: Studies in Early Egyptian Monasticism. Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999.
Main Library BR 190 G64 1999

This very detailed and well documented work by James E. Goehring, Professor of Religion and Chair of the Department of Classics, Philosophy, and Religion at Mary's Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia, constitutes a fine collection of scholarly essays and deals with monasticism, late antiquity, Egyptology, and religious studies. It provides a comprehensive, detailed description of the evolution of monasticism, religious orders and the history of the early Church and Christianity in Egypt. James E. Goehring has used the full array of Papyrological documentary sources, archaeology, and traditional literary sources to produce a fine and detailed work. The foreward and preface are followed by a detailed list of abbreviations that are further divided into three parts: general, ancient sources, and a list of short titles of frequently cited works. An introduction follows the abbreviations list. The essays include interesting topics, such as 'The Origins of Monasticism', 'Ascetics, Society, and The Desert', 'Ascetic Organization' and 'Ideological Boundaries', and finally, 'Pachomian Studies: The Later Years'. The author concludes with a copious bibliography of cited works and an index of terms.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Regnault, Lucien. La Vie Quotidienne des Pères du Désert en Egypte Au IVe Siècle. [Paris]: Hachette, 1990.
Main Library BX 2734 R45 1990

The daily life of the Desert Fathers in Fourth Century Egypt is examined in great detail in this very concise work. The author is interested in the words of the Fathers that were pronounced on specific occasions for edification and teaching purposes. Seventeen chapters deal in detail with aspects of the lives of these great hermits and saints. Different aspects studied here include; Reasons for choosing the desert, an analysis of the lives of Egyptian men, women and children and their relationship with the Desert Fathers, the cells, the clothing and the types of foods the hermits consumed, the daily life of the Anchorite monks and hermits who live in caves, the elders and their disciples, the hospitality of monks, their voyages, angels, demons and beasts, the visions, and revelations and miracles. The book concludes with an extensive list of notes, a bibliography, a chronological list, an index of names, and a table of contents.

Christian antiquities -- Egypt

- Akermann, Philippe. Le Décor Sculpté du Couvent Blanc: Niches et Frises. (Decorations and Sculptures of The White Monastery: Niches and Frescoes) [Le Caire]: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale du Caire [1976].
Main Library NA6084 S6 A45x 1976

This catalog describes examples of early Christian architectural art of Deir El-Abiad (The White Monastery) which is also known as Deir Amba Shenoute. It begins with an introduction followed by five chapters that give a full description of the art of the 'niche' in the first centuries of Christianity, including the way it is represented in the White Monastery. It goes on to explain the different themes and symbols used by the early artists. The descriptions are arranged by consecutive illustrations from chapter six to chapter eleven. These, in turn, are followed by a Conclusion and an index. A folded plan of the White Monastery or Deir El-Abiad is attached to the back of the bound cover of the book.

- Atiya, Aziz S. A History of Eastern Christianity. London, 1968.
Main Library BX 103 2 A8 1968

This book focuses on the history of the Christian Churches of the East, namely, the Coptic and Ethiopic, the Jacobite, Nestorian, Armenian, Indian, Maronite, and the vanished Churches of Nubia and North Africa. The author traces the origins and evolution of these churches in the seven different parts of the book. He attempts to restore a picture of the Eastern Churches that was lost to the eyes of the West. Most Eastern Churches, whose claim to apostolic origins is their major pride and glory, are viewed by the modern day west as 'primitive'. The author, himself a Copt, brings out the hierarchical organization of the various Eastern Churches, their rites and ceremonials, ecclesiastical art and architecture, religious music and literature. With these, this book goes a long way to clarify certain aspects of the Eastern Churches, which had hitherto been viewed through sectarian vehemence, and considerable lack of understanding by most Roman Catholic, Greek and Protestant authors. The book also contains maps, footnotes, plates and an extensive bibliography.

- Bagnall, Roger S. Egypt in Late Antiquity. Published by Princeton University Press, 1993.
Main Library DT 93 B33 1993

This book gives a full description of life in Egypt in late antiquity. The author describes the cultural and social environment, the cities, the villages in Egypt, the people and the language at that time. Then he introduces the Christianization of Egypt and the start of Monasticism in the fourth century BC.

- Beckwith, John. Coptic Sculpture, 300-1300. London: A. Tiranti, 1963.
Main Library NB 1082 B4 1963

Beckwith gives an historical background of Egypt, which starts with the founding of Alexandria in 322 B.C. and continues until the end of the reign of Ptolemy II from 246 BC. The author also gives a description of the different styles and historical trends in Coptic sculpture. He devotes a whole section on Notes to Plates, and gives a description of the different styles with reference to the plates in the text. He specifically describes at great length the Alexandrian style, and the periods before and after the Islamic conquest in 641 AD.

- Brooklyn Museum. Pagan and Christian Egypt: Egyptian Art from the First to the Tenth Century AD. New York: Reprinted by Arno Press, 1969.
Main Library N 7381 B7 1969

This book comments on Christian and Pagan artifacts exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum by the Department of Ancient Art, on January 23rd to March 9th, 1941. John D. Cooney, the curator of Egyptology collections presents in his introduction how Christian art in Egypt was influenced by Greek, Ptolemaic and Roman styles in the Delta region while it was hardly changed in Upper Egypt. The book then presents a listing of the items that were exhibited including paintings, sculptures and wood carvings. Following this is a description of Egyptian textiles during the Greco-Roman and early Christian periods which, presented in an itemized list of the exhibited artifacts, include numerous plates representing examples of Fayum Portraits, sculptures, and textiles.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an “ancient order of Christians called the Copts.” The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts.

It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Ceres, Wissa Wassef. Pratiques Rituelles et Alimentaires des Coptes, (Ritual and Alimentary Practices of the Copts). Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919- (PhD thesis presented at the Sorbonne, Paris)
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 9

This study presents an in-depth examination of the beginnings of Christianity in Egypt with its rituals and alimentary practices. Various subjects are treated in this work ranging from the Christianization of Egypt, the Coptic Calendar and seasonal foods, the different markets, ceremonials within the family, the different feasts, and the various sayings and metaphors used by the Coptic people. The work is concluded by a list of the plants mentioned in the work, a Bibliography, indexes to the geographic places, the names of persons and ceremonies, an index of terms, and a general index. The dissertation is concluded with an intriguing list of Coptic cutlery.

- Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate. St. Mark and the Coptic Church. Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate, Cairo, 1968.
Main Library BX 133.2 A4 1968

This book deals with St. Mark and the establishment of Christianity in Egypt. Dr. Hakim Ameen, the author of the first essay describes how St. Mark introduced Christianity to Egypt. The second chapter informs us about St. Mark's Doctrine (the one found in parts of Africa). Other chapters of the book deal with the Liturgy of St. Mark and the Theological School of Alexandria. The book also describes the Coptic Church under different rulers and its contribution to universal Christianity. The latter part of the book concludes with a brief survey of Coptic literature and art.

- Les Edifices Chretiens du Vieux Caire. (Coptic Monuments of Old Cairo) Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie De l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919. Bibliography and Historical Topography By Charalambia Coquin for v.11 pt.1,1974.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 11 pt 1, 1974

The work comprises a bibliography and a historical topography of Christian buildings of Old Cairo, and presents a bibliographical guide written by ancient and modern authors. It includes a preface, a list of abbreviations, and an extensive bibliography. The buildings are divided into three groups: Northern Group, Central Group, and South Group. A plan and drawing of Old Cairo and some photographs of different elements of the architecture of the buildings are also included. The description of the different groups is followed by an addendum and two plans: One of al-Fustat-Misr of the fourteenth and eighteenth centuries, and the second of al-Fustat-Misr at the time of the Muslim Conquest in 642 A.D. This work ends with a list of plates and an index.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Gartkiewicz, Przemyslaw. NUBIA I, Dongola 2: The Cathedral in Old Dongola and its Antecedents. Editions Scientifiques de Pologne, Varssovie 1990
Main Library NA 216 D6 G27X 1990

This book gives a description and brief account of the architectural investigations carried out on the site of the Church of Granite Columns in Old Dongola. The author starts by describing the old church and the later additions to it. He focuses on the building process, materials, and layout of the church. The greater part of the book is reserved to the Church of Granite Columns. Gartkiewicz then gives a specific description of the architecture and usage of the church, with maps and technical architectural designs. In the last chapters the author dwells briefly on the Cathedral of Brick Pillars, its construction, evolution and eventual decline. For anyone interested in early church history, especially the architecture, this book is a must.

- Goehring, James E. Ascetics, Society, and The Desert :Studies in Early Egyptian Monasticism. Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, c1999.
Main Library BR 190 G64 1999

This very detailed and well documented work by James E. Goehring, Professor of Religion and Chair of the Department of Classics, Philosophy, and Religion at Mary's Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia, constitutes a fine collection of scholarly essays and deals with monasticism, late antiquity, Egyptology, and religious studies. It provides a comprehensive, detailed description of the evolution of monasticism, religious orders and the history of the early Church and Christianity in Egypt. James E. Goehring has used the full array of Papyrological documentary sources, archaeology, and traditional literary sources to produce a fine and detailed work. The foreward and preface are followed by a detailed list of abbreviations that are further divided into three parts: general, ancient sources, and a list of short titles of frequently cited works. An introduction follows the abbreviations list. The essays include interesting topics, such as ‘The Origins of Monasticism’, ‘Ascetics, Society, and The Desert’, ‘Ascetic Organization’ and ‘Ideological Boundaries’, and finally, ‘Pachomian Studies: The Later Years’. The author concludes with a copious bibliography of cited works and an index of terms.

- Griggs, C. Wilfred. Early Egyptian Christianity: From its Origins to 451 C.E. The Netherlands, 1993.
SPCL BR 190 G75

This book focuses on the history of Christianity in Egypt from its earliest recorded origins to the Council of Chalcedon in 451C.E., when the Egyptian Coptic Church became the national religion of Egypt. Aspects such as the emergence of orthodoxy and heresy in Egyptian Christianity, autocracy in Christian Egypt and the eventual separation from Catholicism, are examined. With maps of Lower and Upper Egypt, cross references from gospels and an extensive bibliography, this book contributes to an understanding of Early Egyptian Christianity in particular and to Early Christianity in general.

- Habib, Rafiq and Afifi, Mohamed. Taariikh al-Kaniisah al-Misriyyah. Al-Daar al-`Arabiyyah lil Tiba`ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzii`, Dokki, Cairo, 1994.
Main Library BX 133.2 H33 1994

This book discusses the history of the national Egyptian cultural elites. It is divided into seven chapters that discuss Christianity in Egypt and the suppression of the Copts. The second Chapter covers the church and the Arab invasion in 641 AD. The third Chapter gives information about Catholicism, past and present. Chapter four explains Protestanism and its consignments in Egypt; Chapter five gives detailed information about the rise of the church and the political laicism; Chapter six deals with the history of sectarian strife through the centuries. In the last Chapter the writer explores the search for truth about the controversies of sectarian strife.

- Kinross, Patrick Balfour (Lord). Portrait of Egypt. New York W. Morrow, 1966.
Main Library DT 46 K5 1966

The author is Lord Kinross, Patrick Balfour, the First Secretary of the British Embassy in Cairo (1944-47). This book comprises 4 parts (Ancient, Christian, Medieval, and Modern Egypt) and gives a description of his travels in Egypt. In the first chapter the book discusses Ancient Egypt and then introduces Christian Egypt, the Copts and the Monastic Communities, such as those existing in Wadi al-Natrun, St.Catherine’s Monastery and other places. He then describes Christian Egypt from the Arab Conquest in 641 AD. to Modern times. Chapters 6 and 7 are entitled respectively: ‘The Copts’ and ‘The Monastic Communities’. The description comes in the style of a travel guide and presents monastic life with reference to some of the most important monasteries of Egypt, such as Abu Makar, Anba Bishoi, Baramus, As-Suriani and St. Catherine, with the last two duly noted for their libraries and icons.

Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church*. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Labib, Mahfouz. Pèlerins et Voyageurs au Mont Sinaï, (Pilgrims and Travelers at Mount Sinai). Le Caire :Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1961
Main Library BX 387 L3 1961

This book presents a listing of the famous pilgrims that have visited mount Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine along with a listing of French travelers. The work is not limited to a specific period of time. The author gives a chronology of visitors from the middle ages until the nineteenth century, and specifically emphasizes the scientific and archaeological expeditions of that time. Based on accounts of these travelers, the author gives a relatively precise estimation of the increase or decrease in the numbers of the monks throughout ages. The author also mentions the external and internal work of restoration of the monastery that has been done. The study concentrates on the different characters among the pilgrims and travelers, and the reasons and incentives that prompted them to accomplish such a long and perilous voyage. The author takes us through the different stages of monastic life from the founding of the first monastic communities in third century Egypt on the Nile Valley, to the actual construction of the Monastery of St. Catherine, which was established around the year 545 A.D. Some of the most famous figures that visited the Saint Catherine's Monastery in the nineteenth century include: Rifaud (1805-1826), Alexandre Dumas (1830), The Count of Paris (1860), Pierre Loti (1894) among others. An extensive bibliography, index to proper names, table of plates and table of contents conclude the work.

- Matta Al-Miskiin. Lamhah Sarii`ah `An Rahbanat Misr Wa –Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar*. Published by Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar – Wadii al-Natruun, 1985.

Main Library BX 138 M3 M3X 1985

This book states that the Coptic Church is the most ancient Church in the world, and that monasticism spread from Egypt to other countries, especially to all Eastern countries and Europe. The author of the book explains how the Monastery of Anba Makkar was founded at the beginning of the fourth century, 360 B.C. in Wadi Al Natrun. Furthermore, he describes in detail the most important archeological features of the monastery, including the altar, the church and the castle.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Christian Egypt: Ancient and Modern. Cairo, 1965.

SPCL BR 1380 M4 1965

This book provides a thorough and complete picture of Christian Egypt, ancient and modern. It starts with an outline of Christianity in Egypt and covers aspects of Christian feasts and calendars, the Coptic language, and a plan of the Coptic Church. It also looks specifically at the Christian Churches of Alexandria and Cairo, and their neighboring communities. The author also dwells lengthily on the Churches and Monasteries of the desert and at Sinai, along with Christian agencies, institutes and theological seminaries in Egypt. He concludes by examining traditional sites associated with the flight of the Holy Family to Egypt.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes*. New York, 1926.

Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Christian pilgrims and pilgrimages

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.) The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia: Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques, (The Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration). Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.

Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the "Death and Resurrection" of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.
Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents "the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism," and the lives of "The three Fathers" of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai's monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai's saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Goehring, James E. Ascetics, Society, and The Desert: Studies in Early Egyptian Monasticism. Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999.
Main Library BR 190 G64 1999

This very detailed and well documented work by James E. Goehring, Professor of Religion and Chair of the Department of Classics, Philosophy, and Religion at Mary's Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia, constitutes a fine collection of scholarly essays and deals with monasticism, late antiquity, Egyptology, and religious studies. It provides a comprehensive, detailed description of the evolution of monasticism, religious orders and the history of the early Church and Christianity in Egypt. James E. Goehring has used the full array of Papyrological documentary sources, archaeology, and traditional literary sources to produce a fine and detailed work. The foreward and preface are followed by a detailed list of abbreviations that are further divided into three parts: general, ancient sources, and a list of short titles of frequently cited works. An introduction follows the abbreviations list. The essays include interesting topics, such as 'The Origins of Monasticism', 'Ascetics, Society, and The Desert', 'Ascetic Organization' and 'Ideological Boundaries', and finally, 'Pachomian Studies: The Later Years'. The author concludes with a copious bibliography of cited works and an index of terms.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Wathaa`iq lil Taariikh: al-Kinisah wa Qaddia al-Watan wa al-Dawlah wa al-Sharq al-Awsat, Part two: `Awdat Rufaat al-Qidiis Murqus al-Rasuul. Daar al-Jiil lil Tiba`ah, 1977.
Main Library BX 136 J58 V.2

This book contains historical documents about the transfer of St. Morqos al-Rasul's (Saint Mark) remains to Egypt in the period of Anba Kyrollos the VI (116 Pope). These documents cover events, such as the sheikh of al-Azhar's visit to the Patriarchate, speech of Pope Kyrollos VI in a public conference at the al-Mo`alaka church in old Cairo, the journey to Rome to bring back the remains of St. Mark, and messages from Pope Kyrollos to Pope Paul VI (Pope of the Roman Catholic Church). This work, in addition to the translation of speeches of Patriarchs from foreign countries, also contains press interviews with the author concerning the Virgin Mary's appearance in Virgin Mary's church in Zaytuun. There is a detailed subject index at the end of the book.

- Hondelink, H. Coptic Art and Culture. Shouhdy Publishing House, Cairo, 1990.
Main Library N 7382 C66X 1990

This book introduces Early Christian Architecture in the Nile Valley between 313 AD. and 640 AD., including the church and monastic architecture. The second chapter of the book describes and explains the significance of the Old Testament Saints in Medieval Church decoration. The book deals with the icon-painting in Egypt in general and the conservation problems of the icons. One of the authors of the book talks about the miraculous icons and their historical background. There is a brief discussion of Coptic textiles. The last chapter of the book is concerned with demons in early Coptic Monasticism.

- Ibn Al-Mukaffa, Sawirus (Bishop Of Al-Ashmunin). History of the Patriarchs of the Egyptian Church. Matbaat al-Mahad al-Ilmi al-Farancy lil Athaar al-Sharkiah, Cairo.

Main Library BX 132 S3 ,V.2

This volume of the series comprises the biographies of ten Patriarchs, beginning with the fifty-sixth Patriarch, Khael III (Michael I) and ending the sixty-fifth Patriarch Senouti II. These patriarchs occupied the See of Saint Mark from 880-1066 AD.

- Labib, Mahfouz. Pèlerins et Voyageurs au Mont Sinaï. (Pilgrims and Travelers at Mount Sinai). Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1961

Main Library BX 387 L3 1961

This book presents a listing of the famous pilgrims that have visited mount Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine along with a listing of French travelers. The work is not limited to a specific period of time. The author gives a chronology of visitors from the middle ages until the nineteenth century, and specifically emphasizes the scientific and archaeological expeditions of that time. Based on accounts of these travelers, the author gives a relatively precise estimation of the increase or decrease in the numbers of the monks throughout ages. The author also mentions the external and internal work of restoration of the monastery that has been done. The study concentrates on the different characters among the pilgrims and travelers, and the reasons and incentives that prompted them to accomplish such a long and perilous voyage. The author takes us through the different stages of monastic life from the founding of the first monastic communities in third century Egypt on the Nile Valley, to the actual construction of the Monastery of St. Catherine, which was established around the year 545 A.D. Some of the most famous figures that visited the Saint Catherine’s Monastery in the nineteenth century include: Rifaud (1805-1826), Alexandre Dumas (1830), The Count of Paris (1860), Pierre Loti (1894) among others. An extensive bibliography, index to proper names, table of plates and table of contents conclude the work.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.

Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title ‘Images and Words.’ It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Coptic Saints and Pilgrimages. The American University in Cairo Press, Cairo, New York.
Main Library BX 4659 E4 M45 2002

This book focuses on Coptic religious devotion. The first few chapters deal with biblical saints, martyrs, ascetics and equestrian warriors in Coptic spirituality. The latter chapters dwell emphatically on such subjects, such as the "silverless" physicians of the Byzantine churches (who treated their patients without pay), women saints, and recently discovered martyrs. Meinardus contemplates themes of the past, such as Coptic Saints, as well as miracles from modern perspective in an age of globalization. The book includes high quality colored, images of patron saints and martyrs. The text is considered a valuable source of reference source in the subject matter.

- Muyser, Jacob ('Qommos'). Les Pelerinages Coptes en Egypte. (Coptic Pilgrimages In Egypt), Bibliothèque D'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire : Imprimerie de l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 15 1979

An excellent study of past and present Coptic pilgrimages this work presents a detailed account of the religious practices, traditions and pilgrimage sites. The catalog has a preface followed by an introduction. It is then divided into four chapters, entitled respectively: The Act of Pilgrimage, The Principal Coptic Pilgrimages of the Past, Actual Coptic Pilgrimages, Characteristics of these Pilgrimages. Following a brief conclusion is a list of indexes: A general bibliography, with a list of dates of Coptic pilgrimages in Egypt, the venerated saints of these pilgrimages, and a list of geographical sites. The index includes place names, proper names, authors' names, and a list of plates and maps.

- Regnault, Lucien. La Vie Quotidienne des Pères du Désert en Egypte Au IVe Siècle. [Paris]: Hachette, 1990.
Main Library BX 2734 R45 1990

The daily life of the Desert Fathers in Fourth Century Egypt is examined in great detail in this very concise work. The author is interested in the words of the Fathers that were pronounced on specific occasions for edification and teaching purposes. Seventeen chapters deal in detail with aspects of the lives of these great hermits and saints. Different aspects studied here include; Reasons for choosing the desert, an analysis of the lives of Egyptian men, women and children and their relationship with the Desert Fathers, the cells, the clothing and the types of foods the hermits consumed, the daily life of the Anchorite monks and hermits who live in caves, the elders and their disciples, the hospitality of monks, their voyages, angels, demons and beasts, the visions, and revelations and miracles. The book concludes with an extensive list of notes, a bibliography, a chronological list, an index of names, and a table of contents.

- Rousseau, Philip. Pachomius: The making of a community in Fourth-century Egypt. University of California Press.
Main Library BR 1720 P23 R68 1985

This book provides a biography on Pachomius and describes how he established ascetic communities in the fourth-century AD. in Egypt. The author examines life in a Pachomian monastery, its daily order and hierarchical authority. The author attempts to identify the goal of ascetic life as presented by the communial "Pachomian monk". The book describes, in its last chapters, the interaction of the Pachomian monastery monks with the community around them. Rousseau offers an in-depth study of the successors of Pachomius, their practices, and of a monastic order that did not survive in Upper Egypt.

Coptic Christian saints

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.) The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of “Apophthegmata” (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the “Book of Paradise” Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by ‘The Fathers’ on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia: Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques. (the Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration), Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.
Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the "Death and Resurrection" of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Butler, Alfred J. The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt, vol.1 and 2. Oxford: Clarendon Press 1884.
SPCL BX 133 B8 1884

Volume 1 of this book focuses on the general layout and structure of Coptic Churches, giving plans and illustrations of some major Churches and Monasteries. Some of these, like the churches of old Cairo, the Monasteries of the Natrun valley, the Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt, are discussed in detail. Volume 2 goes deeper into the Coptic faith. It dwells on particular aspects of the Coptic religion like the arrangement of the altar, Eucharistic vessels and furniture, vestments of clergy, sacraments and the various rites and ceremonies of the church.

- Elm, Sussana. 'Virgins of God'. The making of Asceticism in Late Antiquity. Clarendon Press, Oxford.
Main Library BV 5023 E45 1994

This book traces the origins of "asceticism", and the crucial role played by women in establishing organizational patterns in ascetic communities. The book makes the assertion that monasticism is the 'highest evolution of asceticism'. The author critically examines the evolution of asceticism in Asia Minor and Egypt; the variations of female ascetic life in these regions, the classic models, and some prominent female and male ascetics. He concludes by demonstrating how the ascetic bishops (today's saints) eventually 'reformed' these early models of communal ascetic life by dividing the order of the 'Virgins of God' into monks and nuns, thus laying the foundation for modern day monasticism. This book is important for anyone interested in early church history and the ascetic life.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Wathaa`iq lil Taariikh: al-Kinisah wa Qaddia al-Watan wa al-Dawlah wa al-Sharq al-Awsat, Part two: `Awdat Rufaat al-Qidiis Murqus al-Rasuul. Daar al-Jiil lil Tiba`ah, 1977.
Main Library BX 136 J58 V.2

This book contains historical documents about the transfer of St. Morqos al-Rasul's (Saint Mark) remains to Egypt in the period of Anba Kyrollos the VI (116 Pope). These documents cover events, such as the sheikh of al-Azhar's visit to the Patriarchate, speech of Pope Kyrollos VI in a public conference at the al-Mo`alaka church in old Cairo, the journey to Rome to bring back the remains of St. Mark, and messages from Pope Kyrollos to Pope Paul VI (Pope of the Roman Catholic Church).

This work, in addition to the translation of speeches of Patriarchs from foreign countries, also contains press interviews with the author concerning the Virgin Mary's appearance in Virgin Mary's church in Zaytuun. There is a detailed subject index at the end of the book.

- Johnston, William M. (ed.). Encyclopedia of Monasticism, vol.1 and 2. Chicago, 2000.

Main Reference BX 2461 E53 2000

This Encyclopedia, divided into two volumes, examines Monasticism in the past and present. It focuses on Buddhist Monasticism, Eastern Christian Monasticism and Western Christian Monasticism. Contributors to this Encyclopedia come from some 25 countries and describe Monasticism in over 50 different countries. With articles like "Buddhist Perspectives" and "Christian Perspectives", some major similarities and differences in these different ways of Monasticism are clarified. Bibliographies have been supplied by the author of each article and a list of some Monastic websites (where available) is provided at the end of many articles. To ease the burden of cross-cultural comparison in terminology, this Encyclopedia provides a glossary of basic terms in both Buddhist and Christian vocabulary. This Encyclopedia is a valuable reference book for scholars and other researchers, whether secular or religious, who are interested in Monasticism or in any of its manifestations.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs:The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.

Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Kinross, Patrick Balfour (Lord). Portrait of Egypt. New York:W. Morrow, 1966.

Main Library DT 46 K5 1966

The author is Lord Kinross, Patrick Balfour, the First Secretary of the British Embassy in Cairo (1944-47). This book comprises 4 parts (Ancient, Christian, Medieval, and Modern Egypt) and gives a description of his travels in Egypt. In the first chapter the book discusses Ancient Egypt and then introduces Christian Egypt, the Copts and the Monastic Communities, such as those existing in Wadi al-Natrun, St.Catherine's Monastery and other places. He then describes Christian Egypt from the Arab Conquest in 641 AD. to Modern times. Chapters 6 and 7 are entitled respectively: 'The Copts' and 'The Monastic Communities'. The description comes in the style of a travel guide and presents monastic life with reference to some of the most important monasteries of Egypt, such as Abu Makar, Anba Bishoi, Baramus, As-Suriani and St. Catherine, with the last two duly noted for their libraries and icons.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt:Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Coptic Saints and Pilgrimages. The American University in Cairo Press, Cairo, New York.
Main Library BX 4659 E4 M45 2002

This book focuses on Coptic religious devotion. The first few chapters deal with biblical saints, martyrs, ascetics and equestrian warriors in Coptic spirituality. The latter chapters dwell emphatically on such subjects, such as the "silverless" physicians of the Byzantine churches (who treated their patients without pay), women saints, and recently discovered martyrs. Meinardus contemplates themes of the past, such as Coptic Saints, as well as miracles from modern perspective in an age of globalization. The book includes high quality colored, images of patron saints and martyrs. The text is considered a valuable source of reference source in the subject matter.

- Regnault, Lucien. La Vie Quotidienne des Pères du Désert en Egypte Au IVe Siècle. [Paris]: Hachette, 1990.
Main Library BX 2734 R45 1990

The daily life of the Desert Fathers in Fourth Century Egypt is examined in great detail in this very concise work. The author is interested in the words of the Fathers that were pronounced on specific occasions for edification and teaching purposes. Seventeen chapters deal in detail with aspects of the lives of these great hermits and saints. Different aspects studied here include; Reasons for choosing the desert, an analysis of the lives of Egyptian men, women and children and their relationship with the Desert Fathers, the cells, the clothing and the types of foods the hermits consumed, the daily life of the Anchorite monks and hermits who live in caves, the elders and their disciples, the hospitality of monks, their voyages, angels, demons and beasts, the visions, and revelations and miracles. The book concludes with an extensive list of notes, a bibliography, a chronological list, an index of names, and a table of contents.

- Russell, Norman (Translator) and Ward, Benedicta (Introduction). The Lives of the Desert Fathers: The Historia Monachorum In Aegypto. by London: Mowbray; Kalamazoo, MI: Cistercian, 1981, 1980.

Main Library BX 2465 H513 1980

The text of "The Historia Monacorum" is translated from Greek, Latin and Syriac versions, and is presented in an extensive presentation divided into five chapters. The translated section comprises twenty-six entries, and describes the lives of some of the Desert Saints and Monks of the fourth Century in Egypt. The biographies include famous saints, such as Macarius, Patermuthius, Apollo, and John of Lycopolis. The work is concluded with notes on the text, a bibliography, chronological table, and an index of persons and places.

- Weitzmann, Kurt. Studies In The Arts At Sinai. Princeton University Press, USA, 1982.

Main Library N 7988 A1 W 44, 1982

The author of this book introduces, in chapter 1, the Justinian and Post-Justinian arts in St.Catherine's Monastery, such as the Jephthah Panel, mosaics, and the valuable collection of icons. Chapter 2 deals with Middle Byzantine icons such as the Announciation Icon of the Virgin Mary. The last chapter of the book looks at icons of the crusades on Mount Sinai. The book is a contribution to the documentation of the artwork of St. Catherine's Monastery.

Coptic icons -- Conservation and restoration

- Atalla, Nabil Selim. Coptic Icons. Barcelona, 1986.
Main Library N 8189 E35 C6X 1986

This book serves as an easy reference to Coptic icons (such as those of Saints) and the manner in which they are depicted in their spiritual convocations . The text also includes a brief introduction which traces the origin of the term “Coptic”, and the Era of the Martyrs that began in 284 AD. Each plate includes a short paragraph discussing the artwork and the relevance of the symbolism and significance as presented from a Coptic religious perspective.

- Coptic Icons, Les Icones Coptes, Koptische Ikonen. Cairo: Lehnert and Landrock, 1986.
Main Library N 8189 E35 C6x 1986.

This book is a catalog of Coptic Icons that are found in several churches and monasteries throughout Egypt. The churches include Al-Mu’allaqah (The Hanging Church in Old Cairo), the church of Saint Barbara, the churches of St. Mercurius (Abu Saifain), and Al-Damshiriah and St. Shenouti. Haret al-Rum and Fum Al-Khalig in the Cairo area have also been included. The Coptic monasteries of Wadi El-Natrun and Upper Egypt are presented through their fascinating icons. The specific style of Coptic icons, described as the ‘Triptych’ style, is also presented in this work and is constituted by a centerpiece and two side panels that fold over a center. This work includes a fascinating array of different icon styles, among which are the Fayoum Portraits, and the different icons kept at the Coptic Museum. This catalog is trilingual (English, French, German). The book closes with a list of alphabetical names and a table of contents.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York] : Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Evetts, B.T.A. (ed.). The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Oxford, 1969.
Main Special Collection BX 133 A6

This publication discusses a history of Egypt's churches and monasteries including architecture, restoration, and religious iconography. The book also provides accounts by priests and monks of mystical experiences. It gives a geographical description of Egypt, footnotes, a map, appendix, and index of Coptic churches and monasteries. The book offers historical analyses of the Coptic language as used in neighboring countries.

- Hanna, Rev. Shenouda. The Coptic Church: Symbolism and Iconography. U.A.R. 1962.
Main Library BX 136 2 H3X 1962

This piece includes a general description of the Coptic Church, and an explanation of the symbolism behind its structure. The book also provides analyses for various Coptic icons, including Christ and his attributes, the Coptic cross, the saints, the angels, and color schemes.

- Hondelink, H. Coptic Art and Culture. Shouhdy Publishing House, Cairo, 1990.
Main Library N 7382 C66X 1990

This book introduces Early Christian Architecture in the Nile Valley between 313 AD. and 640 AD., including the church and monastic architecture. The second chapter of the book describes and explains the significance of the Old Testament Saints in Medieval Church decoration. The book deals with the icon-painting in Egypt in general and the conservation problems of the icons. One of the authors of the book talks about the miraculous icons and their historical background. There is a brief discussion of Coptic textiles. The last chapter of the book is concerned with demons in early Coptic Monasticism.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Qadus, Izzat Zaki Hamid and al-Sayid, Mohamed Abdel Fatah. Al-Aathaar wa al-Funun al-Qibtiyah. Al-Haddarii lil tibaah, Alexandria, 2000.
Main Library N 7382 Q33 2000

This book deals with different aspects of Coptic art. It is divided into three parts: Part one describes the history of art in Coptic society. It also discusses Coptic sculpture, Coptic architecture, mural frescoes/paintings in Coptic art, characterization and style in Coptic representation, and the art of Coptic weaving. The last chapter of the first part of the book discusses magic, prophecy and symbolism in Coptic art. Part two contains a bibliography and provides over 200 pages of different motifs, themes, and symbols in Coptic art.

- Scott-Moncrieff, Phillip David. Paganism and Christianity in Egypt. Cambridge University Press, 1913.
SPCL BR 190 S4 1913

This book begins by examining religion in Egypt from the close of the Ptolemaic era to the start of the third century. The author investigates the advent of Christianity in Egypt (from the time of St. Mark), providing literary and archeological evidence throughout. He concludes with a look at early Christian iconography, aspects of Gnosticism, and the rise of asceticism and Monasticism in Egypt.

- Al-Suryani, Samaan. Dair al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa`, al-Suryaan: Barriyyat Shihit – Wadi al-Natruun. Matba`at Dair al-Baramuus, Egypt, 1990.
Main Library BX 178 S3 S8x 1990

The book gives a detailed description of Dayr as-Surian, its location and its different churches such as Deir al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa` (the Monastery of the Virgin Mary at al- Suryaan Church), al-Arba`in Church, Virgin al-Maqaarah Church and Archangel Mikhail Church. In another section of the book the author discusses the remains of some Saints such as Anba Yahnas, Kama, Marafram al-Syuryani and others. Throughout the book the reader will find information about the library, monastery museum, al-Azbawiyyah, and rare icons. The book also gives a listing of names of all the heads of the monastery and also contains a short bibliography for Anba Theophileas. Al-Suriyyaani also gives information about the role of al-Syuryan monastery in the twentieth century, and the famous travelers and foreign scientists who visited it. The book closes with a detailed map of the monastery. In addition to some representations of icons and an index, there is a collection of pictures of the first heads of the monastery. This book is recommended to researchers, tourists and travelers alike.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Copts -- Biography

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents

- Brooke, Christopher; Lovatt, Roger; Luscombe, David and Silem, Aelred. David Knowles Remembered. Cambridge University Press 1991.
Main Library BX 4705 K58 D38 1991

This book is a biography of David Knowles written by four of his former class-mates. They attempt to rehabilitate his image by redressing an earlier publication written by the late Dom Adrian, David Knowles A Memoir, who portrayed David Knowles as a failure. In this book, David Knowles is portrayed as an austere and solitary monk, a devout priest administering to his household and friends, and as one who makes a deep impression on his followers. David Knowles is also seen as a great historian and master of prose, a professor and teacher of wide influence during his days as Regius Professor of Modern History at Cambridge.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, 2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Fedden, Romilly. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty of Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Ibn Al-Mukaffa, Sawirus (Bishop Of Al-Ashmunin). History of the Patriarchs of the Egyptian Church. Matbaat al-Mahad al-Ilmi al-Farancy lil Athaar al-Sharkiah, Cairo.
Main Library BX 132 S3 ,Volume2

This volume of the series comprises the biographies of ten Patriarchs, beginning with the fifty-sixth Patriarch, Khael III (Michael I) and ending the sixty-fifth Patriarch Senouti II. These patriarchs occupied the See of Saint Mark from 880-1066 AD.

- Iskarus, Tawfiq. Nawaabigh al-Aqbaat wa-Mashaahiruhum fi al-Qarn al-Taasi `Ashar. Matba`at al-Tawfiiq , Egypt, 1910. Main Library BX 139 A1 I8 V.1
Main Special DT 155.2 C65 I7 1910

This book provides the reader with a detailed biography of some of the prominent Coptic Fathers in the nineteenth century such as Anba Butrus, Anba Serabmoon (the Bishop) and the Master Ibrahim al-Gohari. Iskaarus ends his book with Mo`alim Ibrahim al-Gohari's biography.

- Russell, Norman (Translator) and Ward, Benedicta (Introduction). The Lives of the Desert Fathers: The Historia Monachorum In Aegypto. by London: Mowbray; Kalamazoo, MI: Cistercian, 1981, c1980.
Main Library BX 2465 H513 1980

The text of "The Historia Monacorum" is translated from Greek, Latin and Syriac versions, and is presented in an extensive presentation divided into five chapters. The translated section comprises twenty-six entries, and describes the lives of some of the Desert Saints and Monks of the fourth Century in Egypt. The biographies include famous saints, such as Macarius, Patermuthius, Apollo, and John of Lycopolis. The work is concluded with notes on the text, a bibliography, chronological table, and an index of persons and places.

- Watson, John H. Among the Copts, Brighton [England]; Portland, Or.: Sussex Academic Press, 2000.
Main Library BX 136.2 W38 2000

John Watson provides an engaging account of the history of the Copts from early Christianity to the present. Paying detailed attention to Coptic customs, Watson examines various controversial issues or incidents in the history of the Coptic people. Although at points the author seems somewhat biased in his comments, overall he maintains a balance and objectivity in his final analysis. He includes various biographies of renowned Coptic people, patriarchs, saints and monks, and tends to interject his accounts with his own personal experiences of those he interviewed or met. He demonstrates a deep understanding of Coptic and Middle Eastern culture, including Islam. He dedicates an entire chapter to the intriguing subject of monastic life and asceticism. The work retires with a detailed Coptic chronology and an index of names and subjects.

Copts -- History

- Abu Salih, al-Armani. The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Translated by B.T.A. Evetts with notes by Alfred J. Butler.
Main Library BX 133 A6 1969

In the first chapter of this article Abu Salih describes the origins of churches and monasteries in Egypt, the history and life of the Egyptian Copts, restoration of the churches, and some places in Egypt visited by the Holy family. It also includes sayings by the prophet Muhammad about the Copts. In the later part of the book the author describes the churches of neighboring countries, including: Abyssinia, Spain, North-western Africa, India and Arabia. The appendix contains an account of the churches and Christians of Egypt, and a map that shows all the places mentioned in the book.

- Atiya, Aziz S. A History of Eastern Christianity. London, 1968.
Main Library BX 103 2 A8 1968

This book focuses on the history of the Christian Churches of the East, namely, the Coptic and Ethiopic, the Jacobite, Nestorian, Armenian, Indian, Maronite, and the vanished Churches of Nubia and North Africa. The author traces the origins and evolution of these churches in the seven different parts of the book. He attempts to restore a picture of the Eastern Churches that was lost to the eyes of the West. Most Eastern Churches, whose claim to apostolic origins is their major pride and glory, are viewed by the modern day west as 'primitive'. The author, himself a Copt, brings out the hierarchical organization of the various Eastern Churches, their rites and ceremonials, ecclesiastical art and architecture, religious music and literature. With these, this book goes a long way to clarify certain aspects of the Eastern Churches, which had hitherto been viewed through sectarian vehemence, and considerable lack of understanding by most Roman Catholic, Greek and Protestant authors. The book also contains maps, footnotes, plates and an extensive bibliography.

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an "ancient order of Christians called the Copts." The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts. It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo: American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Ceres, Wissa Wassef. Pratiques Rituelles et Alimentaires des Coptes. (Ritual and Alimentary Practices of the Copts). Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire : Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919- (PhD thesis presented at the Sorbonne, Paris)
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 9

This study presents an in-depth examination of the beginnings of Christianity in Egypt with its rituals and alimentary practices. Various subjects are treated in this work ranging from the Christianization of Egypt, the Coptic Calendar and seasonal foods, the different markets, ceremonials within the family, the different feasts, and the various sayings and metaphors used by the Coptic people. The work is concluded by a list of the plants mentioned in the work, a Bibliography, indexes to the geographic places, the names of persons and ceremonies, an index of terms, and a general index. The dissertation is concluded with an intriguing list of Coptic cutlery.

- Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate. St. Mark and the Coptic Church. Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate, Cairo, 1968.
Main Library BX 133.2 A4 1968

This book deals with St. Mark and the establishment of Christianity in Egypt. Dr. Hakim Ameen, the author of the first essay describes how St. Mark introduced Christianity to Egypt. The second chapter informs us about St. Mark's Doctrine (the one found in parts of Africa). Other chapters of the book deal with the Liturgy of St. Mark and the Theological School of Alexandria. The book also describes the Coptic Church under different rulers and its contribution to universal Christianity. The latter part of the book concludes with a brief survey of Coptic literature and art.

- Doorn-Harder, Pieternella van. Contemporary Coptic Nuns. Columbia, S.C.: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
BX 137.3 D66 1995

This book is one of the very few books that deal with the subject of Coptic nuns. The author deals with a variety of subjects revolving around an ascetic community of Coptic nuns and convents: The Copts in Egyptian society, the monastic landscape, the ruling mothers and fathers of the Coptic monasteries and convents. The author also describes the abandoning of the mundane life by the novitiate nuns, who are not considered, according to monastic life, as "dead to the world". Pieternella Van Doorn-Harder also describes, in a very interesting style, the initiation rites, practices of the nuns and their work, the spiritual life, the saints, and the visitors. The work concludes with a listing of notes, glossary, selected bibliography, and an index of names.

- Griggs, C. Wilfred. Early Egyptian Christianity: From its Origins to 451 C.E. The Netherlands, 1993.
SPCL BR 190 G75

This book focuses on the history of Christianity in Egypt from its earliest recorded origins to the Council of Chalcedon in 451C.E., when the Egyptian Coptic Church became the national religion of Egypt. Aspects such as the emergence of orthodoxy and heresy in Egyptian Christianity, autocracy in Christian Egypt and the eventual separation from Catholicism, are examined. With maps of Lower and Upper Egypt, cross references from gospels and an extensive bibliography, this book contributes to an understanding of Early Egyptian Christianity in particular and to Early Christianity in general.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grogorius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Wathaa`iq lil Taariikh: al-Kinisah wa Qaddia al-Watan wa al-Dawlah wa al-Sharq al-Awsat, Part two: `Awdat Rufaat al-Qidiis Murqus al-Rasuul. Daar al-Jiil lil Tiba`ah, 1977.
Main Library BX 136 J58 V.2

This book contains historical documents about the transfer of St. Morqos al-Rasul's (Saint Mark) remains to Egypt in the period of Anba Kyrollos the VI (116 Pope). These documents cover events, such as the sheikh of al-Azhar's visit to the Patriarchate, speech of Pope Kyrollos VI in a public conference at the al-Mo`alaka church in old Cairo, the journey to Rome to bring back the remains of St. Mark, and messages from Pope Kyrollos to Pope Paul VI (Pope of the Roman Catholic Church). This work, in addition to the translation of speeches of Patriarchs from foreign countries, also contains press interviews with the author concerning the Virgin Mary's appearance in Virgin Mary's church in Zaytuun. There is a detailed subject index at the end of the book.

- Habib, Rafiq and Afifi, Mohamed. Taariikh al-Kaniisah al-Misriyyah. Al-Daar al-`Arabiyyah lil Tiba`ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzii`, Dokki, Cairo, 1994.
Main Library BX 133.2 H33 1994

This book discusses the history of the national Egyptian cultural elites. It is divided into seven chapters that discuss Christianity in Egypt and the suppression of the Copts. The second Chapter covers the church and the Arab invasion in 641 AD. The third Chapter gives information about Catholicism, past and present. Chapter four explains Protestanism and its consignments in Egypt; Chapter five gives detailed information about the rise of the church and the political laicism; Chapter six deals with the history of sectarian strife through the centuries. In the last Chapter the writer explores the search for truth about the controversies of sectarian strife.

- Habib, Raouf. The Outstanding Aspects of the Coptic Arts. Mahabba Bookshop, 1980.
SPCL N 7382 H2X

This book discusses Coptic art from differing perspectives. It starts by looking at the influence of classical mythology in Coptic art, and discusses pottery until the Coptic and Islamic era. The author later focuses on feminine coquetry and headdresses in the Coptic period and some of the major contributions of ancient Egypt in Coptic art. Aspects of Coptic symbolism, manuscripts, weaving, and textiles are also discussed. The book concludes with a brief look at the stay of the Holy Family in Egypt, the Monastery of St. Catherine in Sinai, and the Coptic icons.

- Johnson, Janet H. (ed.). Life in a Multi-Cultural Society: Egypt from Cambyses to Constantine and Beyond. The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago 1992.
Main Library DT 61 L72 1992

This book includes papers presented at the Fourth International Congress of Demotist held at the Oriental Institute, the University of Chicago from September 4-8, 1990. The essays are diverse and cover Egypt during the period under the Persian Empire from 525 B.C. up to its eventual invasion by the Romans (a period of about 1000 years). This was a period in which the Egyptian majority population lived in contact with non-Egyptian populations such as Greeks, Macedonians, Romans, Jews and non-Semitic speaking people from Syria-Palestine. The papers make a significant contribution to our understanding of an important period in world history, and introduce a wide range of subjects including the study of emerging multi-cultural and multi-lingual societies.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- El-Masry, Iris Habib. The Story of the Copts. (Book II deals with the Arab Conquest to the Mamluke Reign). Newberry Springs, CA: St.Anthony Coptic Orthodox Monastery, 1982.
Main Library BX 1332 M2X, 1982

This book includes the history of the Copts starting with the final years of Byzantine Rule over Egypt and the Arab Conquest in 641A.D. The author gives a description of the Coptic Patriarchs during the reign of the Arab Rulers, and goes on to inform us of the political and social movements during the various periods of Arab Rule. She mentions how the Copts suffered under the Turkish Rule, and explains how the situation changed when the French came to Egypt during the Napoleon Expedition in 1798. The author concludes this book with the history of the Copts at the end of the nineteenth century.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concluded with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Scott-Moncrieff, Phillip David. Paganism and Christianity in Egypt. Cambridge University Press, 1913.
SPCL BR 190 S4 1913

This book begins by examining religion in Egypt from the close of the Ptolemaic era to the start of the third century. The author investigates the advent of Christianity in Egypt (from the time of St. Mark), providing literary and archeological evidence throughout. He concludes with a look at early Christian iconography, aspects of Gnosticism, and the rise of asceticism and Monasticism in Egypt.

- Sheils, W.J. (ed.). Monks, Hermits and Ascetic Tradition. Blackwell, Oxford, 1985.
Main Library BV 5017 M6X 1985

A chapter of the book deals with "ascetics" in the history of the Church from the time of the Early School of Alexandria to the time of the Byzantine. Other chapters deal with "asceticism" in Medieval Brittany, the "hermits" during the time of the Crusades, and the transformation of hermitages in twelfth-century England. These chapters further discuss the eventual spread of these hermitages to Spain. The book also includes "asceticism" during different periods in Europe and the concept of the "Little Church."

Sobhy, P. G. (Dr.) Le Martyre De Saint Helias et L'Encomium de l'Eveque Stephanos de Hnes Sur Saint Helias. (Saint Helias the Martyr and His praise By Stephanos the Bishop of Hnes) Drower, E. S. Water into Wine. A Study of Ritual Idiom in the Middle East. John Murray: London, 1956
Main Library BL 619 S3 D7 1956

In this veritable anthropological breakthrough, Lady Drower examines and compares the religious rituals of the various Eastern churches. Part I is dedicated mainly to describing the temple setting and some puzzling Eucharistic rituals like the "branch to the nose". Part II critically examines the devotional significances of bread and wine on the altar in the Russian and Greek Orthodox, Greek Catholic and Jacobite, Nestorian and Chaldean, Coptic, and Abyssinian churches. Part III gives an account of ritual meals like the "Parsi ritual meals"(the Yansa) and the ritual meals of the Chaldeans. An interesting aspect of this book is the similarity that exists between these rituals and many others which, as the author puts it, "may emphasize the root unity of certain human concepts".

- Watson, John H. Among the Copts. Brighton [England]; Portland, Or.: Sussex Academic Press, 2000.
Main Library BX 136.2 W38 2000

John Watson provides an engaging account of the history of the Copts from early Christianity to the present. Paying detailed attention to Coptic customs, Watson examines various controversial issues or incidents in the history of the Coptic people. Although at points the author seems somewhat biased in his comments, overall he maintains a balance and objectivity in his final analysis. He includes various biographies of renowned Coptic people, patriarchs, saints and monks, and tends to interject his accounts with his own personal experiences of those he interviewed or met. He demonstrates a deep understanding of Coptic and Middle Eastern culture, including Islam. He dedicates an entire chapter to the intriguing subject of monastic life and asceticism. The work retires with a detailed Coptic chronology and an index of names and subjects.

Early Church history --Primitive and early church, ca. 30-600

- Beckwith, John. Coptic Sculpture, 300-1300. London : A. Tiranti, 1963.
Main Library NB 1082 B4 1963

Beckwith gives an historical background of Egypt, which starts with the founding of Alexandria in 322 B.C. and continues until the end of the reign of Ptolemy II from 246 BC. The author also gives a description of the different styles and historical trends in Coptic sculpture. He devotes a whole section on Notes to Plates, and gives a description of the different styles with reference to the plates in the text. He specifically describes at great length the Alexandrian style, and the periods before and after the Islamic conquest in 641 AD.

- Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes. Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 V. 1

Dr. Sobhy, gives a physical description of the dilapidated manuscript that is located at the Mo`allaka Church in Old Cairo. The author notes that the scribe has done the entire work and was obviously an adept craftsman. The text of the manuscript is presented in columns, followed by the translation. The original text is in Sahidiq with some dialects of Middle Egypt. The text includes many Greek words that are not spelled in the traditional way. The translator notes that the text is at times incoherent but explains that this particular trait is common among similar texts written about martyrs. The author's main objective in this study is to introduce words that are differently spelled in an untraditional manner, and to focus on new forms of grammar as presented in the manuscript. The work concludes with an index and a table of contents.

- Binns, John. Ascetics and Ambassadors of Christ: The Monasteries of Palestine, 314-631. Oxford: Clarendon Press, New York: Oxford University Press 1994.
Main Library BR 185 B56 1994

Binns offers a valuable description of the life and practices of the monks in the Palestinian desert. He provides a detailed overview of the monasteries in and around Jerusalem that were famous during the Byzantine Christian period, and a history of the accession of Emperor Constantine until the rise of the Persian Empire in 641 A.D. and up to the fall of Jerusalem. The council of Chalcedon is regarded as an important turning point and is described in detail. The author gives precise information about the conditions in which the monks lived in the region of Palestine at that particular period. This book deals in detail with the different pilgrimages of the time, the lives of monks, their teachings and spiritual thought, and the doctrinal debates and historical developments through which the monasteries and the monks themselves had to go. The book includes a bibliography and an index.

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia: Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques, (The Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration), Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.
Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the “Death and Resurrection” of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering , Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an "ancient order of Christians called the Copts." The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts. It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo: American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Elm, Sussana. 'Virgins of God'. The making of Asceticism in Late Antiquity. Clarendon Press, Oxford.
Main Library BV 5023 E45 1994

This book traces the origins of "asceticism", and the crucial role played by women in establishing organizational patterns in ascetic communities. The book makes the assertion that monasticism is the 'highest evolution of asceticism'. The author critically examines the evolution of asceticism in Asia Minor and Egypt; the variations of female ascetic life in these regions, the classic models, and some prominent female and male ascetics. He concludes by demonstrating how the ascetic bishops (today's saints) eventually 'reformed' these early models of communal ascetic life by dividing the order of the 'Virgins of God' into monks and nuns, thus laying the foundation for modern day monasticism. This book is important for anyone interested in early church history and the ascetic life.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Fedden, Romilly. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Gartkiewicz, Przemyslaw. NUBIA I, Dongola 2: The Cathedral in Old Dongola and its Antecedents. Editions Scientifiques de Pologne, Varssovie 1990
Main Library NA 216 D6 G27X 1990

This book gives a description and brief account of the architectural investigations carried out on the site of the Church of Granite Columns in Old Dongola. The author starts by describing the old church and the later additions to it. He focuses on the building process, materials, and layout of the church. The greater part of the book is reserved to the Church of Granite Columns. Gartkiewicz then gives a specific description of the architecture and usage of the church, with maps and technical architectural designs. In the last chapters the author dwells briefly on the Cathedral of Brick Pillars, its construction, evolution and eventual decline. For anyone interested in early church history, especially the architecture, this book is a must.

- Griggs, C. Wilfred. Early Egyptian Christianity: From its Origins to 451 C.E. The Netherlands, 1993.
SPCL BR 190 G75

This book focuses on the history of Christianity in Egypt from its earliest recorded origins to the Council of Chalcedon in 451C.E., when the Egyptian Coptic Church became the national religion of Egypt. Aspects such as the emergence of orthodoxy and heresy in Egyptian Christianity, autocracy in Christian Egypt and the eventual separation from Catholicism, are examined. With maps of Lower and Upper Egypt, cross references from gospels and an extensive bibliography, this book contributes to an understanding of Early Egyptian Christianity in particular and to Early Christianity in general.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grogorius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Hanna, Rev. Shenouda. The Coptic Church: Symbolism and Iconography. U.A.R. 1962.
Main Library BX 136 2 H3X 1962

This piece includes a general description of the Coptic Church, and an explanation of the symbolism behind its structure. The book also provides analyses for various Coptic icons, including Christ and his attributes, the Coptic cross, the saints, the angels, and color schemes.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- El-Masry, Iris Habib. The Story of the Copts. (Book II deals with the Arab Conquest to the Mamluke Reign). Newberry Springs, CA: St. Anthony Coptic Orthodox Monastery, 1982.
Main Library BX 1332 M2X 1982

This book includes the history of the Copts starting with the final years of Byzantine Rule over Egypt and the Arab Conquest in 641A.D. The author gives a description of the Coptic Patriarchs during the reign of the Arab Rulers, and goes on to inform us of the political and social movements during the various periods of Arab Rule. She mentions how the Copts suffered under the Turkish Rule, and explains how the situation changed when the French came to Egypt during the Napoleon Expedition in 1798. The author concludes this book with the history of the Copts at the end of the nineteenth century.

- Matta Al-Miskiin Lamhah Sarii`ah `An Rahbanat Misr Wa –Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar. Published by Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar – Wadii al-sNatruun, 1985.
Main Library BX 138M3 M3X 1985

This book states that the Coptic Church is the most ancient Church in the world, and that monasticism spread from Egypt to other countries, especially to all Eastern countries and Europe. The author of the book explains how the Monastery of Anba Makkar was founded at the beginning of the fourth century, 360 B.C. in Wadi Al Natrun. Furthermore, he describes in detail the most important archeological features of the monastery, including the altar, the church and the castle.

- Mottier, Yvette, Bosson, Nathalie. Les Kellia: Ermitages Coptes en Basse-Egypte (The Kellia: Coptic Ermitages In Lower-Egypt) (Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Genève, 12 Octobre 1989-7 Janvier 1990), Genève: Editions du Tricorne, 1989.
Main Library DT 73 K47 K47X 1989

This book is a catalog of the Kellia Sites excavations. Included are numerous photographs and maps as well as plans of the different sites. The book starts with an introduction about Coptic Monasticism, and then moves to a depiction of the archaeological findings of the Kellia sites and its antique Coptic monasteries. The author also describes the architectural styles and paintings in the monasteries, and mentions projects for their conservation and preservation. The inscriptions and the Coptic pottery art are also described in detail.

- Nightingale, John. Monasteries and Patrons in the Gorze Reform Lotharingia c.850-1000. Oxford Historical Monographs, Clarendon Press, Oxford.
Main Library BX 2616 N54 2001

In this landmark study of the relationships between monasteries and the nobility in ninth and tenth century Lotharingia, John Nightingale examines the pivotal role played by monasteries in the Medieval period. He focuses on three great abbeys that played a central role in the monastic reform movement- Gorze, St.Maximin and St.Evre. The author examines the monasteries within the context of Medieval society and demonstrates their vital importance on land and religious matters, elucidating the complex relationships between monasteries and their patrons. This is a good resource tool for those interested in Early Church history.

- Sheils, W.J. (ed.). Monks, Hermits and Ascetic Tradition. Blackwell, Oxford, 1985.
Main Library BV 5017 M6X 1985

A chapter of the book deals with "ascetics" in the history of the Church from the time of the Early School of Alexandria to the time of the Byzantine. Other chapters deal with "asceticism" in Medieval Brittany, the "hermits" during the time of the Crusades, and the transformation of hermitages in twelfth-century England. These chapters further discuss the eventual spread of these hermitages to Spain. The book also includes "asceticism" during different periods in Europe and the concept of the "Little Church."

Monasteries

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York]: Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Fedden, Romilly. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar

Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

- Nightingale, John. Monasteries and Patrons in the Gorze Reform Lotharingia c.850-1000. Oxford Historical Monographs, Clarendon Press, Oxford.
Main Library BX 2616 N54 2001

In this landmark study of the relationships between monasteries and the nobility in ninth and tenth century Lotharingia, John Nightingale examines the pivotal role played by monasteries in the Medieval period. He focuses on three great abbeys that played a central role in the monastic reform movement- Gorze, St.Maximin and St.Evre. The author examines the monasteries within the context of Medieval society and demonstrates their vital importance on land and religious matters, elucidating the complex relationships between monasteries and their patrons. This is a good resource tool for those interested in Early Church history.

- Simaika Pasha, Marcus. Catalogue of the Coptic and Arabic Manuscripts in the Coptic Museum, the Patriarchate, the Principal Churches of Cairo and Alexandria and the Monasteries of Egypt, vol. 1, 2. Government Press, Cairo, 1939.
SPCL Creswell Collection Z 6605 C7 S5 1939 v. 1, 2

The first volume of this book discusses the relevance of monastic libraries in Egypt, and the process by which monastic scribes produced manuscripts. The second volume provides a comprehensive index of churches and monasteries to any researcher curious to explore them in detail. The third volume, not available at the AUC library, describes the libraries and manuscripts of the Coptic monasteries. (It may be well worthwhile checking with institutions outside of AUC to attain a copy of this highly recommended volume).

- Watson, John H. Among the Copts. Brighton [England]; Portland, Or.: Sussex Academic Press, 2000.
Main Library BX 136.2 W38 2000

John Watson provides an engaging account of the history of the Copts from early Christianity to the present. Paying detailed attention to Coptic customs, Watson examines various controversial issues or incidents in the history of the Coptic people. Although at points the author seems somewhat biased in his comments, overall he maintains a balance and objectivity in his final analysis. He includes various biographies of renowned Coptic people, patriarchs, saints and monks, and tends to interject his accounts with his own personal experiences of those he interviewed or met. He demonstrates a deep understanding of Coptic and Middle Eastern culture, including Islam. He dedicates an entire chapter to the intriguing subject of monastic life and asceticism. The work retires with a detailed Coptic chronology and an index of names and subjects.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monasteries -- Conservation and restoration

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia:Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques. (The Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration), Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.

Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the "Death and Resurrection" of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York]: Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Evetts, B.T.A. (ed.). The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Oxford, 1969.
Main Special Collection BX 133 A6

This publication discusses a history of Egypt's churches and monasteries including architecture, restoration, and religious iconography. The book also provides accounts by priests and monks of mystical experiences. It gives a geographical description of Egypt, footnotes, a map, appendix, and index of Coptic churches and monasteries. The book offers historical analyses of the Coptic language as used in neighboring countries.

- Gabra, Gawdat. Coptic Monasteries: Egypt's Monastic Art And Architecture. with a historical overview by Tim Vivian. New York; Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4850 A22 2002

In his introduction, Tim Vivian gives an overview of the early Christian era, Egyptian monasticism, and rites and ceremonies common to the Coptic faith. Gabra, the author, presents the reader with a study of Egyptian monasteries from Aswan to Wadi Al-Natrun and complemented by numerous color photographs. Architecture, wall painting, and the processes used in their restoration are described in detail. There is a list of illustrations prior to the introduction, and the book ends with a bibliography, a glossary and an index.

- Gartkiewicz, Przemyslaw. NUBIA I, Dongola 2: The Cathedral in Old Dongola and its Antecedents. Editions Scientifiques de Pologne, Varssovie 1990
Main Library NA 216 D6 G27X 1990

This book gives a description and brief account of the architectural investigations carried out on the site of the Church of Granite Columns in Old Dongola. The author starts by describing the old church and the later additions to it. He focuses on the building process, materials, and layout of the church. The greater part of the book is reserved to the Church of Granite Columns. Gartkiewicz then gives a specific description of the architecture and usage of the church, with maps and technical architectural designs. In the last chapters the author dwells briefly on the Cathedral of Brick Pillars, its construction, evolution and eventual decline. For anyone interested in early church history, especially the architecture, this book is a must.

- Johnston, William M. (ed.). Encyclopedia of Monasticism, vol.1 and 2. Chicago, 2000.

Main Reference BX 2461 E53 2000

This Encyclopedia, divided into two volumes, examines Monasticism in the past and present. It focuses on Buddhist Monasticism, Eastern Christian Monasticism and Western Christian Monasticism. Contributors to this Encyclopedia come from some 25 countries and describe Monasticism in over 50 different countries. With articles like “Buddhist Perspectives” and “Christian Perspectives”, some major similarities and differences in these different ways of Monasticism are clarified. Bibliographies have been supplied by the author of each article and a list of some Monastic websites (where available) is provided at the end of many articles. To ease the burden of cross-cultural comparison in terminology, this Encyclopedia provides a glossary of basic terms in both Buddhist and Christian vocabulary. This Encyclopedia is a valuable reference book for scholars and other researchers, whether secular or religious, who are interested in Monasticism or in any of its manifestations.

- Labib, Mahfouz. Pèlerins et Voyageurs au Mont Sinaï. (Pilgrims and Travelers at Mount Sinai) Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1961

Main Library BX 387 L3 1961

This book presents a listing of the famous pilgrims that have visited mount Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine along with a listing of French travelers. The work is not limited to a specific period of time. The author gives a chronology of visitors from the middle ages until the nineteenth century, and specifically emphasizes the scientific and archaeological expeditions of that time. Based on accounts of these travelers, the author gives a relatively precise estimation of the increase or decrease in the numbers of the monks throughout ages. The author also mentions the external and internal work of restoration of the monastery that has been done. The study concentrates on the different characters among the pilgrims and travelers, and the reasons and incentives that prompted them to accomplish such a long and perilous voyage. The author takes us through the different stages of monastic life from the founding of the first monastic communities in third century Egypt on the Nile Valley, to the actual construction of the Monastery of St. Catherine, which was established around the year 545 A.D. Some of the most famous figures that visited the Saint Catherine's Monastery in the nineteenth century include: Rifaud (1805-1826), Alexandre Dumas (1830), The Count of Paris (1860), Pierre Loti (1894) among others. An extensive bibliography, index to proper names, table of plates and table of contents conclude the work.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concluded with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Mottier, Yvette, Bosson, Nathalie. Les Kellia: Ermitages Coptes en Basse-Egypte (The Kellia: Coptic Ermitages In Lower-Egypt) (Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Genève, 12 Octobre 1989-7 Janvier 1990), Genève: Editions du Tricorne, 1989.
Main Library DT 73 K47 K47X 1989

This book is a catalog of the Kellia Sites excavations. Included are numerous photographs and maps as well as plans of the different sites. The book starts with an introduction about Coptic Monasticism, and then moves to a depiction of the archaeological findings of the Kellia sites and its antique Coptic monasteries. The author also describes the architectural styles and paintings in the monasteries, and mentions projects for their conservation and preservation. The inscriptions and the Coptic pottery art are also described in detail.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monasteries – Egypt

- Abu Salih, al-Armani. The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Translated by B.T.A. Evetts with notes by Alfred J. Butler.
Main Library BX 133 A6 1969

In the first chapter of this article Abu Salih describes the origins of churches and monasteries in Egypt, the history and life of the Egyptian Copts, restoration of the churches, and some places in Egypt visited by the Holy family. It also includes sayings by the prophet Muhammad about the Copts. In the later part of the book the author describes the churches of neighboring countries, including: Abyssinia, Spain, North-western Africa, India and Arabia. The appendix contains an account of the churches and Christians of Egypt, and a map that shows all the places mentioned in the book.

- Akermann, Philippe. Le Décor Sculpté du Couvent Blanc: Niches et Frises. (Decorations and Sculptures of The White Monastery: Niches and Frescoes) [Le Caire]: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale du Caire [1976].
Main Library NA 6084 S6 A45x 1976

This catalog describes examples of early Christian architectural art of Deir El-Abiad (The White Monastery) which is also known as Deir Amba Shenoute. It begins with an introduction followed by five chapters that give a full description of the art of the 'niche' in the first centuries of Christianity, including the way it is represented in the White Monastery. It goes on to explain the different themes and symbols used by the early artists. The descriptions are arranged by consecutive illustrations from chapter six to chapter eleven. These, in turn, are followed by a Conclusion and an index. A folded plan of the White Monastery or Deir El-Abiad is attached to the back of the bound cover of the book.

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents

- Butler, Alfred J. The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt, vol.1 and 2. Oxford: Clarendon Press 1884.
SPCL BX133 B8 1884

Volume 1 of this book focuses on the general layout and structure of Coptic Churches, giving plans and illustrations of some major Churches and Monasteries. Some of these, like the churches of old Cairo, the Monasteries of the Natrun valley, the Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt, are discussed in detail. Volume 2 goes deeper into the Coptic faith. It dwells on particular aspects of the Coptic religion like the arrangement of the altar, Eucharistic vessels and furniture, vestments of clergy, sacraments and the various rites and ceremonies of the church.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City : An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.
Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents "the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism," and the lives of "The three Fathers" of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai's monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai's saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book

- Evetts, B.T.A. (ed.). The Churches and Monasteries of Egypt and Some Neighboring Countries. Oxford, 1969.
Main Special Collection BX 133 A6

This publication discusses a history of Egypt's churches and monasteries including architecture, restoration, and religious iconography. The book also provides accounts by priests and monks of mystical experiences. It gives a geographical description of Egypt, footnotes, a map, appendix, and index of Coptic churches and monasteries. The book offers historical analyses of the Coptic language as used in neighboring countries.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Fedden, Romilly, 1908-1977. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Habib, Raouf. The Outstanding Aspects of the Coptic Arts. Mahabba Bookshop, 1980.
SPCL N 7382 H2X

This book discusses Coptic art from differing perspectives. It starts by looking at the influence of classical mythology in Coptic art, and discusses pottery until the Coptic and Islamic era. The author later focuses on feminine coquetry and headdresses in the Coptic period and some of the major contributions of ancient Egypt in Coptic art. Aspects of Coptic symbolism, manuscripts, weaving, and textiles are also discussed. The book concludes with a brief look at the stay of the Holy Family in Egypt, the Monastery of St. Catherine in Sinai, and the Coptic icons.

- Kinross, Patrick Balfour (Lord). Portrait of Egypt. New York: W. Morrow, 1966.
Main Library DT 46 K5 1966

The author is Lord Kinross, Patrick Balfour, the First Secretary of the British Embassy in Cairo (1944-47). This book comprises 4 parts (Ancient, Christian, Medieval, and Modern Egypt) and gives a description of his travels in Egypt. In the first chapter the book discusses Ancient Egypt and then introduces Christian Egypt, the Copts and the Monastic Communities, such as those existing in Wadi al-Natrun, St.Catherine's Monastery and other places. He then describes Christian Egypt from the Arab Conquest in 641 AD. to Modern times. Chapters 6 and 7 are entitled respectively: 'The Copts' and 'The Monastic Communities'. The description comes in the style of a travel guide and presents monastic life with reference to some of the most important monasteries of Egypt, such as Abu Makar, Anba Bishoi, Baramus, As-Suriani and St. Catherine, with the last two duly noted for their libraries and icons.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.). The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes, vol. 3 and 4. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

Volume 1 discusses numerous aspects of monastic life, including trade and occupations, clothing, the ascetic diet, sickness and healing through prayer, as well as the doctrinal position of the hermits. The author includes a map of Western Thebes during the 6th and 7th centuries, giving a description and a plan of the monastic complex of Epiphanies, and an analysis of literary and archaeological evidence. Volume 2 examines the Coptic and Greek texts that were found in works of excavation of Epiphanius. These texts include Biblical and liturgical texts, letters, accounts and lists, and legal and financial texts. Both volumes provide appendices pertaining to Coptic texts and monastic life.

- Matta Al-Miskiin Lamhah Sarii`ah `An Rahbanat Misr Wa –Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar. Published by Dair Al-Qiddis Anba Maqqaar – Wadii al-sNatruun, 1985.
Main Library BX 138M3 M3X 1985

This book states that the Coptic Church is the most ancient Church in the world, and that monasticism spread from Egypt to other countries, especially to all Eastern countries and Europe. The author of the book explains how the Monastery of Anba Makkar was founded at the beginning of the fourth century, 360 B.C. in Wadi Al Natrun. Furthermore, he describes in detail the most important archeological features of the monastery, including the altar, the church and the castle.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Christian Egypt: Ancient and Modern. Cairo, 1965.
SPCL BR 1380 M4 1965

This book provides a thorough and complete picture of Christian Egypt, ancient and modern. It starts with an outline of Christianity in Egypt and covers aspects of Christian feasts and calendars, the Coptic language, and a plan of the Coptic Church. It also looks specifically at the Christian Churches of Alexandria and Cairo, and their neighboring communities. The author also dwells lengthily on the Churches and Monasteries of the desert and at Sinai, along with Christian agencies, institutes and theological seminaries in Egypt. He concludes by examining traditional sites associated with the flight of the Holy Family to Egypt.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. AUC Press, Cairo, 1961.
SPCL BX 134 E3 M45 1961

This book is about the history of monasteries throughout the Egyptian desert, including those that are still in use. The author offers an analysis of pre-Christian monastic communities, a comparison of the anchorites and the coenobitic monks, and a discussion of the cult of St. Anthony. The book includes travelers' accounts, doctrines, and appendices which include motives that inspired monks to assume an escetic hermit's life. A bibliography of sources is also provided.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concludes with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Muyser, Jacob ('Qommos'). Les Pelerinages Coptes en Egypte. (Coptic Pilgrimages In Egypt), Bibliothèque D'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire : Imprimerie de l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 15 1979

An excellent study of past and present Coptic pilgrimages, this work presents a detailed account of the religious practices, traditions and pilgrimage sites. The catalog has a preface followed by an introduction. It is then divided into four chapters, entitled respectively: The Act of Pilgrimage, The Principal Coptic Pilgrimages of the Past, Actual Coptic Pilgrimages, Characteristics of these Pilgrimages. Following a brief conclusion is a list of indexes: A general bibliography, with a list of dates of Coptic pilgrimages in Egypt, the venerated saints of these pilgrimages, and a list of geographical sites. The index includes place names, proper names, authors' names, and a list of plates and maps.

- Regnault, Lucien. La Vie Quotidienne des Pères du Désert en Egypte Au IVe Siècle*. [Paris]: Hachette, c1990.
Main Library BX 2734 R45 1990

The daily life of the Desert Fathers in Fourth Century Egypt is examined in great detail in this very concise work. The author is interested in the words of the Fathers that were pronounced on specific occasions for edification and teaching purposes. Seventeen chapters deal in detail with aspects of the lives of these great hermits and saints. Different aspects studied here include; Reasons for choosing the desert, an analysis of the lives of Egyptian men, women and children and their relationship with the Desert Fathers, the cells, the clothing and the types of foods the hermits consumed, the daily life of the Anchorite monks and hermits who live in caves, the elders and their disciples, the hospitality of monks, their voyages, angels, demons and beasts, the visions, and revelations and miracles. The book concludes with an extensive list of notes, a bibliography, a chronological list, an index of names, and a table of contents.

- Rousseau, Philip. Pachomius: The making of a community in Fourth-century Egypt*. University of California Press.
Main Library BR 1720 P23 R68 1985

This book provides a biography on Pachomius and describes how he established ascetic communities in the fourth-century AD. in Egypt. The author examines life in a Pachomian monastery, its daily order and hierarchical authority. The author attempts to identify the goal of ascetic life as presented by the communial "Pachomian monk". The book describes, in its last chapters, the interaction of the Pachomian monastery monks with the community around them. Rousseau offers an in-depth study of the successors of Pachomius, their practices, and of a monastic order that did not survive in Upper Egypt.

- Sammu'iil Al-Siriaanii. Daliil Ilaa Al-Kanaa'is Wa-Al Adyirah al-Qadimah. Published by The Instiyute for Coptic Studies ,1990.
Main Library BX 133.2 S912X 1990

This book is essentially a guide to all churches and monasteries from Giza to Aswan. It also lists the feasts of the different monasteries and includes illustrations and photographs of some churches and monasteries.

- Al-Suryani, Samaan. Dair al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa`, al-Suryaan: Barriyyat Shihit – Wadi al-Natruun. Matba`at Dair al-Baramuus, Egypt, 1990.
Main Library BX 178 S3 S8x 1990

The book gives a detailed description of Dayr as-Surian, its location and its different churches such as Deir al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa` (the Monastery of the Virgin Mary at al- Suryaan Church), al-Arba`in Church, Virgin al-Maqaarah Church and Archangel Mikhail Church. In another section of the book the author discusses the remains of some Saints such as Anba Yahnas, Kama, Marafram al-Syuryani and others. Throughout the book the reader will find information about the library, monastery museum, al-Azbawiyyah, and rare icons. The book also gives a listing of names of all the heads of the monastery and also contains a short bibliography for Anba Theophileas. Al-Suriyyaani also gives information about the role of al-Syuryan monastery in the twentieth century, and the famous travelers and foreign scientists who visited it. The book closes with a detailed map of the monastery. In addition to some representations of icons and an index, there is a collection of pictures of the first heads of the monastery. This book is recommended to researchers, tourists and travelers alike.

- Al-Syriany, Samuel. A Guide to Ancient Coptic Churches and Monasteries in Upper Egypt. Institute of Coptic Studies, 1990.
SPCL BX 133 2 S9X

This book provides a succinct account of the main Coptic Churches in Upper Egypt. With contributions from over 60 architects, artists, historians and researchers, the book provides a perfect artistic, historical and architectural survey of Coptic Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt. It also includes maps, plans, and colored photographs of the major Churches and Monasteries.

- Toussoun, Omar (Prince). Etude Sur Le Wadi-Natroun, Ses Moines et Ses Couvents. (A Study Of Wadi-Natroun, Its Monks and Its Monasteries), Alexandrie: Société des Publications Egyptiennes, 1931,
Main Library BX 385 N32 U8x 1931

This is a study of the monasteries and monks of the Natrun Valley, supplemented by geographical and historical descriptions. This study is divided into three parts: Part I gives a description of Wadi El Natrun and its different agricultural products. Part II deals with the Monks that dwell in the Wadi. Part III is dedicated solely to the Monasteries. Prince Toussoun pays extra attention in his descriptions to the periods before and after the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D.

Monasteries and state – Egypt

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

Bolman, Elizabeth S. (ed). Monastic Visions: Wall Paintings in the Monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. American Research center in Egypt, Inc. Yale University Press, New Haven and London.

Main Library ND 2863.3 M66 2002

This concise publication displays a range of wall paintings in the monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. The book is divided into four major parts. Part I describes the life of St. Antony as the 'Father' of monasticism and examines the monastery from 251 to 1232/1233 AD. It also examines the plight of the monasteries after the Arab conquest of Egypt in 641 AD. Part II describes the church of St. Antony, with its early paintings and architecture, placing specific emphasis on the paintings of a group of Egyptian Coptic artists led by a master artist Theodore. Part III portrays life in the monastery, past and present, and specifically focuses on the medieval and later inhabitants of the monastery. The author also describes the mystical and spiritual connections of icons in monastic life, and the idiosyncrasies of modern Coptic identity. Finally, Part IV examines the Coptic inscriptions in the church of St. Antony. The book includes valuable colored plates and black-and-white illustrations that show the various wall paintings in the monastery. The book is highly recommended for researchers of Coptic art.

- Bridel, Philippe. Le Site Monastique Copte des Kellia: Sources Historiques et Explorations Archeologiques. (The Coptic Monastic Site of The Kellia: Historical Sources and Archaeological Exploration), Mission Suisse D'Archeologie Copte de l'Universite de Geneve, 1986.
Main Library DT 73 K47 S57X 1986

This study was researched by a Swiss archaeological mission exploring the Coptic monastic site of Kellia. The study is divided into five parts: Part I explains the choice of the site and its developments, the different criteria used to determine the site, and the reasons for the choice. The site is known for its conduciveness to daily lives of Coptic hermits, and their practices . Part II depicts the rituals and practices of monastic life: prayers and devotion, artisan activities, and the eremitic recluse with its significance of bread and water. Part III describes the rules and practices of monastic architecture at the Kellia sites, the art of decorative paintings and the different inscription. Part IV presents an explanation and study of the agglomeration of hermitages specific to Kellia sites. Part V talks about the "Death and Resurrection" of the Kellia site and its abandonment during the period of the Arab Conquest in Egypt in 641 AD. The author also discusses the relationship between Islamic rulers and the Christian population of Egypt. The remaining section of this study reflects upon the future of the archaeological Kellia sites, the difficulties of excavation, and the different methodological considerations that have gone into conducting a survey of the Kellia site.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an "ancient order of Christians called the Copts." The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts. It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Chassinat, Emile Le Manuscrit Magique Copte N° 42.573 Du Musee Egyptien Du Caire*. (The Magical Coptic Manuscript in the Cairo Egyptian Museum), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire : Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.

Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.4

Emile Chassinat, (Translator/Commentator) gives a physical description of the manuscript in his Introduction, noting that the manuscript has sustained some damages due to negligent storing by previous owners. He notes that this manuscript is probably a copy from another work. He comments that the scribe who was responsible for the work was a skilled calligrapher, who was not familiar with the subject he was copying and whose emendations and corrections are apparent throughout the manuscript. The work includes a translation with a commentary that is divided into twenty-three parts (from I to XXIII). Following the translation is a note concerning publication, an appendix and a term index for: Coptic, Arabic, Egyptian (Hieroglyphic and Demotic) and finally, Greek. Corrections are made for Plates 1 to 4 of the Magical Coptic Manuscript No 42.573, and a table of contents concludes the work.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.

Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents "the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism," and the lives of "The three Fathers" of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai's monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai's saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book.

- Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate. St. Mark and the Coptic Church. Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate, Cairo, 1968.

Main Library BX 133.2 A4 1968

This book deals with St. Mark and the establishment of Christianity in Egypt. Dr. Hakim Ameen, the author of the first essay describes how St. Mark introduced Christianity to Egypt. The second chapter informs us about St. Mark's Doctrine (the one found in parts of Africa). Other chapters of the book deal with the Liturgy of St. Mark and the Theological School of Alexandria. The book also describes the Coptic Church under different rulers and its contribution to universal Christianity. The latter part of the book concludes with a brief survey of Coptic literature and art.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York]: Arno Press, 1973.

Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Kinross, Patrick Balfour (Lord). Portrait of Egypt. New York: W. Morrow, 1966.

Main Library DT 46 K5 1966

The author is Lord Kinross, Patrick Balfour, the First Secretary of the British Embassy in Cairo (1944-47). This book comprises 4 parts (Ancient, Christian, Medieval, and Modern Egypt) and gives a description of his travels in Egypt. In the first chapter the book discusses Ancient Egypt and then introduces Christian Egypt, the Copts and the Monastic Communities, such as those existing in Wadi al-Natrun, St.Catherine's Monastery and other places. He then describes Christian Egypt from the Arab Conquest in 641 AD. to Modern times. Chapters 6 and 7 are entitled respectively: 'The Copts' and 'The Monastic Communities'. The description comes in the style of a travel guide and presents monastic life with reference to some of the most important monasteries of Egypt, such as Abu Makar, Anba Bishoi, Baramus, As-Suriani and St. Catherine, with the last two duly noted for their libraries and icons.

- Leroy, Jules. Les Manuscrits Coptes et Coptes-Arabes Illustrés. (Illustrated Coptic and Coptic-Arabic Manuscripts) Paris : Librarie Orientaliste Paul Geuthner, 1974.

Main Library ND 2864 C66 L47 1974

This study presents historians of Christian arts and iconography with the most comprehensive reference about the illumination of books and manuscripts of Christian Egypt. Leroy introduces the various genres of Coptic painting and he deals with the Coptic 'miniature' and other forms of painting during the period of Christian Egypt. The purely decorative drawings are also mentioned and are duly reproduced over several pages at the end of chapter III. Chapter IV is dedicated to manuscripts decorated with figurative scenes. A substantial conclusion sums up the work done by the French Institute of Archaeology of Beirut. indexes to authors, proper names, geographical locations and historical periods, cited manuscripts, and an iconographical index precede the plates. Plates in color are designated from A to H, and black and white plates are represented over more than a hundred pages. A table of contents conclude the work.

- El-Masry, Iris Habib. The Story of the Copts. (Book II deals with the Arab Conquest to the Mamluke Reign). Newberry Springs, CA: St. Anthony Coptic Orthodox Monastery, 1982.

Main Library BX 1332 M2X, 1982

This book includes the history of the Copts starting with the final years of Byzantine Rule over Egypt and the Arab Conquest in 641A.D. The author gives a description of the Coptic Patriarchs during the reign of the Arab Rulers, and goes on to inform us of the political and social movements during the various periods of Arab Rule. She mentions how the Copts suffered under the Turkish Rule, and explains how the situation changed when the French came to Egypt during the Napoleon Expedition in 1798. The author concludes this book with the history of the Copts at the end of the nineteenth century.

- Toussoun, Omar (Prince). Etude Sur Le Wadi-Natroun, Ses Moines et Ses Couvents. (A Study Of Wadi-Natroun, Its Monks and Its Monasteries), Alexandrie : Société des Publications Egyptiennes, 1931,

Main Library BX 385 N32 U8x 1931

This is a study of the monasteries and monks of the Natrun Valley, supplemented by geographical and historical descriptions. This study is divided into three parts: Part I gives a description of Wadi El Natrun and its different agricultural products. Part II deals with the Monks that dwell in the Wadi. Part III is dedicated solely to the Monasteries. Prince Toussoun pays extra attention in his descriptions to the periods before and after the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D.

Monasteries, Coptic

- Butler, Alfred J. The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt, vol.1 and 2. Oxford: Clarendon Press 1884.
SPCL BX 133 B8 1884

Volume 1 of this book focuses on the general layout and structure of Coptic Churches, giving plans and illustrations of some major Churches and Monasteries. Some of these, like the churches of old Cairo, the Monasteries of the Natrun valley, the Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt, are discussed in detail. Volume 2 goes deeper into the Coptic faith. It dwells on particular aspects of the Coptic religion like the arrangement of the altar, Eucharistic vessels and furniture, vestments of clergy, sacraments and the various rites and ceremonies of the church.

- Habachi, Labib and Tawadrus, Zaki. Fii Saharaa` al-`Arab wa al-Adyirah al-Sharqiyyah. Maktabat Madbuulii, Cairo, 1993.
Main Library BX 134 E3 H3 1993

This book gives an account of the authors' journey to the Arabian desert and the Eastern Monasteries. The two authors explain, in detail, the significance of monasticism and then move on into a detailed account of a journey that took them from Cairo to Bosh. They offer a vivid description of life in the desert. The writers recount how they reached Saint Antonious Monastery and go on to give a detailed description of its surroundings and interiors. They also describe the different roads that led them from Saint Antonious Monastery to Saint Paul's Monastery. Finally, they describe their way back to Cairo and their visits to the places they passed on the Red Seacoast, giving an account of monastic life and monks, Wadi al-`Araba, and the al-Khalil Mountain.

- Labib, Mahfouz. Pèlerins et Voyageurs au Mont Sinaï. (Pilgrims and Travelers at Mount Sinai) Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1961
Main Library BX 387 L3 1961

This book presents a listing of the famous pilgrims that have visited mount Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine along with a listing of French travelers. The work is not limited to a specific period of time. The author gives a chronology of visitors from the middle ages until the nineteenth century, and specifically emphasizes the scientific and archaeological expeditions of that time. Based on accounts of these travelers, the author gives a relatively precise estimation of the increase or decrease in the numbers of the monks throughout ages. The author also mentions the external and internal work of restoration of the monastery that has been done. The study concentrates on the different characters among the pilgrims and travelers, and the reasons and incentives that prompted them to accomplish such a long and perilous voyage. The author takes us through the different stages of monastic life from the founding of the first monastic communities in third century Egypt on the Nile Valley, to the actual construction of the Monastery of St. Catherine, which was established around the year 545 A.D. Some of the most famous figures that visited the Saint Catherine's Monastery in the nineteenth century include: Rifaud (1805-1826), Alexandre Dumas (1830), The Count of Paris (1860), Pierre Loti (1894) among others. An extensive bibliography, index to proper names, table of plates and table of contents conclude the work.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

- Mottier, Yvette, Bosson, Nathalie. Les Kellia: Ermitages Coptes en Basse-Egypte (The Kellia: Coptic Ermitages In Lower-Egypt) (Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Genève, 12 Octobre 1989-7 Janvier 1990), Genève : Editions du Tricorne, 1989.
Main Library DT 73 K47 K47X 1989

This book is a catalog of the Kellia Sites excavations. Included are numerous photographs and maps as well as plans of the different sites. The book starts with an introduction about Coptic Monasticism, and then moves to a depiction of the archaeological findings of the Kellia sites and its antique Coptic monasteries. The author also describes the architectural styles and paintings in the monasteries, and mentions projects for their conservation and preservation. The inscriptions and the Coptic pottery art are also described in detail.

- Al-Syriany, Samuel. A Guide to Ancient Coptic Churches and Monasteries in Upper Egypt. Institute of Coptic Studies, 1990.
SPCL BX 133 2 S9X

This book provides a succinct account of the main Coptic Churches in Upper Egypt. With contributions from over 60 architects, artists, historians and researchers, the book provides a perfect artistic, historical and architectural survey of Coptic Churches and Monasteries of Upper Egypt. It also includes maps, plans, and colored photographs of the major Churches and Monasteries.

Monasteries, Coptic -- Egypt -- (papyri)

- Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes. Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 V. 1

Dr. Sobhy gives a physical description of the dilapidated manuscript that is located at the Mo`allaka Church in Old Cairo. The author notes that the scribe has done the entire work and was obviously an adept craftsman. The text of the manuscript is presented in columns, followed by the translation. The original text is in Sahidiq with some dialects of Middle Egypt. The text includes many Greek words that are not spelled in the traditional way. The translator notes that the text is at times incoherent but explains that this particular trait is common among similar texts written about martyrs. The author's main objective in this study is to introduce words that are differently spelled in an untraditional manner, and to focus on new forms of grammar as presented in the manuscript. The work concludes with an index and a table of contents.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo : American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Chassinat, Emile Le Manuscrit Magique Copte N° 42.573 Du Musee Egyptien Du Caire. (The Magical Coptic Manuscript in the Cairo Egyptian Museum), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.4

Emile Chassinat, (Translator/Commentator) gives a physical description of the manuscript in his Introduction, noting that the manuscript has sustained some damages due to negligent storing by previous owners. He notes that this manuscript is probably a copy from another work. He comments that the scribe who was responsible for the work was a skilled calligrapher, who was not familiar with the subject he was copying and whose emendations and corrections are apparent throughout the manuscript. The work includes a translation with a commentary that is divided into twenty-three parts (from I to XXIII). Following the translation is a note concerning publication, an appendix and a term index for: Coptic, Arabic, Egyptian (Hieroglyphic and Demotic) and finally, Greek. Corrections are made for Plates 1 to 4 of the Magical Coptic Manuscript No 42.573, and a table of contents concludes the work.

- Coquin, Rene-Georges. Livre de la Consecration du Sanctuaire de Benjamin. (Book of The Consecration of The Benjamin Sanctuary), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.13 1975

A forward and a bibliography precede an extensive introduction, itself divided into seven sections. The sections range from a physical description of the manuscript, the dating and contents, as well as an analysis of the structure and unity of the text. Coquin includes a reference to the original author of the manuscript who presents himself as 'Agathon The Priest' claiming to be the confident of the Patriarch Benjamin who is mentioned in section five (V). The context of this work is taken from, and is influenced by, the 'Histoire des Patriarches' (History of The Patriarchs). Following the Introduction is the actual reproduction of the Coptic text, with a translation in Arabic and French, and including numerous footnotes. Concluding this work are indexes to citations, biblical references, proper names, Greek and Latin words and Arabic vocabulary, as well as a table of contents.

- Gardner, Iain; Alcock, Anthony and Funk,Wolf-Peter (eds.). Coptic Documentary Texts from Kellis Volume 1. Oxbow Books 1999.
Main Library PJ 2195 C667 1999

This book, as a first volume, contains a selection of Coptic texts discovered in Ismant el-Kharab whose restoration is part of the Dakhleh Oasis project, a project on going since 1986. This volume begins with the earlier findings discovered in Houses 1 and 2 and the North Building of the site, and about half of the findings in House 3. The authors also briefly present the prosopography, chronology, topography and the purpose for writing the documents. A second volume is currently in its preparatory stage.

- Guillaumont, Antoine. L'Asceticon Copte de L'Abbe Isaie. (Coptic Asceticon of Abbot Isaiah) Sahidiq Fragments, Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français D'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 5

This catalog is a description of fragments of two manuscripts that represent the work of Abbot Isaiah, Saint of Scete, written in the tenth and eleventh centuries. Both manuscripts were found in the White Monastery or Deir El-Abiad, and parts of them are presently owned by several libraries. For convenience, the manuscripts have been named A and B and the translator has also included, at the end of his work, an extra fragment that does not belong to either A or B. The work ends with an index to the references in the scriptures, a word index in Greek, and a general index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Layton, Bentley. Catalogue of Coptic Literary Manuscripts in the British Library Acquired Since the Year 1906. The British Library: London, 1987.
Main Library PJ 2190 L2x 1987

This is an entirely new catalog, coming more than 75 years after the first one was published by W.E. Crum. This catalog contains a description of an additional 297 manuscripts and fragments that are added to the collection between 1906 and 1982. They Comprise biblical, liturgical, patristic and philological works. The author also presents a description of the method used to catalogue the entries and gives a reference to their locations in the texts. The last pages of the book contain plates of the White Monastery fragments and other manuscripts.

- Leroy, Jules. Les Manuscrits Coptes et Coptes-Arabes Illustrés. (Illustrated Coptic and Coptic-Arabic Manuscripts) Paris: Librarie Orientaliste Paul Geuthner, 1974.
Main Library ND 2864 C66 L47 1974

This study presents historians of Christian arts and iconography with the most comprehensive reference about the illumination of books and manuscripts of Christian Egypt. Leroy introduces the various genres of Coptic painting and he deals with the Coptic 'miniature' and other forms of painting during the period of Christian Egypt. The purely decorative drawings are also mentioned and are duly reproduced over several pages at the end of chapter III. Chapter IV is dedicated to manuscripts decorated with figurative scenes. A substantial conclusion sums up the work done by the French Institute of Archaeology of Beirut. Indexes to authors, proper names, geographical locations and historical periods, cited manuscripts, and an iconographical index precede the plates. Plates in color are designated from A to H, and black and white plates are represented over more than a hundred pages. A table of contents conclude the work.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.) The Monasteries of the Wadi 'n Natrun: New Coptic Texts from the Monastery of Saint Macarius. Great Britain, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973

This publication was accomplished by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and consists of translations of the Coptic texts found in the Library at the Monastery of Saint Macarius. These texts include Biblical fragments, liturgical fragments, monastic, and ascetic precepts. The work includes an introduction which provides a general summary of monastic libraries, and the appendices include an Arabic manuscript in Coptic characters that reflects the presence of the Coptic language in Islamic Egypt.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.). The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes, vol. 3 and 4. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

Volume 1 discusses numerous aspects of monastic life, including trade and occupations, clothing, the ascetic diet, sickness and healing through prayer, as well as the doctrinal position of the hermits. The author includes a map of Western Thebes during the 6th and 7th centuries, giving a description and a plan of the monastic complex of Epiphanies, and an analysis of literary and archaeological evidence. Volume 2 examines the Coptic and Greek texts that were found in works of excavation of Epiphanius. These texts include Biblical and liturgical texts, letters, accounts and lists, and legal and financial texts. Both volumes provide appendices pertaining to Coptic texts and monastic life.

- MacCoull , Leslie B. and Varirum, Ashgate. Coptic Perspectives on Late Antiquity. Publishing Limited, 1993.
Main Library DT 93 M44 1993

This book contains a series of articles published between 1981 and 1992. These articles are based on studies of Copto-Byzantine papyri from late antiquity. The articles are in three categories. The first category focuses on Diocorus of Aphrodito, who briefly presents a history of Byzantine Egyptian culture. The second and third categories give papyrological evidences about Coptic Egypt in late antiquity, with a focus on Egyptian society, culture, art and religion.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monasteries, Orthodox Eastern

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

- Binns, John. Ascetics and Ambassadors of Christ : The Monasteries of Palestine, 314-631. Oxford: Clarendon Press, New York: Oxford University Press 1994.

Main Library BR 185 B56 1994

Binns offers a valuable description of the life and practices of the monks in the Palestinian desert. He provides a detailed overview of the monasteries in and around Jerusalem that were famous during the Byzantine Christian period, and a history of the accession of Emperor Constantine until the rise of the Persian Empire in 641 A.D. and up to the fall of Jerusalem. The council of Chalcedon is regarded as an important turning point and is described in detail. The author gives precise information about the conditions in which the monks lived in the region of Palestine at that particular period. This book deals in detail with the different pilgrimages of the time, the lives of monks, their teachings and spiritual thought, and the doctrinal debates and historical developments through which the monasteries and the monks themselves had to go. The book includes a bibliography and an index.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering , Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City : An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.
Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents "the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism," and the lives of "The three Fathers" of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai's monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai's saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book

- Habachi, Labib and Tawadrus, Zaki. Fii Saharaa` al-`Arab wa al-Adyirah al-Sharqiyyah. Maktabat Madbuulii, Cairo, 1993.
Main Library BX 134 E3 H3 1993

This book gives an account of the authors' journey to the Arabian desert and the Eastern Monasteries. The two authors explain, in detail, the significance of monasticism and then move on into a detailed account of a journey that took them from Cairo to Bosh. They offer a vivid description of life in the desert. The writers recount how they reached Saint Antonious Monastery and go on to give a detailed description of its surroundings and interiors. They also describe the different roads that led them from Saint Antonious Monastery to Saint Paul's Monastery. Finally, they describe their way back to Cairo and their visits to the places they passed on the Red Seacoast, giving an account of monastic life and monks, Wadi al-`Araba, and the al-Khalil Mountain.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

Monastic and religious life

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.) The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London : Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.
Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Atiya, Aziz S. A History of Eastern Christianity. London, 1968.
Main Library BX 103 2 A8 1968

This book focuses on the history of the Christian Churches of the East, namely, the Coptic and Ethiopic, the Jacobite, Nestorian, Armenian, Indian, Maronite, and the vanished Churches of Nubia and North Africa. The author traces the origins and evolution of these churches in the seven different parts of the book. He attempts to restore a picture of the Eastern Churches that was lost to the eyes of the West. Most Eastern Churches, whose claim to apostolic origins is their major pride and glory, are viewed by the modern day west as 'primitive'. The author, himself a Copt, brings out the hierarchical organization of the various Eastern Churches, their rites and ceremonials, ecclesiastical art and architecture, religious music and literature. With these, this book goes a long way to clarify certain aspects of the Eastern Churches, which had hitherto been viewed through sectarian vehemence, and considerable lack of understanding by most Roman Catholic, Greek and Protestant authors. The book also contains maps, footnotes, plates and an extensive bibliography.

- Baramuus, Augustinus (al-Qus). Dair al Baramuus Bayna al-Maaddy wa al-Haaddir. Daar Nubaar lil-Tiba`ah, Egypt, 1993.
Main Library BX 2736 B36 B35x 1993

Al-Qis Augustinus describes in his book the Baramuus Monastery along with an extensive study of monastic life and monasticism in Egypt in the 1970's and 80's. The article consists of seven chapters covering the following; monasticism in the twentieth century, al-Baramuus Monastery division/section, Saints, patriarchs, headmasters and Fathers. The book is supplemented by illustrations that emphasize and document the author's writing. The book concludes with a list of references and table of contents

- Bolman, Elizabeth S. (ed). Monastic Visions: Wall Paintings in the Monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. American Research center in Egypt, Inc. Yale University Press, New Haven and London.
Main Library ND 2863.3 M66 2002

This concise publication displays a range of wall paintings in the monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. The book is divided into four major parts. Part I describes the life of St. Antony as the 'Father' of monasticism and examines the monastery from 251 to 1232/1233 AD. It also examines the plight of the monasteries after the Arab conquest of Egypt in 641 AD. Part II describes the church of St. Antony, with its early paintings and architecture, placing specific emphasis on the paintings of a group of Egyptian Coptic artists led by a master artist Theodore. Part III portrays life in the monastery, past and present, and specifically focuses on the medieval and later inhabitants of the monastery. The author also describes the mystical and spiritual connections of icons in monastic life, and the idiosyncrasies of modern Coptic identity. Finally, Part IV examines the Coptic inscriptions in the church of St. Antony. The book includes valuable colored plates and black-and-white illustrations that show the various wall paintings in the monastery. The book is highly recommended for researchers of Coptic art.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering , Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, 2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo: American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Ibn Al-Mukaffa, Sawirus (Bishop Of Al-Ashmunin). History of the Patriarchs of the Egyptian Church. Matba`at al-Mahad al-Ilmi al-Farancy lil Athaar al-Sharkiah, Cairo.
Main Library BX 132. S3 V.2

This volume of the series comprises the biographies of ten Patriarchs, beginning with the fifty-sixth Patriarch, Khael III (Michael I) and ending the sixty-fifth Patriarch Senouti II. These patriarchs occupied the See of Saint Mark from 880-1066 AD.

- Johnston, William M. (ed.). Encyclopedia of Monasticism, vol.1 and 2. Chicago, 2000.
Main Reference BX 2461 E53 2000

This Encyclopedia, divided into two volumes, examines Monasticism in the past and present. It focuses on Buddhist Monasticism, Eastern Christian Monasticism and Western Christian Monasticism. Contributors to this Encyclopedia come from some 25 countries and describe Monasticism in over 50 different countries. With articles like "Buddhist Perspectives" and "Christian Perspectives", some major similarities and differences in these different ways of Monasticism are clarified. Bibliographies have been supplied by the author of each article and a list of some Monastic websites (where available) is provided at the end of many articles. To ease the burden of cross-cultural comparison in terminology, this Encyclopedia provides a glossary of basic terms in both Buddhist and Christian vocabulary. This Encyclopedia is a valuable reference book for scholars and other researchers, whether secular or religious, who are interested in Monasticism or in any of its manifestations.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.). The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes, vol. 3 and 4. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

Volume 1 discusses numerous aspects of monastic life, including trade and occupations, clothing, the ascetic diet, sickness and healing through prayer, as well as the doctrinal position of the hermits. The author includes a map of Western Thebes during the 6th and 7th centuries, giving a description and a plan of the monastic complex of Epiphanies, and an analysis of literary and archaeological evidence. Volume 2 examines the Coptic and Greek texts that were found in works of excavation of Epiphanius. These texts include Biblical and liturgical texts, letters, accounts and lists, and legal and financial texts. Both volumes provide appendices pertaining to Coptic texts and monastic life.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. AUC Press, Cairo, 1961.
SPCL BX 134 E3 M45 1961

This book is about the history of monasteries throughout the Egyptian desert, including those that are still in use. The author offers an analysis of pre-Christian monastic communities, a comparison of the anchorites and the coenobitic monks, and a discussion of the cult of St. Anthony. The book includes travelers' accounts, doctrines, and appendices which include motives that inspired monks to assume an escetic hermit's life. A bibliography of sources is also provided.

- Regnault, Lucien. La Vie Quotidienne des Pères du Désert en Egypte Au IVe Siècle. [Paris]: Hachette, c1990.
Main Library BX 2734 R45 1990

The daily life of the Desert Fathers in Fourth Century Egypt is examined in great detail in this very concise work. The author is interested in the words of the Fathers that were pronounced on specific occasions for edification and teaching purposes. Seventeen chapters deal in detail with aspects of the lives of these great hermits and saints. Different aspects studied here include; Reasons for choosing the desert, an analysis of the lives of Egyptian men, women and children and their relationship with the Desert Fathers, the cells, the clothing and the types of foods the hermits consumed, the daily life of the Anchorite monks and hermits who live in caves, the elders and their disciples, the hospitality of monks, their voyages, angels, demons and beasts, the visions, and revelations and miracles. The book concludes with an extensive list of notes, a bibliography, a chronological list, an index of names, and a table of contents.

- Russell, Norman (Translator) and Ward, Benedicta (Introduction). The Lives of the Desert Fathers: The Historia Monachorum In Aegypto. by London: Mowbray; Kalamazoo, MI: Cistercian, 1981, c1980.
Main Library BX 2465 .H513 1980

The text of "The Historia Monacorum" is translated from Greek, Latin and Syriac versions, and is presented in an extensive presentation divided into five chapters. The translated section comprises twenty-six entries, and describes the lives of some of the Desert Saints and Monks of the fourth Century in Egypt. The biographies include famous saints, such as Macarius, Patermuthius, Apollo, and John of Lycopolis. The work is concluded with notes on the text, a bibliography, chronological table, and an index of persons and places.

- Sheils, W.J. (ed.). Monks, Hermits and Ascetic Tradition. Blackwell, Oxford, 1985.
Main Library BV 5017 M6X 1985

A chapter of the book deals with "ascetics" in the history of the Church from the time of the Early School of Alexandria to the time of the Byzantine. Other chapters deal with "asceticism" in Medieval Brittany, the "hermits" during the time of the Crusades, and the transformation of hermitages in twelfth-century England. These chapters further discuss the eventual spread of these hermitages to Spain. The book also includes "asceticism" during different periods in Europe and the concept of the "Little Church."

- Toussoun, Omar (Prince). Etude Sur Le Wadi-Natroun, Ses Moines et Ses Couvents. (A Study Of Wadi-Natroun, Its Monks and Its Monasteries), Alexandrie : Société des Publications Egyptiennes, 1931,
Main Library BX 385 N32 U8x 1931

This is a study of the monasteries and monks of the Natrun Valley, supplemented by geographical and historical descriptions. This study is divided into three parts: Part I gives a description of Wadi El Natrun and its different agricultural products. Part II deals with the Monks that dwell in the Wadi. Part III is dedicated solely to the Monasteries. Prince Toussoun pays extra attention in his descriptions to the periods before and after the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D.

- Watson, John H. Among the Copts. Brighton [England] ; Portland, Or.: Sussex Academic Press, 2000.
Main Library BX 136.2 .W38 2000

John Watson provides an engaging account of the history of the Copts from early Christianity to the present. Paying detailed attention to Coptic customs, Watson examines various controversial issues or incidents in the history of the Coptic people. Although at points the author seems somewhat biased in his comments, overall he maintains a balance and objectivity in his final analysis. He includes various biographies of renowned Coptic people, patriarchs, saints and monks, and tends to interject his accounts with his own personal experiences of those he interviewed or met. He demonstrates a deep understanding of Coptic and Middle Eastern culture, including Islam. He dedicates an entire chapter to the intriguing subject of monastic life and asceticism. The work retires with a detailed Coptic chronology and an index of names and subjects.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.

Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monastic and religious life -- History -- Early church, ca. 30-600

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.
Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Bagnall, Roger S. Egypt in Late Antiquity. Published by Princeton University Press, 1993.
Main Library DT 93 B33 1993

This book gives a full description of life in Egypt in late antiquity. The author describes the cultural and social environment, the cities, the villages in Egypt, the people and the language at that time. Then he introduces the Christianization of Egypt and the start of Monasticism in the fourth century BC.

- Binns, John. Ascetics and Ambassadors of Christ : The Monasteries of Palestine, 314-631. Oxford: Clarendon Press, New York: Oxford University Press 1994.
Main Library BR 185 B56 1994

Binns offers a valuable description of the life and practices of the monks in the Palestinian desert. He provides a detailed overview of the monasteries in and around Jerusalem that were famous during the Byzantine Christian period, and a history of the accession of Emperor Constantine until the rise of the Persian Empire in 641 A.D. and up to the fall of Jerusalem. The council of Chalcedon is regarded as an important turning point and is described in detail. The author gives precise information about the conditions in which the monks lived in the region of Palestine at that particular period. This book deals in detail with the different pilgrimages of the time, the lives of monks, their teachings and spiritual thought, and the doctrinal debates and historical developments through which the monasteries and the monks themselves had to go. The book includes a bibliography and an index.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering , Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City : An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.
Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents “the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism,” and the lives of “The three Fathers” of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai’s monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai’s saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Habachi, Labib and Tawadrus, Zaki. Fii Saharaa` al-`Arab wa al-Adyirah al-Sharqiyyah. Maktabat Madbuulii, Cairo, 1993.
Main Library BX 134 E3 H3 1993

This book gives an account of the authors' journey to the Arabian desert and the Eastern Monasteries. The two authors explain, in detail, the significance of monasticism and then move on into a detailed account of a journey that took them from Cairo to Bosh. They offer a vivid description of life in the desert. The writers recount how they reached Saint Antonious Monastery and go on to give a detailed description of its surroundings and interiors. They also describe the different roads that led them from Saint Antonious Monastery to Saint Paul's Monastery. Finally, they describe their way back to Cairo and their visits to the places they passed on the Red Seacoast, giving an account of monastic life and monks, Wadi al-`Araba, and the al-Khalil Mountain.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concludes with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Toussoun, Omar (Prince). Etude Sur Le Wadi-Natroun, Ses Moines et Ses Couvents. (A Study Of Wadi-Natroun, Its Monks and Its Monasteries), Alexandrie: Société des Publications Egyptiennes, 1931,
Main Library BX 385 N32 U8x 1931

This is a study of the monasteries and monks of the Natrun Valley, supplemented by geographical and historical descriptions. This study is divided into three parts: Part I gives a description of Wadi El Natrun and its different agricultural products. Part II deals with the Monks that dwell in the Wadi. Part III is dedicated solely to the Monasteries. Prince Toussoun pays extra attention in his descriptions to the periods before and after the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D.

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

Monastic and religious life -- History -- Middle Ages, 600-1500

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.) The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Bolman, Elizabeth S. (ed). Monastic Visions: Wall Paintings in the Monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. American Research center in Egypt, Inc. Yale University Press, New Haven and London.

Main Library ND 2863.3 M66 2002

This concise publication displays a range of wall paintings in the monastery of St. Antony at the Red Sea. The book is divided into four major parts. Part I describes the life of St. Antony as the 'Father' of monasticism and examines the monastery from 251 to 1232/1233 AD. It also examines the plight of the monasteries after the Arab conquest of Egypt in 641 AD. Part II describes the church of St. Antony, with its early paintings and architecture, placing specific emphasis on the paintings of a group of Egyptian Coptic artists led by a master artist Theodore. Part III portrays life in the monastery, past and present, and specifically focuses on the medieval and later inhabitants of the monastery. The author also describes the mystical and spiritual connections of icons in monastic life, and the idiosyncrasies of modern Coptic identity. Finally, Part IV examines the Coptic inscriptions in the church of St. Antony. The book includes valuable colored plates and black-and-white illustrations that show the various wall paintings in the monastery. The book is highly recommended for researchers of Coptic art.

- Ceres, Wissa Wassef. Pratiques Rituelles et Alimentaires des Coptes. (Ritual and Alimentary Practices of the Copts), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919- (PhD thesis presented at the Sorbonne, Paris)
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 9

This study presents an in-depth examination of the beginnings of Christianity in Egypt with its rituals and alimentary practices. Various subjects are treated in this work ranging from the Christianization of Egypt, the Coptic Calendar and seasonal foods, the different markets, ceremonials within the family, the different feasts, and the various sayings and metaphors used by the Coptic people. The work is concluded by a list of the plants mentioned in the work, a Bibliography, indexes to the geographic places, the names of persons and ceremonies, an index of terms, and a general index. The dissertation is concluded with an intriguing list of Coptic cutlery.

- Chitty, Derwas J. (Derwas James). The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire. Oxford, Basil Blackwell and Mott, Ltd, 1966.
Main Library BX 2465 C48 1966

The book includes a table of contents, list of illustrations, index to maps, an acknowledgment, and a useful list of abbreviations. The first chapter presents "the Call to the ascetic life of monasticism," and the lives of "The three Fathers" of the ascetic life of Egyptian monasticism, namely: Athanasius, Anthony and Pachomius. The history of monasticism in Egypt and Palestine is related in chronological order and in great detail, casting light on the differences specific to each historical period and location. Many events have shaped monasticism in the Near East. Events like The Council of Chalcedon (451 AD.) are represented as a turning point and, likewise, the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs (638 AD.) is studied in chapter VIII, the concluding chapter of the chronological section of this book. Chapter IX is dedicated to Sinai's monastic history. The author also describes the life of Sinai's saints and monks as well as the pressures exerted by the Islamic authorities, and the forceful conversion of the last remaining Christian tribes to Islam. It has an epilogue and indexes of persons and places, and a subject index. A very helpful and detailed Chronological table is constituted of three columns that are placed in perspective order to each other. The first column represents events in historico-political or general events, and the second and third columns present parallel events in Egypt and Palestine. A bibliography concludes the book

- Constable, Giles. Monastic Tithes from Their Origins to the Twelfth Century. Cambridge University Press.
Main Library BX 2470 c6 1964

The main focus of this book is the study of the tithes paid to monks in the Middle Ages. It critically examines the history of "Monastic Tithes" from theological and canonical perspective and refers to the doctrine of tithes at the time when most monasteries had to pay them (from the seventh to the twelfth century AD). The author also deals with the possession of tithes by monasteries in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and, finally, examines the abolition of payment of tithes by monks, and the crisis that arose due to this monastic release from tithes.

- Fedden, Romilly, 1908-1977. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Labib, Mahfouz. Pèlerins et Voyageurs au Mont Sinaï. (Pilgrims and Travelers at Mount Sinai) Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1961
Main Library BX 387 L3 1961

This book presents a listing of the famous pilgrims that have visited mount Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine along with a listing of French travelers. The work is not limited to a specific period of time. The author gives a chronology of visitors from the middle ages until the nineteenth century, and specifically emphasizes the scientific and archaeological expeditions of that time. Based on accounts of these travelers, the author gives a relatively precise estimation of the increase or decrease in the numbers of the monks throughout ages. The author also mentions the external and internal work of restoration of the monastery that has been done. The study concentrates on the different characters among the pilgrims and travelers, and the reasons and incentives that prompted them to accomplish such a long and perilous voyage. The author takes us through the different stages of monastic life from the founding of the first monastic communities in third century Egypt on the Nile Valley, to the actual construction of the Monastery of St. Catherine, which was established around the year 545 A.D. Some of the most famous figures that visited the Saint Catherine's Monastery in the nineteenth century include: Rifaud (1805-1826), Alexandre Dumas (1830), The Count of Paris (1860), Pierre Loti (1894) among others. An extensive bibliography, index to proper names, table of plates and table of contents conclude the work.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concluded with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Sheils, W.J. (ed.). Monks, Hermits and Ascetic Tradition . Blackwell, Oxford, 1985.
Main Library BV 5017 M6X 1985

A chapter of the book deals with "ascetics" in the history of the Church from the time of the Early School of Alexandria to the time of the Byzantine. Other chapters deal with "asceticism" in Medieval Brittany, the "hermits" during the time of the Crusades, and the transformation of hermitages in twelfth-century England. These chapters further discuss the eventual spread of these hermitages to Spain. The book also includes "asceticism" during different periods in Europe and the concept of the "Little Church."

- Toussoun, Omar (Prince). Etude Sur Le Wadi-Natroun, Ses Moines et Ses Couvents. (A Study Of Wadi-Natroun, Its Monks and Its Monasteries), Alexandrie: Société des Publications Egyptiennes, 1931,
Main Library BX 385 N32 U8x 1931

This is a study of the monasteries and monks of the Natrun Valley, supplemented by geographical and historical descriptions. This study is divided into three parts: Part I gives a description of Wadi El Natrun and its different agricultural products. Part II deals with the Monks that dwell in the Wadi. Part III is dedicated solely to the Monasteries. Prince Toussoun pays extra attention in his descriptions to the periods before and after the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D.

Monastic and religious life in art

- Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes. Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 V. 1

Dr. Sobhy, gives a physical description of the dilapidated manuscript that is located at the Mo`allaka Church in Old Cairo. The author notes that the scribe has done the entire work and was obviously an adept craftsman. The text of the manuscript is presented in columns, followed by the translation. The original text is in Sahidiq with some dialects of Middle Egypt. The text includes many Greek words that are not spelled in the traditional way. The translator notes that the text is at times incoherent but explains that this particular trait is common among similar texts written about martyrs. The author’s main objective in this study is to introduce words that are differently spelled in an untraditional manner, and to focus on new forms of grammar as presented in the manuscript. The work concludes with an index and a table of contents.

- Coptic Icons, Les Icones Coptes, Koptische Ikonen. Cairo: Lehnert and Landrock, 1986.
Main Library N 8189 E35 C6x 1986

This book is a catalog of Coptic Icons that are found in several churches and monasteries throughout Egypt. The churches include Al-Mu’allaqah (The Hanging Church in Old Cairo), the church of Saint Barbara, the churches of St. Mercurius (Abu Saifain), and Al-Damshiriah and St. Shenouti. Haret al-Rum and Fum Al-Khalig in the Cairo area have also been included. The Coptic monasteries of Wadi El-Natrun and Upper Egypt are presented through their fascinating icons. The specific style of Coptic icons, described as the ‘Triptych’ style, is also presented in this work and is constituted by a centerpiece and two side panels that fold over a center. This work includes a fascinating array of different icon styles, among which are the Fayoum Portraits, and the different icons kept at the Coptic Museum. This catalog is trilingual (English, French, German). The book closes with a list of alphabetical names and a table of contents.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York]: Arno Press, 1973.

Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.

Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Gabra, Gawdat. Coptic Monasteries: Egypt's Monastic Art And Architecture. with a historical overview by Tim Vivian. New York ; Cairo : The American University in Cairo Press, 2002.

Main Library NA 4850 A22 2002

In his introduction, Tim Vivian gives an overview of the early Christian era, Egyptian monasticism, and rites and ceremonies common to the Coptic faith. Gabra, the author, presents the reader with a study of Egyptian monasteries from Aswan to Wadi Al-Natrun and complemented by numerous color photographs. Architecture, wall painting, and the processes used in their restoration are described in detail. There is a list of illustrations prior to the introduction, and the book ends with a bibliography, a glossary and an index.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

Monastic and religious life of women

- Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes. Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 V. 1

Dr. Sobhy, gives a physical description of the dilapidated manuscript that is located at the Mo`allaka Church in Old Cairo. The author notes that the scribe has done the entire work and was obviously an adept craftsman. The text of the manuscript is presented in columns, followed by the translation. The original text is in Sahidiq with some dialects of Middle Egypt. The text includes many Greek words that are not spelled in the traditional way. The translator notes that the text is at times incoherent but explains that this particular trait is common among similar texts written about martyrs. The author's main objective in this study is to introduce words that are differently spelled in an untraditional manner, and to focus on new forms of grammar as presented in the manuscript. The work concludes with an index and a table of contents.

- Doorn-Harder, Pieternella van. Contemporary Coptic Nuns. Columbia, S.C.: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
BX 137.3 D66 1995

This book is one of the very few books that deal with the subject of Coptic nuns. The author deals with a variety of subjects revolving around an ascetic community of Coptic nuns and convents: The Copts in Egyptian society, the monastic landscape, the ruling mothers and fathers of the Coptic monasteries and convents. The author also describes the abandoning of the mundane life by the novitiate nuns, who are not considered, according to monastic life, as "dead to the world". Pieternella Van Doorn-Harder also describes, in a very interesting style, the initiation rites, practices of the nuns and their work, the spiritual life, the saints, and the visitors. The work concludes with a listing of notes, glossary, selected bibliography, and an index of names.

Monastic libraries

- Coptic Icons, Les Icones Coptes, Koptische Ikonen. Cairo: Lehnert and Landrock, 1986.
Main Library N 8189 E35 C6x 1986

This book is a catalog of Coptic Icons that are found in several churches and monasteries throughout Egypt. The churches include Al-Mu'allaqah (The Hanging Church in Old Cairo), the church of Saint Barbara, the churches of St. Mercurius (Abu Saifain), and Al-Damshiriah and St. Shenouti. Haret al-Rum and Fum Al-Khalig in the Cairo area have also been included. The Coptic monasteries of Wadi El-Natrun and Upper Egypt are presented through their fascinating icons. The specific style of Coptic icons, described as the 'Triptych' style, is also presented in this work and is constituted by a centerpiece and two side panels that fold over a center. This work includes a fascinating array of different icon styles, among which are the Fayoum Portraits, and the different icons kept at the Coptic Museum. This catalog is trilingual (English, French, German). The book closes with a list of alphabetical names and a table of contents.

- Doorn-Harder, Pieternella van. Contemporary Coptic Nuns. Columbia, S.C.: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
BX 137.3 D66 1995

This book is one of the very few books that deal with the subject of Coptic nuns. The author deals with a variety of subjects revolving around an ascetic community of Coptic nuns and convents: The Copts in Egyptian society, the monastic landscape, the ruling mothers and fathers of the Coptic monasteries and convents. The author also describes the abandoning of the mundane life by the novitiate nuns, who are not considered, according to monastic life, as "dead to the world". Pieternella Van Doorn-Harder also describes, in a very interesting style, the initiation rites, practices of the nuns and their work, the spiritual life, the saints, and the visitors. The work concludes with a listing of notes, glossary, selected bibliography, and an index of names.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York: Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York] : Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Kasser, Rodolphe. Complements au Dictionnaire Copte de Crum. (Complements to The Coptic Dictionary of Crum), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire : Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.7, 1964

This work was initially intended to be published in a journal but, as it has attained scholarly significance, was finally published as a separate volume. It is intended to be a supplement to complement W. C. Crum's life work (Coptic Dictionary, Oxford, Clarendon Press) Published nearly a quarter of a century later, it contains many additions including new words and new spellings. It has a foreward and an introduction that precede the dictionary. The work is completed by an addendum, a list of signs and abbreviations, and a list of authors' names.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.). The Monasteries of the Wadi 'n Natrun: New Coptic Texts from the Monastery of Saint Macarius. Great Britain, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973

This publication was accomplished by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and consists of translations of the Coptic texts found in the Library at the Monastery of Saint Macarius. These texts include Biblical fragments, liturgical fragments, monastic, and ascetic precepts. The work includes an introduction which provides a general summary of monastic libraries, and the appendices include an Arabic manuscript in Coptic characters that reflects the presence of the Coptic language in Islamic Egypt.

- Simaika Pasha, Marcus. Catalogue of the Coptic and Arabic Manuscripts in the Coptic Museum, the Patriarchate, the Principal Churches of Cairo and Alexandria and the Monasteries of Egypt, vol. 1, 2. Government Press, Cairo, 1939.
SPCL Creswell Collection Z 6605 C7 S5 1939 v. 1, 2

The first volume of this book discusses the relevance of monastic libraries in Egypt, and the process by which monastic scribes produced manuscripts. The second volume provides a comprehensive index of churches and monasteries to any researcher curious to explore them in detail. The third volume, not available at the AUC library, describes the libraries and manuscripts of the Coptic monasteries. (It may be well worthwhile checking with institutions outside of AUC to attain a copy of this highly recommended volume).

- Al-Suryani, Samaan. Dair al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa`, al-Suryaan: Barriyyat Shihit – Wadi al-Natruun. Matba`at Dair al-Baramuus, Egypt, 1990.
Main Library BX 178 S3 S8x 1990

The book gives a detailed description of Dayr as-Surian, its location and its different churches such as Deir al-Sayyidah al-Adhraa` (the Monastery of the Virgin Mary at al- Suryaan Church), al-Arba`in Church, Virgin al-Maqaarah Church and Archangel Mikhail Church. In another section of the book the author discusses the remains of some Saints such as Anba Yahnas, Kama, Marafram al-Syuryani and others. Throughout the book the reader will find information about the library, monastery museum, al-Azbawiyyah, and rare icons. The book also gives a listing of names of all the heads of the monastery and also contains a short bibliography for Anba Theophileas. Al-Suriyyaani also gives information about the role of al-Syuryan monastery in the twentieth century, and the famous travelers and foreign scientists who visited it. The book closes with a detailed map of the monastery. In addition to some representations of icons and an index, there is a collection of pictures of the first heads of the monastery. This book is recommended to researchers, tourists and travelers alike.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monasticism and religious orders

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.
Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, 2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Chassinat, Emile. Le Manuscrit Magique Copte N° 42.573 Du Musee Egyptien Du Caire. (The Magical Coptic Manuscript in the Cairo Egyptian Museum), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.4

Emile Chassinat, (Translator/Commentator) gives a physical description of the manuscript in his Introduction, noting that the manuscript has sustained some damages due to negligent storing by previous owners. He notes that this manuscript is probably a copy from another work. He comments that the scribe who was responsible for the work was a skilled calligrapher, who was not familiar with the subject he was copying and whose emendations and corrections are apparent throughout the manuscript. The work includes a translation with a commentary that is divided into twenty-three parts (from I to XXIII). Following the translation is a note concerning publication, an appendix and a term index for: Coptic, Arabic, Egyptian (Hieroglyphic and Demotic) and finally, Greek. Corrections are made for Plates 1 to 4 of the Magical Coptic Manuscript No 42.573, and a table of contents concludes the work.

- Coquin, Rene-Georges. Livre de la Consecration du Sanctuaire de Benjamin. (Book of The Consecration of The Benjamin Sanctuary), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v.13 1975

A forward and a bibliography precede an extensive introduction, itself divided into seven sections. The sections range from a physical description of the manuscript, the dating and contents, as well as an analysis of the structure and unity of the text. Coquin includes a reference to the original author of the manuscript who presents himself as 'Agathon The Priest' claiming to be the confident of the Patriarch Benjamin who is mentioned in section five (V). The context of this work is taken from, and is influenced by, the 'Histoire des Patriarches' (History of The Patriarchs). Following the Introduction is the actual reproduction of the Coptic text, with a translation in Arabic and French, and including numerous footnotes. Concluding this work are indexes to citations, biblical references, proper names, Greek and Latin words and Arabic vocabulary, as well as a table of contents.

- Doorn-Harder, Pieternella van. Contemporary Coptic Nuns. Columbia, S.C.: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
BX 137.3 D66 1995

This book is one of the very few books that deal with the subject of Coptic nuns. The author deals with a variety of subjects revolving around an ascetic community of Coptic nuns and convents: The Copts in Egyptian society, the monastic landscape, the ruling mothers and fathers of the Coptic monasteries and convents. The author also describes the abandoning of the mundane life by the novitiate nuns, who are not considered, according to monastic life, as "dead to the world". Pieternella Van Doorn-Harder also describes, in a very interesting style, the initiation rites, practices of the nuns and their work, the spiritual life, the saints, and the visitors. The work concludes with a listing of notes, glossary, selected bibliography, and an index of names.

- Evelyn-White, Hugh G. (Hugh Gerard), d. The Monasteries of The Wadi 'n Natrûn. New York, Metropolitan, Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 1926-[33]. New York] : Arno Press, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973 pt.1

The author describes monastic libraries in general and the monastery of Saint Macarius in particular. He gives references to these libraries from his description of newly translated Coptic texts. The author studies in detail the process by which the library started to acquire privately owned books and developed church collections. Dr. G.P.G. Sobhy edits and presents, in the latter part of this study, an Arabic manuscript in the Coptic language.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a “call” from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Goehring, James E. Ascetics, Society, and The Desert: Studies in Early Egyptian Monasticism. Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999.
Main Library BR 190 G64 1999

This very detailed and well documented work by James E. Goehring, Professor of Religion and Chair of the Department of Classics, Philosophy, and Religion at Mary’s Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia, constitutes a fine collection of scholarly essays and deals with monasticism, late antiquity, Egyptology, and religious studies. It provides a comprehensive, detailed description of the evolution of monasticism, religious orders and the history of the early Church and Christianity in Egypt. James E. Goehring has used the full array of Papyrological documentary sources, archaeology, and traditional literary sources to produce a fine and detailed work. The foreward and preface are followed by a detailed list of abbreviations that are further divided into three parts: general, ancient sources, and a list of short titles of frequently cited works. An introduction follows the abbreviations list. The essays include interesting topics, such as ‘The Origins of Monasticism’, ‘Ascetics, Society, and The Desert’, ‘Ascetic Organization’ and ‘Ideological Boundaries’, and finally, ‘Pachomian Studies: The Later Years’. The author concludes with a copious bibliography of cited works and an index of terms.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grogorius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author’s liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Kasser, Rodolphe. Complements au Dictionnaire Copte de Crum. (Complements to The Coptic Dictionary of Crum), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919.
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 1964 v.7

This work was initially intended to be published in a journal but, as it has attained scholarly significance, was finally published as a separate volume. It is intended to be a supplement to complement W. C. Crum's life work (Coptic Dictionary, Oxford, Clarendon Press) Published nearly a quarter of a century later, it contains many additions including new words and new spellings. It has a foreward and an introduction that precede the dictionary. The work is completed by an addendum, a list of signs and abbreviations, and a list of authors' names.

- Kemmerer, Winifred. A Coptic Bibliography. in collaboration with Elinor Mullett Husselman and Louise A. Shier. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press,1950.
Main Reference PJ 2197 Z9 K3 1950

Winifred Kammerer explains in the Preface that his work is intended to provide a scholarly guide to various subject divisions in the field of Coptic studies. The author warns that some of the work between the years 1940 to 1948 is drawn from bibliographies that are generally not verified due to the constraints of World War II. This applies also to Russian and Arabic sources due to the delay that would have occurred in trying to verify these sources. A table of contents and a list of abbreviations follow the preface. The compiled bibliography is divided into five categories: General Works, Philology, Coptic Texts, History, Art and Archaeology. An index to the different terms concludes the work.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concludes with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes. New York, 1926.
Main Library DT 57 N5

The excavation of the Vizier Daga tomb (XI Dynasty) in 1911 has revealed ruins that turned out to be the remains of the Coptic Monastery of Epiphanius. This book is a two volume set. Volume I includes descriptions of archeological and literary material from the excavation & numerous plates showing the recovered artifacts. A description of the Monastery is presented in light of the archeological find. The history of the Theban hermits, their life, language and literature are described in detail. Part II deals essentially with Coptic and Greek Papyri recovered from the excavation. These papyri contain Coptic and Greek Biblical texts, Homilies and Epistles, letters, legal and financial texts, and some school texts. The manuscripts have been carefully translated. Included are notes to the translations for each of the chapters.

Monasticism and religious orders -- Habit

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

Monasticism and religious orders -- Liturgy

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.
Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Coptic Church, (ed.) by K.H. Kuhn and W.J. Tait. Thirteen Coptic Acrostic Hymns : From Manuscript M574 Of The Pierpont Morgan Library. Oxford, England: Griffith Institute : Ashmolean Museum, 1996.
Main Library BX 137 C678x 1996

The author presents a description and translation of thirteen alphabetic acrostic hymns in Coptic Sahidic dialect. The stanzes of each hymn contain every letter of the Greek alphabet. These hymns were written for the Monastery of the Archangel St Michael at the Hamouli area in the Fayyum. The hymns praise the Virgin Mary, the apostles, and Coptic saints. The baptism, resurrection, and ascension are praised in two separate hymns. The author believes that these hymns were used during events that were of religious significance to the Coptic Orthodox Faith. In his introduction, the author explains the Sahidic dialect, the structure of the hymns, and their content. The hymns are reproduced along with an English translation and some notes.Concluding this book are a paleographical appendix, indexes to personal and geographical names, Geek loan-words, and literary references.

- Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate. St. Mark and the Coptic Church. Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate, Cairo, 1968.
Main Library BX 133.2 A4 1968

This book deals with St. Mark and the establishment of Christianity in Egypt. Dr. Hakim Ameen, the author of the first essay describes how St. Mark introduced Christianity to Egypt. The second chapter informs us about St. Mark's Doctrine (the one found in parts of Africa). Other chapters of the book deal with the Liturgy of St. Mark and the Theological School of Alexandria. The book also describes the Coptic Church under different rulers and its contribution to universal Christianity. The latter part of the book concludes with a brief survey of Coptic literature and art.

- Lythgoe, Albert Morton (ed.). The Monasteries of the Wadi 'n Natrun: New Coptic Texts from the Monastery of Saint Macarius. Great Britain, 1973.
Main Library DT 73 N28 E92 1973

This publication was accomplished by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and consists of translations of the Coptic texts found in the Library at the Monastery of Saint Macarius. These texts include Biblical fragments, liturgical fragments, monastic, and ascetic precepts. The work includes an introduction which provides a general summary of monastic libraries, and the appendices include an Arabic manuscript in Coptic characters that reflects the presence of the Coptic language in Islamic Egypt.

- McLellan, Michael W. Monasticism in Egypt: Images and Words of the Desert Fathers. Cairo [Egypt]: American University in Cairo Press, 1998.
Main Library BX 134.5 E4 M3 1998

This book is best described by its title 'Images and Words.' It consists of pages of plates with images. Each plate is described on the opposite page. Each description relates to a miracle performed by the Desert Fathers, or events from their daily lives or words inspired by their teachings and wisdom. The foreward of this book is by H.H. Pope Shenouda III. The Introduction gives a short description of Monasticism. By way of conclusion, Otto F.A. Meinardus offers a description of some of the Egyptian monasteries such as the Red Sea, Western Desert, and Upper Egyptian monasteries, as well as the Saint Catherine monastery.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. The Copts in Jerusalem. Cairo: Commission on Ecumenical Affairs of the See of Alexandria, 1960.
Main Library BX 134.5 J4 M4 1960

In this interesting book, Meinardus presents us with a history of the Copts and Coptic monks in Jerusalem. He provides a chronology by which the reader is invited to follow the main events in the history of the Copts and the religious communities in Jerusalem. Some of the monasteries described are: Dair as-Sultan, Dair Mar Anthunius, Dair Mari Girgis. Mention is made also of other churches such as: The Church of the Resurrection Christ, The Church of the Sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Church of the Nativity of the Lord Jesus in Bethlehem, and The Church of the Ascension. The book ends with a brief description of Coptic sites in Jericho, a list of Coptic Archbishops of Jerusalem, an extensive bibliography, a list of illustrations and a corrigenda of words, names, volumes and dates.

Monasticism and religious orders -- Occupations

- Ceres, Wissa Wassef. Pratiques Rituelles et Alimentaires des Coptes. (Ritual and Alimentary Practices of the Copts), Bibliothèque d'Etudes Coptes, Le Caire: Imprimerie de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1919- (PhD thesis presented at the Sorbonne, Paris)
Main Library PJ 2195 B5 v. 9

This study presents an in-depth examination of the beginnings of Christianity in Egypt with its rituals and alimentary practices. Various subjects are treated in this work ranging from the Christianization of Egypt, the Coptic Calendar and seasonal foods, the different markets, ceremonials within the family, the different feasts, and the various sayings and metaphors used by the Coptic people. The work is concluded by a list of the plants mentioned in the work, a Bibliography, indexes to the geographic places, the names of persons and ceremonies, an index of terms, and a general index. The dissertation is concluded with an intriguing list of Coptic cutlery.

- Gabra, Gawdat. Coptic Monasteries: Egypt's Monastic Art And Architecture. with a historical overview by Tim Vivian. New York; Cair: The American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4850 A22 2002.

In his introduction, Tim Vivian gives an overview of the early Christian era, Egyptian monasticism, and rites and ceremonies common to the Coptic faith. Gabra, the author, presents the reader with a study of Egyptian monasteries from Aswan to Wadi Al-Natrun and complemented by numerous color photographs. Architecture, wall painting, and the processes used in their restoration are described in detail. There is a list of illustrations prior to the introduction, and the book ends with a bibliography, a glossary and an index.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church*. New York: Routledge, 2002.

Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

Monasticism and religious orders -- Common life

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London : Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Constable, Giles. Monastic Tithes from Their Origins to the Twelfth Century. Cambridge University Press.

Main Library BX 2470 c6 1964

The main focus of this book is the study of the tithes paid to and by monks in the Middle Ages. It critically examines the history of "Monastic Tithes" from theological and canonical perspective and refers to the doctrine of tithes at the time when most monasteries had to pay them (from the seventh to the twelfth century AD). The author also deals with the possession of tithes by monasteries in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and, finally, examines the abolition of payment of tithes by monks, and the crisis that arose due to this monastic release from tithes.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.

Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Gabra, Gawdat. Coptic Monasteries: Egypt's Monastic Art And Architecture. with a historical overview by Tim Vivian. New York ; Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4850 A22 2002

In his introduction, Tim Vivian gives an overview of the early Christian era, Egyptian monasticism, and rites and ceremonies common to the Coptic faith. Gabra, the author, presents the reader with a study of Egyptian monasteries from Aswan to Wadi Al-Natrun and complemented by numerous color photographs. Architecture, wall painting, and the processes used in their restoration are described in detail. There is a list of illustrations prior to the introduction, and the book ends with a bibliography, a glossary and an index.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church*. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

Courtesy of Emad Nasry

Monasticism and religious orders – Orthodox Eastern church

- Binns, John. Ascetics and Ambassadors of Christ : The Monasteries of Palestine, 314-631. Oxford: Clarendon Press, New York: Oxford University Press 1994.
Main Library BR 185 B56 1994

Binns offers a valuable description of the life and practices of the monks in the Palestinian desert. He provides a detailed overview of the monasteries in and around Jerusalem that were famous during the Byzantine Christian period, and a history of the accession of Emperor Constantine until the rise of the Persian Empire in 641 A.D. and up to the fall of Jerusalem. The council of Chalcedon is regarded as an important turning point and is described in detail. The author gives precise information about the conditions in which the monks lived in the region of Palestine at that particular period. This book deals in detail with the different pilgrimages of the time, the lives of monks, their teachings and spiritual thought, and the doctrinal debates and historical developments through which the monasteries and the monks themselves had to go. The book includes a bibliography and an index.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. *Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Christian Egypt: Ancient and Modern. Cairo, 1965.
SPCL BR 1380 M4 1965

This book provides a thorough and complete picture of Christian Egypt, ancient and modern. It starts with an outline of Christianity in Egypt and covers aspects of Christian feasts and calendars, the Coptic language, and a plan of the Coptic Church. It also looks specifically at the Christian Churches of Alexandria and Cairo, and their neighboring communities. The author also dwells lengthily on the Churches and Monasteries of the desert and at Sinai, along with Christian agencies, institutes and theological seminaries in Egypt. He concludes by examining traditional sites associated with the flight of the Holy Family to Egypt.

Monasticism and religious orders for women

- Elm, Sussana. 'Virgins of God'. The making of Asceticism in Late Antiquity. Clarendon Press, Oxford.

Main Library BV 5023 E45 1994

This book traces the origins of "asceticism", and the crucial role played by women in establishing organizational patterns in ascetic communities. The book makes the assertion that monasticism is the 'highest evolution of asceticism'. The author critically examines the evolution of asceticism in Asia Minor and Egypt; the variations of female ascetic life in these regions, the classic models, and some prominent female and male ascetics. He concludes by demonstrating how the ascetic bishops (today's saints) eventually 'reformed' these early models of communal ascetic life by dividing the order of the 'Virgins of God' into monks and nuns, thus laying the foundation for modern day monasticism. This book is important for anyone interested in early church history and the ascetic life.

Monasticism and religious orders in literature

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of "Apophthegmata" (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the "Book of Paradise" Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by 'The Fathers' on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

Monasticism and religious orders, Coptic

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo: American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Fedden, Romilly, 1908-1977. A Study of The Monastery of Saint Antony in the Eastern Desert. Bulletin of Faculty Arts, v. 5, pt. 1.
Main Library BX 138 S3 F4x

This study begins with an introductory note followed by a bibliography. It comprises seven chapters describing the characteristics of Egyptian monasticism, and includes several maps as well as a biography of Saint Anthony and the monastery of Saint Anthony. The history of the Church until the Council of Chalcedon, in 451 AD. is described in a separate chapter. The last three chapters range in description from the Arab Conquest in 641 A.D. until the fifteenth Century. This section is followed by a section on "the age of travelers" and concluded with monasticism in modern times.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church*. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Meinardus, Otto F. A. Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts. rev. ed., Cairo: The American University in Cairo Press, 1992.
Main Library BX 134 E3 M45 1992

This is a revised edition of an earlier work published in 1961. It includes a table of contents, a preface, a glossary of ecclesiastical terms, a list of Coptic Gregorian months, and maps of Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. The author of this book discusses, in the first chapter, the life of St. Antony and his influence on Coptic Christianity. The work presents the geographical locations of the monasteries with a detailed historical description. Then the author lists the different monasteries of Egypt, and offers a list of dates on which they where founded, their existence through the centuries, and how they survived until the Twentieth century. The latter part of the book focuses on 'The Sociology of Coptic Monasticism'. Meinardus also deals with the different stages in a monk's life and the attainment of eremitic spirituality as a hermit. The work is concluded with an epilogue, notes, bibliography and indexes to individuals and places.

- Scott-Moncrieff, Phillip David. Paganism and Christianity in Egypt. Cambridge University Press, 1913.
SPCL BR190 S4 1913

This book begins by examining religion in Egypt from the close of the Ptolemaic era to the start of the third century. The author investigates the advent of Christianity in Egypt (from the time of St. Mark), providing literary and archeological evidence throughout. He concludes with a look at early Christian iconography, aspects of Gnosticism, and the rise of asceticism and Monasticism in Egypt.

Monasticism and religious orders, Orthodox

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, c2002.

Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.

Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.

Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

Spiritual life – Christianity

- Anân Ishô of Bêth Abhê (Anan Isho, 7th Century AD.). The Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt: The Syrian Version of the Apophthegmata Patrum. translated by Budge, E. A. Wallis (Ernest Alfred Wallis), Sir, 1857-1934, London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

Main Library BX 2734 A64 1934

The largest collection of “Apophthegmata” (sayings of the Fathers) hitherto published. This is a revised translation, including a collection of anecdotes and proverbs, of the second part of the Book of Paradise as compiled by Anan Isho. It is a collection of proverbs and anecdotes deriving from monks in the fourth and fifth centuries. The first part is also published in a revised translation under the title "Stories of The Holy Fathers". Both parts were originally published in an English translation in 1904, entitled the “Book of Paradise” Written by Anan Isho of Beth Abhe, and divided into Book I (Chapters I-XIV) and Book II.(Chapters I-XVIII). Book I comprises sayings and words of wisdom by ‘The Fathers’ on different occupations and duties of the hermits and monks as well as their works and the miracles they have performed. Book II deals with general questions and answers on the ascetic life. It also includes inquiries by the pupils to the Holy Fathers and monks on different subjects and their answers. The book is concluded by an index of names.

- Caner, Daniel. Wandering, Begging Monks: Spiritual Authority And The Promotion Of Monasticism In Late Antiquity. Berkeley, California; London: University of California Press, 2002.
Main Library BR 195 M65 C36 2002

The author examines the lives of the wandering, begging monks between roughly 360 and 451 A.D. and focuses on the social and cultural settings of that period, describing in detail the ascetic poverty of the begging monks, and offering a characterization of monkhood that is one of abandoned materialism and begging. Through his study, the author sheds light on the development of early Christian Monasticism and its evolution up to its institutional status in areas of Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt. Caner exposes the power struggles for spiritual authority between the official religious authorities and the ascetics. The author discusses essential turning points such as the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Daniel Caner presents footnotes and an English translation of the biography of Alexander Akoimetos (Alexander the sleepless) in his appendix. The book is concluded by an extensive bibliography and an index.

- Cannuyer, Christian. Coptic Egypt: The Christians of The Nile. London: Thames and Hudson; New York : Harry N. Abrams, 2001.
Main Library DT 72 C7 C3613 2001

This work is an impressive concise presentation of an "ancient order of Christians called the Copts." The author provides the history of the early Church in Alexandria in the first century AD., which was founded by Saint Mark the Evangelist, during the Roman empire. Although Egypt has become a Muslim nation after the Arab conquest in 541 AD., the Copts maintained their tradition and rites until the present date. The work includes several fascinating colored photographs and illustrations of the Coptic frescoes in the monasteries and churches, antique textiles, mosaics and manuscripts. It presents the Coptic culture and art which drew its inspiration from the ancient Pharaohs, Greco-Roman and Christian eras. The text includes a list of excerpts from different sources about the Copts, their rites, tradition and religious practices. It also includes a list of further readings, and a list of illustrations.

- Capuani, Massimo. Christian Egypt: Coptic Art and Monuments Through Two Millennia. With the contributions of Otto F.A. Meinardus and Marie-Hélène; edited and introduced by Gawdat Gabra. Cairo : American University in Cairo Press, 2002.
Main Library NA 4829 C64 C3713 2002

Dr. Gawdat Gabra introduces the Copts, their community in the Middle East, the Coptic Church and Coptic art in Egypt, concluding the introduction with a summary of the work presented in this book. The author describes the various sites and the discovery of the various Coptic settlements in Egypt. He gives a precise description of the churches built in Alexandria, the Delta area, and of the ancient sites of Nitria and Kellia. Capuani also deals with the monasteries of Wadi Al-Natrun, and the Coptic sites of Middle and Upper Egypt. There are also two co-authors that have shared in this work: Meinardus with his account of the history of the Coptic Church from the third century to the present time, and Rutschowscaya with a chapter that describes the Coptic artistic usage of color in icons, fabrics and wall paintings. This book includes a big number of illustrations, pictures, plans and maps of the Coptic monasteries, churches and art in Egypt.

- Coptic Church, (ed.) by K.H. Kuhn and W.J. Tait. Thirteen Coptic Acrostic Hymns: From Manuscript M574 Of The Pierpont Morgan Library. Oxford, England : Griffith Institute : Ashmolean Museum, 1996.
Main Library BX 137 C678x 1996

The author presents a description and translation of thirteen alphabetic acrostic hymns in Coptic Sahidic dialect. The stanzes of each hymn contain every letter of the Greek alphabet. These hymns were written for the Monastery of the Archangel St Michael at the Hamouli area in the Fayyum. The hymns praise the Virgin Mary, the apostles, and Coptic saints. The baptism, resurrection, and ascension are praised in two separate hymns. The author believes that these hymns were used during events that were of religious significance to the Coptic Orthodox Faith. In his introduction, the author explains the Sahidic dialect, the structure of the hymns, and their content. The hymns are reproduced along with an English translation and some notes.Concluding this book are a paleographical appendix, indexes to personal and geographical names, Greek loan-words, and literary references.

- Doorn-Harder, Pieternella van. Contemporary Coptic Nuns. Columbia, S.C.: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
BX 137.3 D66 1995

This book is one of the very few books that deal with the subject of Coptic nuns. The author deals with a variety of subjects revolving around an ascetic community of Coptic nuns and convents: The Copts in Egyptian society, the monastic landscape, the ruling mothers and fathers of the Coptic monasteries and convents. The author also describes the abandoning of the mundane life by the novitiate nuns, who are not considered, according to monastic life, as “dead to the world”. Pieternella Van Doorn-Harder also describes, in a very interesting style, the initiation rites, practices of the nuns and their work, the spiritual life, the saints, and the visitors. The work concludes with a listing of notes, glossary, selected bibliography, and an index of names.

- Elm, Sussana. 'Virgins of God'. The making of Asceticism in Late Antiquity. Clarendon Press, Oxford.
Main Library BV 5023 E45 1994

This book traces the origins of "asceticism", and the crucial role played by women in establishing organizational patterns in ascetic communities. The book makes the assertion that monasticism is the 'highest evolution of asceticism'. The author critically examines the evolution of asceticism in Asia Minor and Egypt; the variations of female ascetic life in these regions, the classic models, and some prominent female and male ascetics. He concludes by demonstrating how the ascetic bishops (today's saints) eventually 'reformed' these early models of communal ascetic life by dividing the order of the 'Virgins of God' into monks and nuns, thus laying the foundation for modern day monasticism. This book is important for anyone interested in early church history and the ascetic life.

- Farag, Farag Rofail. Sociological and Moral Studies in the Field of Coptic Monasticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1964.
Main Library BX 136.2 F35 1964

Farag is concerned with the origins of Egyptian monasticism and the different motives for leading an eremitic life. Specifically the author explores monastic life during the fourth century A.D. in Egypt. He also mentions the interaction of monks with their visitors, and the social services expanded by the monks to neighboring communities and visitors of the monasteries. Farag submits that Coptic monasteries, and the monastic life, have become the subject of considerable interest in several modern literary works in Arabic language. The attraction of monasticism and isolation in the desert that the monks felt to be a "call" from heaven is critically examined. The author narrates several accounts of the mental tolerance and resilience of the hermits, to include: The Monk and the Gold, The Monk and the Pagan, The Monk and the Philosophers, The Monk and the Poor. Farag mentions, in detail, the convents for women in Egypt (discussed in chapter three). Chapter four and five relate the literary heritage of the desert monks and the different representations of Coptic spirituality in European literature. The book concludes with a list of abbreviations and a bibliography.

- Frank, Georgia. The Memory of The Eyes: Pilgrims to Living Saints in Christian Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
Main Library BR 190 H573 F73 2000

Georgia Frank presents us with a detailed study of the writings of pilgrims, focusing especially on their journeys to meet the holy hermits and monks (or 'Fathers of the Egyptian Desert') during the period of late Christian antiquity. Georgia Frank has studied two texts in depth: 'The History of the Monks in Egypt' and 'The Lausiac History'. Both texts have provided the author with an understanding of the historical and spiritual dimension of these pilgrimages. In a particularly insightful analysis, the author concentrates on the theme of 'sight' as the key sensory faculty through which pilgrims recorded their experiences and which has shaped their narratives.

- Griggs, C. Wilfred. Early Egyptian Christianity: From its Origins to 451 C.E. The Netherlands, 1993.
SPCL BR190 G75

This book focuses on the history of Christianity in Egypt from its earliest recorded origins to the Council of Chalcedon in 451C.E., when the Egyptian Coptic Church became the national religion of Egypt. Aspects such as the emergence of orthodoxy and heresy in Egyptian Christianity, autocracy in Christian Egypt and the eventual separation from Catholicism, are examined. With maps of Lower and Upper Egypt, cross references from gospels and an extensive bibliography, this book contributes to an understanding of Early Egyptian Christianity in particular and to Early Christianity in general.

- Grugurius, al-Anba. Al-Dayr al-Muharraq. Daar al-Jiil lil-Tiba`ah, Arab Republic of Egypt, 1992.
Main Library BX 138 E3 G45 1992

Al-Anba Grugurius introduces, in his preface, a brief history of monasticism. In chapters 1 and 2 he tells us about the Holy Family and its journey to Egypt. In chapters 3 and 4 he gives a detailed description of the monastery of Dair al-Maharraq and its history around 342 A.D. until the 12th century, in addition to its architectural developments. In chapters 5, 6 and 7 the author provides a detailed description of the preoccupation of monks, ascetics, and the eremitic life of hermits. Anba Grugurius also describes the daily social and intellectual activities of the monks. The book is concluded by the author's liturgical hymns and prayers as well as a subject index.

- Habib, Rafiq and Afifi, Mohamed. Taariikh al-Kaniisah al-Misriyyah. Al-Daar al-`Arabiyyah lil Tiba`ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzii`, Dokki, Cairo, 1994.
Main Library BX 133.2 H33 1994

This book discusses the history of the national Egyptian cultural elites. It is divided into seven chapters that discuss Christianity in Egypt and the suppression of the Copts. The second Chapter covers the church and the Arab invasion in 641 AD. The third Chapter gives information about Catholicism, past and present. Chapter four explains Protestanism and its consignments in Egypt; Chapter five gives detailed information about the rise of the church and the political laicism; Chapter six deals with the history of sectarian strife through the centuries. In the last Chapter the writer explores the search for truth about the controversies of sectarian strife.

- Hondelink, H. Coptic Art and Culture. Shouhdy Publishing House, Cairo, 1990.
Main Library N 7382 C66X 1990

This book introduces Early Christian Architecture in the Nile Valley between 313 AD. and 640 AD., including the church and monastic architecture. The second chapter of the book describes and explains the significance of the Old Testament Saints in Medieval Church decoration. The book deals with the icon-painting in Egypt in general and the conservation problems of the icons. One of the authors of the book talks about the miraculous icons and their historical background. There is a brief discussion of Coptic textiles. The last chapter of the book is concerned with demons in early Coptic Monasticism.

- Ibn Al-Mukaffa, Sawirus (Bishop Of Al-Ashmunin). History of the Patriarchs of the Egyptian Church. Matbaat al-Mahad al-Ilmi al-Farancy lil Athaar al-Sharkiah, Cairo.
Main Library BX 132. S3 V.2

This volume of the series comprises the biographies of ten Patriarchs, beginning with the fifty-sixth Patriarch, Khael III (Michael I) and ending the sixty-fifth Patriarch Senouti II. These patriarchs occupied the See of Saint Mark from 880-1066 AD.

- Johnson, Janet H. (ed.). Life in a Multi-Cultural Society: Egypt from Cambyses to Constantine and Beyond. The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago 1992.
Main Library DT 61 L72 1992

This book includes papers presented at the Fourth International Congress of Demotist held at the Oriental Institute, the University of Chicago from September 4-8, 1990. The essays are diverse and cover Egypt during the period under the Persian Empire from 525 B.C. up to its eventual invasion by the Romans (a period of about 1000 years). This was a period in which the Egyptian majority population lived in contact with non-Egyptian populations such as Greeks, Macedonians, Romans, Jews and non-Semitic speaking people from Syria-Palestine. The papers make a significant contribution to our understanding of an important period in world history, and introduce a wide range of subjects including the study of emerging multi-cultural and multi-lingual societies.

- Kamil, Jill. Christianity in the land of the Pharaohs: The Coptic Orthodox Church. New York: Routledge, 2002.
Main Library BX 133.3 K36 2002

Jill Kamil traces the origins of Coptic Christianity from the first century AD to the present day. The author discusses some of the milestones in Egypt's history that were responsible for the shaping of Coptic faith into its characteristic form. The Holy Family in Egypt, the Desert Fathers (ancient and modern), and the discovery of the Gnostic library at Nag Hammadi, the Roman rule and the Martyr's era, are presented along with a discussion of the struggle against paganism at the end of the fourth century, and a look at Coptic continuity aside Islam. Further discussion includes Saint Pachomius, the founding of monasticism, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. Concluding this study is an appendix containing notes on saints and martyrs, a glossary, a bibliography, and an alphabetical index.

- Meinardus, Otto F.A. Coptic Saints and Pilgrimages. The American University in Cairo Press, Cairo, New York.
Main Library BX 4659 E4 M45 2002

This book focuses on Coptic religious devotion. The first few chapters deal with biblical saints, martyrs, ascetics and equestrian warriors in Coptic spirituality. The latter chapters dwell emphatically on such subjects, such as the "silverless" physicians of the Byzantine churches (who treated their patients without pay), women saints, and recently discovered martyrs. Meinardus contemplates themes of the past, such as Coptic Saints, as well as miracles from modern perspective in an age of globalization. The book includes high quality colored, images of patron saints and martyrs. The text is considered a valuable source of reference source in the subject matter.

- Sobhy, P. G. (Dr.). Le Martyre De Saint Helias et L'Encomium de l'Eveque Stephanos de Hnes Sur Saint Helias. (Saint Helias the Martyr and His praise By Stephanos the Bishop of Hnes), - Drower, E. S. "Water into Wine. A Study of Ritual Idiom in the Middle East."* John Murray: London, 1956
Main Library BL 619 S3 D7 1956

In this veritable anthropological breakthrough, Lady Drower examines and compares the religious rituals of the various Eastern churches. Part I is dedicated mainly to describing the temple setting and some puzzling Eucharistic rituals like the "branch to the nose". Part II critically examines the devotional significances of bread and wine on the altar in the Russian and Greek Orthodox, Greek Catholic and Jacobite, Nestorian and Chaldean, Coptic, and Abyssinian churches. Part III gives an account of ritual meals like the "Parsi ritual meals"(the Yansa) and the ritual meals of the Chaldeans. An interesting aspect of this book is the similarity that exists between these rituals and many others which, as the author puts it, "may emphasize the root unity of certain human concepts".

- Ware, Kallistos; Bishop. The Orthodox Way. Published by St. Vladimir's Press Chrestwood, New York, 1995.
Main Library BX 320.2 W37 1995

The author of this book describes, in a uniquely interesting way, the nature of God as a mystery, an eternity, a creator, a man, and as a prayer. The author concludes with a compelling notion of 'God as Eternity'.

-Winlock, H.E.; Crum, W.E.; White, Evelyn. The Monastery of Epiphanius at Thebes*. New York, 1926.

Main Library DT 57 N5

